Again, Mae Brussell is the first prominent media personality to mention the tip of a German iceberg that may be the first clue to unraveling the mystery of Nazi involvement, and the even greater mystery of its motivations for such a hideous act. Discovering Lincoln Lawrence’s book Were We Controlled?[19] Brussell begins to follow the only big money trail known to exist in connection with the assassination:

> The stock market dropped 24 points in 27 minutes when news of President Kennedy’s assassination was announced. 2.6 million shares were sold off. It was the greatest panic since 1929. Somebody made a huge profit selling short in many markets. Somebody made half a billion dollars in one day.[20]

That somebody, according to Lincoln Lawrence, was Bunge and Born, LDA, or simply, the Bunge Corporation. The same day, another company’s stock, crashed: the Allied Crude Vegetable Oil Refining Corporation. The crash helped further drive the market down.

---

[19] Referred to previously in its Adventures Unlimited Press reprint edition, Mind Control, Oswald, and JFK: Were We Controlled?

[20] Mae Brussell, “The Nazi Connection to the John F. Kennedy Assassination, pp. 29-30, emphasis added.

Before considering Lincoln Lawrence's presentation of the Bunge Corporation's activities on the week prior to the assassination, it is worth pausing to consider Brussell's own statements of Bunge's extent and influence.

> Allied Crude was controlled by U.S. American Bunge Corporation and financially controlled by a group of share-holders headquartered in Argentina known as "Bunge and Born, LDA.:
>
> Business Week of October 19, 1963, one month before the Kennedy assassination, described the Born family in Argentina, the biggest shareholders for Bunge, as being from Europe, specifically Germany.
>
> Everything about Bunge has German influence. They have $2 billion annual business in 80 countries. There are over 110 offices, all linked by Telex and under-the-ocean telegraph channels. The Bunge Corporation is referred to as "the Octopus."[21]

So what, exactly, is the connection between Allied Crude Vegetable Oil Refining, its crash, the Bunge Corporation, and the Kennedy assassination?

Noting that the massive short-selling that occurred on Nov. 22, 1963, had been prepared well in advance, Lincoln Lawrence, in his little known classic on the Kennedy Assassination, Were We Controlled?, gives the following speculative outline of its connections and motivations:

> A small group of hard-as-steel international criminals (with German-Argentine intellectual and scientific backgrounds) carefully calculated that:
>
> The coincidence of the assassination of a President of the United States… and the simultaneous scandalizing and collapse of the commodities market… would rapidly drive the stock market down at least 30 points!
>
> Having advance knowledge of this event… the group would sell short on a heavily financed scale… and a profit of perhaps a half-billion dollars would be divided amongst its members.[22]

---

[21] Mae Brussell, "The Nazi Connection to the John F. Kennedy Assassination," p.30.

[22] Lincoln Lawrence and Kenn Thomas, Mind Control, Oswald, and JFK: Were We Controlled?, p. 23, italicized emphasis added, bold emphasis original.

How all this happened was through careful and very well-though-out long term manipulation of a man named Tino DeAngelis and his Allied Crude Vegetable Oil Refining Corporation.

DeAngelis, according to Lawrence, first came to the attention of the financial group behind the Bunge Corporation in 1954, when in the process of contacts with the West German government, he announced his plans to found a company that would refine edible vegetable oils. In 1955, the Allied Crude Vegetable Oil Refining Corporation was founded by DeAngelis and 20 of his most trusted friends in Bayonne, New Jersey.[23]

> Although it was the last thing that he could have foreseen, the formation of Allied fitted The Group's plans and led inevitably to his complete financial ruin – and their profit!
>
> If for a second, you find it hard to believe that a small group operating out of a German headquarters could find it sufficiently profitable to plot the long term expansion and deflation of a financial bubble fathered by a Bronx butcher with dreams of glory, think again.[24]

The Bunge Corporation was chosen, according to Lawrence, to be tied to Allied Crude simply because Bunge's world-wide and virtually instantaneous communications network, which rivaled that of many large governments, was perfect for the sort of minute-by-minute and second-by-second manipulation of the commodities market their scheme required.[25]

Thus, the fate of Bunge and Allied Crude – known to the Group but unknown to the luckless DeAngelis – was wedded in a long term scheme:

> (The Bunge Corporation's) good will was essential to the business destiny of Allied!
>
> Of the fifty-one companies which either lent money to Allied or deposited oil at its Bayonne plant against warehouse receipts, the Bunge Corporation was the one most critically attached to its fate.
>
> When Allied's ship of destiny was steered into the deep waters, as indeed it was by an amazing series of maneuvers, only one collision

---

[23] Lincoln Lawrence, Mind Control, Oswald, and JFK: Were We Controlled?, p. 116.

[24] Ibid.

[25] Ibid., pp. 119-120.

> was needed to sink it instantly to the bottom. A collision with Bunge Corporation would suffice… creating a disaster that would take with it the investment of the other fifty companies.[26]

How was DeAngelis' collapse engineered?

Lawrence answers by stating that Bunge's role apparently was to feed DeAngelis' ambitions, no matter what. "Bunge used its own money to finance DeAngelis instead of resorting to bank loans." [27] Someone at Bunge wanted very much for De Angelis to succeed, or rather, to appear to succeed:

> Going even further in its paternal interest in De Angelis' business affairs, Bunge allowed De Angelis to really take off into financial outer space… by pledging at one point as much as thirty-eight shares of the hundred odd shares of Allied stock and other De Angelis stock for huge loans. Someone in Bunge supported him in his efforts to play king. Others, like Karl Groenfeld, Senior Traffic Manager for Bunge, were suspicious.[28]

With such powerful corporate backing apparently in his corner, DeAngelis could do no wrong, and was refused no financial favor by some very prestigious brokerage houses on Wall Street.

In the summer of 1961, DeAngelis and Allied Crude began to be steered "into a position where his back was to the wall,"[29] for during that period > $166,000,000 was deposited to Tino's firm at the First National Bank of North Bergen.

>
> Tino was led to believe that he had a sure order from Spain for 275 million pounds of soybean oil! Payment for this would have amounted to thirty-six and a half million dollars! ….
>
> So, of course, began the inevitable build-up of Allied for the big let-down. In his Bayonne tanks, De Angelis had about fifty million pounds of oil. That left 225 million pounds for Allied to acquire in the future.

---

[26] Lincoln Lawrence, Mind Control, Oswald, and JFK: Were We Controlled? P. 118. Lawrence quips that "the Bunge Corporation (sometimes dubbed by financial writers as 'The Octopus') would make a delightful corporate villain for a James Bond fantasy."

[27] Ibid., p. 123.

[28] Ibid.

[29] Ibid., p. 129.

> Tino turned to the Chicago Board of Trade, with a supposed Spanish "promise" of eventual payment in American dollars. (Were he not controlled, this alone would have alerted him to take a second look at the deal.) Tino started dealing….Allied is said to have closed over 3,000 separate contracts for 180-million pounds of oil. If the sale to Spain were not consummated, he would have put forth 18 million dollars for these orders. And even a half-cent a pound drop in the futures price (if it occurred before delivery date) would mean that De Angelis would have to produce almost a million dollars more within twenty-four hours to meet the margin regulations of the Exchange.
>
> The Spanish deal, of course, as it had been controlled from the start… *vanished into thin air…*leaving Tino sitting on top of the soybean world in an almost insane predicament.[30]

Recall that Spain was headquarters to Skorzeny's International Fascista organization, and that Skorzeny was no stranger to financial wheeling and dealing, being the son-in-law to former Reichsbank President Hjalmar Schacht. Was Skorzeny the source of the "deal" that De Angelis considered so certain? Was this the reason, too, that he did not question being paid in American dollars, since he knew his "source" was certainly capable of paying in American dollars?

We will never know, but we do know that De Angelis' behavior at that point becomes increasingly strange if not tragic. He began to buy futures contracts, "not on orders he had for Allied, but supposedly on contracts he might be going to get."[31] Since the "Spanish deal" and its collapse had already placed De Angelis against the wall, the only way he could purchase these furtures contracts was by issuing phony warehouse receipts for oil stored in his tanks that did not exist![32] Using these phony receipts, he began borrowing money from several brokerage houses for the funds needed to purchase commodities futures.

Recall that Bunge had loaned De Angelis money from its own funds, a process that had been repeated in the years prior to the "Spanish deal." De Angelis approached Bunge for more money in October of 1963 for another loan, and "to his astonishment, Bunge refused!"[33] Bunge had now weakened Allied Crude for the big crash.

---

[30] Lincoln Lawrence, Mind Control, Oswald, and JFK: Were We Controlled? pp. 128-129.

[31] Ibid., p. 134.

[32] Ibid.

De Angelis attempted to survive a bit longer using check-kiting tactics and more phony warehouse receipts.[34]

On the Wednesday afternoon before the assassination, Bunge now moved to eliminate Allied, the very corporation it had helped found and propel to prominence, by informing one holder of the phony warehouse receipts to "be on the alert" about De Angelis.[35] Then, on Thursday November 21st, 1963, the final trap was laid.

> On Thursday afternoon it was important to the success of the "controllers" that the groundwork for a complete panic of the market be laid so that on the day of the assassination, Friday, the prices would plummet and the profits reaped by selling short would be insured.
>
> In considering whether (this scenario) is truth or fantasy, one must note that of the fifty-odd companies that could have moved that day to lift the lid that would light the bomb… the one that did file suit (charging that [one of the warehouse receipt holders] had "lost 160,450,000 pounds of oil worth $14,240,000 at Allied through forged orders was not Haupt, not Williston & Beane… but the Bunge Corporation![36]

As the news of the assassination of the president reached a stock exchange already concussed by the collapse of Allied Crude, its bankruptcy filing, and the suspension of trade of several of De Angelis' brokerage house financial backers, the market plummeted so severely, in part driven down by massive short selling, that the Board of Governors closed trading at 2:07 p.m., more than eighty minutes before its normal closing.[37]

One of De Angelis' and Allied Crude's major customers, Frederick Hediger of Garnac Grain, was subsequently quoted in Time magazine as "saying that when he heard on the radio that afternoon that 'Kennedy had been assassinated, I thought this must be a plot by the Russians or the underworld – too many crazy things are happening at once.’”[38] Even the New York State Attorney General thought that it was possible that De Angelis and his Allied Crude Vegetable Oil Refining Company had been “’broken’ in the futures market by someone who sold short and profited on a gigantic scale.”[39]

---

[33] Ibid., p. 139.

[34] Ibid., pp. 139-141.

[35] Ibid., p. 142.

[36] Ibid., p. 143.

[37] Ibid.

That someone was, according to Lawrence, a group of Germans inside of Bunge corporation, a group of Germans of “intellectual and scientific background,” who, on his view, orchestrated the whole scenario for nothing more than massive financial gain.

Back to this in a moment.

While there are a number of factors that have not been recounted here – as for example the heavy role of “mind control” in Lawrence’s speculations that Oswald, De Angelis, and Jack Ruby were all cynically manipulated by this German “Group” for the mere purpose of immense financial gain – there are a number of points that would tend to make one discount the whole scenario, the most basic of which was that the whole thing occurred merely for financial gain.

But oddly, Lawrence himself hints at, though never again pursues or mentions, that the “group” behind his scenario had intellectual and “scientific backgrounds,” hinting in turn that there was possibly a motivation behind that of the motivation of financial gain. The money was to be used for something, something that, if one carefully reads between the lines of Lawrence’s book, is scientific in nature. Of course, the Bell and similar projects would have required heavy financial outlays. And one would have needed such financial injections for independent projects

Only when taken in a much wider context of the other major players in the conspiracy and their motivations does Lawrence’s scenario not only make sense, but begins to hint at things that would have made Nazi involvement coalesce with the other elements: the Mafia, big business and banking, the military industrial complex, “pissed-off” émigré groups, and so on. As Lawrence makes clear, the sudden coincidence of the collapse of

---

[38] Lawrence, Mind Control, Oswald, and JFK: Were We Controlled? p. 147

[39] Ibid.

Allied Crude, instigated by Bunge, with the assassination, the heavy round of short selling designed ahead of time to occur on that same day, have all the appearance of events being driven by people "in the know." The events on the stock market during that day have the familiar and dolorous ring of similar stock market events during September 11, 2001 and its aftermath. As will be seen below, the financial picture and motivation of the assassination begin to connect other dots, dots that trace their spider-web-thin and tenuous but still clearly visible threads back to Germany, and World War Two.

We will return to the subject of possible Nazi involvement and motivations in this bizarre scenario in a later section. But for now, there is one last connection that Mae Brussell exposes.

12. More Odd Behavior and Connections: West German Chancellor Kurt Georg Kiesinger, and Nixon

The day after the assassination of President Kennedy, right-wing extremist, Major General Edwin Walker called Munich, Germany from his home in Shreveport, Louisiana. He called the Munich-based newspaper, the Deutsche National und Soldaten Zeitung (The German National and Soldiers' Times), a neo-nazi rag based in Munich. He called to tell them that Lee Harvey Oswald, the suspect in the assassination, was the same person that had tried to kill him by shooting through his window in April of 1963.[40] This is the same General Walker whose address, as mentioned above, was found in Oswald's address book, along with that of FBI agent James Hosty, and incongruously, that of American Nazi Party leader George Lincoln Rockwell. Conveniently, "Marxist" Oswald, having allegedly taken pot shots at Walker, was now accused of shooting and killing president Kennedy.

The trouble is, as Brussell points out, "there was never one shred of evidence, or a reliable witness, that could make this connection" of Oswald to the General's would-be (and unsuccessful) assassin.[41] Thus, as Brussell alleges, it became necessary for Ruth Paine to deliver a post-dated letter to Marina Oswald from Lee, implicating him in the attempt on General Walker and establishing him as a “lone nut” extremist capable of murdering prominent figures alone and unaided.[42]

---

[40] Mae Brussel, "The Nazi Connection to the John F. Kennedy Assassination," p. 30.

Pause and consider what framing Oswald for this act accomplishes, for it kills two birds with one stone. Firstly, it establishes him as a “lone nut”. Secondly, it distances him from his right-wing extremist connections, since he is allegedly shooting at a right-wing extremist general. This in turn would make his alleged Marxist beliefs seem more genuine.

But, asks Brussel, “Why was General Walker in such a hurry to get his information printed in Germany before anybody in Dallas ever heard about it?” Her answer is, even for Mae Brussell, somewhat unusual

> Kurt-George Kiesinger had just been installed as Chancellor of West Germany and Franz-Josef Strauss as finance minister.
>
> Kiesinger entered the radio propaganda division of Nazi Foreign Minister (Joachim) Von Ribbentrop at age 36. He was then directing a world-wide radio propaganda apparatus with 195 specialists under his supervision during the war. He was the liaison officer, coordinating his department’s work with that of Propaganda Minister Joseph Goebbels.[43]

In other words, Brussell is implying that the change in power in West Germany was somehow linked to the assassination, and the assumption of power in the United States by Lyndon B. Johnson. But beyond this she does not speculate, and that is, for Mae Brussell, decidedly unusual.

C. The JFK Connection in Early MAJIC-12 Documents

If the Nazis were involved in the JFK assassination, then, as Lincoln Lawrence’s speculative scenario avers, one motivation of their involvement was for financing to continue their scientific projects. As for the involvement itself, as was seen in the previous chapter, there are some documents in the Cooper-Cantwheel set of MAJIC-12 classified UFO papers that indicate a connection of at least the subject of UFOs to the assassination, via the memorandum addressed to General Charles Peare Cabell, one of the CIA bigwigs sacked by Kennedy allegedly for his involvement in the Bay of Pigs fiasco.

---

[41] Ibid.

[42] Brussell, “The Nazi Connection to the John F Kennedy Assassination,” p. 30.

[43] Ibid.

General Cabell also had another connection besides that of the MAJIC-12 group and his CIA association. He was intimately involved in Operation Paperclip, and his involvement was in connection with bringing over Nazi "aviation doctors." Lest one forget who these doctors were, these were the ones performing grizzly and barbaric medical experiments on concentration camp prisoners to study effects on humans in extreme conditions, including outer space.[44]

Cabell's brother Earle was mayor of Dallas during the assassination, and was also instrumental in getting the motorcade route changed to make the detour that took Kennedy into the "kill zone" in front of the Texas School Book Depository and the Grassy Knoll. But the document itself suggests a technological and policy motive to the assassination may have underwritten at least the intelligence community's involvement in it, namely, the secret development of recovered technology, the public repression of similar technological development, and the creation of appropriate policies for public manipulation. Kennedy, by threatening to smash the CIA, threatened this agenda with exposure, and that meant, in turn, exposure of Paperclip and how deeply corrupted American intelligence and defense had become. In short, Kennedy threatened – doubtless inadvertently – the whole continuing Nazi enterprise.

One may also view this in connection with the Two Space Programs Hypothesis. If indeed Kennedy was serious about limited cooperation in space with the Soviets, then this too would have threatened aspects of America's – and perhaps the Soviets' own version of the – secret space program with exposure.

---

[44] Tom Bower, The Paperclip Conspiracy: The Hunt for the Nazi Scientists (Boston: Little, Brown, and Company: 1987), p. 245.

And finally, what of all the lurking involvement not only of Nazis, but of big oil? Why this strange coalescence? If there was a continued development of the technology represented by the Bell – and the Bell and its strange effects were very real – then “the Brotherhood” would have had a final, crowning, motivation: they would have acted not only to continue the secret development and hoarding of such technology for themselves but also to maintain the reliance of everyone else on petroleum, using some of those profits to fund that continued technological development, and the suppression of any open and independent development of such technology.

So, if Bunge Corporation pocketed major financial profits from the assassination, then, clearly, this was an after-thought: “If we’re going to do this to protect our interests, why not make a little money on the affair too?”

It is in this context that two other MAJIC-12 documents should be viewed: the alleged letter from Cooper’s anonymous source indicating that President Nixon had “privatizing” the alleged UFO “study group,” giving credence to the idea that its massive intelligence operations and covert technology development, and public technology repression efforts, fell into, if were not originally in, independent hands.

Similarly there are hints in this letter as well as in the burned “Annex C” that not only was President Kennedy eliminated because of the threat he posed to this group and its programs, but that Secretary of War James Forrestal was murdered for similar reasons as well.

1. Guy Bannister, UFOs, and JFK

As if all this were not enough, there is yet one more strange connection between the Kennedy assassination, UFOs, advanced technology, and the Nazis. For “one of the men involved in the investigation of UFO reports in the American Northwest (in 1947) was none other than FBI special agent Guy Bannister.”[45] Not only this, but Bannister – who shared a New Orleans office in 1962 with Lee Harvey Oswald's "Fair Play for Cuba Committee" – appears to be the real origin of the FBI's "X Files:"

---

[45] Peter Levenda, Snister Forces: A Grimoire of American Political Witchcraft: Book One: The Nine IWalterville, Oregon:: Trine Day, ISBN 0-9752906-2-2), p. 173.

> A look at recently declassified FBI files for that period in 1947 show a number of telexes from Bannister, some with his initials "WGB," all pertaining to UFO phenomena, as well as other FBI documents with the designation "Security Matter – X" or simply "SM-X," the origin – the author supposes – of the "X Files," which at least in 1947 did exist at the FBI and was concerned with UFOs…[46]

It is, writes author Peter Levenda, "as if reality were layed like an onion, a palimpsest on which numerous events were written over each other, all on the same page. In this case, we have Operation Paperclip, UFOs, and the Kennedy assassination all written on the same sheet of onionskin parchment. Nazis, aliens, and political murder."[47] For Levenda, the conclusion, disturbing though it may be, is clear: "There is no lack of Nazi influence in and around the events leading up to – and away from – the assassination."[48]

D. The Magus of Ingolstadt

But where do all these spidery-thin strands lead? What, or who, might be at the center of this web?

One of the persons surely near the center, as the European newspaper articles cited by Brussell suggest, was Martin Bormann, former Nazi Party Reichsleiter, financial administrator both of the Party's and Hitler's own personal fortunes, ever-present shadow to the Führer, and mastermind of the Nazi "strategic evacuation" plans. While not suggesting that Bormann is the only high-ranking member of the decision-making oligarchy that conspired to murder the President, if there is a Nazi involvement, and so many disparate sources suggest there is, then Bormann surely was a member of the planning and decision-making level of that group. Perhaps he was its driving force; perhaps he learned of an already existing conspiracy, and in customary Bormann fashion weaseled his way into it, and utilized it for his "Nazi International's" own interest.

---

[46] Levenda, Sinister Forces, Book One: the Nine, pp. 173-174.

[47] Ibid., p. 174.

[48] Ibid., p. 266.

But in any case, Bormann is a crucial figure, for after the beginning of actual wartime hostilities and Hitler's ever-growing preoccupation with, and meddling in, Germany's military operations, Bormann was left as the de facto day-to-day ruler of Nazi Germany, the gray eminence, the real power behind Hitler's dark throne.

1. Bormann and Ingolstadt: A Connection to the Illuminati?

To appreciate Bormann's significance, it is best to recall that besides his role as party leader and treasurer, he was also an SS Obergruppenführer. This would make Bormann – like Kammler and Mazuw – a probable member of Himmler's "initiates" into the SS's so-called "occult secrets and mysteries." One has difficulty imagining the pragmatic and cynical Bormann involved in such rituals for any other purpose than to placate Himmler, and to keep an eye on his most serious rival for power.

In spite of this, Bormann, of all the leading Nazis, is the one figure that is the most shrouded in mystery and contradictions. While finding it difficult to believe that Bormann could be anything less than cynical in his approach to Himmler's fascination with the occult – recall that it is because Bormann kept such faithful notes of Hitler's "table talk" that we know at all that Hitler regarded Himmler's obsession with such things as "nonsense" – it is nonetheless remotely possible that Bormann was a very high initiate into his own secret society affiliations, for he had acquired a home after the Nazi assumption of power, near the town of Ingolstadt, which remained his legal residence throughout the war.

For those who do not know the significance of Ingolstadt, it is the birthplace – on May 1, 1776 - of one of the most notorious secret societies in history: the Bavarian Illuminati of Ingolstadt University professor Adam Weishaupt. Given that Bormann's boss at the time was one Rudolf Hess, a man known to be steeped in and obsessed with occult lore and secret societies of every stripe imaginable, it is difficult to believe that Bormann would not have known this aspect of the history of the town he had chosen to make home.

a. Bormann's Manipulation of Hitler

Some have speculated that Adolf Hitler's extraordinary power over masses, and his extraordinary charisma and skill as an orator, came from some occult influence in his life. To a certain extent, this is true, for it is known that Hitler did obtain the assistance of individuals, such as the rhetorician Hanussen, trained in the use of gestures to accompany words, a school of rhetoric with its own occult and esoteric associations. Beyond this, however, nothing at all is known of Hitler's initiation into any secret society, though most scholars have speculated upon it.[49]

If Hitler's evident ability to sway the masses of Germany with pageantry and brilliant rhetoric was evidence of any occult association, however, then Bormann's evident skill in manipulating Hitler – while seemingly his servant – must be taken as the manipulation of the king by the court magician.

What was Bormann's source of power over the man who held such power over Germany and Europe? One very plausible explanation was given by William Stevenson in his book, The Bormann Brotherhood.

> The Jew as the source of all evil haunted Adolf Hitler, who feared that his own blood was 'tainted.' This led to the brutal murder of his niece and mistress (Geli Raubal). The details were lost at the time, for the Nazis were already on the march and violent killings became the order of the day. …It was only when Bormann's disappearance became a matter for serious conjecture, and intelligence agents began to go into the ugly details, that an incredible episode in Hitler's life came to light. This explained exactly how Martin Bormann was able to gather into his hands all the strings required to make Hitler dance to his tune.[50]

---

[49] I shall offer evidence, from a source, in this chapter, however, that Hitler was initiated into one such secret society after his appointment as Chancellor by Field Marshal President Paul Von Hindenburg.

[50] William Stevenson, The Bormann Brotherhood (New York: Harcourt, Brace, Jovanovitch: 1973), p. 29.

Like many others examining the “suicide” of Geli Raubal, Stevenson speculates that Adolf Hitler, in a fit of blind rage after Geli had threatened to expose the fact that his grandmother had born a child from Baron Rothschild of Vienna,[51] had killed his niece with a pistol, and then fled the scene in panic, and appealed to Bormann for Help. Bormann assured his Führer that it would be “taken care of”. It had to be, for obviously, a murder investigation of Hitler was a considerable impediment if the Nazis were ever to assume power.

At this point, Bormann begins his rise to power, by somehow persuading the local police investigator of the murder, a man named Müller, to cover up the murder in return for favors and advances. And thus was born an alliance between Martin Bormann and one of Nazi Germany’s other “hidden powers” behind the throne, for Müller went on to become the notorious “Gestapo Müller”, making the Gestapo’s extensive files on just about everybody not only available to his immediate boss, the Reichsführer SS Heinrich Himmler, but also to Bormann, who thus had up to the minute intelligence on his biggest rival and his entire department of the Nazi government. Bormann, in fact, according to Stevenson, had initiated, via Gestapo Müller, no less than four private and discreet investigations of Hitler’s family lines and his Jewish blood and descent, all without Hitler’s knowledge. The blackmail value that all this information would have had for Bormann was incalculable, and accounts for his ability to draw into his hands “all the strings” to make Hitler “dance to his tune”. Indeed, Stevenson’s own characterization of Bormann’s role in this regard is oddly reminiscent of the language of another man, writing in the 1920s, long before Hitler came to power.

But before that, there is something else. Gestapo Müller was directly responsible for the blanket of security belts around SS

---

[51] The story first surfaced in the book The Mind of Adolf Hitler, supposedly based upon a secret psychological profile of the Führer prepared for President Franklin Roosevelt. The allegation that Anna Maria Schickelgruber, one of Hitler’s grandmothers, had an affair with her employer Baron Rothschild and bore an illegitimate child of him, was the subject of a secret dossier prepared on Hitler by the Austrian Chancellor Dolfuss prior to the Nazi annexation of that nation before the war.

Obergruppenführer Hans Kammler's "think tank" in Prague.[52] In other words, Bormann, through his friend Gestapo Müller, was faultlessly well-informed about the extent and nature of Nazi secret weapons research. Indeed, he, Bormann, was the real master of it all.

But what of the language of "dancing to a tune"? What man first used such language in association with Nazis?

The man is senior occultist and member of the Thule Society - the secret society that midwifed the Nazi party into existence – Dietrich Eckhart, who told his disciples shortly before his death to "Follow Hitler: he will make the world dance, but it is we who have written the tune." All this marks Bormann as a possible practitioner of the most classic form of occult black magic: the secret control and manipulation of weak people (Hitler) through their weaknesses and fears.

And Bormann's own choice of Ingolstadt as a home mirrors perhaps a deeply hidden association of its own, for after World War One, Bormann, like many disenchanted German veterans, joined one such society, the Society Against Presumptuousness of Jewry.[53] In any case, these odd characteristics of the two Nazi leaders would tend to fuel the theory of some that Hitler was deliberately manipulated and placed into power, and secretly manipulated behind the scenes by more powerful forces than even he publicly wielded, and, when he had served his purpose, was deliberately sabotaged and cast aside.

b. Bormann's Surrender of the A-Bomb to the USA: The Hydrick Thesis

In any case, it is Bormann's role in establishing the secret strategic evacuation plans for Nazism after its military collapse that interests us here. It was evident to Bormann, as to other high-ranking Nazis, that after the disaster of Stalingrad in early 1943, it was only a matter of time before the military collapse of the Reich if its secret weapons projects did not bear fruit in time. Bormann and other top Nazis, representatives from the agencies of armaments of the Reich, from industry, and of course, from the SS gathered in secret meetings to establish the pipelines for the transference out of Germany of enormous amounts of liquid assets, personnel skilled in scientific research or covert intelligence operations, and of blueprints of weapons and other technologies.

---

[52] Karl-Heinz Zunneck, Geheimtechnologien, Wunderwaffen und die irdischen Facetten des UFO-Phänomens (Amun Verlag, 2002), pp. 68-69.

[53] William Stevenson, The Bormann Brotherhood, p. 25.

As regards scientific matters, there is an interesting fact presented in Linda Hunt's book The United States Government, Nazi Scientists, and Project Paperclip, 1945 to 1990. In that book, Hunt gives the following account of how the United States was so quickly able to find and acquire the German scientists and technologies it sought in connection with Project Paperclip:

> One of JIOA Director Gruhn's first actions as overall administrator of the project was to compile a hiring list of the best-qualified German and Austrian scientists that was used by both the United States and Great Britain as a recruitment tool for decades. Although this list has been mentioned in the past by journalists and historians, no one ever noted that it was partially compiled by Werner Osenberg, the notorious wartime commander of the Gestapo's scientific section. The decision to use Osenberg was made by U.S. Navy Captain Ransom Davis after consultation with the (Joint Chiefs of Staff).
>
> During the war, Osenberg was in charge of a special SS research council directly subordinate to Reichsmarschal Herman Göring. Osenberg sent his Gestapo agents to investigate work in progress at scientific institutes and report back on each scientist's political reliability. From those reports and the Gestapo's files, Osenberg compiled a list of fifteen thousand names of scientists in the Third Reich. He wrote comments next to the scientists' names regarding their political affiliations, such as SS membership, and his opinion of their scientific abilities. Of course, those scientists who held fanatic Nazi views and SS membership were also those whom Osenberg considered best qualified.
>
> Osenberg had been captured in 1945 by the Alsos team and interned in a camp in Germany. Soon after the JIOA expressed an interest in him, intelligence officers whisked him out of Germany to Versailles, France, where he set up business as usual, sifting through his files to suggest names of those he considered the best scientists in the Third Reich.[54]

---

[54] Linda Hunt, The United States Government, Nazi Scientists, and Project Paperclip, 1945 to 1990 (New York: St. Martin's Press, 1991), pp. 32-33, emphasis added.

Note then, that with Osenberg one has confirmation of a number of themes that have been suggested earlier in this book, as well as in my previous book on this subject, Reich of the Black Sun.

1. As a member of the Gestapo and SS, Osenberg's files would, via "Gestapo Müller", have surely been known to Bormann, thus giving Bormann extensive knowledge not only over what was being researched, but who was doing it.
2. Thus, while Himmler may have, at one time, tried to keep Bormann out of the loop on the extent of Nazi secret weapons research being conducted by the SS, he would have known about it via other private channels available to him.
3. Bormann was thus faultlessly well-informed not only of the state and extent of these projects – and therefore, not only knew of Germany's atom bomb project and its actual state, but of the more exotic areas of research represented by the Bell – but also of the political reliability of the scientists conducting the research.
4. With such a list in hand, Bormann and his allies in the strategic evacuation operation would have known exactly who, and what, was to go where, and, via their knowledge of each individual person's political views and loyalty, could have limited the risks to any planned continued independent development of the projects already begun, as well as of any planned infiltration of any host country's military and intelligence angencies. With such a list in hand, they could have ensured at least a partial continuance of these projects, provided a network of coordination could be established to do so. Establishment of coordination would have taken advantage of each host country's own "compartmentalization" of security and research, exercising a hidden center of direction.
5. The "Network" in question most likely would have included, but was not limited to, General Gehlen's organization or SS Major Otto Skorzeny's "Fascista Internacionale."

6. Finally, the Osenberg list and evident American interest in it seems to corroborate another speculation, namely, that American knowledge and the nature of its specificity, as reflected in General Patton's unerring military drives to the nerve centers of Kammler's secret research departments, could only have come from inside Nazi Germany itself. Since Carter Hydrick has argued a convincing case that it was Bormann himself who directed the surrender of Germany's atom bomb secrets to the United States, it may be reasonably asserted that it was Bormann ultimately coordinating the flow of other sensitive information concerning the Kammlerstab to American intelligence, since he, clearly, is in the position to be the best informed about the nature, extent, and personnel involved with all of Germany's black projects.

With this knowledge at his disposal, the thesis of Carter Hydric, that Bormann helped engineer not only the transference of the enriched uranium of the U-boat 234 to the United States, but also that he may have engineered the transference of a functioning bomb to the United States as well, gains credibility.[55]

One odd occurrence – one again not in harmony with the post-war Allied Legend about German incompetence in nuclear bomb engineering – is the fact that German physicist Rudolf Fleischmann was flown to the USA for interrogation prior to the bombing of Hiroshima and Nagasaki.[56] Why the urgent need to consult a German physicist prior to bombing Japan? After all, the Allied Legend would have it that we had almost nothing to learn from the Germans about atom bomb physics.

c. Bormann's "Special Evacuation Command" and Kammler's Bell: the Nick Cook Thesis

---

[55] Carter Plymton Hydrick, Critical Mass: How Nazi Germany Surrendered Enriched Uranium for the United States' Atomic Bomb(Whitehurst and Company, 2004), pp. 19-30, 241-242.

[56] Linda Hunt, op. cit., p. 34.

It is against the backdrop of Bormann's probable survival of the war and his possible arrangement to transfer atomic bomb materials via the U-234 to the United States, if not of a functioning bomb itself, that his establishment of a special "SS Evacuation Command" at the war's end should be viewed. As was seen in my earlier book, Jane's Defence Weekly author and journalist Nick Cook, following the research of Igor Witkowski, notes that Bormann had established this command, placed it under the direct jurisdiction of SS General Hans Kammler, and also placed a special Luftwaffe unit of ultra-long range Junkers transport aircraft also under his exclusive command. After the establishment of this command, whose aircraft were, "coincidentally" based in Lower Silesia, Kammler, the Bell, all associated papers concerning the Bell, and the enormous Ju 390 that most probably carried it out of Germany, disappeared completely. Where did it, and the advanced physics and technologies that it carried, go?

One answer, is, of course, to America.

d. Continuation of Ultra-Black Projects and German "Independence" at White Sands and NASA

Whatever their engineering skills may have been, the German scientists at NASA also appeared to be very adept at political maneuvering as well. We have already noted in chapter three how Werner Von Braun himself managed quickly to befriend not only J. Edgar Hoover, but the powerful Democratic Majority leader in the US Senate, Lyndon Baines Johnson, a man whose views on the necessity for space travel, and space militarization, are well-known.

German independence from their American hosts became apparent very early on, in the so-called "Juarez Incident," where a modified V-2 of extended range was test fired at White Sands. The project was called, oddly enough, Project Hermes, and was under the direction of Paperclip scientist Ernst Steinhof. The rocket went astray, and landed in Juarez, Mexico. Steinhof, who could have ordered the rocket destroyed in mid-flight when it went off course, did not do so.

> The controversy over the Juarez incident overshadowed a more serious problem at White Sands and Fort Bliss Army base in Texas. What happened there is a flaring example of the military's total lack of control over enemy aliens who were judged to be a threat to the internal security of the United States. Even though there were allegations of sabotage and evidence of gross violations of base security, as one intelligence agent bluntly put it, there was absolutely "no attempts to place them in anything like custody." Army officers in charge of the group maintained little or no surveillance over the Germans' activities either on or off the base.[57]

Later on, the German paperclip scientists at NASA under Debus, Von Braun, Arthur Rudolf and others in fact showed so much independence that an entirely different concern began to manifest itself.

> James Webb, NASA's second administrator, complained that the Germans were circumventing the system by attempting to build the Saturn V in-house at the center. Rocco Petrone, who became the Marshall Director in 1973, said that Webb felt the group needed to be more tightly managed.[58]

In other words, the Paperclip Germans were attempting to circumvent the normal contract and bidding process of the American government and, using NASA itself as the constructing agency, build the giant Saturn V Apollo boosters on their own. Perhaps they were simply fed up with the bidding process and bureaucratic inertia. Or perhaps there was a more sinister agenda.

But the news from France was not good either. There, employed in projects that would eventually give France its own space booster capability as well as its own land-based and submarine-based ballistic missiles, France's version of the German Paperclip scientists were apparently up to the same sort of thing. Colonel Frank Reed was concerned about security leaks by the Paperclip personnel, because

> He had just returned from visiting Saint Louis, France, where a comparable group of German rocket engineers worked for the French government. While there, the French commandant told Reed he > suspected the Germans under French control were receiving orders from Germany and working toward a reemergence of the Third Reich.[59]

---

[57] Hunt, op. cit., p. 42.

[58] Hunt, op. cit., p.219.

In other words, regardless of whether or not one accepts the speculation of continued independent Nazi development of their secret projects, the behavior of the German scientists in at least two of the wartime Allied countries that became their subsequent hosts indicates some continued connection and coordination between them from some unknown quarter, and the only possible quarter that could conceivably command their continued allegiance and loyalty in this respect is some version of the Gehlenorg, or of ODESSA, or some other similar international network of Nazism.

Nor is this merely idle speculation. Operation Paperclip researcher Tom Bower drew attention to the fact that American intelligence, very early on, was aware that some sort of command structure was still intact and functioning among the German rocket scientists:

> Three Peenemünde scientists, all anti-Nazis who had refused American contracts, confided to Osborne that the rocket team's strict hierarchical structure under Dornberger, Axster, and von Braun had remained intact despite the German surrender. Before every interrogation, each German was carefully briefed by the triumvirate and their lieutenants about what could and could not be disclosed. The guidelines were explicit: divulge no more than required to arouse technical and scientific curiosity and avoid going into technical detail that would render employment by the Americans unnecessary. …After every interrogation, each German was debriefed in the presence of his colleagues, so that the others knew precisely what was the Americans' current state of knowledge. Osborne also discovered that those scientists who criticized or failed to obey Doenberger's edicts were punished.[60]

E. Skull and Bones and "Secret Germany"

---

[59] Ibid., p. 52.

[60] Tom Bower, The Paperclip Conspiracy: The Hunt for the Nazi Scientists, p. 126. It should also be pointed out that Bower makes it clear that General Patton's U.S. Third Army was somehow involved in Operation Paperclip. (p. 141).

1. 2004: Bonesman Bush "versus" Bonesman Kerry

But the German and Nazi connection behind the JFK murder, and behind the alleged MAJIC-12 group, is not merely an historical matter of a relatively distant past. It is every bit a contemporary and lasting legacy of power, influence, and corruption.

As briefly as it came to the public's attention, and then was "buried" behind a façade of ostensibly more important "issues," the 2004 American presidential election hosted somewhat of a first, for the candidates from both major political parties had something highly unusual in common, both incumbent Republican President George Walker "Dubya" Bush and Massachusetts Democratic Senator John Kerry were both initiated during their senior year as students at Yale University, into the same secret society, the Skull and Bones society.

From one point of view, then, the 2004 election was indeed, "fixed," since no matter what the outcome, a Bonesman would be in the White House. But surely it does not matter if both Bush and Kerry were members of the same innocent, prank-filled college fraternity.

It would not, if Skull and Bones were merely a "college fraternity." The trouble is, it is not, nor are its members and alumni ordinary "common" people.

2. Daddy and Dubya Bush: The RNC and the Eastern European Émigré Community

Consider, for example, that President Bush's father, former President George Herbert Walker Bush, was also a member, as was his father, former Senator Prescott Bush, as was former President and Supreme Court Justice William Howard Taft….and on an on the list would go, including prominent clergymen, businessmen, lawyers, and government officials.

While this is not the place to go into an exhaustive history of Skull and Bones, for our purposes it is important to note that the Society itself, founded at Yale in 1832, has German roots, being the first, and presumably not the only, chapter of some very secret society that existed in Germany at the time, a society that, as of yet, no one seems to know the name of.[61] But given Skull and Bones' members' heavy involvement in religion, law, finance, and politics, one can guess at one German secret society with similar interests, initiatory methods, and goals: Adam Weishaupt's Bavarian Illuminati. We have already pointed out that Bormann made his legal residence near Ingolstadt.

It must be recalled that a great deal of the Bush family fortune was made by Prescott Bush precisely in utilizing his "German connections" to do business with Nazi Germany. Indeed, the business interests of Prescott Bush with Germany were considered so extensive that his concerns fell under the "Trading with the Enemy Act".[62]

Son George H.W. Bush went on, of course, to become a Texas oilman, founding Zapata Oil company, and later became director of the CIA, and Ronald Reagan's Vice President. And, during both Reagan's first run for the Presidency as the Republican candidate in 1980, and again, during George H.W. Bush's run in 1988, the Republican national committee had some unusual and powerful political allies: the Eastern European émigré groups, whose leaders maintained publicly impeccable facades that cloaked their fascist and Nazi pasts.[63]

3. Secret Germany

---

[61] For exhaustive histories and examinations of the Skull and Bones society, see Anthony Sutton's study, America's Secret Establishment. More recently a valuable contribution of the lore of "Bones" is the collection of essays by editor Kris Millegan entitled Fleshing Out Skull and Bones: Investigations into America's Most Powerful Secret Society.

[62] See Fleshing Out Skull and Bones, pp. 173-294 for the whole story.

[63] For the story of the émigré groups and their role in Republican Party politics during the Reagan-Bush years, see Russ Bellant's Old Nazis, the New Right, and the Republican Party (Boston: South End Press, 1991). ISBN 0-89608-419-1. Gehlen's émigré fronts not only continued to exist, they not only continued to be headed by former Nazis, but also helped elect Ronald Reagan and George H.W. Bush! That puts a whole new perspective on G.H.W. Bush's "New World Order" speech, and Reagan's "Mr. Gorbachev, tear down this wall" remark. Similar émigré or exilee community connections exist in the background of former (West) Germany Chancellor Helmut Kohl, who was backed by the Silesian Exiles' Society. (Q.v. Rechte Machen Kassen and The New Reich)

That there are long, and secret, associations and contacts between the United States and Germany is evident from the Skull and Bones society, both as an organization founded as a chapter of some similar lodge in Germany, as well as through the individual and family connections represented by the Bushes and others who are members of that society. The connections, and associations, have played significant roles in American politics as well, as is evident in the fallout from Operation Paperclip, the Kennedy assassination, and even its much more limited role in the election of Presidents Reagan and G.H.W. Bush.

But there may be a far older association, a far older historical pedigree, one dating back to the Hohenstaufen Emperors of Germany, and to their global imperialistic ambitions.

In 1943, while World War Two was raging in its full fury, an American author published a little-known and long-forgotten book called The Thousand Year Conspiracy: Secret Germany Behind the Mask.[64] The author's name was Paul Winkler, and he sought to explain the most fundamental mystery of World War Two – and indeed, in a certain sense, of World War One as well – and that was, what on earth had happened to the Germans?

The Germans, Winkler was careful to point out, were no more or less warlike than any other people. Germany had exercised a profound cultural influence on the formation of the "Western ethos": engineers and musicians and physicists and biologists all studied German before the war, and clamored to enter her universities. Mozart, Bach, Beethoven, Schumann, Schubert, Brahms, Dürer, Luther, Einstein, Planck, and on and on the list could go, of famous Germans who profoundly enriched human experience.

Yet, that was the mystery, for while being no more or less warlike as a people than anyone else, when they did go to war, they did it…. they did it well. And with Nazism, it seemed to many as if something in the genius of the German people had gone quite insane, that some "ethnic character defect" had become so pathological that many called for the actual sterilization and extermination of Germans after the war. Indeed, serious plans were drawn up in the United States – the so-called "Morgenthau Plan" – that would have left Germany stripped of all industry and reduced to a servile agrarian state depopulated by some tens of millions, the ultimate Jewish revenge, perhaps, for Nazism's crimes.

---

[64] Paul Winkler, The Thousand-Year Conspiracy: Secret Germany Behind the Mask (New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1943).

But for Winkler, Nazism, and Germany's well-known ability to wage war, was "not the product of some 'spontaneous generation' crystallized by Hitler's evil genius" nor was it "simply a reaction to the harsh terms of the Versailles treaty" nor did it derive "from some basic trait in the German character."[65] For Winkler, Nazism was the manifestation of something far older, and far more sinister. It was the manifestation of a millenium's long secret conspiracy. It was, in short, a "secret society gone public."

> In 1921….during one of the sessions of the Bavarian 'Landtag' (Pariliament), the Deputy Gareis, with a heavy pile of documents in his hands, made a statement to the other Deputies which none of them seemed able to understand: 'I have here the evidence of a thousand years' conspiracy – evidence which I shall present to you shortly.'
>
> A few days later Gareis was murdered. The criminal escaped punishment and the incident was practically forgotten. The evidence to which Gareis referred was never revealed.[66]

But this incident was enough to fuel Winkler's own quest to reconstruct what Deputy Gareis had unearthed.

What Gareis had unearthed, was not a defect in Germany, but rather, a defect that dominated Germany: Prussia and "Prussianism." Winkler comments as follows:

> For us, 'Prussianism' goes back to the early part of the thirteenth century and is still very much alive in our day. It is the heir of the world-embracing ambitions of the Carolingians and 'Holy Roman' Emperors – but at the same time it is also what it became during the centuries in the stuffy and nauseating hot-house of East Prussia.
>
> The principal events in Germany between the two World Wars, the reasons for Hitler's rise to power and the events that followed can be > understood only by a thorough scrutiny of the Prusso-teutonic and Fehmic organizations.[67]

---

[65] Paul Winkler, The Thousand-Year Conspiracy: Secret Germany Behind the Mask, p. ix.

[66] Ibid., p. 3.

The “Fehmic orgamizations” that Winkler refers to are the Helige Vehme, which were secret imperial courts established by the German Holy Roman Emperors and their supporters in the various principalities and duchies, primarily Westphalia, that were to hand out and deliver death sentences to anyone convicted of treason against the empire. They were, in a sense, also secret societies, since membership was by invitation-initiation.

But in any case, Winkler points the finger at something very significant, and usually completely ignored by histories of Nazism, even by those predisposed to view Nazism as a primarily occult or esoteric phenomenon. That something is the deep secret society connection of Nazism to the old Teutonic Knights, themselves founded by the mediaeval German Emperors to further their imperialistic ambitions.

At a time when the Papacy and the German Emperors were locked in mortal combat and when the Papacy could call on its own “shock troops” in the form of the “military orders” like the Templars or Knights Hospitaliter of St. John, the German Emperors sought to create their own imperial version. The process began when “Emperor Frederick Barbarossa of the Hohenstaufen family had himself proclaimed ‘master of the world,’ Dominus Mundi, in 1158 in the fields of Roncaglia during his second campaign in Italy.”[68] In order to offset the papal advantage with its military orders, the German Emperors created their own version, supporting “the formation of the purely German-armed Order of the Teutonic Knights.”[69] This was achieved through a long-term deception, for initially the Order was founded with but vague ties to the Empire in order to secure the necessary papal blessing “indispensable to its prestige.”[70] Nonetheless, the Emperors managed to see that the head of the order during these years were always personally loyal to themselves. Finally, when the existence of the Order was "quite secure" it "more openly put itself at the service of the Imperial plans for expansion."[71] The man responsible for putting the Teutonic Knights on this political footing was Hermann von Salza, the Grand Master from 1210 to 1239.[72]

---

[67] Winkler, The Thousand-Year Conspiracy: Secret Germany Behind the Mask, pp. 27-28, emphasis added.

[68] Ibid., p. 32.

[69] Ibid., p. 35.

[70] Ibid.

Von Salza approached the Polish Duke Conrad of Masovia and persuaded him that the Teutonic Knights would be able to assist him in his battles against "heathen tribes," namely, the Slavic Berussians, or Prussians, that inhabited the region later to become Prussia. Winkler continues the story:

> Early in 1226 a formal invitation from Conrad arrived at the Order. Von Salza consulted with (Emperor) Frederick II at once and the latter, in his Bull of Rimini, entrusted von Salza with an imperial 'mission' for his future campaign.
>
> This Bull…. Was the very basis for all future action of the Teutonic Knights; a permanent charter for all Prussian conquest, and all German political expansion which, during the centuries to come and until this day, was to radiate from that territory.[73]

In other words, if one follows the logic closely, an organization had a legal charter – a charter never revoked by competent authority that could claim descent from the original granting authority – for conquest. And that organization was, by definition, a military secret society whose core ideology was the establishment of a world empire with German, with Prussian, hegemony at its heart and height.

The Bull of Rimini may be taken then as the de facto founding of the Order that would play such a role in European geopolitics for centuries to come. But equally important is the figure of the "renaissance man" Emperor Frederick II, well-known for his indulgence of scholars and sciences deemed esoteric by any standards, and certainly by the standards of the mediaeval Latin Church. Frederick liked to model his behavior on his famous grandfather Frederick Barbarossa,[74] and also maintained “that the Teutonic Knights had been founded by Barbarossa, a claim which seems to have no justification in fact.”[75] While Frederick II might have been trying to vest his Teutonic Knights with the aura of Barbarossa, and have invented this fact, it nonetheless cannot be discounted that he might have also let slip the real founder of the Order.

---

[71] Winkler, The Thousand-Year Conspiracy: Secret Germany Behind the Mask, p. 35.

[72] Ibid.

[73] Ibid.

In any case, it is the Order of the Teutonic Knights that must be considered the real heir to the global imperial ambitions of the mediaeval German Emperors, much more so than the German Empire itself.[76]

a. The Hohenzollerns Become Grand Masters of the Order

But by the late Middle Ages and early Renaissance, northern German cities formed the trading league known as the Hansa, or Hanseatic League, in part to overthrow the rule of the Order in cities along Germany’s eastern Baltic coast. This was successful. With its fortune and military power declining, the Order was approached by a new ally – indeed its only ally in this period – the Margrave of Brandenburg, Frederick von Hohenzollern.[77] The two – the Order and the Hohenzollern Margravate – entered into a pact to give assistance to each other against the subjects of each. And thus was born the unusual alliance between the house of Hohenzollern and the old Prussian noble interests represented by the Order. As a result of this relationship, by 1511 Albert von Hohenzollern und Brandenburg was elected to the Grand Mastership of the order, a “post he filled with full understanding of the Order’s traditions and ambitions.”[78] As Grand Master, Albert von Hohenzollern secularized the order in 1525 by transforming it into the hereditary Duchy of Prussia.[79] The “secret society” component of the Order lived on in name, and also spawned several offshoot secret societies among the Junker nobility class in Prussia, one of which, the "Society of Lizards", maintained the Order's original imperial designs as well as esoteric doctrines.[80]

---

[74] Winkler, The Thousand-Year Conspiracy: Secret Germany Behind the Mask, p. 47.

[75] Ibid.

[76] Ibid., p. 51.

[77] Ibid., p. 79.

[78] Ibid..

[79] Ibid.

But then Winkler asks the all-important question:

> One may ask whether there is an actual secret organization behind the Junkers and Prusso-Teutonics or whether the familiar Prusso-Teutonic organizations are responsible for the sequence of events presented in this book.
>
> Really secret organizations seldom betray their existence by outward signs. Nevertheless the founding of the secret 'Society of Lizards' (Eidechsengesellschaft) is an historical fact. Reliable historians have related how this society tried to pull the strings in Prussia while the Order of the Teutonic Knights still existed. Kotzebue attributes to the activities of this secret society the secularization of Prussia.
>
> The unilinear evolution which has taken place since then – in Prussia and in a Germany dominated by Prussia – and which corresponds point by point to the basic principles of the Society of Lizards might be considered sufficient circumstantial evidence of the survival of a secret Prusso-Teutonic organization right down to our time. But there is more. The entire process of Prussian growth seems to be inspired by an uninterrupted organic plan.... No interruption in the logic of events is observable, however, even since the time when the order ceased to manage the affairs of Prussia....
>
> Our circumstantial evidence goes further: Germany was defeated in 1918 and the old ambitious plans of the Prussian elements seemed shattered forever; yet within a few months somebody, somewhere, behind the curtains in Germany, made decisions of the highest importance. These decisions meant revival of the old Fehme, the organization of systematic terror planned to undermine the young German Republic and to facilitate Germany's secret rearmament. So-called 'secret societies' sprang up from one day to the other all over Germany – societies which were secretive as regards the details of their decisions and activities, but whose existence itself was a secret from nobody. All these secret societies were closely connected among themselves; and there was no rivalry between them. Their activities complemented each other wonderfully. Even a superficial observer

---

[80] Winkler, The Thousand-Year Conspiracy: Secret Germany Behind the Mask, p. 190. The esoteric connection of the chosen name "Lizards" should be noted, for the lizard, in the form of the salamander, is a symbol of the greatest esotericist, the figure of Hermes Trismegistus, or in his Egyptian nomenclature, Thoth.

> must conclude that all this was possible only if these societies received instructions from the same hidden, absolutely secret sources.[81]

And remember, Martin Bormann became a member of one of these secret societies, as did his then boss in the Nazi Party Rudolf Hess.

b. Hitler's Only Known Initiation

Here the story takes on another bizarre turn, a turn that is the only known verification of what many have long suspected: that Hitler was a secret society initiate, at some time and some place. But Winkler's version of the story points not to the usual suspects – the Thulegesellschaft and its shady associations with Viennese esotericists and racists Guido von List and Lanz von Liebenfels – but to the old Teutonic Knights:

> At the end of the nineteenth century, Emperor Wilhelm II, who was nurtured on the traditions of the Prusso-Teutonic Order, actually reestablished this Order in Prussia and Germany. The descendants of those who, acting in the Society of Lizards, displaced the ancient Order from Prussia – and contributed thus to its disintegration – now claimed for themselves the right to appear cloaked in the dignity of those whose place they had taken…. Not much was said about the activities of the revived Order, but its yearly conventions in East Prussia were generally noted by the German newspapers. A few months after the beginning of the present war, a short notice appeared in German papers announcing that Hitler himself had been initiated into the Teutonic Order.
>
> No information is published about the internal organization of the contemporary Prusso-Teutonic Order, nor about its exact connections with what – if it still exists – is the present-day survival of the Society of Lizards.
>
> ….In this connection it is interesting to note that in May, 1924, when the 700th anniversary of the University of Naples, a University founded by Emperor Frederick II, was celebrated, a crown was found near the sarcophage of the Emperor in the Cathedral of Palermo with the following inscription:
>
> > "Seinem Kaiser und Helden
> > Das geheime Deutschland"
> > ("To Their Emperor and Hero, From Secret Germany")

---

[81] Winkler, The Thousand-Year Conspiracy: Secret Germany Behind the Mask, p. 236,

> If we assume the existence of a Secret Germany, the open Junker organizations like the Reichs-Landbund and the Herrenklub – which also derive from the Order of the thirteenth century – have only a secondary role, carrying out instructions of the secret group like all the other recently established societies which we have mentioned. But even if we disregard the circumstantial evidence which proves the actual survival of Secret Germany, we must admit that a straight line can be detected between the Teutonic Order of the thirteenth century and the Germany of today.[82]

In other words, Kaiser Wilhelm II could well afford to abdicate the imperial throne in 1918 at the end of World War One, and go into exile in Holland, for, as Grand Master of whatever secret society entity still existed in Prussia, he and the Hohenzollerns and the Prussian imperialist interests they represented still exercised power and influence behind the scenes. And in any case, the purpose of the initiation of Hitler into this order is clear enough: the bargain had been made with the public political party that would best carry through its secret ambitions.

And what of Bormann? All of this would have been known to him as well.

And it should come as no surprise that this ideology of world domination by an elite also forms the motivation of another secret society, one with its own Germanic connections: Skull and Bones.

F. Final Thoughts

So, if the Nazis, a "Brotherhood of the Bell," were involved with the assassination of President Kennedy – and a circumstantial case has been presented that they were, and at a very high level – then what motivated their involvement?

The previous chapters have outlined a case that this motivation consisted of several factors, each one alone a sufficient reason for their involvement, and that, taken together, tend to increase the probability that they were involved at the deepest and highest levels of the conspiracy:

---

[82] Winkler, The Thousand-Year Conspiracy: Secret Germany Behind the Mask, pp. 236-238, emphasis added.

1. They were involved to protect the technology that they had developed during the war, and its continued quasi-independent or independent development. This was threatened by Kennedy in any number of ways, by his attempt to smash the CIA, which provided a useful cover for some of their political activities, to his attempt to establish limited cooperation with the Soviets in space. If there was an alternative technology of propulsion involved in the Apollo program, and specifically with the LEM (Lunar Excursion Module), such cooperation might have revealed to the Soviets, bitter enemies of the Nazis, a component of their technology as well as their program of its continued secret development.
2. They were involved to protect their bases of financial and political operation, not only within and behind the various Federal agencies and American corporations which they had infiltrated, but also within and behind the various other host countries – particularly in Latin America – that any degree of exposure, such as “smashing the CIA” might have caused, would have threatened.
3. If one posits a connection between an ongoing “Nazi International” and international organized crime, as is likely since drug running, gambling, and so on would be easy means for funding and laundering money for black projects, then the actions of the Kennedy administration against organized crime would also constitute a threat to these interests.
4. If the actions of the Bunge Corporation in massive short-selling on the day of the assassination are an indicator of a deeper Nazi involvement – and it must not be forgotten that Bunge was at that time a German company with headquarters in Argentina – then a subsidiary motivation offers itself, though one that did not enter into the primary calculations for the murder: financial gain. Having entered into(or initiated) a conspiracy to assassinate the President, it would have been uncharacteristic for a Nazi International, especially one headed by the financial wizard Bormann, not to have planned to profit from it.

5. Finally, though not discussed, such a public murder would have an inevitable demoralizing effect on the American psyche, it would serve as a reminder that the hidden elite can remove anyone, at any time, any where, and get away with it. It was a warning, even to the rich and powerful like the Kennedy family, not to attempt to dismantle the loci of power they had put into place to ensure their own continued accretion of power, wealth, and influence.

Whether the Nazis initiated this conspiracy, or later wormed their way into it, is in the final analysis immaterial. But it is clear that they were involved, and at some very deep level.

And of all the groups with connections to the assassination conspiracy – Mafia, disgruntled anti-Castro Cubans, big business, big oil, threatened Federal Reserve shareholders, the military-industrial-intelligence complex, the space program, each group with its own motivation for killing the President - one thing stands out most clearly, when one considers all the evidence. The Nazis were the one group that shared motivations with all the others. They were the one group with connections to all of them.

10.

“What is the Brotherhood of the Bell?”

The Brotherhood of the Bell in History and Practice

“And yes, in addition to these many ‘petty’ little conspiracies, there really is a great conspiracy – in fact, there are many of them. Churchill just referred to the entire set of conspiring cartels as the ‘High Cabal.’ This is a loose-knit set of extraordinarily wealthy cartels that between them control much of the financial power of the world.”[1]

So what was the SS Brotherhood of the Bell?

From one perspective, that represented by the epigraph above, it was the latest in a long line of organizations designed to suppress alternative energy sources in a history of suppression that began in the nineteenth century, and really took firm root with J.P. Morgan’s suppression of Nikola Tesla early in the twentieth century.

But that is a simplistic picture.

The SS Brotherhood of the Bell was the entire organization of secret research – and the security to protect it – that was developed by the Third Reich in conjunction with its secret weapons projects. That this group intended its existence and research to continue after the war is evidenced by the measures it took to protect the secrets of the Bell by murdering most of its research team, and by spiriting the Bell itself and its project documentation out of Europe to…..to wherever it went.

From the historical perspective, the “SS Brotherhood of the Bell” is both reality and a symbol. As a symbol, it is a sign of what happens when a network of cartels and greedy power-hungry businessmen decide that they know what is best for everyone else, and put into power a political party whose ideology is in consonance with their own grotesque designs for a “New World Order,” who plan the rise, rule of terror, and dizzy fall of a world military super-power all within the lightening fast period of twelve years. In that sense, too, the Third Reich was perhaps a dress rehearsal.

---

[1] Tom Bearden, Energy From the Vacuum: Concepts and Principles, (Cheniere, 2004, ISBN 0-9725146-0-0), p. 211.

But as a reality, the SS Brotherhood of the Bell was the first historically documented case of a secret development of an off-the-books physics and technology that promises limitless good, and possesses the boundless potential for evil. It is likewise the first documented case of the genuine existence of an alternative and very secret technology. Similarly, it is the first historical example of the measures taken not only to secretly develop it, but also to suppress any thoughts or inclinations toward an open development of its full potential. The "SS Brotherhood," like its Teutonic Knights forebears, did not hesitate to murder in order to protect the instruments of its hegemony.

In yet another sense, the SS Brotherhood of the Bell is also the first historical example of a "Military Assessment Joint Intelligence Committee;" or, to put it more succinctly and familiarly, the Brotherhood of the Bell is the first real example of a kind of MAJIC-12 group, a group tasked with the secret development of technology and with security and disinformation campaigns designed to deflect attention of anyone who might get too close, and when that fails, to eliminate the interloper. Whether or not this Brotherhood infiltrated the later MAJIC-12 group or indeed became its nucleus, there is little doubt that a connection exists, and my intuition tells me it may have been a component in its initial formation.

In chapters five and six, argumentation was presented that the Bell represented perhaps the first known "scalar" device, a device most probably intended by the Germans to be a breakthrough in propulsion. It certainly was that, and in this instance, the Brotherhood of the Bell may likewise be seen to be the first historical example of a genuinely secret space program. In this regard, recall the significance of the fact that Dr. Kurt Debus, a member of the Peenemünde rocket team – Nazi Germany's "open" space program – was also a member of the Bell's research team, a very hidden and secret project.

In any case, as a proto-scalar device, its weaponization potential, if not initially planned on or realized by the Germans, was quickly perceived by them. Of that there can be no doubt, since its classification as Kriegsentscheidend clearly indicates their perception of its potential as a weapon or weapons platform. Its significance as a proto-scalar device would thus seem to render Tom Bearden's following extensive remarks about the suppression of alternative physics and technology – and who is behind it - more significant. Bearden's remarks, cited extensively below, should be read not only for their intrinsic worth, but in the context of what has preceded in this book, for they are characteristic of the operation of any "Brotherhood of the Bell".

> And yes, in addition to these many "petty" little conspiracies, there really is a great conspiracy – in fact, there are many of them. Churchill just referred to the entire set of conspiring cartels as the "High Cabal." This is a loose-knit set of extraordinarily wealthy cartels that between them control much of the financial power of the world. You can only find the principals behind a couple of hundred of interlocking corporations, if you penetrate deeply enough. Much of their great financial income comes from the control of energy at its various levels, through a net of interlocking corporations. Something like $2 trillion dollars per year is their "take" from energy worldwide. Oil plays a great role in that. These "high cabal" fellows make or break nations financially, as is almost being done to Argentina as this is being written. They also have been stopping (Coefficient of Performance greater than unity) electrical power systems since shortly after the turn of the century, using whatever means are necessary – fair or foul. That is why we are still burning oil, coal, and natural gas, and why our automobiles and trucks run off gasoline and diesel, and not off free electrical energy from the vacuum. The high cabal intends to keep it that way. Some of the major primary means of "stopping" invention have been as follows: > a. Manipulation and improper use of the law (Gray's production line was shut down by law officers before his engines could roll off there and onto the market).
>
> b. Involving the unsuspecting inventor in drug charges by planting drugs on his property surreptitiously, then secretly notifying the drug enforcement officials who suddenly raid the premises and discover the narcotics, resulting in the inventor going to jail since he had been caught "red-handed."
> c. Threatening the inventor's life and the lives of his family, to frighten him away from what he is doing.
> d. Arranging a fatal accident for the inventor, such as a fatal auto accident, a fall from a high place, or drowning.
> e. Assassination. Hit men are fairly simple to hire; a good one is a bit more difficult to hire but it's doable. A good hit man might assume a disguise and fake a robbery, shooting and killing the target in the "robbery." In an extreme case, he just fires at a distance with a professional sniper rifle that is silenced.[2] A variation is the use of a "throwaway" assassin, a fellow who has been deeply conditioned by very harsh methods, to deeply involve his autonomic nervous system. He can be spotted by the "glaring eyes" effect of autonomic nervous system involvement. This fellow is only marginally functional in real life, and requires a handler. He also must "fixate" for some minutes (usually from 20 to 30) on the target, by staring at him for a period. Then – say, the next day – while the target is at lunch in a public restaurant, the throwaway walks in, walks straight to the target, and empties a pistol in him at point blank range. He remains there until the police arrive and arrest him. He is immune even to torture; nothing can be gotten out of him, even by electrical shocks on his genitals…..

f. Making the inventor an offer he "cannot refuse," in the old Mafia sense. In the latter, nicely dressed persons come to the inventor's house, meet with him, and offer him a large sum of money to quit what he is doing for the rest of his life. The going sum varies between $5 million and $10 million, usually. The offer is real and it cannot be refused, either the inventor accepts it, or he and all his family are dead when these gentlemen leave the premises. If the inventor refuses anyway, he and his family are killed. Usually the bodies also just "disappear" and are never found or heard from again.
g. These days, variations are used such as a careful crask of another auto into the back of the inventor's car so he is really shaken up badly but not seriously hurt. He goes to the hospital for checkup, in case of concussion, etc. Everything is seemingly okay, but he is kept overnight for observation. That night he is given a hypodermic of air in his veins. Next morning his family receives a call that the inventor has suffered seizures from an apparent concussion after all, and is fighting for his life. If he doesn't die, he becomes a human vegetable. Piece of cake.
h. Then there's the ice dart dipped in curare. The curare paralyzes the muscles of the heart and lungs; the inventor goes down in convulsive floundering, gasping and unable to breathe or pump blood. He expires very quickly. The curare breaks down in the body, the ice melts, and you have a fellow the medics find died of convulsive hheart seizure,. Etc. Works like a charm. This is an adapted "dirty spooks" trick, adapted from those branches of the intelligence communities of the world that specialize in assassinations.

---

[2] As Mae Brussell once pointed out, nowhere and at no time did the Warren Commission ever seriously consider more than one shooter, using a silenced rifle.

i. Use of “gaming,” which was originally developed to influence or change the behavior of foreign leaders. Imagine writing a scenario, as for a movie. Only you have the deep psychological profile of the targeted individual. You also have the deep psychological profiles of quite a few other individuals who have “knee-jerk” reactions in a certain direction useful to you in your games (in your scenarios). These are called “agents of influence”, to get them into interacting with the target, only a phone call or other contact need be made and a stimulus given, and they are off and running, self-powered and going after that target with their knee-jerk response. So very sophisticated computers are used, the scenario (intended plot of events to happen) is prepared (the artificial intelligence programs will even give the probabilities of success of all the variants), and a recommended scenario variant is derived and accepted. Then the controller has one or more agents working for him that contact the players (the agents of influence). They get their phone calls or stimuli, react in predictable fashion, and come pell-mell at the inventor, interacting all over the board with him. The range of games is enormous, from stock schemes to lawsuits to infiltrating agents of influence into the internal organization of the inventor to money laundering, etc. The controller follows the progress, and only once in awhile makes slight adjustments (may need to trigger other agents of influence, send in one actual agent, etc.). Over the last 20 years, the gaming has become very expert. So many games can be launched against a single inventor that he usually is finished or nullified by one of them, eventually. Having been gamed over 200 times in the last two decades, I plan to write a book one day on the subject of the games and what to watch for.

j. ...

k. A variation is to send in a special agent who penetrates the (inventor’s) group and becomes a member. Indeed, the high cabal has certain persons who specialize in just such penetration and are specialists at setting up disruption. They have had plenty of practice, and are very good ar their trade. The identities of some of these “special agents” would surprise the causal observer. The so-called “overunity community” is rather strongly penetrated and misdirected by a number of such special agents, in addition to a greater number of agents of influence.[3]

---

[3] Bearden, Energy From the Vacuum: Concepts and Principles, pp. 211-215.

Such a passage, coming in the middle of an otherwise highly theoretical physics text, is extraordinary.

A. Nick Redfern's FBI Documents on Nazis and UFOs

UFOlogist Nick Redfern is one of few "mainstream UFOlogists" that has at least given the Nazi angle on the early UFO phenomenon a hearing. In fact, he has done more than just give it a hearing, but devoted a whole chapter to it in his book The F.B.I. Files: The FBI's UFO Top Secrets Exposed.

> Before addressing the issue of FBI involvement in this matter, let us first acquaint ourselves with those few tantalizing facts on this emotive issue. Consider the following, extracted from a Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) report of 27 May 1954:
>
> "A German newspaper (not further identified) recently published an interview with George Klein, famous German engineer and aircraft expert, describing the experimental construction of 'flying saucers' carried out by him from 1941 to 1945. Klein stated that he was present when, in 1945, the first piloted 'flying saucer' took off and reached a speed of 1,300 miles per hour within 3 minutes. The experiments resulted in three designs: one designed by Meithe, was a disk-shaped aircraft, 135 feet in diameter, which did not rotate; another, designed by Habermohl and Schriever, consisted of a large rotating ring, in the center of which was a round, stationary cabin gor the crew. When the Soviets occupied Prague, the Germans destroyed every trace of the 'flying saucer' project and nothing more was heard of Habermohl and his assistants. Schriever recently died in Bremen, where he had been living. In Breslau, the Soviets managed to capture one of the saucers built by Miethe, who escaped to France. He is reportedly in the US at present.[4]

This is the standard Nazi Legend of the UFO: the secret test facilities in Breslau and Prague, the names of Habermohl, Schriever, and Miethe, and the allegation of Soviet capture of at least one of these devices. Again, with Prague, one has the connection to the Kammlerstab.

But with the mention of Breslau, one must pause once again to consider yet another curious "operational anomaly" of the end of

---

[4] Nick Redfern, The F.B.I. Files: The FBI's UFO Top Secrets Exposed Simon and Schuster, 1998), pp.198-199.

World War Two, and that anomaly is the fanatical German defense of Breslau against the overwhelming Soviet forces besieging the city. Breslau, of course, was in Lower Silesia, then a province of Germany. As such, it was the nearest large city to the environs where the Bell was tested. So, once again, behind the consistent Nazi UFO Legend and its insistence that something highly advanced was being worked on in or near Breslau, one has in The Bell the probable basis of the legend. It should be noted, however, that at no time in the development of the history of the Bell does Polish researcher Igor Witkowski ever mention the names of Miethe, Habermohl, or Schriever in connection with it.

Redfern also mentions the involvement of the United States Air Force in tracking down the Nazi Legend of the UFO:

> A report dated 3 January 1952 from Brigadier General W.M. Garland, USAF, to General Samford, Air Force Director of Intelligence,[5], also addresses the issue of German involvement in the UFO mystery. Although somewhat speculative, relevant portions of the report confirm that elements of the USAF were of the opinion that some UFOs were of earthly origin.
>
> “The continued reports of unusual flying objects requires positive action to determine the nature and origin of this phenomena (sic)…. It is logical to relate the reported sightings to the known development of aircraft, jet propulsion, rockets and range extension capabilities in Germany and the USSR. In this connection, it is to be noted that certain developments by the Germans, particularly the Horton wing, jet propulsion, and refueling, combined with their extensive employment of V-1 and V-2 weapons during World War II, lend credence to the possibility that the flying objects may be of German and Russian origin. The developments mentioned above were completed and operational between 1941 and 1944 and subsequently fell into the hands of the Soviets at the end of the war. There is evidence that the Germans were working on these projects as far back as 1931 to 1938. Therefore it may be assumed that the Germans had at least a 7 to 10 year lead over the United States….[6]

Reading carefully between the lines, it is clear that as late as 1952, the director of United States Air Force Intelligence is entertaining the possibility not only that some UFOs are of Soviet origin, but of German origin as well. But in 1952, Germany was already divided, and in no economic shape to continue such black projects. In other words, General Garland was indicating a possibly independent and continued German development of these technologies in places outside of Germany. Note too that according to General Garland, such projects may have been begun in the early 1930s, with the terminus ante quem being fully two years before the Nazis took power. In any case, the period from 1931 to 1938 was when the various "aether vortex theories" were being developed in Germany by Hilgenberg and others, so it stands to reason that some experimental headway in technologies based upon those theories had already been made.

---

[5] General Samford is also the US Air Force general who gave the Pentagon’s first, and last, press conference-briefing on the UFOs, after the UFO sightings over Washington, D.C., in 1952.

[6] Nick Redfern, The F.B.I. Files, pp. 199-200, emphasis added.

However, Garland's remarks might indicate much more, if one places them in the wider context of the Bell, the Kammlerstab, and Igor Witkowski's own remarks to the effect that the Bell represented an "off-the-books" program, buried deep behind the V-1 and V-2 and various other rocket and secret weapons projects of Nazi Germany. In effect, Garland is indicating that the possible real beginnings of a UFO-study and engineering group were in the years prior to World War Two, and in Germany. In this connection, I pointed out in my previous book on Nazi secret weapons, Reich of the Black Sun, that such a secret UFO study group clearly existed in Fascist Italy, having been established by Benito Mussolini in 1933.[7] By the time of the end of the war, the SS had in effect become this "study group," and it is no less significant that The Bell was its most sensitive project.

Redfern then cites an FBI report that indicates that those on the "inside" were clearly aware that something was quite wrong with the Allied Legend of American nuclear bomb-engineering superiority over the Germans:

> …In addition (source) said that more recent reports have been received from representatives of the Central Intelligence Agency in Southern Europe and Southern Asia to the effect that the Russians were experimenting with some type of radical aircraft or guided missile which could be dispatched for great distances out over the sea, made to > turn in flight and return to the base from which it was launched. He related that this information was extremely worthy of notice as experiments in this country have so far only developed to the point where we are concerned with delivering a missile to the required point of impact and no consideration has been given to imparting to that missile the ability to return. (Source) also advised that it is a known fact that the Russians are attempting to develop some type of nuclear energy, that they received a wealth of information concerning nuclear energy at the time of their occupation in Germany, and that they have at their disposal a limited supply of fissionable materials. (Source) pointed out that the Russians have some very capable scientists in the field of atomic energy and that, in addition thereto, they took into their custody some of the most-advanced and capable scientists of the German nation.[8]

---

[7] Joseph P. Farrell, Reich of the Black Sun, pp. 319-330.

But why worry at all if the wartime German scientists were such nuclear bunglers? Unless, of course, one recalls that Baron Manfred Von Ardenne had hit upon the idea of using cyclotrons for enriching uranium.

Then Redfern delivers some bombshells.

The first is a report delivered to the FBI in the summer of 1947 – the year of the alleged Roswell crash and recovery, as well as of the alleged founding of MJ-12 – by one of its informants, a Mr. Edwin M. Bailey of Stamford, Connecticut. Bailey's comments were the subject of the following memorandum to the FBI's director, J. Edgar Hoover:

> Bailey stated that the topic of 'flying suacers' had caused considerable comment and concern to the present day scientists and indicated that he himself had a personal theory concerning the 'flying saucers." Prior to advancing his own theory, Bailey remarked that immediately after the conclusion of World War II, a friend of his (censored), allegedly observed the "flying saucers" from an observatory in Milan and Bologna, Italy. He stated that apparently at that time the "flying saucers" had caused a little comment in Italy but that after some little publicity they immediately died out as public interest. Bailey stated that it is quite possible that actually the "flying saucers" could be radio controlled germ bombs or atom bombs which are circling the orbit of the earth and which could be controlled by radio and directed to land on [8] Nick Redfern, The FBI Files, p. 200, emphasis added.

---

FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION
U. S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE
COMMUNICATIONS SECTION

NOV 7 1957

TELETYPE

Mr. Boardman
Mr. Belmont
Mr. Mohr
Mr. Nease
Mr. Parsons
Mr. Rosen
Mr. Tamm
Mr. Trotter
Mr. Clayton
Tele. Room
Mr. Holloman
Miss Gandy
[redacted]

URGENT 11-7-57 4-55 PM EST WHH

TO DIRECTOR FBI

FROM SAC, DETROIT 1P

UNIDENTIFIED FLYING OBJECTS, IS - X. REBUTEL NOV SIX LAST.

[redacted], WARSAW, POLAND, WAS GERMAN POW MAY, NINETEEN FORTY TWO, UNTIL SUMMER OF NINETEEN FOURTYFIVE. ARRIVED NY MAY TWO, NINETEEN FIFTYONE, AS DP, AR NO [redacted]. [redacted] UPON INTERVIEW ADVISED THAT WHILE GERMAN POW DURING NINETEEN FORTYFOUR OBSERVED A VEHICLE DESCRIBED AS CIRCULAR IN SHAPE, SEVENTY FIVE TO ONE HUNDRED YARDS IN DIAMETER, APPROXIMATELY FOURTEEN FEET HIGH. THE VEHICLE WAS OBSERVED TO SLOWLY RISE VERTICALLY TO HEIGHT SUFFICIENT TO CLEAR FIFTY FOOT WALL AND TO MOVE SLOWLY HORIZONTALLY A SHORT DISTANCE OUT OF VIEW OBSTRUCTED BY TREES. ENGINE OF TRACTOR FAILED TO OPERATE DURING THIS PERIOD AND ONE OTHER OCCASION WHEN HIGH PITCHED WHINNING NOISE HEARD IN AREA. NO INDICATION OF MENTAL INSTABILITY DURING INTERVIEW. FURTHER DETAILS FOLLOW AMSD.

~~E CORRECT LINE FOUR WORD WX FOUR SHLD BE "TWO"~~

Telephoned 11/8/57 WOB

END AND A K PLS

X 4-56 PM OK FBI WA EW

TU DISC

62-83894-342

RECORDED-84
INDEXED-84

Mr. Belmont

NOV 13 1957

11-4-57

FBI UFO Document

any designated target at the specific desire of the agency or country operating the bombs.[9]

---

[9] Nick Redfern, The FBI Files, p. 202.

Redfern notes that the FBI was in receipt of this memorandum on “18 July, 1946,”[10] a fact which is interesting in and of itself, since in 1947, if one believes the Allied Legend, no one but America was supposed to have atomic bombs! But that anyone could orbit them on remotely-guided satellites was still only an idea on the drawing boards, though it had been on the Nazis’ drawing boards long before anyone it was on anyone else’s.

In November of 1957, however, the FBI received one of its most interesting reports in its Detroit office. Barring the FBI’s censoring of the name of the witness in the report, the report itself is extremely significant, since it is the eyewitness testimony of a Polish prisoner-of-war to the extraordinary technology he saw being tested by the Germans:

> (Witness was) born February 19, 1926, in the State of Warsaw, Poland, (and) was brought from Poland as a Prisoner of War to Gut Alt Golssen approximately 30 miles east of Berlin, Germany, in May, 1942, where he remained until a few weeks after the end of World War II. He spent the following years at Displaced Persons Camps at Kork, Strasburg, Offenburg, Milheim and Freiburg, Germany. He attended a radio technician school at Freiburg and for about a year was employed in a textile mill at Laurachbaden, Germany. He arrived in the united States at New York, May 2, 1951, via the “SS General Stewart” as a Displaced Person…
>
> According to (witness), during 1944, month not recalled, while enroute to work in a field a short distance north of Gut Alt Golssen, their tractor engine stalled on a road through a swamp area. No machinery or other vehicle was then visible although a noise was heard described as a high-pitched whine similar to that produced by a large electric generator.
>
> An “SS” guard appeared and talked briefly with the German driver of the tractor, who waited five to ten minutes, after which the noise stopped and the tractor engine was started normally. Approximately 3 hours later in the same swamp area, but away from the road where the work crew was cutting “hay,” he surreptitiously, because of the German in charge of the crew and “SS” guards in the otherwise deserted area, observed a circular enclosure approximately 100 to 150 yards in diameter protected from viewers by a tarpaulin-type wall approximately 50 feet high, from which a vehicle was observed to slowly rise vertically to a height sufficient to clear the wall and then to

---

[10] Ibid.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

In Reply, Please Refer to File No. 62-0-11328

Miami, Florida
June 8, 1967

RE: [redacted]
INFORMATION CONCERNING

On April 26, 1967, [redacted] Miami, Florida, appeared at the Miami Office and furnished the following information relating to an object, presently referred to as an unidentified flying object, he allegedly photographed during November, 1944:

Sometime during 1943, he graduated from the German Air Academy and was assigned as a member of the Luftwaffe on the Russian Front. Near the end of 1944, he was released from this duty and was assigned as a test pilot to a top secret project in the Black Forest of Austria. During this period he observed the aircraft described above. It was saucer shaped, about twenty-one feet in diameter, radio controlled, and mounted several jet engines around the exterior portion of the craft. He further described the exterior portion as revolving around the dome in the center which remained stationary. It was [redacted] responsibility to photograph the object while in flight. He asserted he was able to retain a negative of a photograph he made at 7,000 meters (20,000 feet). A Xerox copy of the negative, as furnished by [redacted], appears on the last page of this communication. Also, a still photograph he allegedly made "at the risk of my life", illustrating the object parked in a hanger, appears on the last page.

According to [redacted] the above aircraft was designed and engineered by (First Name Unknown) [redacted] a German engineer whose present whereabouts is unknown to him. He assumed [redacted] was taken into custody by Allied Forces upon the termination of hostilities. [redacted] stated [redacted] unsuccessfully attempted to avoid the German draft, but was apprehended by the Gestapo move slowly horizontally a short distance out of his view, which was obstructed by nearby trees.

FBI UFO Document

This vehicle, observed from approximately 500 feet, was described as circular in shape, 75 to 100 yards in diameter, and about 14 feet high, consisting of dark gray stationary top and bottom sections, five to six feet high. The approximate three foot middle section appeared to be in Vienna, Austria, sometime during late 1943 or early 1944. [redacted] also assumed the secrets pertaining to this aircraft were captured by Allied Forces. He said this type of aircraft was responsible for the downing of at least one American B-26 airplane. He furnished the following fuel and engine data:

RE: [redacted]
INFORMATION CONCERNING

> "....Fuel mixture of N_2H_4O in Methyl Alcohol (CH_3CH) rather than 'oxygen-holding' mixture of hydrogen peroxide H_2O_2 in water. 7m 1,3m high two rocket motors; smooth flow, rotary drive over 2,000 meters per second...."

[redacted] said he copied this data from a board located in the hanger area.

[redacted] asserted he was shot down by the British on March 14, 1945, after having been reassigned to the Western Front. He was held prisoner by the British in London and later in Brussels until his release in 1946. He departed for the United States from Bremerhaven, Germany, on December 26, 1951; entering the United States in New Jersey on January 7, 1952, and was subsequently naturalized in Miami during 1958. He is presently employed as a mechanic at Eastern Airlines, Miami, Florida. He related he was born May 3, 1924, in Austria.

[redacted] stated he has withheld this information because he assumed the United States possessed it. He has become increasingly concerned because of the unconfirmed reports concerning a similar object and denials the United States has such an aircraft. He feels such a weapon would be beneficial in Vietnam and would prevent the further loss of American lives which was his paramount purpose in contacting the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI).

[redacted] reiterated he has the original negatives of both photographs. He said the shots were taken at a thirty second time exposure.

This document contains neither recommendations nor conclusions of the FBI. It is the property of the FBI and is loaned to your agency; it and its contents are not to be distributed outside your agency.

2

FBI UFO Document

a rapidly moving component producing a continuous blur similar to an aeroplane propeller, but extending the circumference of the vehicle so far as could be observed. The noise emanating from the vehicle was similar but of somewhat lower pitch than the noise previously heard. The engine of the tractor again stalled on this occasion and no effort > was made by the German driver to start the engine until the noise stopped, after which the engine started normally.[11]

None of this is the standard fare for the Nazi UFO Legend, for even the place of its testing – Gut Alt Golssen – is a far cry from Prague or Breslau. Nor is a Polish prisoner of war likely to be eager to fabricate anything that would make the Nazis look good.

According to Redfern, a similar account, dated June 8, 1967, also was found in the FBI's declassified UFO files. It reads as follows:

> On April 26, 1967, (source) appeared at the Miami Office and furnished the following information relating to an object, presently referred to as an unidentified flying object, he allegedly photographed during November, 1944.
>
> Sometime during 1943, he graduated from the German Air Academy and was assigned as a member of the Luftwaffe on the Russian Front. Near the end of 1944, he was released from this duty and was assigned as a test pilot to a top secret project in the Black Forest of Austria. During this period he observed the aircraft described above. It was saucer shaped, about twenty-one feet in diameter, radio-controlled, and mounted several jet engines around the exterior portion of the craft. He further described the exterior portion as revolving around the dome in the center which remained stationary. It was (witness's) responsibility to photograph the object while in flight. He asserted he was able to retain a negative of a photograph he made at 7,000 meters (20,000 feet).
>
> According to (witness) the above aircraft was designed and engineered by a German engineer whose present whereabouts is unknown to him. (Witness) also assumed the secrets pertaining to this aircraft were captured by Allied Forces. He said this type of aircraft was responsible for the downing of at least one American B-26 airplane.[12]

Clearly at least some in the US government's many intelligence agencies were interested in the possibility of Nazi origins for some of the observed UFOs that began invading American airspace after World War Two.

These documents, unlike the Cooper-Cantwheel MAJIC-12 documents, are undeniably authentic. One does not have to place them in a gray area between "genuine" and "complete hoax" to appreciate their significance. And this should give one pause, for they corroborate what those MAJIC-12 themselves seem to imply: that someone, somewhere, in the confusing tangle of US intelligence agencies, was keeping track of the Nazi angle on UFOs, and that they were perhaps worried about a continued independent covert development of the exotic technology they displayed. The documents that Redfern uncovers in fact corroborate the general scenarios outlined in our own examination and analysis of the Cooper-Cantwheel MAJIC-12 documents.[13]

---

[11] Nick Redfern, The FBI Files, pp. 203-204.

[12] Nick Redfern, The FBI Files, pp. 205-207.

However one slices it, there is a clear documentary indication of Nazi association with the development of at least some of the technology associated with UFO technology.

But more extraordinary is that one detects, at various levels, all the elements involved in Kennedy's assassination. And that may be significant in and of itself, an indicator, perhaps, that the "Brotherhood's" involvement in the murder was ultimately motivated by technological considerations, and financially backed by the world's largest – and well known – corporations. This surely was not the only motivation for the assassination, but, in alliance with threatened "big oil" and banking interests, it was a powerful one. If Kennedy had been successful in smashing the CIA or in joint space cooperation with the Soviets, then this might have exposed a hidden secret space program and its secret technology.

In this context, recall that one of the MAJIC-12 documents indicated that President Nixon privatized the alleged secret UFO study-and-action group. In this context, it is perhaps apparent, that there was not really any reason for him to do so. It had been independent since the end of the war.

But ultimately, what was at stake, beyond this technology and the power it represented?

One answer, perhaps, was allegedly given by Dr. Werner Von Braun himself to his former assistant at Fairchild Industries, Dr. Carol Rosin. Von Braun had retired – or perhaps had "been retired" – to Fairchild Industries from NASA after his Lunar Neutral Point discrepancy revelations to Time magazine. Rosin describes Von Braun's "dying message" to her:

---

[13] An interesting sideline on this is that Redfern also mentions the unusual Nazi connections of the famous 1950s "contactee" George Adamski. See p. 315. Redfern is not alone in noting these connections.

> When I was a Corporate Manager of Fairchild Industries from 1974 through 1977, I met the late Dr. Werner Von Braun. We first met in early 1974. At that time, Von Braun was dying of cancer but he assured me that he would live a few more years to tell me about the game that was being played – that game being the effort to weaponize space, to control the Earth from space and space itself. Von Braun had a history of working with weapons systems. He escaped from Germany[14] to come to this country and became a Vice President of Fairchild Industries, when I had met him. Von Braun's purpose during the last years of his life, his dying years, was to educate the public and decision-makers about why space-based weapons are dumb, dangerous, destabilizing, too costly, unnecessary, unworkable, and an undesirable idea, and about the alternatives that are available.
>
> As practically a deathbed speech, he educated me about those concepts and who the players were in this game. He gave me the responsibility, since he was dying, of continuing this effort to prevent the weaponization of outer space. When Werner Von Braun was dying of cancer, he asked me to be his spokesperson, to appear on occasions when he was too ill to speak. I did this.
>
> What was most interesting to me was a repetitive sentence that he said to me over and over again during the approximately four years that I had the opportunity to work with him. He said the strategy that was being used to educate the public and decision makers was to use scare tactics. That was how we identify an enemy.
>
> The strategy that Werner Von Braun taught me was that first the Russians are going to be considered to be the enemy. In fact, in 1974, they were the enemy, the identified enemy. We were told they had "killer satellites". We were told that they were coming to get us and control us – that they were "Commies."
>
> Then terrorists would be identified, and that was soon to follow. We heard a lot about terrorism. Then we were going to identify third-world country "crazies." We now call them Nations of Concern. But he said that would be the third enemy against whom we would build space-based weapons.
>
> The next enemy was asteroids. Now, at that point he kind of chuckled the first time he said it. Asteroids – against asteroids we are going to build space-based weapons.

---

[14] It should be obvious by now that Von Braun did not "escape" Germany, having worked for Hitler right up to the capitulation.

> And the funniest one of all was what he called aliens, extraterrestrials. That would be the final scare. And over and over and over during the four years that I knew him and was giving speeches for him, he would bring up that last card. “And remember, Carol, the last card is the alien card. We are going to have to build space-based weapons against aliens, and all of it is a lie.
>
> ….
>
> The last card that was being held was the extraterrestrial enemy card. The intensity with which he said that, made me realize that he knew something that he was too afraid to mention. He was too afraid to talk about it. He would not tell me the details. I am not sure I would have absorbed them if he had told me the details or even believed him in 1974. But there was no question that that man knew and had a need to know, I found out later. [15]

Rosin makes clear subsequently in her statements that she personally believes in extraterrestrials in the standard sense, that she also makes clear her personal opposition to space-based weapons,[16] and does all this in a manner that suggests that Von Braun was implying that “E.T.” was merely being misunderstood by a trigger-happy American military. In other words, the “lie” Von Braun referred to was that “ET” was being covered up and misunderstood.

But it is not at all obvious from Von Braun’s alleged remarks to her that this is the only interpretation nor even the best one. After all, Von Braun had been part of the world’s first space program and the first attempt to weaponize space, a program that outlined, long in advance of their realization, the steps necessary to place “killer satellites” in orbit: Nazi Germany’s. And Von Braun’s associate at Peenemünde, Dr. Kurt Debus – a high voltage expert – was also involved with The Bell. Debus subsequently became a director at the Kennedy Space Flight Center in Florida during the Apollo project, a strange position for an expert in high voltage to be in during the world’s first manner Lunar landing program. Von Braun’s remarks might, therefore, be interpreted to mean a planned deception, brought about by technology – the “ET Threat” – to be met with another deception, also brought about by technology: space-based weapons for "defense" against "ET" and the occasional large asteroid that wanders too close. And consider, too, that if the weapons are powerful enough to blow apart a large asteroid, what might they do if directed against the earth?

---

[15] Steven M. Greer, M.D., Disclosure: Military and Government Witnesses Reveal the Greatest Secrets in modern History (Cromer, Virginia: Crossing Point, Inc., 2001), pp. 255-256.

[16] Ibid., p. 257.

So what does one make of all the Nazis lurking in the background of the JFK assassination?

The "Brotherhood," like all the other weird players and connections – the anti-Castro Cubans, the Mafia, the Cold Warriors in the CIA and the Pentagon and the FBI, big oil, international banking – had its reasons to act and to enter such a multifaceted conspiracy, perhaps even to orchestrate it. Like them, it was hiding something; like them, it was protecting something.

Mae Brussel was, after all is said and done, right about the Nazis and the assassination, for America has continued the slide to fascism. Dummycrats are indistinguishable from Republicrooks and one conspiracy-ridden scandal – Iran-Contra, October Surprise, Watergate, BCCI, the Savings and Loan debacle, Nugan Hand, Ruby Ridge, Waco, Oklahoma City, 9/11 – follows and blurs into another. Elections are rigged by computer ballots, constitutional crises are tried on for size in Florida, two presidential candidates from the same secret society run for president while the "winner", a "conservative", allows millions of illegal aliens to pour across the borders while claiming to fight a war on terror with a camera on every stoplight in America.

If, with the distance of time from the event, the players in the JFK murder now seem to blur and run together, perhaps that is due not to our failing eyesight or faded memories, but to the fact that the coalescence of interests that brought that conspiracy together have merely continued to coalesce. They will continue to do so, as long as there is a technology that threatens their base of power, a technology – and a science - that needs to be suppressed, controlled, and weaponized. They have merely exchanged the black and silver SS uniform for the charcoal grey business suit.

….but be sure and check their ring fingers. And make sure they're not holding the apron strings. Old fraternities die hard.

"Bibliography"

Agoston, Tom. Blunder! How the U.S. Gave Away Nazi Supersecrets to Russia. New York. Dodd, Mead, and Company. 1985.

Bearden, Lt. Col. Tom (US Army, Ret). "Maxwell's Original Quaternion Theory was a Unified Field theory of Electromagnetics and Gravitation," Proceedings of the International Tesla Society.

Bearden, Lt. Col. Tom (US Army, Ret). Energy From the Vacuum: Concepts and Principles. Santa Barbara, California. Cheniere Press. 2002.

Bearden, Lt. Col. Tom (US Army, Ret). Fer De Lance: Briefing on Soviet Scalar Electromagnetic Weapons. Santa Barbara, California. Cheniere Press. 2002.

Bellant, Russ. Old Nazis, The New Right, and the Republican Party. Boston. South End Press. 1991. ISBN 0-89608-419-1.

Bennet, Mary, and Percy, David. Dark Moon: Apollo and the Whistleblowers. Kempton, Illinois. Adventures Unlimited Press. 2001.

Bernstein, Jeremy, ed. Hitler's Uranium Club.

Bishop, Gregory, ed. Wake Up Down There! The Excluded Middle Collection. Kempton, Illinois. Adventures Unlimited Press. 2000.

Bower, Tom. The Paperclip Conspiracy: the Hunt for the Nazi Scientists. Boston. Little, Brown, and Company. 1987.

Brooks, Geoffrey. Hitler's Terror Weapons: From V1 to Vimana. Barnsley, South Yorkshire, UK: Pen and Sword Books. 2002. ISBN 0-85052-896-8.

Brussell, Mae. "The Nazi Connection to the John F. Kennedy Assassination," The Rebel, Nov. 22, 1983.

Childress, David Hatcher, ed. NASA, Nazis, and JFK: the Torbitt Document and the JFK Assassination. Kempton, Illinois. Adventures Unlimited Press. 1996.

Childress, David Hatcher. Vimana Aircraft of Ancient India and Atlantis. Kempton, Illinois. 1999.

Clendenon, Bill. Mercury: UFO Messenger of the Gods, reprinted in Childress, Atlantis and the Power System of the Gods: Mercury Vortex Generators and the power System of Atlantis. 2000.

Cohen, S.T., “The Dove of War,” National Review, December 27, 1993, pp. 56-58, 76.

Corso, Lt. Col. Philip J. (US Army, Ret), and Birnes, William. The Day After Roswell. Simon and Schuster.

Edwards, Frank. Flying Saucers, Serious Business. London. Mayflower-Dell. 1967.

Farrell, Joseph P. Reich of the Black Sun: Nazi Secret Weapons and the Cold War Allied Legend. Kempton, Illinois. Adventures Unlimited Press. 2004.

Farrell, Joseph P. The Giza Star Star Deployed. Kempton, Illinois. Adventures Unlimited Press. 2003

Fuller, John G. The Interrupted Journey. London. Corgi Books. 1966.

Georg, Friedrich. Hitlers Siegeswaffen, Band 2: Star Wars 1947, Teliband B: Von der Amerikarakete zur Orbitalstation – Deutschlands Streben nach Interkontinentalwaffen un dar erste Weltraumprogramm. Schleusingen, Germany. Amun Verlag. 2004.

Greer, Steven M. M.D. Disclosure: Military and Government Witnesses Reveal the Greatest Secrets in Modern History. Cromer, Virginia. Crossing Point, Inc. 2001.

Hounam, Peter, and McQuillan, Steve. The Mini-Nuke Conspiracy: Mandela’s Nuclear Nightmare. New York: Viking Press. 1995. IDBN 0-670-86925-2.

Hunt, Linda. The United States Government, Nazi Scientists, and Project Paperclip: 1945 to 1990. New York: St. Martin’s Press. 1991.

Hydrick, Carter Plymton. Critical Mass: How Nazi Germany Surrendered Enriched Uranium for the United States’ Atomic Bomb. Whitehurst and Company. 2004.

Keith, Jim. Mind Control and UFOs: The Casebook on Alternative 3. Kempton, Illinois. Adventures Unlimited Press. 2005.

King, Moray B. The Energy Machine of T. Henry Moray: Zero-Point Energy and Pulsed Plasma Physics. Kempton, Illinois. Adventures Unlimited Press. 2005.

Krafft, Carl Frederick. Ether and Matter. Richmond, Virginia. The Ditez Printing Company. 1945.

Lawrence, Lincoln. Mind Control, Oswald, and JFK: Were We Controlled? Kempton, Illinois. Adventures Unlimited Press. 1997.

Lebedev, Mikhail. Treason – for my Daily Bread. Ed. W. G. Stanton. Guernsey: Vallencey press. 1977. ISBN 0 905589009.

Leek, Sybil, and Sugar, Bert R. The Assassination Chain. New York. Corwin Books. 1976.

Levenda, Peter. Sinister Forces: A Grimoire of American Political Witchcraft: Book One: The Nine. Walerville, Oregon: Trine Day. 2005. ISBN 0-9752906-2-2.

Lyne, William. Occult Ether Physics: Tesla Hidden Space Propulsion System and the Conspiracy to Conceal It. Lamy, New Mexico. Creatopia Productions. 2003.

Lyne, William. Occult Science Dictatorship: The Official State Science Religion and How to Get Excommunicated. Lamy, New Mexico. Creatopia Productions. 2001.

Lyne, William. Pentagon Aliens. Lamy, New Mexico. Creatopia Productions. 1999.

Mattern, Friedrich. UFOs: Nazi Se3cret Weapon? Toronto: Samisdat Publishers, Ltd.

Millegan, Kris, ed. Fleshing Out Skull and Bones: Investigations into America's Most Powerful Secret Society. Walterville, Oregon. TrineDay. 2003.

O'Neill, John J. Prodigal Genius: the Life of Nikola Tesla. Las Vegas. The Brotherhood of life, Inc. 1994.

Redfern, Nick. The F. B.I. Files: the FBI's UFO Top Secrets Exposed. Simon and Schuster. 1998.

Skorzeny, Otto. La Guerre Inconnue. Paris. Albin Michel. 1975.

Stevenson, William. The Bormann Brotherhood. New York. Harcourt, Brace, Jovanovitch. 1973.

Vassilatos, Gerry. Declassified Patents of the Cold War and SDI: Companion Study Guide for "Secrets of Cold War Technology." Bayside, California. Borderland Sciences. 1997.

Vesco, Renato, and Childress, David Hatcher. Man-Made UFOS: Fifty Years of Suppression. Kempton, Illinois. Adventures Unlimited Press. 1994.

Winkler, Paul. The Thousand Year Conspiracy: Secret Germany Behind the Mask. New York. Charles Scribners' Sons. 1943.

Witkowski, Igor. The Truth About the Wunderwaffe. Trans from the Polish by Bruce Wenham. Farnborough, England. Books International (European History Press). 2003.

Zunneck, Karl-Heinz. Geheimtechnologien, Wunderwaffe, und die irdischen Facetten des UFO-Phänomens. Schleusingen, Germany: Amun Verlag. 2002.

THE SECRET HISTORY OF THE JESUITS

EDMOND PARIS

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Foreword by Edmond Paris. 7

Section I The Founding of the Jesuit Order

1. Ignatius of Loyola. 15
2. The Spiritual Exercises. 20
3. The Founding of the Company. 23
4. The Spirit of the Order. 25
5. The Privileges of the Company. 28

Section II The Jesuits in Europe during the 16th and 17th Centuries.

1. Italy, Portugal, Spain. 31
2. Germany. 34
3. Switzerland. 38
4. Poland and Russia. 40
5. Sweden and England. 42
6. France. 45

Section III Foreign Missions

1. India, Japan, China. 50
2. The Americas: The Jesuit State of Paraguay. 55

Section IV The Jesuits in the European Society

1. The teaching of the Jesuits. 59
2. The morals of the Jesuits. 63
3. The Eclipse of the Company. 67
4. Rebirth of the Society of Jesus during the 19th Century. 73
5. The Second Empire and the Falloux Law — The War of 1870. 76
6. The Jesuits in Rome — The Syllabus. 82
7. The Jesuits in France from 1870 until 1885. 88
8. The Jesuits and General Boulanger. 95
   The Jesuits and the Dreyfus Affair.
9. The Years before the War — 1900-1914. 110

Section V The Infernal Cycle

1. The First World War. 116
2. Preparations for the Second World War. 123
3. German Aggression and the Jesuits. Austria - Poland - Czechoslovakia - Yugoslavia. 139
4. The Jesuit movement in France before and during the 1939-1945 War. 155
5. The Gestapo and the Society of Jesus. 163
6. The Death Camps and the Anti-Semitic Crusade. 172
7. The Jesuits and the Colleqium Russicum. 177
8. Pope John XXIII removes the mask. 183

Conclusion 191
Bibliography 199

Publisher's Introduction

There is no other person more qualified to introduce Edmond Paris' book, "The Secret History of the Jesuits," than Dr. Alberto Rivera, a former Jesuit priest under the extreme oath and induction, who was trained in the Vatican and briefed on the history of the Jesuits.

The information in this book is factual and fully documented, and it should be read by every Bible-believing Christian in the United States and Canada. The Bible says, "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge." (Hosea 4:6)

J.T. C

Dr. Rivera's Introduction

The most dangerous of men are those who appear very religious, especially when they are organized and in a position of authority. They have the deep respect of the people who are ignorant of their ungodly push for power behind the scenes.

These religious men, who pretend to love God, will resort to murder, incite revolution and wars if necessary to help their cause. They are crafty, intelligent, smooth religious politicians who live in a shadowy world of secrets, intrigue, and phony holiness. This pattern, seen in "The Secret History of the Jesuits," spiritually speaking can be seen in the Scribes, Pharisees and Sadducees at the time of Jesus Christ. This same evil spirit directed the Roman emperors to issue the ten murderous decrees to persecute the early Christian church.

The "Early Fathers" observed most of the ancient Babylonian system plus Jewish theology and Greek philosophy. They all perverted most of the teachings of Christ and His apostles. They paved the way for the Roman Catholic machine that was to come into existence. Piously, they attacked, perverted, added to and took away from the Bible. This religious anti-christ spirit working through them is seen again when Ignatius de Loyola created the Jesuits to secretly accomplish two major goals for the Roman Catholic Institution: 1) universal political power, and 2) a universal church, in fulfillment of the prophecies of Revelation 6, 13, 17 and 18.

By the time Ignatius de Loyola arrived on the scene, the Protestant Reformation had seriously damaged the Roman Catholic system. Ignatius de Loyola came to the conclusion that the only way his "church" could survive was by enforcing the canons and doctrines on the temporal power of the pope and the Roman Catholic institution; not by just destroying the physical life of the people alone as the Dominican priests were doing through the Inquisition, but by infiltration and penetration into every sector of life. Protestantism must be conquered and used for the benefit of the popes. That was Ignatius de Loyola's personal proposal, among others, to Pope Paul III. Jesuits immediately went to work secretly infiltrating ALL the Protestant groups including their families, places of work, hospitals, schools, colleges, etc. Today, the Jesuits have almost completed that mission.

The Bible puts the power of a local church into the hands of a Godly pastor. But the cunning Jesuits successfully managed over the years to remove that power into the hands of denomination headquarters, and have now pushed almost all of the Protestant denominations into the arms of the Vatican. This is exactly what Ignatius de Loyola set out to accomplish: a universal church and the end of Protestantism.

As you read "The Secret History of the Jesuits," you will see there is a parallel between the religious and political sectors. The author, Mr. Paris, reveals the penetration and infiltration of the Jesuits into the governments and nations of the world to manipulate the course of history by setting up dictatorships, and weakening democracies such as the United States of America, by paving the way for social, political, moral, military, educational and religious anarchy.

The man, Edmond Paris

In the prophetical works of the Book of Revelation, Edmond Paris became a martyr for Jesus. In exposing such a conspiracy, he put his life at stake for truth of the prophetical signs to be known. Edmond Paris never knew me, but I knew him without meeting him personally when I, with other Jesuits under the extreme oath and induction, was being briefed on the names of institutions and individuals in Europe who were dangerous to the goals of the Roman Catholic Institution. His name was given to us.

Works by Edmond Paris

LE VATIAN CONTRE LA FRANCE GENOCIDE IN THE SATELLITE CROATIA THE VATICAN AGAINST EUROPE

The Edmond Paris works on Roman Catholicism brought about the pledge on the part of the Jesuits to: 1) destroy him, 2) destroy his reputation, including his family, and 3) destroy his work. And even now these great works of Edmond Paris are being tampered with, but we are praying that God will continue to preserve them when they are most needed for the salvation of Roman Catholic people.

YOURS FOR THE SALVATION OF THE ROMAN CATHOLIC PEOPLE,

DR. ALBERTO RIVERA (EX-JESUIT PRIEST)

"The love of truth is our only salvation"
Jean Guehenno of the French Academy

"Wherefore putting away lying, speak every man truth ....
(Eph. IV, 25.)

Foreword

A last century writer, Adolphe Michel, recalled that Voltaire estimated the number of works published over the years, on the Jesuits, to be about six thousand. "What number have we reached a century later?", asked Adolphe Michel, only to conclude immediately: "No matter. As long as there are Jesuits, books will have to be written against them. There is nothing new left to be said on their account, but new generations of readers come every day... Will these readers search old books?"(1)

The reason just mentioned would be enough to justify us taking up again this oft-told subject. In fact, most early books retracing the history of the Jesuits cannot be found any more. Only in public libraries can they still be consulted, which makes them out of reach for most readers. With the aim of succinctly informing the public at large in mind, a summary of these works seemed necessary.

There is another reason, as good as the one just mentioned. At the same time as new generations of readers come, new generations of Jesuits come to light. And these work today with the same tortuous and tenacious methods, which so often in the past set to work the defensive reflexes of nations and governments. The sons of Loyola are today—and may we say more than ever—the leading wing of the Roman Church. As well if not better disguised than of old, they remain the most eminent "ultramontanes", the discreet but efficacious agents of the Holy See throughout the world, the camouflaged champions of its politics, the "secret army of the Papacy".

For this reason, the subject of the Jesuits will never be exhausted and, even though the literature concerning them is so plentiful, every epoch will have the duty to add a few pages to it, to mark the continuity of this occult system started four centuries ago "for the great glory of God", but in fact for the glory of the pope. In spite of the general move towards an ever increasing "laicization", in spite of the ineluctable progress of rationalism which reduces a little more every day the domain of "dogma", the Roman Church couldn't give up the great purpose which has been her goal from the beginning: to gather under her crozier all the nations of the universe. This monumental "mission" must go on, whatever happens, amongst "pagans" as well as amongst "separated Christians". The secular clergy having, in particular, the duty to hold the acquired positions (which is quite arduous nowadays), it is up to certain regular orders to increase the flock of the faithful by converting the "heretics" and "pagans", a work even more arduous. The duty is to preserve or acquire, to defend or attack, and at the front of the battle there is that mobile force of the "Society of Jesus"—the Jesuits. Properly speaking, this society is not secular, nor regular in terms of its Constitution, but a kind of subtle company intervening where and when it is convenient, in the church and outside the church, in short "the agent most skilful, most persevering, most fearless, most convinced of the papal authority...", as wrote one of its best historians.(2)

(1) Adolphe Michel: "Les Jesuites" (Sandoz et Fischbacher, Paris 1879).

We will see how this body of "janissaries" was formed, what service without price it rendered the papacy. We will see also how so much effectual zeal was to make it indispensable to the institution it served, exerting such an influence over it that its General was named with good reason the "black pope", as it became more and more difficult to distinguish, in the government of the church, the authority of the white pope and that of its powerful coadjutor.

It is then at the same time a retrospective and a bringing up to date of the history of "Jesuitism" which is found in this book. As the majority of works regarding the Jesuits do not refer to the paramount part they took in the events which have subverted the world during the past fifty years, we thought it was time to fill up the gap or, more precisely, to start with our modest contribution a deeper study into the subject, and do this without concealing the obstacles which will be met by the non-apologist authors wanting to make public writings on this burning subject.

Of all the factors which have played a part in the international life of a century full of confusion and upheavals, one of the most decisive—nevertheless best recognized—resides in the ambition of the Roman Church. Her secular desire to extend her influence towards the East made her the "spiritual" ally of Pan-Germanism and its accomplice in the attempt to gain supreme power which twice, in 1914 and 1939, brought death and ruin to the peoples of Europe.(2a)

---

(2) A. Michel, op.cit.

(2a) See Edmond Paris: Le Vatican contre l'Europe (Fischbacher, Paris), (also P.T.S., London), and L. Duca "L'Or du Vatican" (Laffront, Paris).

The public is practically unaware of the overwhelming responsibility carried by the Vatican and its Jesuits in the start of the two world wars—a situation which may be explained in part by the gigantic finances at the disposition of the Vatican and its Jesuits, giving them power in so many spheres, especially since the last conflict.

In fact, the part they took in those tragic events has hardly been mentioned until the present time, except by apologists eager to disguise it. It is with the aim of rectifying this and establishing the true facts that we present in this and other books the political activity of the Vatican during the contemporary epoch—activity which mutually concerns the Jesuits.

This study is based on irrefutable archive documents, publications from well-known political personalities, diplomats, ambassadors and eminent writers, most of whom are Catholics, even attested by the imprimatur.

These documents bring to light the secret actions of the Vatican and its perfidious actions in creating conflicts between nations when it served its interests. With the help of conclusive articles, we show the part played by the "church" in the rise of totalitarian regimes in Europe.

These testimonies and documents constitute a crushing indictment and, so far, no apologist has tried to disprove them.

On the first of May 1938, the "Mercure de France" reminded us of what had been said four years earlier:

"The Mercure de France of the 15th of January 1934 said—and nobody contradicted it—that it was Pius XII who 'made' Hitler. He came to power, not so much through legal means, but because the pope influenced the Centrum (german catholic party)... Does the Vatican think it made a political error in opening the way to power to Hitler? It doesn't seem so..."

It didn't seem so when that was written, which was on the day following the "Anschluss' when Austria was united to the third Reich—nor later when Nazi aggressions multiplied—nor during the whole of the Second World War. In fact, on the 24th of July 1959 the successor of Pius XII, John XXIII, conferred on his personal friend Franz Von Papen the honorary title of secret chamberlain. This man had been a spy in the United States during the first world war and one of those responsible for the Hitler's dictatorship and the Anschluss. One must suffer from a peculiar kind of blindness not to see such plain facts.

Mr. Joseph Rovan, Catholic writer, comments on the diplomatic agreement between the Vatican and the nazi Reich on the 8th of July 1933:

"The Concordat brought to the national-socialist government, considered nearly everywhere to be made up of usurpers, if not brigands, the seal of an agreement with the oldest international power (the Vatican). In a way, it was the equivalent of a diploma of international honorability". (Le catholicisme politique en Allemagne, Paris 1956, p.231, Ed. du Seuil).

Thus the Pope, not satisfied with giving his "personal" support to Hitler, granted in this way the moral support of the Vatican to the nazi Reich! At the same time as the terror was beginning to reign on the other side of the Rhine and was tacitly accepted and approved, the so-called "Brown shirts" had already put 40,000 persons into concentration camps. The pogroms were multiplying to the accents of this nazi march: "When the Jewish blood streams from the knife, we feel better again." (Horst-Wessel-Lied).

In the following years, Pius XII saw even worse without being stirred. It is not surprising that the catholic heads of Germany vied with each other in their servility towards the nazi regime, encouraged as they were by their Roman "Master". One must read the dishevelled ravings and verbal acrobatics of opportunist theologians such as Michael Schmaus. He was later made a "prince of the church" by Pius XII, and described as "the great theologian of Munich" by the publication "La Croix" on the 2nd of September 1954—or again a certain book entitled Katholisch-Konservatives Erbgut, of which someone wrote:

"This anthology brings together texts from the main Catholic theorists of Germany, from Gorres to Vogelsang; it makes us believe that national-socialism was born purely and simply out of Catholic ideas." (Gunther Buxbaum, "Mercure de France", 15th of January 1939).

The bishops, made to take an oath of allegiance to Hitler by the Concordat, always tried to excel each other in their "devotion":

"Under the nazi regime, we constantly find the fervent support of the bishops in all the correspondence and declarations from ecclesiastical dignitaries". (Joseph Rovan, op.cit. p.214).

In spite of the obvious difference between Catholic universalism and hitlerian racism, these two doctrines had been "harmoniously reconciled)), according to Franz Von Papen; the reason for this scandalous accord was because "Nazism is a Christian reaction against the spirit of 1789".

Let us come back to Michael Schmaus, professor at the Faculty of Theology in Munich, who wrote:

"Empire and church is a series of writings which should help the building up of the third Reich as it unites a national-socialist State to Catholic-christianity...

"Entirely German and entirely Catholic, these writings explore and favour relations and meetings between the Catholic Church and national-socialism; they open the way for a fruitful cooperation, as outlined in the Concordat... "The national-socialist movement is the most vigorous and massive protest against the spirit of the 19th and 20th centuries... The idea of a people of one blood is the focal point of its teachings and all Catholics who obey the instructions of the German bishops will have to admit that this is so... The laws of national-socialism and those of the Catholic Church have the same aim..." (Begegnungen zwischen Katholischem Christentum und nazional-sozialistischer Weltanschauung Aschendorff, Munster 1933).

This document proves the primordial part played by the Catholic Church in the rise to power of Hitler; in fact, it was a pre-established arrangement. It illustrates fully the kind of monstrous agreement between Catholicism and nazism. The hatred of liberalism, which is the key to everything, comes out very clearly.

In his book "Catholiques d'Allemagne", Mr Robert d'Harcourt of the French Academy writes:

"The most vulnerable point, in all the episcopal declarations which followed the triumphant elections of the 5th of March 1933, is found in the first official document from the church containing the signatures of all the German bishops. We are referring to the pastoral letter of the 3rd of June 1933, in which the whole of the German episcopate is involved.

"What form does this document take?" How does it start? On a note of optimism and with this cheerful declaration: 'The men at the head of this new government have, to our great joy, given us the assurance that they place themselves and their work on Christian ground. A declaration of such deep sincerity deserves the gratitude of all Catholics'. " (Paris, Plon, 1938, p. 108).

Since the start of the first world war, several popes have come and gone, but their attitude has been invariably the same towards the two factions which confronted each other in Europe.

Many Catholic authors couldn't hide their surprise—and grief—when writing about the inhuman indifference shown by Pius XII in the face of the worst kind of atrocities committed by those in his favour. Amongst many testimonies, we will quote one of the most moderate in its wording, brought against the Vatican by Mr. Jean d'Hospital, correspondant of "Monde":

"The memory of Pius XII is surrounded with misgiving. First of all, there is this burning question asked by observers from every nation, and even within the walls of the Vatican: Did he know of certain atrocities committed during this war, started and led by Hitler?

"Having at his disposition at all times, and from every quarter, the regular reports from the bishops... could he ignore what the german military heads could never pretend to: the tragedy of the concentration camps—the civilians condemned to deportation—the cold-blooded massacres of those who 'stood in the way'—the terror of the gas chambers where, for administrative reasons, millions of Jews were exterminated? And if he knew about it why didn't he, as trustee and first chorister of the Gospel, come out dressed in white, arms extended in the shape of the cross, to denounce a crime without precedent, to shout: No!?...

"Pious souls will search in vain encyclical letters, speeches and addresses of the late pope; there is no trace of any condemnation of this 'religion of blood' instituted by Hitler, this Antichrist... they will not find the condemnation of racism, which is an obvious contradiction to the Catholic dogma". "Rome en confidence" (Grasset, Paris 1962, pp.91 ss).

In his book "Le silence de Pie XII" published by du Rocher, Monaco 1965, the author Carlo Falconi writes in particular:

"The existence of such monstrosities (exterminations en masse of ethnic minorities, prisoners and deported civilians) overthrows every standard of good and evil. They defy the dignity of their individual being and society in general to such an extent that we are compelled to denounce those who could have influenced public opinion, be they ordinary civilians or Heads of States.

"To keep quiet in the face of such outrages would amount in fact to downright collaboration. It would stimulate the villainy of the criminals, stirring up their cruelty and vanity. But, if every man has the moral duty to react when confronted with such crimes, it is doubly so of the religious societies and their heads, and above all the head of the Catholic Church.

"Pius XII never expressed a direct and explicit condemnation of the war of aggression, even less about the unspeakable crimes commited by the Germans or their accomplices during that war.

"Pius XII did not keep quiet because he did not know what was happening: he knew of the gravity of the situation from the start, maybe even better than any other head of state in the world..." (pp.12 ss).

There is better still! The Vatican gave a helping hand to the carrying out of these crimes by "lending" some of its prelates to be made into pro-nazi agents; these were Messeigneurs Hlinka and Tiso. It also sent to Croatia its own legate—R.P. Marcone—who, with the help of Monseigneur Stepinac, had to keep an eye on the "work" of Ante Pavelitch and his oustachis. Wherever we look, the same "edifying" spectacle presents itself.

As we have already shown, it is not only this monstrous partiality and complacency that we object to. The Vatican's unpardonable crime lies in the decisive part played in the bringing about of two world wars.(3)

Listen to what Mr. Alfred Grosser, professor at the Institute of political studies of Paris University, says:

"The very concise book of Guenter Lewy "The Catholic Church and nazi Germany" (New York McGrawhill-1964) says that all the documents agree to show the Catholic Church cooperating with the Hitler regime...

"In July 1933, when the Concordat forced the bishops to swear an oath of allegiance to the nazi government, the concentration camps were already open... the reading of quotations compiled by Guenter Lewy proves this overwhelmingly. We find in them some crushing evidence from personalities such as Cardinal Faulhaber and the Jesuit Gustav Gundlach."(4)

---

(3) E. Paris, "The Vatican against Europe" (P.T.S. London)

Only empty words can be found to oppose this stack of evidence which proves the culpability of the Vatican and its Jesuits. Their help was the main force behind the lightning rise of Hitler who, together with Mussolini and Franco, who in spite of appearances were but war pawns manipulated by the Vatican and its Jesuits.

The thurifers of the Vatican must bow their heads in shame when an Italian member of parliament cries out: "The pope's hands are dripping with blood". (Speech by Laura Diaz, member of parliament for Livourne, delivered at Ortona on the 15th of April 1946), or when the students of Cardiff University College choose as the theme for a conference: "Should the pope be brought to trial as a war criminal?" ("La Croix", 2nd of April 1946).

* * *

Here is how pope John XXIII expressed himself when referring to the Jesuits: "Persevere, dear sons, in the activities which have already brought you well-known merits.. In that way, you will gladden the Church and will grow with untiring ardour: the path of the just is as the light of dawn... "May that light grow and illuminate the moulding of the adolescents... In that way, you will help to carry out our spiritual wishes and concerns... "We give our Apostolic Blessing with all our heart to your Superior General, to you and your coadjutors, and to all the members of the Society of Jesus". And from pope Paul VI:(5).

"From the time of its restoration, this religious family enjoys the sweet help of God, and has enriched herself very quickly with great progress... the members of the Society have accomplished many important deeds, all to the glory of God and for the benefit of the Catholic religion... the church needs soldiers of Christ with valour, armed with a dauntless faith, ready to confront difficulties... that is why we have great hope in the help your activity will bring... may the new era find the Society on the same honorable path it trod in the past...

"Given in Rome, near St. Peter, on the 20th of August 1964, during his second year as pope".(6)

• • •

On the 29th of October 1965, "l'Osservatore Romano" announced: "The Very Reverend Father Arrupe, General of the Jesuits, celebrated Holy Mass for the Ecumenical Council on the 16th of October 1965".

(4) Saul Friedlander: "Pie XII et le IIIe Reich", (Ed. du Seuil, Paris 1964)

(5) L'Osservatore Romano, 20th of October 1961.

(6) L'Osservatore Romano, 18th of September 1964.

Here is the apotheosis of "Papal ethics": the simultaneous announcement of a project to beatify Pius XII and John XXIII. "To strengthen ourselves in our striving for a spiritual renewal, we have decided to start the canonical proceedings for the beatification of these two great and godly pontiffs who are so dear to us".(7)

Pope Paul VI

* * *

May this book reveal to all those who read it the true nature of this Roman Master, whose words are as "mellifluous" as his secret actions are ferocious.

---

(7) L'Osservatore Romano, 26th of November 1965.

Section I

The Founding of the Jesuit Order

Chapter 1

Ignatius of Loyola

The founder of the Society of Jesus, the Spanish Basque don Inigo Lopez de Recalde, was born at the castle of Loyola, in the province of Guipuzcoa, in 1491. He was one of the strangest types of monk-soldier ever engendered by the Catholic world; of all the founders of religious orders, he may be the one whose personality has left the strongest mark on the mind and behaviour of his disciples and successors. This may be the reason for that "familiar look" or "trade-mark", a fact which goes as far as physical resemblance. Mr. Folliet disputes this fact (1), but many documents prove the permanence of a "Jesuit" type through the ages. The most amusing of these testimonies is found at the Guimet museum; on the golden background of a 16th century screen, a Japanese artist portrayed, with all the humour of his race, the landing of the Portuguese, and of the sons of Loyola in particular, on the Nipponese islands. The amazement of this lover of nature and bright colours is obvious in the way he depicted those long, black shadows with their mournful faces on which is congealed all the arrogance of the fanatic ruler. The likeness between the work of the oriental artist of the 16th century and our Daumier of 1830 is there for all to see.

Like many other saints, Inigo—who later Romanised his name and became Ignatius—looked far from being the one predestined to enlighten his contemporaries (2). His stormy youth was filled with mistakes and even "heinous crimes". A police report said he was "treacherous, brutal, vindictive". All his biographers admit that he yielded to none of his boon companions regarding the violence of the instincts, then a common thing. "An unruly and conceited soldier", said one of his confidants—"he led a disorderly life as far as women, gambling and duels were concerned", added his secretary Polanco (3). All this is related to us by one of his spiritual sons, R.P. Rouquette, who tried somewhat to explain and excuse this hot temper which was eventually turned "ad majorem Dei gloriam". (To the greater glory of God).

---

(1) "La Croix", 31 st of July 1956.

(2) Like Saint Augustine, Saint Francis of Assisi and many others.

As is the case for many heroes of the Roman Catholic Church, a violent physical blow was necessary to change his personality. He had been pageboy to the treasurer of Castille until his master's disgrace. Then he became a gentleman in the service of the Viceroy of Navarre; having lived the life of a courtier until then, the young man started the life of a soldier by defending Pampeluna against the French commanded by the Count de Foix. The wound which decided his future life was inflicted during that siege. A leg broken by a bullet, he was taken by the victorious French to his brother Martin Garcia, at the castle of Loyola. Now starts the martyrdom of surgery without anaesthesia, through which he had to go a second time as the work had not been done properly. His leg was broken again and reset. In spite of all this, Ignatius was left with a limp. One can understand that he only needed an experience such as this to cause him a nervous breakdown. The "gift of tears" which was then bestowed on him "in abundance"—and in which his pious biographers see a favour from on high—is maybe only the result of his highly emotional nature, henceforth to affect him more and more.

His sole entertainment, while lying wounded and in pain, was the reading of the "Life of Christ" and the "Life of the Saints", the only books found in the castle.

As he was practically uneducated and still affected by that terrible shock, the anguish of Christ's passion and the martyrdom of the saints had an indelible impact on him; this obsession led the crippled warrior on to the road of apostolate.

"He put the books to one side and day-dreamed. A clear case of the wakeful dream, this was a continuation into the adult years of the imaginary game of the child... if we let it invade the psychic realm, the result is neurosis and surrender of the will; that which is real takes second place!..."(4)

At first sight, this diagnosis seems hardly to apply to the founder of such an active order, nor to other "great mystics" and creators of religious societies, all of whom had apparently great capacities for organization. But we find that all of them are unable to resist their over-active imaginations and, for them, the impossible becomes possible.

Here is what the same author says on this subject: "I want to point out the obvious outcome of the practice of mysticism by someone possessing a brilliant intelligence. The weak mind indulging in mysticism is on dangerous ground, but the intelligent mystic presents a far greater danger, us his intellect works in a wider and deeper way... When the myth takes over from the reality in an active intelligence, it becomes mere fanaticism; an infection of the will which suffers from a partial enlargement or distortion".(5)

---

(3) R.P. Jesuit Robert Rouquette, "Saint Ignace de Loyola" (Ed. Albin Michel, Paris 1944, p.6).

(4) R.P. Jesuit Robert Rouquette, op.cit., p.9.

Ignatius of Loyola was a first-class example of that "active mysticism" and "distortion of the will". Nevertheless, the transformation of the gentlemen-warrior into the "general" of the most militant order in the Roman Church was very slow; there were many faltering steps before he found his true vocation. It is not our intention to follow him through all those different stages. Let us recall the main points: in the spring of 1522, he left the ancestral castle, with his mind made up to become a saint similar to those whose edifying exploits he had been reading about in that big "gothic" volume. Besides, did not the Madona herself appear to him one night, holding in her arms the child Jesus? After a thorough confession at the monastry of Montserrat, he was planning to go to Jerusalem. The plague was rife in Barcelona and, as all maritime traffic had stopped, he had to stay at Manresa for nearly a year. There, he spent his time in prayers, orisons, long fasts, flagellating himself, practicing all the forms of maceration, and never failing to appear before the "tribunal for penance", even though his confession at Montserrat had apparently lasted three whole days; such a thorough confession would have been sufficient to a less scrupulous sinner. All this depicts quite clearly the mental and nervous state of the man. At last delivered from that obsession of sin by deciding it was only a trick of Satan, he devoted himself entirely to the varied and plentiful visions which were haunting his feverish mind.

"It is because of a vision", says H. Boehmer, "that he started eating meat again; it is a whole series of visions that revealed to him the mysteries of the Catholic dogma and helped him to truly live it: in that way, he meditates upon the Trinity under the shape of a musical instrument with three cords; the mystery of the creation of the world through "something" hazy and light coming out of a ray of sunshine; the miraculous descent of Christ into the Eucharist as flashes of light entering the consecrated water, when the priest held it up while praying; the human nature of Christ and the holy Virgin under the form of a dazzling white body; and finally Satan as a serpentine and shimmering shape similar to a multitude of sparkling and mysterious eyes (6)." Is not this the start of the well-known Jesuitic image-making?

---

(5) Dr Legrain, "Le Mysticisme et la folie" (Ed. de l'Idee Libre, Herblay (S.-et-O.) 1931, pp. 14-16).

Mr. Boehmer adds that the deep meaning of the dogmas was revealed to him, as a special favour from on-high, through transcendental intuitions. "Many mysteries of Faith and science became suddenly clear to him and later he pretended to have learned more in those short moments than during the whole of his studies; however, he was never able to explain what these mysteries were which suddenly became clear to him. There was only a hazy recollection left, a feeling of something miraculous as if, at that moment, he had become "another man with another intelligence".(7)

All this may be the result of a nervious disorder and can be identified with what happens to smokers of opium and eaters of hashish: that enlargement or extension of the ego, that illusion of soaring up beyond what is real, a flashing sensation leaving only a dazed recollection.

Blissful visions and illuminations were constant companions of this mystic throughout his life.

"He never doubted the reality of these revelations. He chased Satan with a stick as he would have done a mad dog; he talked to the Holy Spirit as one does to another person actually; he asked for the approval of God, the Trinity and the Madonna on all his projects and would burst into tears of joy when they appeared to him. On those occasions, he had a foretaste of celestial bliss; the heavens were open to him, and the Godhead was visible and perceptible to him.(8)

Is not this the perfect case of an hallucinated person? It will be this same perceptible and visible Godhead that the spiritual sons of Loyola will constantly offer to the world—not only for political reasons, leaning on and flattering the deep-rooted inclination in the heart of man for idolatry— but also by conviction, having been well and truly indoctrinated. From the start, mediaeval mysticism has prevailed in the Society of Jesus; it is still the great animator, in spite of its readily assumed worldly, intellectual and learned aspects. Its basic axiom is: "All things to all men". The arts, literature, science and even philosophy have been mere means or nets to catch souls, like the easy indulgences granted by its casuists and for which laxity they were so often reproved. To this Order, there is not a realm where human weakness cannot be worked upon, to incite the spirit and will to surrender and go back to a more childish and restful devotion. So they work for the bringing about of the "kingdom of God" according to their own ideal: a great flock under the Holy Father's crozier. That learned men could have such an anachronic ideal seems very strange, yet it is undeniably so and the confirmation of an oft-disregarded fact: the pre-eminence of the emotions in the life of the spirit. Besides, Kant said that every philosophy is

---

(6) and (7) H. Boehmer, professor at the University of Bonn, "Les Jesuites" (Armand Colin, Paris 1910, pp. 12-13).

(8) H. Boehmer, op.cit., p. 14.

but the expression of the philosopher's temperament or character.

Apart from individual methods, the Jesuitic "temperament" seems more or less uniform amongst them. "A mixture of piety and diplomacy, asceticism and worldly wisdom, mysticism and cold calculation; as was Loyola's character, so is the trade-mark of this Order".(9).

In the first place, every Jesuit chose this particular Order because of his natural dispositions; but he really becomes a "son" of Loyola after rigorous tests and systematic training lasting no less than fourteen years.

In that way, the paradox of this Order has continued for four hundred years: an Order which endeavours to be "intellectual" but, simultaneously, has always been, within the Roman Church and society, the champion of the strictest disposition.

---

(9) J. Huber, professor of catholic theology in Munich, "Les Jesuites" (Sandoz et Fischbacher, Paris 1875, p. 127).

Chapter 2

The Spiritual Exercises

When the time came at last for Ignatius to leave Monresa, he couldn't foresee his destiny, but the anxiety concerning his own salvation was not his main concern any more; it is as a missionary, and not as a mere pilgrim, that he left for the Holy Land in March 1523. He arrived in Jerusalem on the 1st of September, after many adventures, only to leave again soon after, on the orders of the Franciscan's provincial who was not desirious to see the precarious peace between Christians and Turks endangered by an untimely proselytism.

The disappointed missionary passed through Venice, Genoa, and Barcelona on his way to the University of Alcala where he started theological studies; it is there also that his "cure of souls" amongst voluntary listeners began.

"In these conventicles, the most common manifestations of piety amongst the fair sex were fainting fits; by that, we realise how hard he applied his religious methods, and how such a fervent propaganda would soon arouse the curiosity and then the suspicion of the inquisitors... "In April 1527, the Inquisition put Ignatius in prison to try him on the grounds of heresy. The inquiry examined those peculiar incidents amongst his devotees, the strange assertions of the accused concerning the wonderful power his chastity conferred on him, and his bizarre theories on the difference between mortal and venial sins; these theories had striking affinities with those of Jesuit casuists of the subsequent epoch.(10)

Released but forbidden to hold meetings, Ignatius left for Salamanque and soon started the same activities. Similar suspicions amongst the inquisitors led to imprisonment again. Release was only on condition of desisting from such conduct. Thus it was, he journeyed to Paris to continue his studies at the college of Montaigu. His efforts to endoctrinate his fellow-students according to his peculiar methods brought him into trouble again with the Inquisition. Becoming more prudent,he met with just six of his college friends, two of which will become highly esteemed recruits: Salmeron and Lainez.

---

(10) H. Boehmer, op.cit. pp.20-21, 25.

What did he have in himself that so powerfully attracted young people to an old student? It was his ideal and a little charm he carried on himself: a small book, in fact a very minute book which is, in spite of its smallness, amongst those which have influenced the fate of humanity. This volume has been printed so many times that the number of copies is unknown; it was also the object of more than 400 commentaries. It is the textbook of the Jesuits and at the same time the resume of the long inner development of their master: the "Spiritual Exercises".(11)

Mr Boehmer says later:

"Ignatius understood more clearly than any other leader of men who preceded him that the best way to raise a man to a certain ideal is to become master of his imagination. We "imbue into him spiritual forces which he would find very difficult to eliminate later", forces more lasting than all the best principles and doctrines; these forces can come up again to the surface, sometimes after years of not even mentioning them, and become so imperative that the will finds itself unable to oppose any obstacle, and has to follow their irresistible impulse".(12)

Thus all the "truths" of the Catholic dogma will have to be, not only meditated, but lived and felt by the one who devotes himself to these "Exercises", with the help of a "director". In other words, he will have to see and relive the mystery with the greatest possible intensity. The candidate's sensitiveness becomes impregnated with these forces whose persistence in his memory, and even more so in his subconscious, will be as strong as the effort he made to evoke and assimilate them. Beside sight, the other senses such as hearing, smell, taste and touch will play their part. In short, it is mere controlled auto-suggestion. The angels' rebellion, Adam and Eve driven out of Paradise, God's tribunal, the evangelical scenes and phases of the Passion are, as one would say, relived in front of the candidate. Sweet and blissful scenes alternate with the most sombre ones at a skilfully arranged rythm. No need to say that Hell has the prominent part in that "magic lantern show", with its lake of fire into which the damned are thrown, the awful concert of screams, the atrocious strench of sulphur and burning flesh. Yet Christ is always there to sustain the visionary who doesn't know how to thank him for not having thrown him already into hell to pay for his past sins.

Here is what Edgar Quinet wrote:

"Not only visions are pre-arranged, but also sighs, inhalings, breathing are noted down; the pauses and intervals of silence are written down like on a music sheet. In case you do not believe me, I will quote: "The third way of praying, by measuring the words and periods of silence". This particular manner of praying consists of leaving out some words between every breath; and a little further: "Make sure to keep equal gaps between every breath and choking sob and word". (Et paria anhelituum ac vocum interstitia observet), which means that the man, being inspired or not, becomes just a machine which must sigh, sob, groan, cry, shout or catch one's breath at the exact moment and in the order which experience shows to be the most profitable". (12a)

---

(11) and (12) H. Boehmer, op.cit., pp.25, 34-35.

It is understandable that after four weeks devoted to these intensive Exercises, with a director as his only companion, the candidate would be ripe for the subsequent training and breaking.

This is what Quinet has to say when referring to the creator of such an hallucinatory method:

"Do you know what distinguishes him from all the ascetics of the past? The fact that he could observe and analyse himself logically and coldly in that state of rapture, while for all the others even the idea of reflection was impossible.

Imposing on his disciples actions which, to him, were spontaneous, he needed just thirty days to break, with this method, the will and reasoning, in the manner in which a rider breaks his horse. He only needed thirty days "triginta dies", to subdue a soul. Note that Jesuitism expanded together with modern inquisition: while the inquisition dislocated the body, the spiritual Exercises broke up the thoughts under Loyola's machine".(12b)

In any case, one could not examine his "spiritual" life too deeply, even without the honour of being a Jesuit; Loyola's methods are to be recommended to the faithful and ecclesiastics in particular, as we are reminded by commentators such as R.P. Pinard de la Boullaye, author of "Mental prayer for all"; inspired by saint Ignatius, this very valuable aid for the soul would, we think, be more explicit if the title read "alienation" instead of "prayer".

(12a) Michelet et Guinet: "Des Jesuites", (Hachette, Paulin, Paris 1845, pp.185-187). (12b) Michelet et Guinet: "Des Jesuites", (Hachette, Paulin, Paris, 1845, pp.185-187).

Section 1

Chapter 3

The founding of the Company

"The Society of Jesus" was constituted on Assumption Day in 1534, in the chapel of Notre-Dame de Montmartre.

Ignatius was then forty-four years old. After communion, the animator and his companions vowed to go to the Holy Land, as soon as their studies were finished, to convert the infidels. But the following year found them in Rome where the pope, who was then organising a crusade against the lurks with the German Emperor and the Republic of Venice, showed them how impossible their project was because of it. So Ignatius and his companions dedicated themselves to missionary work in Christian lands; in Venice, his apostolate roused again the suspicions of the Inquisition. The Constitution of the Company of Jesus was at last drafted and approved in Rome, by Paul III, in 1540, and the Jesuits put themselves at the disposition of the pope, promising him unconditional obedience, Teaching, confession, preaching and charitable work were the field of action for this new Order, but foreign missions were not excluded as, in 1541, Francis Xavier and two companions left Lisbon to go and evangelise the Far East. In 1546, the political side of their career was launched, when the pope chose Lainez and Salmeron to represent him at the Council of Trent in the capacity of "pontifical theologians".

Mr Boehmer writes:

"Then, the Order was employed by the pope only on a temporary basis. But it performed its functions with so much promptitude and zeal that, already under Paul III, it had implanted itself very firmly into all chosen kinds of activities and won the confidence of the Curia for all time".(12d)

This confidence was fully justified; the Jesuits, and Lainez in particular, together with their devoted friend Cardinal Morone, became the cunning and untiring champions of pontifical authority and intangibility of the dogma, during the three sessions of that Council ending in 1562. By their clever manoeuvres and dialectics, they succeeded in defeating the opposition and all "heretic" claims including marriage of priests, communion with the two elements, use of the vernacular in services and, especially, reform of the papacy. Only the reform of convents was retained on the agenda. Lainez himself, by a forceful counter-attack, upheld pontifical infallibility which was promulgated three centuries later by the Vatican Council. (13) The Holy See emerged strengthened from the crisis where it nearly foundered, thanks to the steadfast actions of the Jesuits. The terms chosen by Paul III to describe this new Order in his Bull of Authorisation were then amply justified: "Regimen Ecclesiae militantis".

---

(12d) H. Boehmer, op.cit., pp.47-48.

The fighting spirit developed more and more as time went on as, beside foreign missions, the activities of Loyola's sons started to concentrate on the souls of men, especially amongst ruling classes. Politics are their main field of action, as all the efforts of these "directors" concentrate on one aim: the submission of the world to the papacy, and to attain this the "heads" must be conquered first. And to realise this ideal? Two very important weapons: to be the confessors of the mighty and those in high places and the education of their children. In that way, the present will be safe while the future is prepared.

The Holy See soon realised the strength this new Order would bring. At first, the number of its members had been limited to sixty, but this restriction was promptly lifted. When Ignatius died, in 1556, his sons were working amongst pagans in India, China, Japan, the New World, but also and especially in Europe: France, Southern and Western Germany, where they fought against the "heresy", in Spain, Portugal, Italy and even England, getting in by way of Ireland. Their history, full of vicissitudes, will be of a "Roman" network they will constantly try to spread over the world, whose links will be forever torn and mended.

---

(13) Vatican Council (1870).

The Spirit of the Order

"Let us not forget, writes the Jesuit Rouquette, that, historically, "ultramontanism" has been the practical affirmation of "universalism"... This necessary universalism would be an empty word if it did not result in a practical cohesion or obedience of Christianity: this is why Ignatius wanted this team to be at the disposition of the pope... and be the champion of catholic unity, unity which can be assured only through an effective submission to Christ's vicar".(13a)

The Jesuits wanted to impose this monarchical absolutism on the Roman Church and they maintained it in civil society as they had to look upon the sovereigns as temporal representatives of the Holy Father, true head of Christianity; as long as those monarchs were entirely docile to their common lord, the Jesuits were their most faithful supporters. On the other hand, if these princes rebelled, they found in the Jesuits their worst enemies.

In Europe, wherever Rome's interests required the people to rise against their king, or if these temporal princes had taken decisions embarrassing for the Church, the Curia knew she would not find more able, cunning, or daring outside the Society of Jesus when it came to intrigue, propaganda or even open rebellion".(14)

We have seen, through the spirit of the "Exercises", how the founder of this Company was behind his time in his simplistic mysticism, ecclesiastic discipline and, generally speaking, his conception of subordination. The "Constitutions" and "Exercises", fundamentals to this system, leave us without any doubts on that subject. No matter what his disciples may say—especially today as modern ideas on this subject are totally different—obedience has a very special place, in fact incontestably the first, in the summary of the Order's rules. Mr. Folliet may pretend to see in it nothing more than "religious obedience", necessary to any congregation; R.P. Rouquette writes boldly: "Far from being a diminution of man, this intelligent and willing obedience is the height of freedom... a liberation from oneself s bondage..."; one only has to read those texts to perceive the extreme, if not monstrous character of this submission of soul and spirit imposed to the Jesuits, making them always docile instruments in their superiors' hands, and even more from their very beginning the natural ennemies of any kind of liberty.

(13a) R.P. Jesuit Rouquette, op.cit. p.44.

(14) Rene Fulop-Muler: "Les Jesuites et le secret de leur puissance" (Librairie Plon, Paris 1933. p.61).

The famous "perinde ac cadaver" (as a corpse in the undertaker's hands), can be found in all "spiritual literature", according to Mr. Folliet, and even in the East, in the Haschichins' Constitution; the Jesuits are to be in the hands of their superiors "as a staff obeying every impulse; as a ball of wax which can be shaped and stretched in any direction; as a small crucifix being lifted and moved at will"; these pleasant formulas are none the less very enlightening. Remarks and explanations from the creator of this Order leave us without any doubt as to their true meaning. Besides, amongst the Jesuits, not only the will, but also reasoning and even moral scruple, must be sacrificed to the primordial virtue of obedience which is, according to Borgia, "the strongest rampart of Society".

"Let us be convinced that all is well and right when the superior commands it", wrote Loyola. And again: "Even if God gave you an animal without sense for master, you will not hesitate to obey him, as master and guide, because God ordained it to be so."

And something even better: the Jesuit must see in his superior not a fallible man, but Christ Himself. J. Huber, professor of Catholic theology in Munich and author of one of the most important works on the Jesuits, wrote: "Here is a proven fact: the "Constitutions" repeat five hundred times that one must see Christ in the person of the General".(15)

The discipline of the Order, assimilated so often to that of the army, is then nothing compared to the reality. "Military obedience is not the equivalent of Jesuitic obedience; the latter is more extensive as it gets hold of the whole man and is not satisfied like the other, with an exterior act, but requires the sacrifice of the will and laying aside of one's own judgment".(16)

Ignatius himself wrote in his letter to the Portuguese Jesuits: "We must see black as white, if the Church says so".

Such is this "height of freedom" and "liberation from one's own bondage", praised earlier on by R.P. Rouquette. Indeed, the Jesuit is truly liberated from himself as he is totally subjected to his masters; any doubt or scruple would be imputed to him as sin.

(15) J. Huber. "Les Jesuites" (Sandoz et Fischbacher, Paris 1875, pp. 71 & 73).

(16) J. Huber: "Les Jesuites" (Sandoz et Fischbacher, Paris 1875, pp. 71 & 73).

Mr. Boehmer writes:

"In the additions to the "Constitutions", the superiors are advised to command the novices, as God did with Abraham, things apparently criminal, to prove them; but they must proportion these temptations to each one's strength. It is not difficult to imagine what could be the results of such an education".(17)

The Order's life of ups and downs—there is not one country from which it wasn't expelled—testifies that these dangers were recognised by all governments, even the most Catholic. By introducing men so blindly devoted to their cause to teaching among the higher classes, the Company—champion of universalism, therefore ultra-montanism—was inevitably recognised as a threat to civil authority, as the activity of the Order, by the mere fact of their vocation, turned more and more towards politics.

In a parallel way, what we call the Jesuitic spirit was developing amongst its members. Nevertheless, the founder, inspired mainly by the needs of foreign and home "missions", had not neglected skilfulness. He wrote in his "Sententiae asceticae": "A clever carefulness together with a mediocre purity is better than a greater holiness coupled with a less perfect skilfulness. A good shepherd of souls must know how to ignore many things and pretend not to understand them. Once he is master of the wills, he will be able wisely to lead his students wherever he may choose. People are entirely absorbed by passing interests, so we must not speak to them too pointedly about their souls: it would be throwing the hook without the bait".

Even the desired countenance of Loyola's sons was emphatically stated: "They must hold their heads slightly down, without bending it to the left or right; they must not look up, and when they speak to someone, they are not to look them straight in the eyes so as to see them only indirectly..."(18)

Loyola's successors retained this lesson well in their memory, and applied it very extensively in the pursuit of their plans.

(17) Gabriel Monod, in Introduction aux "Jesuites", de H. Boehmer, p. XVI (Armand Colin, Paris) (18) Pierre Dominique: "La politique des Jesuites" (Grasset, Paris 1955, p.37).

Chapter 5

The privileges of the Company

After 1558, Lainez, the subtle tactician of the Council of Trent, was made general of the Congregation with the power to organise the Order as he was inspired. The "Declarations" which he himself composed with Salmeron, were added to the "Constitutions" to form a commentary; they accentuated even more the despotism of the general elected for life. An admonitor procurator and assistants, residing in Rome too, will help him generally to administer the Order divided then into five congregations: Italy, Germany France, Spain, England and America. These congregations were themselves divided into Provinces grouping the different establishments of the Order. Only the admonitor (or overseer) and assistants are nominated by the Congregation. The general appoints all other officials, promulgates the ordinances which are not to modify the Constitutions, administers the wealth of the Order according to his own wishes and directs its activities for which he is responsible to the pope only.

To this militia so tightly knit in the hand of its chief and which needs the greatest autonomy to make its actions effective, the pope concedes privileges which may seem exorbitant to other religious Orders.

By their Constitutions, the Jesuits were exempt from the cloistered rule which applied to monastic life in general. In fact, they are monks living "in the world" and, outwardly, nothing distinguishes them from the secular clergy. But, contrary to this and other religious congregations, they are not subjected to the bishop's authority. As early as 1545, a bull of Paul II enabled them to preach, hear confession, dispense the sacraments, and say mass; in short, exercise their ministry without having to refer to the bishop The solemnisation of marriages is the only thing they are not allowed to perform.

They have the power to give absolution, change vows for others which are easier to fulfil, or even cancel them.

Mr Gaston Bally writes:

"The general's power concerning absolution and dispensations is even wider. He can lift all punishment inflicted on the members of the Society before or after them entering the Order, absolve all their sins, even the sin of heresy and schism, the falsification of apostolic writings, etc... "The general absolves, in person or through a delegate, all those who are under his obedience, of the unhappy state arising from excommunication, suspension or interdict, provided these censures were not inflicted for excesses so enormous that others, beside the papal tribunal, knew about them.

He also absolves the irregularity issuing, from bigamy, injuries done to others, murder, assassination... as long as these wicked deeds were not publicly known and the cause of a scandal".(19)

Finally, Gregory XIII bestowed on the Company the right to deal in commerce and banking, a right it made use of extensively later on.

These dispensations and unprecedented powers were fully guaranteed to them.

"The popes called even upon princes and kings to defend these privileges; they threatened with the great excommunication "latae sententiae" all those who would try to infringe them. In 1574, a bull of Pius V gave the general the right to restore these privileges to their original scope, against all tempts to alter or curtail them, even if such curtailments were authoritatively documented by papal revocation... By granting the Jesuits such exorbitant privileges which run counter to the Church's antiquated constitution, the papacy wanted, not only to supply them with powerful weapons to fight the "Infidels", but especially use them as a bodyguard to defend her own unrestricted power in the Church and against the Church". "To preserve the spiritual and temporal supremacy they usurped during the middle ages, the popes sold the Church to the Order of Jesus and, in consequence, surrendered themselves into their hands... If the papacy was supported by the Jesuits, the whole existence of the Jesuits depended on the spiritual and temporal supremacy of the papacy. In that way, the interests of both parties were intimately bound together".(20)

But this select cohort needed secret auxiliaries to dominate civil society: this role fell on those affiliated to the Company called Jesuits. "Many important people were connected in that way with the Society: the emperors Ferdinand II and Ferdinand III, Sigismond III, king of Poland, who had officially belonged to the Company; Cardinal Infant, a duke of Savoy. And these were not the least useful".(21)

(19) Gaston Bally: "Les Jesuites" (Chambery, Imprimerie Nouvelle, 1902, pp.11-13). (20) Gaston Bally, op.cit., pp.9-10, 16-17. (21) Pierre Dominique, op.cit., p.37.

It is the same today; the 33,000 official members of the Society operate all over the world in the capacity of her personnel, officers of a truly secret army containing in its ranks heads of political parties, high ranking officials, generals, magistrates, physicians, Faculty professors, etc., all of them striving to bring about, in their own sphere, "l'Opus Dei", God's work, in reality the plans of the papacy.

Section II

The Jesuits in Europe during the 16th and 17th centuries

Chapter 1

Italy, Portugal, Spain

"France", wrote Mr. Boehmer, "is the cradle of the Society of Jesus, but in Italy it received its programme and constitution. Therefore in Italy it first took root and from there it spread abroad".(1)
The author notes the increasing number of colleges and Jesuit academies (128 and 1680); "but", says he, "the history of Italian civilisation during the 16h and 17th centuries shows the results of it most strikingly. If a well-learned Italy thus embraced again the faith and ordinances of the Church, received a new zeal for asceticism and missions, composed again pious poems and hymns for the Church, dedicated conscientiously the painters' brushes and sculptors' chisels to exalt the religious ideal, is it not because the cultivated classes were instructed in Jesuits' colleges and confessionals?"(2)

Gone were "childish simplicity, joy, vivacity and the simple love of nature..."
The Jesuits' pupils are far too clerical, devout, absorbed to preserve these qualities. They are taken up with ecstatic visions and illuminations; they literally get drunk with the paintings of frightful mortifications and the martyrs' atrocious torments; they need the pomp, glittering and theatrical. From the end of the 16th century on, Italian art and literature reproduce faithfully this moral transformation... The restlessness, the ostentation, the shocking claim which characterise the creations of that period promote a feeling of repulsion instead of sympathy for the beliefs they are supposed to interpret and glorify".(3)

It is the mark sui generis of the Company. This love for the distorted, finicky, glittering, theatrical could seem strange amongst mystics formed by the "Spiritual Exercises" if we did not detect in it this essentially

---

(1) H. Boehmer, op.cit., p.82.
(2) and (3) Boehmer, op.cit., p.82-83.

Jesuitical aim to impress the mind. It is an application of the maxim: "The end justifies the means" applied with perseverance by the Jesuits in the arts, literature as well as politics and morals.

Italy had been hardly touched by the Reformation. Nevertheless, the Waldenses, who had survived since the middle ages in spite of persecutions and established themselves in the north and south of the peninsula, joined the Calvinist Church in 1532. On a report from the Jesuit Possevino, Emmanuel Philibert of Savoy launched another bloody persecution against his "heretic" subjects in 1561. The same thing happened in Calabria, at Casal di San Sisto and Guardia Fiscale. "The Jesuits were implicated in these massacres; they were busy converting the victims..."(4)

As for Father Possevino: "... he followed the Catholic army as their chaplain, and recommended the extermination by fire of the heretic pastors as a necessary and holy act".(5)

The Jesuits were all powerful in Parma, at the court of the Farnese, as well as in Naples during the 16th and 17th centuries. But in Venice, where they had been loaded with favours, they were banished on the 14th of May 1606, "as the most faithful servants and spokesmen of the pope..."

They were nevertheless allowed to return in 1656, but their influence in the Republic was to be from now on but a shadow of the one they had in the past.

Portugal was a choice country for the Order. "Already under John III (1521-1559), it was the most powerful religious community in the kingdom".(6) Its influence grew even more after the revolution of 1640 which put the Braganza on the throne. "Under the first king of the house of Braganza, Father Fernandez was a member of the government and, under the minority of Alphonse VI, the counsellor most heeded by the regent Queen Louise. Father de Ville was successful in overthrowing Alphonse VI in 1667, and Father Emmanuel Fernandez was made a deputy to the "Cortes" in 1667 by the new King Peter II... In spite of the fact that the Fathers were not fulfilling any public duty in the kingdom, they were more powerful in Portugal than in any other country. Not only were they spiritual advisers to all the royal family, but the king and his minister consulted them in all important circumstances. From one of their own testimonies, we know that not one place in the administration of the State and Church could be obtained without their consent; so much so that the clergy, the high classes and the people contended with each other to win their favours and approval. Foreign politics were also under their influence. Any sensible man would see that such a state of affairs was unprofitable to the good of the kingdom".(7)

---

(4) J. Huber, op.cit., p. 165.

(5) H. Boehmer, op.cit., p.89.

(6) H. Boehmer, op.cit., pp.85, 86, 87, 88.

In fact, we can see the results by the decadent state into which this unfortunate land fell. All the energy and perspicacity of the marquess of Pombal, in the middle of the 18th century, were needed to tear Portugal out of the Order's deadly grip.

In Spain, the Order's penetration was slower. The higher clergy and the Dominicans opposed it for a long time. The sovereigns themselves, Charles V and Philip II, while accepting their services, distrusted these soldiers of the pope and feared encroachments on their authority. But, with much craftiness, the Order eventually defeated this resistance. "During the 17th century, they are all-powerful in Spain, among the high classes and at Court. Even Father Neidhart, former German cavalry officer, fully governed the kingdom as Counsellor of State, prime minister and Grand Inquisitor... In Spain as in Portugal, the kingdom's ruin coincided with the rise of the Order..."(8)

This is what Edgar Quinet had to say about it:

"Wherever a dynasty dies, I can see, rising up and standing behind her, a kind of bad genie, one of those dark figures that are the confessors, gently and paternally luring her towards death..."(9)

Indeed, one cannot impute Spain's decadence to this Order only. "Nevertheless, it is true that the Company of Jesus, together with the Church and other religious orders, hastened her fall; the richer the Order became, the poorer Spain was, so much so that when Charles II died, the State's coffers did not even contain the necessary amount to pay for 10,000 masses usually said for the salvation of a deceased monarch's soul."(10)

---

(7) and (8) H. Boehmer, op.cit., pp.85, 86, 87, 88.

(9) Michelet et Quinet, op.cit., p.259.

(10) H. Boehmer, op.cit., pp.85, 86, 87, 88.

Chapter 2

Germany

"It was not southern Europe, but central Europe: France, Holland, Germany, Poland, which were the site for that historical struggle between Catholicism and Protestantism. So these countries were the main fields of battle for the Society of Jesus." (11)

The situation was particularly grave in Germany. "Not only notorious pessimists, but also thinking and wise Catholics considered the old church's cause in all German lands as almost lost. In fact, even in Austria and Bohemia, the break with Rome was so general that the Protestants could reasonably hope to conquer Austria within a few decades. Then how is it this change did not take place and the country was divided into two sections instead? The Catholic party, at the close of the 16th century, had no hesitation in answering this question, for it always acknowledged that the Witelsbach, Habsburg and Jesuits were responsible for this happy turn of events."(12)

Rene Fulop-Miller wrote about the Jesuits' role in these events: "The Catholic cause could hope for a real success only if the Fathers were able to influence and guide the princes, at all times and in all circumstances. The confessionals offered the Jesuits the means to secure a lasting political influence, therefore an effectual action" .(13)

In Bavaria, the young duke Albert V, son of a zealous Catholic and educated at Ingolstadt, the old Catholic city, called on the Jesuits to combat effectively the heresy:

"On the 7th of July 1556, 8 Fathers and 12 Jesuit teachers entered Ingolstadt. It was the start of a new era for Bavaria... the State itself received a new Seal.... the Roman Catholic conceptions directed the politics of princes and the behaviour of the high classes. But this new spirit got hold of the higher classes only. It did not gain the hearts of ordinary people... Nevertheless, under the iron discipline of the State and the restored Church, they again became devout Catholics, docile, fanatic, and intolerant towards any heresy..."

(11) and (12) H. Boehmer, op.cit., pp.89, 104, ,112, 114. (13) Rene Fulop-Miller, op.cit., II, pp.98, 102.

"It may seem excessive to attribute such prodigious virtues and actions to a mere handful of strangers. Yet, in these circumstances, their force was in inverse ratio to their numbers and they were immediately effective as no obstacles were met. Loyola's emissaries won the country's heart and mind from the start... From the next generation on, Ingolstadt became the perfect type of the german Jesuit city".(14) One can judge the state of mind the Fathers introduced to this stronghold of faith by reading the following:

"The Jesuit Mayrhofer of Ingolstadt taught in his "Preacher's mirror": "We will not be judged if we demand the killing of Protestants, any more than we would by asking for the death penalty on thieves, murderers, counterfeiters and revolutionaries."(15)

The successors of Albert V, and especially Maximilian I (1597-1651), completed his work. But Albert V already was conscientious in his "duty" of assuring his subjects' "salvation".

"As soon as the Fathers arrived in Bavaria, his attitude towards Protestants and those favourable to them became more severe. From 1563 on, he pitilessly expelled all recalcitrants, and had no mercy for the anabaptists who had to suffer drownings, fire, prison and chains, all of which were praised by the Jesuit Agricola... In spite of all this, a whole generation of men had to disappear before the persecution was crowned a complete success. As late as 1586, the moravian anabaptists managed to hide 600 victims from the duke Guillaume. This one example proves that there were thousands and not hundreds who were driven out, an awful breach into a thinly populated country.

"But", said Albert V to the Munich City council, "God's honour and the salvation of souls must be placed above any temporal interests". 16)

Little by little, all teaching in Bavaria was placed in the Jesuits' hands, and that land became the base for their penetration in eastern, western and northern Germany.

"From 1585 on, the Fathers converted the part of Westphalia depending on Cologne; in 1586, they appear in Neuss and Bonn, one of Cologne's archbishop's residences; they open colleges at Hildesheim in 1587 and Munster in 1588. This particular one already had 1300 pupils in 1618... A large part of western Germany was reconquered in that way by Catholicism, thanks to the Wittelsbach and Jesuits.

---

(14) H. Boehmer, op.cit., pp.89, 104, 112, 114. (15) Rene Fulop-Miller, op.cit., II, pp.98, 102. (16) H. Boehmer, op.cit., pp.89, 104, 112, 114.

"The alliance between the Wittelsbach and Jesuits was maybe even more important for the "Austrian lands" than for western Germany".(17)

The archduke Charles of Styrie, last son of emperor Ferdinand, married in 1571 a Bavarian princess "who brought into Gratz castle the narrow Catholic tendencies and the friendship for the Jesuits which prevailed at the Court of Munich". Under her influence, Charles worked hard to "extirpate the heresy" from his kingdom and when he died, in 1590, he made his son and successor, Ferdinand, swear that he would go on with this work. In any case, Ferdinand was well prepared for this. "For five years, he had been a pupil of the Jesuits at Ingolstadt; besides, he was so narrow-minded that, to him, there was no nobler task than the reestablishment of the Catholic Church in his hereditary States. That this task was advantageous or not to his lands was of no concern to Him. "I prefer", said he, "to reign over a country in ruins, than over one which is damned". (18)

In 1617, the archduke Ferdinand was crowned king of Bohemia by the emperor. "Influenced by his Jesuit confessor Viller, Ferdinand started at once to combat Protestantism in his new kingdom. This signalled the start of that bloody war of religion which, for the next thirty years, kept Europe in suspense. When, in 1618, the unhappy events in Prague gave the signal for open rebellion, the old emperor Mathias tried at first to compromise, but he did not have enough power to make his intentions prevail against king Ferdinand, who was dominated by his Jesuit confessor; so, the last hope to settle this conflict amicably was lost". "At the same time, the lands of Bohemia had taken special measures and solemnly decreed that all Jesuits should be expelled, as they saw in them promoters of civil war".(19)

Soon after, Moravia and Silesie followed this example, and Protestants of Hungary, where the Jesuit Pazmany ruled with a rod of iron, rebelled also. But the battle of the White Mountain (1620) was won by Ferdinand, who had been made emperor again after the death of Mathias.

"The Jesuits persuaded Ferdinand to inflict the most cruel punishment on the rebels; Protestantism was rooted out of the whole country by means too terrible for words... At the end of the war, the country's material ruin was complete".

"The Jesuit Balbinus, Bohemia's historian, wondered how there could still be some inhabitants left in that country. But moral ruin was even more terrible... The flourishing culture found amongst the nobles and middle classes, the rich national literature which could not be replaced: all this had been destroyed, and even nationality had been abolished. Bohemia was open to the Jesuits' activities and they burned Czech literature en-masse; under their influence, even the name of the nation's great saint: John Huss, gradually grew dimmer until it was extinct in the hearts of the people... "The height of the Jesuits' power", said Tomek, "coincided with the country's greatest decadence in her national culture; it is because of the influence that Order had, that this unfortunate land's awakening came about one century too late..."

(17) and (18) H. Boehmer, op.cit., pp.117, 120. (19) J. Huber, op.cit., pp. 180-183.

"When the Thirty Years War came to an end, and a peace was concluded assuring German Protestants the same political rights enjoyed by the Catholics, the Jesuits did their uttermost to continue the fighting; it was in vain".(20)

But they obtained from their student Leopold the First, then reigning emperor, the promise to persecute the Protestants in his own lands, and especially in Hungary. "Escorted by imperial dragoons, the Jesuits undertook this work of conversion in 1671. The Hungarians rose to action and started a war which was to last for nearly a whole generation... But that insurrection was victoroius, under the leadership of Francis Kakoczy. The victor wanted to drive the Jesuits out of all the countries which fell under his power; but influencial protectors of the Order managed to adjourn these measures, and the expulsion did not take place until 1707...

"Prince Eugene blamed, with a harsh frankness, the politics of the imperial house and the intrigues of the Jesuits in Hungary. He wrote: "Austria nearly lost Hungary because of their persecuting of the Protestants". One day, he bitterly exclaimed that the morals of the Turks were far superior to those of the Jesuits, in practice at least. "Not only do they want to dominate consciences, but also to have the right of life and death over men".

"Austria and Bavaria reaped the fruits of Jesuit domination in full: the compression of all progressive tendencies and the systematic stultification of the people".

"The deep misery which followed the war of religion, the powerless politics, the intellectual decadence, the moral corruption, a frightful decrease in the population and impoverishment of the whole of Germany: these were the results of the Order's actions".(21)

---

(20) Rene Fulop-Miller, op.cit., II, pp. 104-105.

(21) J. Huber, op.cit., pp.183-186.

Chapter 3

Switzerland

It was only during the 17th century that the Jesuits succeeded in establishing themselves successfully in Switzerland, after having been called, then banished, by a few cities of the Confederation, during the second half of the 16th century.

The archbishop of Milan, Charles Borromee, who had favoured their installation at Lucerne in 1578, soon realised what the results of their actions would be, as we are reminded by J. Huber: "Charles Borromee wrote to his confessor that the Company of Jesus, governed by heads more political than religious, is becoming too powerful to preserve the necessary moderation and submission... She rules over kings and princes, and governs temporal and spiritual affairs; the pious institution has lost the spirit which animated her originally; we shall be compelled to abolish it".(22)

At the same time in France, the famous legal expert Etienne Pasquiet wrote: "Introduce this Order in our midst and, at the same time, you will introduce dissension, chaos and confusion".(23)

Is it not this identical complaint heard over and over again, and in all countries, against the Company? It was the same in Switzerland, when the evidence of her evil deeds broke through the flattering appearances with which she excelled in covering herself.

"Wherever the Jesuits managed to take root, they seduced great and small, young and old. Very soon, the authorities would start consulting them in important circumstances; their donations started flowing in, and it was not long before they occupied all the schools, the pulpits of most churches, the confessionals of all high ranking and influential people

---

(22) J. Huber op.cit., p.131.

(23) Cite by H. Fulop-Miller: "Les Jesuites et le secret de leur puissance" (Plon, Paris 1933 p.57)

Confessors looking after the education of all classes of Society, counsellors and intimate friends of members of the Council, their influence grew day after day, and they did not wait long before exercising it in public affairs. Lucerne and Fribourg were their main centres; from there, they conducted the exterior politics of most Catholic cantons...

"Any plan forged in Rome, or by other foreign powers, against Protestantism in Switzerland was assured of the Jesuits' full support...

"In 1620, they were successful in making the Catholic population of the Veltlin rise against the Protestants and they slaughtered six hundred. The pope gave indulgence to all those who took part in that horrible deed.

"In 1656, they kindled civil war between members of the various confessions... Later again a new war of religion was started by the Jesuits.

"In 1712, peace was being discussed in Aarau; Lucerne and Uri had just accepted it when the Jesuits, on an order from Rome, did all they could to reverse things. They refused absolution to all those who would hesitate to take up arms. They proclaimed loudly from their pulpits that one was not obliged to keep his word, when it was given to heretics; they made moderate councillors to suspect, tried to remove them from their posts and provoked, in Lucerne, such a threatening uprising of the people against the government that the supreme authority resigned herself to break the peace. The Catholics were defeated in the fight which followed and signed an ponerous peace.

Since that time, the Order's influence in Switzerland became smaller and smaller".(24)

Today, article 51 of the Swiss constitution forbids the Society of Jesus to hold any cultural or educative activity on the territory of the Confederation, and efforts made to abolish this rule have always been defeated.

---

(24) J. Huber, op.cit., pp.188 ss.

Chapter 4

Poland and Russia

Jesuit domination was nowhere as deadly as it was in Poland. This is proved by H. Boehmer, a moderate historian who does not bear any systematic hostility towards the Society.

"The Jesuits were entirely responsible for Poland's annihilation. The accusation so worded is excessive. The decadence of the Polish State had started before they came on the scene. But they undoubtedly hastened the kingdom's decomposition. Of all the States, Poland, who had millions of orthodox Christians in her midst, should have had religious tolerance as one of the most essential principles of her interior politics. The Jesuits did not allow that. They did worse: they put Poland's exterior politics at the service of Catholic interests in a fatal manner".(25)

This was written at the end of the last century; it is very similar to what Colonel Beck, former Polish Foreign-Affairs minister from 1932 to 1939 said after the 1939-1945 war:

"The Vatican is one of the main causes of the tragedy of my country. I realised too late that we had pursued our foreign politics just to serve the interests of the Catholic Church".(26)

So, with several centuries in-between, the same disastrous influence has made its mark once again on that unfortunate nation.

In 1581 already, Father Possevino, pontifical legate in Moscow, has done his best to bring together the Czar Ivan the Terrible and the Roman Church. Ivan was not strictly against it. Full of glad hopes, Possevino made himself, in 1584, the mediator of the peace of Kirewora Gora between Russia and Poland, a peace which saved Ivan from inextricable difficulties This is just what the crafty sovereign had hoped for. There was no more talk of converting the Russians. Possevino had to leave Russia without having obtained anything. Two years later, an even better opportunity offered itself to the Fathers to get a hold on Russia: Grischka Ostrepjew, an unfrocked monk, revealed to a Jesuit that he actually was Dimitri, son of Czar Ivan, who had been assassinated; he declared himself ready to subdue Moscow for Rome if he was master of the Czars' throne. Without thinking it over first, the Jesuits took it into their hands to introduce Ostrepjew to the Palatine of Sandomir who gave him his daughter in marriage; they spoke on his behalf to King Sigismond III and the pope regarding his expectations, and succeeded in making the Polish army rise against the Czar Boris Godounov. As a reward for these services, the false Dimitri renounced the religion of his fathers at Crascovie, one of the Jesuits' houses, and promised the Order an establishment in Moscow, near the Kremlin, after his victory over Boris.

---

(25) H. Boehmer, op.cit., p.135.

(26) Declaration of the 6th of February 1940.

"But it was these favours from the catholics which unleashed the hatred of the Russian Orthodox Church against Dimitri. On the 27th of May 1606, he was massacred with several hundred Polish followers. Until then, one could hardly speak of a Russian national sentiment; but now, this feeling was very strong and took immediately the form of a fanatical hatred for the Roman Church and Poland.

"The alliance with Austria and the offensive politics of Sigismond III against the Turks, all of which were strongly encouraged by the Order, were just as disastrous for Poland. To put it briefly, no other State suffered as much as Poland did under the Jesuits' domination. And in no other country, apart from Portugal, was the Society so powerful. Not only did Poland have a 'king of the Jesuits', but also a Jesuit King, Jean-Casimir, a sovereign who had belonged to the Order before his accession to the throne in 1649...

"While Poland was heading fast towards ruin, the number of Jesuit establishments and schools was growing so fast that the General made Poland into a special congregation in 1751 ".(27)

---

(27) H. Boehmer, op.cit., p.135 ss.

Chapter 5

Sweden and England

"In the Scandinavian countries", wrote Mr. Pierre Dominique, "Lutheranism submerged everything else and, when the Jesuits made their counter-attack, they did not find what was found in Germany: a Catholic party already in the minority, but still strong".(28)

Their only hope then was in the conversion of the sovereign who was secretly in favour of Catholicism; also, this king, Jean III Wasa, had married in 1568 a Polish princess, Catherine, a Roman Catholic. In 1574, Father Nicolai and other Jesuits were brought to the recently established school of theology where they became fervent Roman proselytizers, while officially assuming Lutheranism. Then, the clever negotiator Possevino secured the conversion of Jean III and the care of educating his son Sigismond, the future Sigismond III, king of Poland. When the time came to submit Sweden to the Holy See, the king's conditions: marriage of priests, use of the vernacular in services and communion in both kinds, all of which had been rejected by the Roman Curia, brought the negotiations to a dead end. In any case, the king, who had lost his first wife, had remarried a Swedish Lutheran. The Jesuits had to leave the country.

"Fifty years later, the Order won another great victory in Sweden. Queen Christine, daughter of Gustave-Adolphe, the last of the Wasas, was converted under the teaching of two Jesuit professors, who had managed to reach Stockholm pretending to be travelling Italian noblemen. But, in order to change her religion without conflicts, she had to abdicate on the 24th of June 1654".(29)

In England, on the other hand, the situation seemed more faviourable to the Society and it could hope, for a while at least, to bring this country back under the Holy See's jurisdiction.

---

(28) Pierre Dominique, op.cit, p.76.

(29) H. Boehmer, op.cit., pp.137, 138, 139.

"When Elizabeth came to the throne in 1558, Ireland was still entirely Catholic and England 50 per cent so... In 1542 already, Salmeron and Broet had been sent by the pope to survey Ireland".(30)

Seminaries had been created under the Jesuits' direction in Douai, Pont-a-Mousson and Rome, with a view to train English, Irish and Scottish missionaries. In agreement with Philip II of Spain, the Roman Curia worked at overthrowing Elizabeth in favour of the Catholic Mary Stuart. An Irish uprising, provoked by Rome, had been crushed. But the Jesuits, who had arrived in England in 1580, took part in a large Catholic assembly at Southwark.

"Then, under diverse disguises, they spread from county to county, from country house to castle. In the evening, they would hear confession; in the morning, they would preach and give communion, then they would disappear as mysteriously as they had arrived. For, from the 15th of July, Elizabeth had proscribed them".(31)

They printed and distributed secretly virulent pamphlets against the Queen and the Anglican Church. One of them, Father Campion, was caught, condemned for high treason and hanged. They also plotted at Edinburgh to win to their cause King James of Scotland. The result of all these disturbances was the execution of Mary Stuart in 1587.

Then came the Spanish expedition, the invincible Armada, which made England tremble for a while and brought about the "sacred union" around Elizabeth's throne. But the Company pursued none the less her projects and was training English priests at Valladolid, Seville, Madrid and Lisbon, while her secret propaganda continued in England under the direction of Father Garnett. After the Gunpowder Plot against James I, successor of Elizabeth, this Father Garnett was condemned for complicity and hanged, like Father Campion.

Under Charles I, then in Cromwell's Commonwealth, other Jesuits paid for their intrigues with their lives. The Order thought it would triumph under Charles II who, together with Louis XIV, had concluded a secret treaty at Dover, pledging to restore Catholicism in the land.

"The nation was not fully informed of these circumstances, but the little that transpired was enough to create an unbelievable agitation. All England shuddered before Loyola's spectre and the Jesuits' conspiracies".(32)

A meeting of them in the palace itself brought popular fury to a head.

"Charles II, who enjoyed the life of a king and did not want to go on another 'journey across the seas', hanged five Fathers for high treason at

---

(30) H. Boehmer, op.cit., pp.137-139.

(31) H. Boehmer, op.cit., pp.140-142.

(32) H. Boehmer, op.cit., pp.140, 142.

Tyburn... This did not abate the Jesuits.. However, Charles II was too prudent and too cynical for their liking, always ready to drop them. They thought victory was in sight when James II acceded to the throne. In fact, the king took up Mary Tudor's old game, but used softer means. He pretended to convert England and established for the Jesuits, at the palace of Savoy, a college where four hundred students immediately took residence. A downright camarilla of Jesuits took over the Palace...

"All these combinations were the main cause for the 1688 revolution. The Jesuits had to go against a stream too powerful. Then, England had twenty Protestants for each Catholic. The king was overthrown; all the members of the Company put in prison or banished. For some time, the Jesuits recommenced their work of secret agents, but it was nothing more than a futile agitation. They had lost the cause".(33)

---

(33) Pierre Dominique, op.cit, pp.101, 102.

Section II

Chapter 6

France

In 1551, the Order started to establish itself in France, which was seventeen years after its foundation in the chapel Saint-Denis at Montmartre.

Indeed, they presented themselves as effective adversaries of the Reformation which had won about one seventh of the French population, but people mistrusted these soldiers too devoted to the Holy See. So, their penetration on French soil was slow at first. As in all other countries where general opinion was not in their favour, they insinuated themselves first amongst people at Court, then, through them, into the upper classes. But in Paris, the Parliament, the University and even the clergy remained hostile. It came out clearly when they first attempted to open a college there.

"The Faculty of Theology, whose mission is to safeguard the principles of religion in France, decreed on the 1 st of December 1554, that 'this society appears to be extremely dangerous regarding the faith, she is an enemy of the Church's peace, fatal to the monastic state and seems to have been born to bring ruin rather than edification' ".(34)

The Fathers were nevertheless allowed to settle at Billom, in a corner of Auvergne. From there, they organised a great action against the Reformation in the provinces of southern France. The famous Lainez, the man at the Council of Trent, distinguished himself in polemics, especially at the Colloquy of Poissy, in an unhappy attempt to conciliate the two doctrines (1561).

Thanks to the Queen-Mother Catherine of Medici, the Order opened its first Parisian establishment, the College of Clermont, which was in competition with the University. The opposition from this university, the clergy and the parliament was more or less pacified with concessions, verbal at least, made by the Company who promised to conform to the common right; but the University had fought hard and long against the introduction of "men bribed at the expense of France to arm themselves against the King", according to Etienne Pasquier, and whose words were proved right not long after.

---

(34) Gaston Bally, op.cit., p.69.

There is no need to ask if the Jesuits "consented" to the Saint Bartholomew Massacre (1572). Did they "prepare" it? Who knows?... The Company's politics, subtle and supple in their proceedings, have very clear aims; it is the popes' politics: "destray heresy". Everything must be subordinated to this major aim. "Catherine of Medici worked towards this aim and the Company could count on the Guises".(35)

But this major design, helped so much by that massacre on the night of the 24th of August 1572, provoked a terrible blaze of fratricidal hatred.

Three years later, it was the League, after the assassination of the duke de Guise, nicknamed "the king of Paris", and the appeal to His Most Christian Majesty to fight the Protestants.

"The shrewd Henry III did his best to avoid a war of religion. In agreement with Henry of Navarre, they gathered the Protestants and most of the moderate Catholics against Paris, the League and these partisans, mad Romans backed by Spain...

"The Jesuits, powerful in Paris, protested that the king of France had surrendered to heresy... The directing committee of the League deliberated at the Jesuits' house in the Street Saint-Antoine. Was Spain holding Paris? Hardly. The League? The League was only an instrument in skilful hands... "This Company of Jesus who had been fighting in the name of Rome for thirty years now... This was Paris's secret master".

"So, Henry III was assassinated. As the heir was a Protestant, the murder seemed at first glance to have been for other than political reasons; but is it not possible that those who planned it and persuaded the Jacobin Clement to carry it out were hoping for an uprising of Catholic France against the Huguenot heir? The fact is that a little later Clement was called an "angel" by the Jesuit Camelet, and Guignard, another Jesuit who was eventually hanged, gave his students as a means of moulding their opinions tyrannicidal texts as subjects for their latin exercises".(36)

Amongst other things, these school exercises contained this: "Jacques Clement has done a meritorious act inspired by the Holy Spirit... If we can make war against the king, then let us do it; if we cannot make war against him, then let us put him to death..." And this: "We made a big mistake at the Saint-Bartholomew; we should have bled the royal vein".(37)

In 1592, a certain Barriere who tried to assassinate Henry IV confessed that Father Varade, rector of the Jesuits in Paris, had persuaded him to do

(35) Pierre Dominique, op.cit., p.84.
(36) and (37) Pierre Dominique, op.cit., pp.85, 86, 89.

it. In 1594, another attempt was made by Jean Chatel, former pupil of the Jesuits who had heard his confession just before carrying it out. It was on that occasion that the previously mentioned school exercises were seized at the house of Father Guignard. "The Father was hanged at Greve while the king confirmed an edict of Parliament banishing the sons of Loyola from the kingdom, as "corrupters of youth, disturbers of public peace and enemies of the State and crown of France...". The edict was not carried out fully and, in 1603, it was revoked by the king against the advice of Parliament. Aquaviva, the general of the Jesuits, had been clever in his manoeuvres and led king Henry IV to believe that the Order, reestablished in France, would loyally serve national interests. How could he, subtle as he was, believe that these fanatical Romans would indeed accept the Edict of Nantes (1498) which determined the rights of Protestants in France, and, even worse, they would back up his projects against Spain and the Emperor? The fact is, Henry IV chose as his confessor and tutor for the Dauphin one of the most distinguished members of the Company, Father Cotton (38a). On the 16th of May 1610, on the eve of his campaign against Austria, he was murdered by Ravaillac who confessed having been inspired by the writings of Fathers Mariana and Suarez. These two sanctioned the murders of heretic "tyrants" or those insufficiently devoted to the papacy's interests. The duke of Epernon, who made the king read a letter while the assassin was lying in wait, was a notorious friend of the Jesuits, and Michelet proved that they knew of this attempt. "In fact, Ravaillac had confessed to the Jesuit Father d'Aubigny just before and, when the judges interrogated the priest, he merely replied that God had given him the gift to forget immediately what he heard in the confessional".(38)

Parliament, persuaded that Ravaillac had only been a tool for the Company, ordered the executioner to burn Mariana's book.

"Fortunately, Aquaviva was still there. Once again, this great general schemed well; he condemned most severely the legitimacy of tyrannicide. The Company always had authors who, in the silence of their studies, exposed the doctrine in all its rectitude; she also possessed great politicians who, when necessary, would put the right masks on it".(39)

Thanks to Father Cotton who took the situation in hand, the Society of Jesus came out of the storm unscathed. Her wealth, the number of her establishments and adherents grew rapidly. But when Louis XIII came to the throne, and Richelieu took the affairs of State in hand, there was a clash of wills. The Cardinal would not let anyone oppose his politics. The Jesuit (38a) His adversaries used to say that he had "cotton" in his ears! (38) Henri Fulop-Miller, op.cit., p. 113. (39) Pierre Dominique, op.cit., p.95.

Caussin, confessor of the king, was able to find that out when he was put in prison at Rennes, on Richelieu's order, as a State criminal. This act produced the best results. In order to stay in France, the Order went as far as collaborating with the redoubtable Minister.

H. Boehmer wrote this about it: "The lack of consideration for the Church always shown by the French government, since Philippe le Bel, in the conflicts between national and ecclesiastic interests had been, once again, the best politics".(40)

The accession of Louis XIV marked the start of the most prosperous time for the Order. The "laxism" of Jesuit confessors, this clever leniency they used to attract sinners not very anxious to make penance, was employed extensively amongst ordinary people as well as at Court, especially with the king who was more a ladies' man than devout.

His Majesty had no intention of renouncing his amorous affairs, and his confessor was careful to keep off the subject, in spite of it being plain adultery. So, all the royal family was soon provided with Jesuit confessors only, and their influence grew more and more amongst the high society. The priests of Paris attacked in their "Writings" the loose morals of the famous Company's casuists, but to no avail. Pascal himself intervened, in vain, in favour of the Jansenists, during the great theological quarrel of that time; in his "Provincial letters", he exposed their too worldly opponents, the Jesuits, to eternal ridicule.

In spite of it, the secure place they held at Court assured them of victory, and those of Port-Royal succumbed. The Order was to win another great victory for Rome, whose consequences were against national interests. It goes without saying that they had only unwillingly accepted the religious peace assured through the Edict of Nantes, and had continued a secret war against the French Protestants. As Louis XIV was getting older, he turned more and more to bigotry under the influence of Madame de Maintenon and Father La Chaise, his confessor. In 1681, they persuaded him to restart the persecution against the Protestants. Finally, on the 17th of October 1685, he signed the "Revocation of the Edict of Nantes", making those of his subjects who refused to embrace the Catholic religion outlaws. Soon after, to accelerate the conversions, those famous "dragonnade" started; that sinister name became part of all subsequent attempts to proselytize by fire and chains. While the fanatics cheered, the Protestants fled from the kingdom en-masse. According to Marshal Vauban, France lost in that way 400,000 inhabitants and 60 million francs. Manufacturers, merchants, shipowners, skilful artisans went to other countries and brought them the benefit of their abilities.

"17th of October 1685 was a day of victory for the Jesuits, the final reward for a war which had gone on for one hundred and twenty-five years without respite. But the State paid the cost of the Jesuits' victory. "The depopulation, the reduction of national prosperity were the acute material consequences of their triumph, followed by a spiritual impoverishment which could not be cured, even by the best Jesuit school. This what France suffered and the Society of Jesus had to pay for very dearly later".(41)

---

(40) H. Boehmer, op.cit., p. 100.

During the century following, the sons of Loyola saw, not only France, but all the european countries reject them from their midst—but, once again, it was only for a while; these fanatical janissaries of the papacy had not finished to accumulate ruins in the pursuit of their impossible dream.

---

(41) H. Boehmer, op.cit., p.103.

Section III

Foreign missions

Chapter 1

India, Japan, China

The conversion of "pagans" had been the first objective of the Society of Jesus' founder. Even though the necessity to combat Protestantism in Europe involved its disciples more and more, and this political as well as religious action, of which we just gave a short summary, became their main task, they still pursued the evangelisation of distant lands.

Their theocratic ideal: to bring the world under the Holy See's authority, required that they should go into all the regions of the globe, in the conquest of souls.

Francis Xavier, one of Ignatius' first companions who, like him, was canonised by the Church, was the great promoter of Asia's evangelisation. In 1542, he disembarked at Goa and found there a bishop, a cathedral and a convent of Franciscans who, together with some Portuguese priests, had already tried to spread around them the religion of Christ. He gave that first attempt such a strong impetus that he was surnamed the "Apostle of India". Actually, he was more a pioneer and "exciter" than one who really accomplished something lasting. Fiery, enthusiastic, always on the look-out for new fields of action, he showed the way more than he cleared the ground. In the kingdom of Travancore, at Malacca, on the islands of Banda, Macassar and Ceylon, his personal charm, and his eloquent speeches did wonders and, as a result, 70,000 "idolaters" were converted especially amongst the low caste. To obtain this, he did not despise the political and even military support of the Portuguese. These results, more showy than solid, were bound to rouse interest for the missions in Europe as well as throwing a brilliant lustre over the Society of Jesus.

The untiring but little persevering apostle soon left India for Japan, then China, where he was about to enter when he died at Canton, in 1552.

His successor in India, Robert de Nobile, applied in that country the same methods the Jesuits used in Europe very successfully. He appealed to the higher classes. To the "untouchables", he gave the consecrated water only on the end of a stick.

He adopted the clothes, habits and way of living of the Brahmins, mixed their rites with Christian ones, all with the approval of Pope Gregory XV. Thanks to this ambiguity, he "converted", so he claimed, 250,000 Hindus. But, "about a century after his death, when the intransigent pope Benedict XIV forbade the observance of these Hindu rites, everthing collapsed and the 250,000 pseudo-catholics disappeared".(l)

In the north Indian territories ofthe Great Mogol Akbar, a tolerant man who even tried to introduce into his States a religious syncretism, the Jesuits were allowed to build an establishment at Lahore in 1575. Akbar's successors granted them the same favours. But Aureng-Zeb (1666-1707), and orthodox Moslem, put an end to this enterprise.

In 1549, Xavier embarked for Japan with two companions and a Japanese he had converted at Malacca called Yagiro. The beginnings were not very promising. "The Japanese have their own mortality and are rather reserved; their past has set them in paganism. The adults look at those strangers with amusement and the children follow them, jeering".(2) Yagiro, a native, managed to start a small community of one hundred adherents. But Francis Xavier, who did not speak Japanese very well, could not even obtain an audience from the Mikado. When he left that country, two Fathers stayed behind who eventually secured the conversion of the daimos of Arima and Bungo. When this particular one so decided in 1578, he had been considering the matter for 27 years. The following year, the Fathers settled at Nagasaki. They pretended to have converted 100,000 Japanese. In 1587, the internal situation of the land, torn apart by clan wars, changed entirely. "The Jesuits had taken advantage of that anarchy and their close relations with Portuguese merchants."(3) Hideyoshi, a man of low birth, had usurped power and taken the title of Taikosama. He distrusted the Jesuits' political influence, their association with the Portuguese and their connections with the great and wild vassals, the Samourai.

In consequence, the young Japanese Church was violently persecuted, six Franciscans and three Jesuits were crucified; many converts were murdered and the Order was banished.

Nevertheless, the decree was not carried out. The Jesuits continued their apostolate in secret. But, in 1614, the first Shogun, Tokugawa Yagasu, became uneasy with their occult actions and the persecution started again. Besides, the Dutch had taken the place of the Portuguese at the business' counters and were closely watched by the government. A profound distrust of all foreigners, ecclesiastics or laymen inspired from then on the conduct of leaders and, in 1638, a rebellion of the Nagasaki Christians was drowned in blood. For the Jesuits, the Japanese adventure had come to an end, and was to remain so for a long time.

(1) "Les Jesuites", in "Le Crapouillot", Nr. 24, 1954, p.42. (2) "Le Crapouillot", op.cit., p.43. (3) H. Boehmer, op.cit., p.162.

We can read in the remarkable work of Lord Bertrand Russell "Science and Religion" the following racy passage about Francis Xavier the miracle worker: "He and his companions wrote many long letters which were kept; in them, they gave accounts of their labours, but none of those written in his lifetime made any mention of miraculous powers. Joseph Acosta, the Jesuit who was so much troubled by Peru's animals, expressly denied that these missionaries had been helped by miracles in their efforts to convert the pagans. But, soon after Xavier's death, stories of miracles started to abound. It was said that he had the gift of tongues, even though his letters were full of allusions to the difficulties he had to master the Japanese language or find good interpreters.

"Stories were told of how, when his friends had felt thirsty at sea, he had changed salt water into fresh. When he dropped his crucifix into the sea, a crab brought it back to him. According to a later version, he had thrown the crucifix into the sea to still a tempest. When he was canonised in 1622, it was proved, to the satisfaction of the Vatican authorities, that he had accomplished miracles, as no one can become a saint without them. The pope gave his official guarantee to the gift of tongues and was particularly impressed by the fact that Xavier had made the lamps burn with holy water instead of oil.

"This same pope, Urban VIII, refused to believe Galileo's statements. The legend continued to improve: a biography by Father Bonhours, published in 1682, tells us that the saint had resuscitated fourteen persons during his lifetime. "Catholic authors still attribute to him the gift of miracles; in a biography published in 1872, Father Coleridge of the Society of Jesus restated that he had the gift of tongues".(4)

Judging by the exploits just mentioned, saint Francis Xavier well deserved his halo.

In China, the sons of Loyola had a long and favourable time with only a few expulsions in-between; they obtained this on condition they woud work there mainly as scientists and bow to the thousands of years old rite of this ancient civilisation.

"Meteorology was the main subject. Francis Xavier had already foud out that the Japanese did not know the earth was round and were very interested in what he taught them on that and other similar subjects. "In China, it became official and, as the Chinese were not fanatical, things developed peaceably." "An Italian, Father Ricci, was the initiator of it.

---

(4) Lord Bertrand Russell: "Science and religion" (Ed. Gallimard, Paris 1957, pp.84-85

Having made his way to Peking, he played the part of an astronomer before the Chinese scientists... Astronomy and mathematics were an important part of Chinese institutions. These sciences enabled the sovereign to date their various seasonal religious and civil ceremonies... Ricci brought information which made him indispensable and he used this opportunity to speak about Christianity... He sent for two Fathers who amended the traditional calendar, establishing the accord between the course of the stars and earthly events. Ricci helped with lesser tasks as well; for instance, he drew a mural map of the empire, where he carefully put China at the center of the universe..."(5)

This was the Jesuits' main work in that Celestial Empire; as for the religions side of their mission, the interest in it was minute. It is rather amusing to think that, in Peking, the Fathers were busy rectifying the astronomical mistakes of the Chinese, while, in Rome, the Holy See persistently condemned the Copernican system, and that until 1822!

In spite of the fact that the Chinese had very little inclination for mysticism, the first Catholic church opened at Peking in 1599. When Ricci died, he was replaced by a German, Father Shall von Bell, an astronomer who also published some remarkable tracts in the Chinese language; in 1644, he was given the title of "President of the mathematical Tribunal", which created jealousy amongst the mandarins. In the meantime, the Christian communities organised themselves. In 1617, the emperor must have foreseen the dangers of this pacific penetration when he decreed the banishment of all foreigners. The good Fathers were sent to the Portuguese at Macao in wooden cages. But, soon after, they were called back. They were such good astronomers!

In fact, they were just as good as missionaries with 41 residences in China, 159 churches and 257,000 baptised members. But a new reaction against them called for their banishment and Father Shall was condemned to death. No doubt he had not incurred this sentence merely for his work in mathematics! An earthquake and the burning of the imperial palace, cleverly presented as a sign of wrath from heaven, saved his life and he died peacefully two years later. But his companions had to leave China.

In spite of all, the esteem for the Jesuits was so great that emperor Kang-Hi felt obliged to call them back in 1669, and ordered solemn funerals for the remains of Iam Io Vam (Jean-Adam Shall). These unusual honours were only the start of exceptional favours".(6)

A Belgian Father, Verbiest, followed Shall at the head of the missions— and also the Imperial mathematical Institute. He was the one who gave to Peking's Observatory those famous instruments whose mathematical precision is concealed by chimeras, dragons, etc. Kang-Hi, "the enlightened despot", who reigned for 61 years, appreciated the services of that scientist who gave him wise advice, accompanied him to war and even managed a foundry for cannons. But this profane and war-like activity was directed "ad majorem Dei gloriam", as the good Father reminded the emperor in a note he sent him before his death: "Sir, I die happy as I used nearly every moment of my life to serve Your Majesty. But I pray Him very humbly to remember, after my death, that my aim in all I did was to procure a protector for the most holy religion in the universe; and this protector was you, the greatest king in the East".(7)

---

(5) "Le Crapouillot", op.cit. p.44.

(6) H. Boehmer, op.cit., p. 168.

However, in China as in Malabar, this religion could not survive without some artifice. The Jesuits had to bring the Roman doctrine to the chinese level, identify God with heaven (Tien) or the Chang-Ti (Emperor from on-high), blend Catholic rites with Chinese rites, accept Confucian teachings, the cult of the ancestors, etc.

Pope Clement XI, who was told of it by rival Orders, condemned this doctrinal "laxism" and, as a result, all the missionary work of the Jesuits in the Celestial Empire collapsed.

The successors of Kang-Hi proscribed Christianity and the last Fathers left in China died there and were never replaced.

---

(7) "Correspondence" of Verbiest (Brussels 1931, p.551).

Section III

Chapter 2

The Americas: The Jesuit State of Paraguay

The missionaries of the Society of Jesus found the New World much more favourable to their proselytism than Asia. There, they found no old and learned civilisations, no religions solidly established, nor any philosophical traditions, but only poor and barbarian tribes, unarmed spiritually as well as temporally before the white conquerors. Only Mexico and Peru, with the memory of Aztec and Inca gods still fresh in their minds, resisted this imported religion for quite a long time. Also, the Dominicans and Franciscans had already established themselves solidly. It was then amongst the wild tribes, nomadic hunters and fishermen, that the sons of Loyola exercised their devouring activity; the results they obtained varied according to the fierceness and opposition of the various populations.

In Canada, the Hurons, peaceful and docile, accepted easily their catechism, but their enemies, the Iroquois, attacked the stations created around Fort Sainte-Marie and massacred the inhabitants. The Hurons were practically exterminated within ten years and, in 1649, the Jesuits had to leave with about three hundred survivors.

They did not make a strong impression when they went through the territories which, today, make up the United States, and it was only during the 19th century that they started putting some roots down in that part of the continent.

In South America, the Jesuits' action met with some good and bad fortunes, In 1546, the Portuguese had called them to work in the territories they possessed in Brazil; while converting the natives, they encountered many conflicts with civil authority and other religious Orders. The same thing happened in New Granada. But Paraguay was the land for the great "experience" of Jesuitical colonisation; this country spread then from the Atlantic to the Andes and comprised territories which, today, belong to Brazil, Uruguay and Argentina. The only means of access through the virgin jungle was on the Paraguay and Parana rivers. The population of that land was made up of nomadic and docile Indians, ready to bow to anyone's domination as long as they were supplied with enough food and a little tobacco.

The Jesuits could not find better conditions to establish, away from the corruption of whites and half-castes, the perfect type of colony, a city of God according to their heart's desire. At the start of the 17th century, Paraguay was made into a Province by the general of the Order who had been given all powers by the Court of Spain, and the "Jesuit State" developed and flourished.

These good savages were duly catechised and trained to live a sedentary life under a discipline as gentle as it was strong: "as an iron hand in a velvet glove". These patriarchal societies deliberately ignored liberties of any kind. "All that a Christian possesses, and uses, the hut in which he lives, the fields he cultivates, the livestock which provide his food and clothes, thie arms he carries, the tools he works with, even the only table knife given to every young couple when they set up home, is "Tupambac" God's property From the same conception, the "Christian" cannot dispose of his time and person freely. The suckling child is under his mother's protection. As soon as he can walk, he is in the Fathers' or their agents' power... When the child grows up, it learns, if it is a girl, to spin and weave, and if it is a boy, to read and write, but only in guarani; for Spanish is severely prohibited so as to prevent all trading with the corrupted Creoles... As soon as a girl is fourteen and a boy sixteen years of age, they are married, as the Fathers are anxious not to see them fall into some carnal sin... None of them can become priest monk, and even less Jesuit... They have practically no liberty left. But they are obviously very happy, materially speaking... In the morning, after mass, each gang of workers go to the fields one after another, singing and preceded by some holy image; in the evening, they come back to the village in the same manner, to hear the catechism or recite the rosary. The Fathers have also thought out some honest entertainments and recreations for the "christians" ...

"The Jesuits watch over them like fathers; and, like fathers also, they punish the smallest mistakes... The whip, fasting, prison, pillory on the public square, public penance in the church, these are the chastisements they use... So, the "red" children of Paraguay know no other authority than that of the good Fathers. They do not even vaguely suspect that the king of Spain is their sovereign".(8)

Is this not a picture somewhat caricatured the perfect picture of the ideal theocratic society?

But let us consider how it affected the intellectual and moral advancement of the beneficiaries of that system, these "poor innocents" as they were called by the marquess de Loreto: "The missions' high culture is nothing more than an artificial product from an hot-house, carrying in itself a seed of death. Because, in spite of all this breaking in and training, the Guarani remained deep down what he was: a lazy savage, narrow-minded, sensual, greedy and sordid. As the Fathers themselves say, he only works when he feels the overseer's goad behind him. As soon as they are left to themselves, they are indifferent to the fact that the harvest is rotting in the field, implements are deteriorating and the herds are scattered; if he is not watched when working in the fields, he can even suddenly unyoke an ox and butcher it on the spot, light a fire with the wood of the plough and, with his companions, start eating the half-cooked flesh until none of it is left. He knows that he will get 25 lashings of the whip for it, but also that the good Fathers would never let him starve to death".(9)

---

(8) and (9) H. Boehmer, op.cit., pp. 197 ss.

In a book recently published, we can read the following concerning the Jesuits' punishments: "The culprit, dressed in the clothes of a penitent, was escorted to church where he confessed his fault. Then he was whipped on the public square according to the penal code... The culprits always received this chastisement, not only without murmurs, but also with thanksgivings..." "The guilty one, having been punished and reconciled, kissed the hand of the one who struck him, saying: "May God reward you for freeing me, by this light punishment, from the eternal sorrows which threatened me".(10)

After reading this, we can understand Mr. H. Boehmer's conclusion: "The Guarani's moral life enriched itself very little under the Fathers' discipline. He became a devout and superstitious Catholic who sees miracles everywhere and seems to enjoy flagellating himself until blood appears; he learned to obey and was attached to the good Fathers, who cared so well for him, with a filial gratitude which, even though not very deep, was nevertheless very tenacious. This not very brilliant result proves that there was some important defect in the educative methods of the Fathers. What was that defect? The fact that they never tried to develop, in their "red" children, the inventive faculties, the need for activity, the feeling of responsibility; they themselves invented games and recreations for their christians, they thought for them instead of encouraging them to think for themselves; they merely submitted those who were under their care to a mechanical "breaking in" instead of educating them".(11)

How could it be otherwise when they themselves had gone through a "breaking in" lasting fourteen years? Were they going to teach the Guaranis and their white pupils to "think for themselves", when they were absolutely forbidden to do so?

---

(10) Clovis Lugon: "La Republique communiste chretienne des Guaranis" p.197. (11) H. Boehmer, op.cit. pp.204-205.

It is not a Jesuit of old, but a contemporary one who writes: "He (the Jesuit) will not forget that the characteristic virtue of the Company is total obedience of the action, the will, and even the judgement... All the superiors will be bound in the same way to higher ones and the Father General to the Holy Father... It was so arranged as to render the Holy See's authority universally efficacious, and saint Ignatius was sure that teaching and education would henceforth bring back to Catholic unity a Europe torn apart".

It is with the hope of "reforming the world", wrote Father Bonhours, "that he particularly embraced this means: the instruction of youth..." (12)

The education of Paraguay's natives was done on the same principles the Fathers used to apply, now apply and will apply on everyone and everywhere; their aim, deplored by Mr. Boehmer, but which is ideal to the eyes of those fanatics: the renouncement of all personal judgement, all initiative, a blind submission to the superiors. Is it not that "height of freedom", "the liberation from one's own bondage" praised by R.P. Rouquette and which we mentioned earlier on?

In fact, the good Guaranis had been "liberated" so well by the Jesuitical method for more than one hundred and fifty years that, when their masters left during the 18th century, they went back into their forests and returned to their ancient customs as if nothing had happened.

---

(12) F. Charmot, s.j.: "La Pedagogie des Jesuites" (Edit. Spes, Paris 1943, p.39).

Section IV

The Jesuits in the European Society

Chapter 1

The Teaching of the Jesuits

"The pedagogic method of the Company", wrote R.P. Charmot, S.J., "consists first of all of surrounding the pupils with a great network of prayers..."

Later, he quotes the Jesuit Father Tacchini: "May the Holy Spirit fill them as alabasters are filled with perfumes; may He penetrate them so much that, as time goes on, they will be able to breathe in more and more celestial fragrance and the perfume of Christ!"

Father Gandier also has a contribution: "Let us not forget that education, as seen by the Company, is the ministry most similar to that of angels". (1)

Later, Father Charmot has this to say: "Let us not be anxious as to where and how mysticism is inserted into education!..." "It is not done through a system or artificial technique, but by infiltration, by "endosmosis". The children's souls are impregnated because of their being in close "contact with masters who are literally saturated with it".(2)

From the same author, here is "the aim of the Jesuit professor": "Through his teaching, he aims to form, not an intellectual Christian elite, but elite christians".(3)

These few quotations tell us enough about the principal aim of these educators. Let us see now how they form these elite Christians, and what kind of mysticism is "inserted" (or inoculated), "infiltrated" or "pumped into" children submitted to their educational system.

At the front—it is characteristic of this Order—we find the Virgin Mary. "Loyola had made the Virgin the most important thing in his life. The Worship of Mary was the base of his religious devotions and was handed down by him to his Order. This worship developed so much that it was often said, and with good reason, that it was the Jesuits' real religion".(4)

(1,2,3) F. Charmot, S.J. op.cit., pp.413, 415, 417, 442, 493..

This was not written by a Protestant, but by J. Huber, professor of Catholic theology.

Loyola himself was convinced that the Virgin had inspired him when he had drawn up his "Exercises". A Jesuit had a vision of Mary covering the Society with her mantle as a sign of her special protection. Another one, Rodrigue de Gois, was so enraptured with her inexpressible beauty that he was seen soaring into the air. A novice of this Order, who died in Rome in 1581, was sustained by the Virgin in his fight against the devil's temptations; to strengthen him, she gave him a taste of her Son's blood from time to time and "the comfort of her breasts".(5)

Duns Scot's doctrine of the Immaculate Conception" was enthusiastically adopted by the Order which was successful in having it made into a dogma by Pius IX in 1854.

"Erasmus satirically depicted the worship of Mary of his time. During the fourth century, the tale of Loretto's house had been invented; this house had apparently been brought from Palestine by angels. The Jesuits welcomed and defended this legend. Canisius went as far as producing letters from Mary herself and, thanks to the Order, great wealth started to pour in at Loretto (as at Lourdes, Fatima, etc..)

"The Jesuits brought forth all kinds of relics of the Mother of God. When they made their entrance into the church of Saint-Michael at Munich, they offered to the veneration of the faithful pieces of Mary's veil, several tufts of her hair and pieces of her comb; they instituted a special cult, consecrated to worship these objects..."

"This worship degenerated into licentious and sensual manifestations, in particular in the hymns dedicated to the Virgin by Father Jacques Pontanus. The poet knew of nothing more beautiful than Mary's breasts, nothing sweeter than her milk and nothing more delightful than her abdomen".(6)

One could multiply these citations endlessly. Ignatius wanted his disciplies to have a "perceptible", or even sensual piety, similar to his own, and they obviously succeeded. No wonder they were so successful with the Guaranis; this erotic fetichism suited them perfectly. But the good Fathers always thought it would suit the "whites" just as well. As the foundation of their doctrine is an utter contempt for people as human beings, "whites" or "reds" were just the same, and both had to be treated as if they were children.

So they work relentlessly at propagating this spirit and these idolatrous practices; because of the influence they hold over the Holy See, which cannot do without them, they force them on the Roman Church, in spite of the resistance which has gradually decreased.

(4) and (5) J. Huber, op.cit., pp.98-99.

(6) "Oeuvres completes" de Bucher (Munich 1819, II, p.477 ss.)

"Father Barri wrote a book entitled: "Paradise opens through one hundred devotions to the Mother of God". In it, he expounds the idea that the way by which we enter paradise is not important: the important thing is to enter. He enumerates exercises of exterior piety to Mary which open heaven's doors. Amongst other things, these exercises consist of giving to Mary morning and evening salutations; frequently charging the angles to greet her; expressing the desire to build her more churches than all those built by monarchs put together; carrying day and night a rosary as a bracelet, an image of Mary, etc...

"These practices are enough to assure our salvation and if the devil, when we are about to die, makes claims on our souls, we just have to remind him that Mary is responsible for us and he must sort things out with her".(7)

In his "Pietas quotidiana erga S.D. Mariam", Father Pemble recommends the following: "To beat or flagellate ourselves, and offer each blow as a sacrifice to God, through Mary to carve with a knife the holy name of Mary on our chest: to cover ourselves decently at night so as not to offend the chaste gaze of Mary; to tell the Virgin you would be willing to offer her your place in heaven if she didn't have her own; to wish you had never been born or go to hell if Mary had not been born; to never eat an apple, as Mary had been kept from the mistake of tasing of it".(8)

All this was written in 1764, but one only has to glance through similar works published today in great numbers, or just the Catholic press, to establish the fact that, for two hundred years, this wild idolatry had done nothing but grow and embellish. The late pope Pius XII distinguished himself as far as the ownership of Mary is concerned. Under his rule, a large part of the Roman Church followed suit.

Moreover, the sons of Loyola, who are always anxious to conform to the spirit of the age, try to today to accommodate these mediaeval puerilities, and there are several tracts published by some of these good Fathers under the grand auspices of the "Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique" (C.N.R.S.)

If we add to this the scapulars of various colours with their appropriate virtues, the worship of saints, images, relics, the apology of the "miracles", the adoration of the Sacred Heart, we will have some idea of the "mysticism" with which "the children's souls are impregnated" through their contact with masters "who are saturated with it"—as R.P. Charmot wrote in 1943.

There is no other way to form "elite Christians".

Nevertheless, if they were to win their fight against the Universities, the Jesuit colleges had to expand their teaching and include secular subjects, as the Renaissance had awakened a thirst for learning. We know that they gladly carried it out while taking all the necessary precautions to prevent this learning going against the aim of their teaching: maintaining the minds in complete obedience to the Church.

---

(7) and (8) J. Huber, op.cit., 106-108.

That is why their pupils are first of all "surrounded" by this "great web of prayers", which would not be sufficient if the learning imparted was not carefully purged from all heterodox spirit and ideas. So, Greek and Latin, (Latin is regarded very highly in these colleges), were studied for their literary value; but the "antique" orthodox thought was expounded just enough to establish the so-called superior scholastic philosophy. These "humanists" they were training were able to compose discourses and latin verses, but the only master of their thoughts was saint Thomas Aquinas, a monk of the 13th century

Listen to "Ratio Studiorum", fundamental treatise of Jesuit pedagogy, quoted by R.P. Charmot: "We will carefully discard secular subjects which do not favour good morals and piety. We will compose poems; but may our poets be Christians and not followers of pagans who invoke Muses, mountain nymphs, sea-nymphs, Calliope, Apollo, etc... or other gods and goddesses. What's more, if these are to be mentioned, may it be with the view to caricature them, as they are only demons..."(9)

So, all sciences—and especially natural sciences—will be "interpreted" in like manner.

In fact, R.P. Charmot doesn't even try to hide it in what he said about the Jesuit professor in 1943: "He teaches sciences, not for themselves, but only with the view to bring about God's greatest glory. It is the rule laid down by Saint Ignatius in his "Constitutions". 10)

And again: "When we speak of a whole culture, we do not mean that we teach all subjects and sciences, but we give a literary and scientific education which is not purely secular and impermeable to the lights of Revelation".(11)

The instruction dispensed by the Jesuits was therefore bound to be more flashy than profound, or "formalistic" as it is often called. "They did not believe in liberty, which was fatal as far as teaching is concerned", wrote H. Boehmer.

"The truth is that the relative merits of the Jesuits' teaching diminished while science and the methods of education and instruction progressed and developed, on the basis of a wider and deeper conception of Humanity. Buckle said: "The more civilisation advanced, the more the Jesuits lost ground, not merely because of their own decadence, but because of all the modifications and changes in the minds of those around them... During the 16th century, the Jesuits were ahead, but during the 18th century, they were behind their time".(12)

(9,10,11) F. Charmot, S.J. op.cit., pp.318-319, 508-509, 494. (12) J. Huber, op.cit., II, p.177.

Section IV

Chapter 2

The morals of the Jesuits

The conquering spirit of their Society, the burning desire to attract consciences and hold them under their exclusive influence, could only induce the Jesuits to be more lenient with the penitents than confessors of other Orders or the secular clergy. "We do not catch flies with vinegar", rightly says the proverb.

As we have already seen, Ignatius expressed the same idea in different terms and his sons drew their inspiration from it. "The extraordinary activity deployed by the Order in the field or moral theology already shows that this subtle science had, for him, a much greater practical importance than the other sciences".(13)

Mr. Boehmer, who wrote the phrase we just quoted, reminds us that confession was very rare during the Middle Ages and the faithful resorted to it only in the gravest cases. But the domineering character of the Roman Church made the practice of it spread and grow more and more. In fact, during the 16th century, confession had become a religious duty which had to be diligently observed. Ignatius considered it most important and recommended to his disciplies that as many of the faithful as possible should observe it regularly.

"The results of this method were extraordinary. The Jesuit confessors soon enjoyed everywhere the same consideration shown to the Jesuit professors, and the confessional was considered by all as the symbol of the Order's power and activity, as were the professorial chair and the latin grammar...

"If we read Ignatius' Instructions regarding confession and moral theology, we must admit that, from the beginning, the Order was prepared to treat the sinner kindly, that as time went on, it showed more and more indulgence until this kindness degenerated into slackness...

(13) and (14) H. Boehmer, op.cit., pp.244-246.

"We can understand easily why this clever leniency made them such successful confessors. This is how they won the favours of the nobles and high-ups of this world who always needed the condescension of their confessors more than the mass of ordinary sinners.

"The Courts of the Middle Ages never had any all-powerful confessors. This characteristic figure appeared in the life of the Courts only in modern times and it is the Jesuit Order which implanted it everywhere".(14)

Mr Boehmer wrote: "During the 17th century, these confessors not only obtained an appreciable political influence everywhere, but even accepted, and sometimes openly, political posts or functions. It is then that Father Neidhart took the direction of Spanish politics as 'prime minister and Grand Inquisitor'; Father Fernandez sat and was entitled to speak and vote in the Portuguese Council; Father La Chaise and his successor held the functions of ministers for Ecclesiastical Affairs at the Court of France.

"Let us remember also the part played by the Fathers in general politics, even outside the confessional: Father Possevino as pontifical legate in Sweden, Poland and Russia; Father Petre, a Minister in England; Father Vota as intimate counsellor of Jean Sobieski of Poland, as 'maker of kings' in Poland, as mediator when Prussia was made into a kingdom; —one must admit that no other Order showed so much interest and talent for politics, and deployed so much activity in it than the Jesuit Order".(15)

"If the 'indulgence' of these confessors towards their august penitents helped greatly the interests of the Order and the Roman Curia, it was the same in the more modest spheres where the Fathers used similar convenient methods. With their meticulous, and even meddlesome spirit, which they inherited from their founder; the famous "casuists" such as Escobar, Mariana, Sanchez, Busenbaum, etc., applied themselves to studying each rule in particular and their applications to all the cases which could be presented at the tribunal of penance; their tracts on "moral theology" gave the Company a universal reputation as their subtlity to distort and pervert the most evident moral obligations was so apparent.

Here are some examples of these acrobatics: "The divine Law prescribes "You shall not bear false witness". "There is false witness only if the one who took the oath uses words which he knows will deceive the judge. The use of ambiguous terms is therefore allowed, and even the excuse of mental reservation in certain circumstances..." "If a husband asks his adulterous wife if she has broken the conjugal contract, she can say "no" without hesitation as that contract still exists. Once she has obtained absolution at the confessional, she can say: "I am without sin", if, while she says it, she thinks of that absolution which took the load of her sin. If her husband is still incredulous, she can reassure him by saying that she has not committed adultery, and if she adds (under her breath) adultery she is obliged to confess."

(15) and (16) H. Boehmer, op.cit., pp.247-248, 238 ss.

It is not hard to imagine that such a theory was successful with their beautiful penitent ladies!

In fact, their gallant escorts were treated just as well: "The Law of God commands: "You shall not kill". "But it doesn't mean that every man who kills sins against this precept. For example, if a nobleman is threatened with blows or beating, he can kill his aggressor; but of course this right is only for the nobleman and not the plebeian, as there is nothing dishonourable for a common man to receive a beating... "In the same way, a servant who helps his master seduce a young girl is not committing a mortal sin if he can fear serious disadvantages or bad treatment in case he refuses. If a young girl is pregnant, a miscarriage can be induced if her fault is the cause of dishonour for herself or a member of the clergy."(17) As for Father Benzi, he had his hour of fame when he declared: "it is only a slight offence to feel the breasts of a nun", and, because of it, the Jesuits were nicknamed the "mamillary theologians".

But, as far as that is concerned, the famous Casuist, Thomas Lanchz, deserves the prize for his tract "De Matrimonio", in which the pious author studies with outrageous details all the varieties of "carnal sin".

Also, let us study further these convenient maxims as far as politcs are concerned, especially those relative to the legitimacy of assassinating "tyrants" found guilty of lukewarmness towards the sacred interests of the Holy See. Mr. Boehmer has this to say: "As we have just seen, it is not difficult to guard against mortal sin. Depending on circumstances, we only have to use the excellent means permitted by the Fathers: "equivocation, mental reservation, the subtle theory of the direction of intentions," and we will be able to commit, without sin, acts which are considered criminal by the ignorant masses, but in which even the most severe Father will not be able to find an atom of mortal sin".(18)

Amongst the most criminal Jesuitic maxims, there is one which roused public indignation to the highest point and deserves to be examined; it is: "A monk or priest is allowed to kill those who are ready to slander him or his community."

So, the Order gives itself the right to eliminate its adversaries and even those of its members who, having come out of it, are too talkative. This pearl is found in the "Theology of Father L'Amy".

There is another case where this principle finds its application. For, this same Jesuit was cynical enough to write: "If a Father, yielding to temptation, abuses a woman and she publicises what has happened, and, because of it, dishonours him, this same Father can kill her to avoid disgrace!"

(17) and (18) H. Boehmer, op.cit., pp.238, 241.

Another son of Loyola, quoted by "Le grand flambeau" Caramuel, thinks that this maxim must be upheld and defended: "the Father can use it as an excuse to kill the woman and so preserve his honour".

This monstrous theory was used to cover many crimes committed by ecclesiastics and probably was, in 1956, the reason if not the cause for the lamentable affair of the priest of Uruffe.

Section IV

Chapter 3

The Eclipse of the Company

The successes the Society of Jesus obtained in Europe and far-off lands, even though interspersed by some misfortunes, assured it a preponderant situation for a long time. But, as we have already mentioned, time was not working in its favour. As ideas evolved and the progress of sciences tended to liberate the minds, ordinary people and monarchs found it more and more difficult to endure the ascendancy of these champions of "theocracy". Also, many abuses, born out of its successes, impaired the Society inwardly. Apart from politics in which it was deeply involved as one has seen, to the detriment of national interests, its devouring activity had soon made itself felt in the domain of economics.

"The Fathers became involved too much in affairs which had nothing to do with religion, in commerce, exchange, as liquidators of bankruptcies. The Roman College, which should have remained the intellectual and moral model of all Jesuit colleges had cloth made in huge quantities at Macerata and sold it in fairs at a low price. Their centres in India, Antilles, Mexico and Brazil soon started trading in colonial products. At Martinique, a procurator created vast plantations which were cultivated by negro slaves".(19)

This is the commercial side of Foreign Missions which is just the same today. The Roman Church never scorned at extracting a temporal profit from her "spiritual" conquests. As far as that is concerned, the Jesuits were just like all other religious Orders; they even surpassed them. In any case, we know that, recently, the White Fathers were amongst the richest landowners in North Africa.

The sons of Loyola were as intensely active at making the best of the "pagan's" labours as at winning their souls. "In Mexico, they had silver mines and sugar refineries; in Paraguay, tea and cacao plantations, carpet factories; they also reared cattle and exported 80,000 mules every year".(20

---

(19) Pierre Dominique, op.cit., pp.190-191.

As we can see, the evangelisation of their "red children" was a good source of revenue. And to make an even bigger profit, the Fathers did not hesitate to defraud the state treasury, as seen in the well-known story of the so-called boxes of chocolate unloaded at Cadix which were full of gold powder.

Bishop Palafox, sent as apostolic visitor by Pope Innocent VIII, wrote to him in 1647 "All the wealth of South America is in the hands of the Jesuits".

Financial affairs were just as advantageous. "In Rome, the coffers of the Order made payments to the Portuguese embassy in the name of the Portuguese government. When Auguste le Fort went to Poland, Vienna's Fathers opened a credit account for this needy monarch with the Jesuits of Varsovie. In China, the Fathers lent money to the merchants at 25, 50 and even 100% interest".(21)

The scandalous greediness of the Order, its loose morals, its ceaseless political intrigues and also its encroachings upon the prerogatives of the secular and regular clergy had stirred up mortal enmity and hatred everywhere. Amongst the higher classes, it had been brought into complete disrepute and, in France at any rate, its efforts to maintain the people in a formalist and superstitious piety gave way to the inevitable emancipation of the minds.

Nevertheless, the material prosperity enjoyed by the Society, the acquired positions at the Courts and especially the support of the Holy See which they thought immovable, maintained the Jesuits in their complete assurance, even on the eve of their ruin. Had they not already gone through several storms, suffered about thirty expulsions from the time of their foundation until the middle of the 18th century? Nearly every time, they had been back sooner or later to reoccupy their lost positions.

But this new eclipse threatening them was to be nearly total, this time, and last for more than forty years.

The strange thing is that the first assault against the powerful Society came from the very Catholic Portugal, one of their principal strongholds in Europe. The influence exercised over that country by England since the beginning of the century was prqbably one of the causes of this uprising.

A treaty fixing the boundaries in America, concluded between Spain and Portugal in 1750, had given the Portuguese a vast territory east of the river Uruguay where the Jesuits were working. In consequence, the Fathers had to retreat with their converts on this side of the new frontier, on Spanish territory. So they armed their Guaranis, led a long guerilla war and finally

---

(20) Andre Mater, quoted by Pierre Dominique, op.cit., p.191.

(21) Pierre Dominique, op.cit., p.191.

remained masters of the land which was given back to Spain.

The marquess of Pombal, Portuguese prime minister, felt really insulted. besides, this former pupil of the Jesuits had not kept their "trade-mark" and drew his inspiration from French and English philosophers rather than from his old educators. In 1757, he drove out the Jesuit confessors of the Royal family and forbade the members of the Society to preach. After several quarrels with them, he issued pamphlets to the public—one of which was "Short account of the Jesuits' kingdom in Paraguay" which made a great noise—obtained an inquiry into their conduct by pope Benedict XIV and finally banished the Society from all his territories.

The affair caused a sensation in Europe, and especially in France where, soon after, the bankruptcy of Father La Valette broke out; he was a "businessman" handling huge transactions in sugar and coffee for the Company. Its refusal to pay the Father's debts was fatal. The Parliament, not content with a civil condemnation, examined its Constitutions, declared its establishment in France illegal and condemned twenty four works of its principal authors. On the 6th of April 1762, it issued a 'statement of arrest' (Indictment) in the following terms: "The said Institute is inadmissible in any civilised State, as its nature is hostile to all spiritual and temporal authority; it seeks to introduce into the Church and States, under the plausible veil of a religious Institute, not an Order truly desirous to spread evangelical perfection, but rather a political body working untiringly at usurping all authority, by all kinds of indirect, secret and devious means..." In conclusion, the Jesuits' doctrine was described as follows: "perverse, a destroyer of all religious and honest principles, insulting to Christian morals, pernicious to civil society, hostile to the rights of the nation, the royal power, and even the security of the sovereigns and obedience of their subjects; suitable to stir up the greatest disturbances in the States, conceive and maintain the worst kind of corruption in men's hearts". In France, the Society's properties were confiscated for the benefit of the Crown and none of its members was allowed to stay in the kingdom unless he enounced his vows and swore to submit to the general rules of France's clergy.

In Rome, the Jesuits' general, Ricci, obtained from Pope Clement XIII a bull confirming the Order's privileges and proclaiming its innocence. But it was too late. In Spain, the Bourbons suppressed all the establishments of the Society, the metropolitan ones as well as the colonial ones. So ended Paguay's Jesuit State. The governments of Naples, Parma, and even the Grand-Master of Malta also banished the sons of Loyola from their territories. The 6,000 who were in Spain had a strange experience after they had been thrown in prison: "King Charles III sent all the prisoners to the pope with a grand letter in which he said that he "put them under the wise and immediate control of Your Holiness". But, when the wretches were about to disembark at Civita-Vecchia, they were welcomed with the thunder of cannon shot on the order of their own general who already had to look after the Portuguese Jesuits and couldn't even feed them. They just managed to find them a wretched sanctuary in Corsica".(22)

"Clement XIII, elected on the 6th of July 1758, had resisted a long time the pressing requests of several nations demanding the Jesuits' suppression. He was about to yield and had already arranged a consistory for the 3rd of February 1769 at which he was to tell the cardinals about his resolution to comply with the wishes of these Courts; on the night before that particular day, he suddenly felt ill as he was going to bed and cried out: "I am dying...". It is a very dangerous thing to attack the Jesuits!"(23)

A conclave assembled and went on for three months. At last, cardinal Ganganelli put on the mitre and took the name of Clement XIV. The Courts which had banished the Jesuits kept on asking for the total suppression of the Society. But the papacy was in no hurry to abolish this primordial instrument for the carrying out of its politics, and four years passed before Clement XIV, constrained by the firm attitude of his opponents, who had occupied some of the pontifical States, at last signed the Brief of dissolution: "Dominus ac Redemptor" in 1773. Ricci, the Order's general, was even imprisoned at the castle of Saint-Ange where he died a few years later.

"The Jesuits only appeared to submit to this verdict which condemned them... They wrote innumerable pamphlets against the pope and to incite rebellion; they told lies and slanders without number concerning so-called atrocities committed when their properties in Rome were confiscated".(24)

The death of Clement XIV, fourteen months later, was even attributed to them by a section of European opinion.

"The Jesuits, in principle at least, were no more; but Clement XIV knew very well that, by signing their death warrant, he was signing his own as well: "This suppression is done at last", he exclaimed, "and I am not sorry about it.. I would do it again if it was not done already; but this suppression will kill me".(25)

Ganganelli was right; soon, posters started to appear on the palace walls which invariably displayed these five letters: I.S.S.S.V.,and everyone wondered what it meant. Clement understood immediately and boldly declared: "It means "In Settembre, Sara Sede Vacante", (In September, the

---

(22) Pierre Doninique, op.cit., p.209.

(23) Baron de Ponnat, "Histoire des variations et des contradictions de l'Eglise romaine", p.215. til.

(24) J. Huber, op.cit., p.365.

(25) Caraccioli: "Vie du Pape Clement XIV" (Desant, Paris 1776, p.313).

See will be vacant', (that the Pope will be dead)".(26)

Here is another testimony: "Pope Ganganelli did not survive long after the Jesuits' suppression", said Scipion de Ricci. "The account of his illness and death, sent to the Court of Madrid by the Minister for Spain in Rome, proved that he had been poisoned; as far as we know, no inquiry was held concerning this event by the cardinals, nor the new pontiff. The perpetrator of that abominable deed was then able to escape the judgement of the world, but he will not be able to escape God's justice!"(27) "We can positively affirm that, on the 22nd of September 1774, Pope Clement XIV died by poisoning".(28)

Meanwhile, the empress of Austria, Marie-Therese, had also banished the Jesuits from all her States. Only Frederik of Prussia and Catherine II, empress of Russia, welcomed them in their countries as educators. But, in Prussia, they only managed to stay for ten years, until 1786. Russia was favourable to them longer but, there also, and for the same reason, they eventually aroused the animosity of the government.

"... The suppression of the schism and the rallying of Russia to the pope attracted them like a lamp attracts a moth. They launched an active propaganda programme in the army and aristocracy and fought against the Bible Society created by the Czar. They won several successes and converted prince Galitzine, nephew of the Minister for Worship. So the Czar intervened and we have the Ukase of the 20th of December 1815".(29)

No need to say that the grounds for this Ukase, which banished the Jesuits from Saint-Petersburg and Moscow, were the same as in all the other countries. "We came to realise that they did not fulfill the duties expected of them... Instead of living as peaceful inhabitants in a foreign country, they disturbed the Greek religion which has been since ancient times, the predominant religion in our empire and on which rests the peace and happiness of the nations under our sceptre. They abused the confidence they obtained and turned the youth entrusted to them and inconsistent women away from our worship... We are not surprised that this religious Order was expelled from every country and that their actions were not tolerated anywhere".(29)

In 1820 at last, general measures were taken to drive them out of the whole of Russia.

But, because of political events favouring it, they had set foot again in western Europe when their Order was solemnly reestablished by Pope Pius VII in 1814.

---

(26) Baron de Ponnat, op.cit., p.223.

(27) Potter: "Vie de Scipion de Ricci", (Brussels 1825), I, p. 18).

(28) Baron de Ponnat: "Histoire des variations et contradictions de l'Eglise romaine" (Charpentier, Paris 1882, II, p.224). (29) Pierre Dominique, op.cit., p.220.

The political significance of this decision is clearly expressed by M. Daniel-Rops, a great friend of the Jesuits. He wrote, concerning the "reappearance of the sons of Loyola": "It was impossible not to see in it an obvious act of counter-revolution".(30)

---

(30) Daniel-Rops, of the French Academy: "Le retablissement de la Compagnie de Jesus" (Etudes, September 1959).

Section IV

Chapter 4

Rebirth of the Society of Jesus during the 19th century

We mentioned that, when Clement XIV was constrained to suppress the Jesuit Order, he apparently said: "I have cut off my right hand".

The phrase seems plausible enough. The Holy See must certainly have found it hard to part with its most important instrument in the domination of the world. The Order's disgrace, a political measure imposed by circumstances, was gradually attenuated by the successors of Clement XIV: Pius VI and Pius VII; and if the official eclipse of the Jesuits lasted forty years, it was because of the upheavals in Europe resulting from the French Revolution. In any case, that eclipse was never total.

"Most of the Jesuits had stayed in Austria, France, Spain, Italy, mingling with the clergy. They met with each other or gathered in large numbers as much as possible. In 1794, Jean de Tournely founded the Society of the Sacred Heart in Belgium as a teaching body. Many Jesuits joined it. Three years later, the Tyrolean Paccanari, who thought he was another Ignatius, founded the Society of the Brothers of Faith. In 1799, the two Societies merged with Father Clariviere as the head; he was the only surviving French Jesuit. In 1803, they joined the Russian Jesuits. Something coherent was coming back to life again, but the masses, and even most of the politicians, did not recognise it at first".(31)

The French Revolution, and then the Empire, gave the Company of Jesus an unexpected credibility again; it was a defensive reaction against new ideas springing up in the ancient monarchies.

Napoleon the First described the Society as "very dangerous; she will never be allowed in the Empire". But, when the Holy-Alliance triumphed, the new "monarchs" did not disdain the help of these absolutists in bringing back the people to a strict obedience.

(31) Pierre Dominique, op.cit., p.219—Here is, according to M. Daniel-Rops, the strange death of Paccacaci, founder of the Brothers of Faith: "He was brought before the Holy See, imprisoned at the castle of Saint-Ange and finally was "assassinated". (Etudes, September 1959).

But times had changed. All the skill of the good Fathers could only delay and not stop the propagation of liberal ideas and their efforts were more harmful than useful. In France, the Restoration experienced it in a bitter way. Louis XVIII, an unbeliever and clever politician, tried to contain the rise of "ultras" as much as he could. But under Charles X, narrow-minded and very devout, the Jesuits had it easy. The law which expelled them in 1764 was still being enforced. No matter. They enlivened the famous "Congregation", first kind of Opus Dei. This pious brotherhood, composed of ecclesiastics and laymen, was found everywhere, pretending to "purge" the army, the magistracy, the administration, the teaching profession; it held "missions" all over the country, planting commemorative crosses wherever it went; many of these are still there today; it stirred up the believers to fight the infidels and made itself so hateful that even the very catholic and very legitimist Montlosier exclaimed:

"Our missionaries have started fires everywhere. If something has to be sent to us, we would rather have Marseille's plague than more missionaries".

In 1828, Charles X withdrew the Order's right to teach, but it was too late. The dynasty collapsed in 1830.

Hated and covered with shame, the sons of Loyola nevertheless stayed in France, but disguised, as the Order was still officially abolished. Louis-Philippe and Napoleon III tolerated them. The Republic scattered them in 1880 only, under the administration of Jules Ferry. The closing of their establishments was effective only in 1901, under the law of separation.

During the 19th century, the Company's history in America and half of Europe was equally full of ups and downs as in the past, while fighting the new ideas.

"Wherever liberal-minded people gained victories, the Jesuits were expelled. On the other hand, when the other side triumphed, they reestablished themselves to defend the throne and the altar. So, they were banished from Portugal in 1S34, Spain in 1820, 1835 and 1868, from Switzerland in 1848, Germany in 1872 and France in 1880 and 1901.

"In Italy, from 1859 on, all their colleges and establishments were gradually taken from them, so much so that they were forced to stop all the activities prescribed in their laws. The same thing happened in the republics of Latin America. The Order was suppressed in Guatemala in 1872, Mexico in 1873, Brazil in 1874, Equador and Colombia in 1875 and Costa-Rica in 1884.

"The only countries where the Jesuits lived in peace were the States where Protestantism was in the majority: England, Sweden, Denmark, the United States of America. It may seem surprising at first glance, but the explanation lies in the fact that, in these countries, the Fathers were never able to exercise a polticial influence. Without any doubt, they accepted the fact more by necessity than inclination. Otherwise, they would have taken every opportunity to influence legislation and administration, in a direct manner by manoeuvering the ruling classes, or indirectly by constantly stirring up the Catholic masses".(32)

To be truthful, this immunity of the Protestant countries towards Jesuitic ventures was far from complete.

"In the United States", wrote M. Fulop-Miller, "the Company has deployed a systematic and fruitful activity for a long time, as she is not hindered by any laws... "I am not happy about the rebirth of the Jesuits", wrote the former president of the John Adams Union to his successor Thomas Jefferson, in 1816. "Swarms of them will present themselves under more disguises ever taken by even a chief of the Bohemians, as printers, writers, publishers, school teachers, etc. If ever an association of people deserved eternal damnation, on this earth and in hell, it is this Society of Loyola. Yet, with our system of religious liberty, we can but offer them a refuge..." And Jefferson answered his predecessor: "Like you, I object to the Jesuits' reestablishment which makes light give way to darkness".(33)

The fears so expressed were to be proved right, one century later, as we shall see.

---

(32) H. Boehmer, op.cit., p.285.

(33) Rene Fulop-Miller, op.cit., pp. 149-150.

Chapter 5

The Second Empire and the Falloux Law—The War of 1870

In the previous chapter, we mentioned the wide tolerance enjoyed by the Society of Jesus in France, under Napoleon III, even though it was officially prohibited. In any case, it could not be otherwise as that regime owed its existence—largely at least—to the Roman Church whose support never failed, as long as the regime lasted. But it was to be very costly for France.

The readers of the "Progres du Pas-de-Calais", a publication for which the future emperor wrote several articles in 1843 and 1844, could not then suspect him of leniency towards "ultramontanism", judging from the following:

"The clergy demands, under the cover of freedom of teaching, the right to instruct youth. The State, on the other hand, also demands the right to direct public instruction for her own interests. This struggle is the result of divergent opinions, ideas and feelings between government and Church. Both want to influence the new generations coming up in opposite directions and for their own benefit. We do not believe, as one well-known orator does, that all ties between the clergy and civil authority must be broken in order to stop this diversion. Unfortunately, France's ministers of religion are generally opposed to democratic interests; to allow them to build schools without control is to encourage them to teach the people the hatred of revolution and liberty".

And again: "The clergy will stop being ultramontane as soon as one compells them to be brought up, as formerly in an up-to-date manner and to mingle with the people gaining their education from the same sources as the general public."

Referring to the way in which German priests were trained, the author clarifies his thoughts in the following manner: "Instead of being shut away from the rest of the world, from childhood, and so be instilled in the seminaries with hatred for the society in which they must live, they would learn early to be citizens before being priests".(34)

This did not encourage political clericalism for the future sovereign, then a "Carbonari". But the ambition to sit on the throne soon made him more docile towards Rome. Did not Rome herself help him climb the first step?

"Having been made president of the Republic on the 10th of December 1848, Louis Napoleon Bonaparte gathers several ministers around himself, one of which is M. de Falloux. Who is this M. de Falloux? A tool of the Jesuits... On the 4th of January 1849, he institutes a commission whose job is to "prepare a big legislative reform of primary and secondary education"... In the course of the discussion, M. Cousin takes the liberty to remark that maybe the Church is wrong to tie her destiny to the Jesuits. Monseigneur Dupanloup defends energetically the Society... A law on teaching is being prepared which would "make amends" to the Jesuits. In the past, the State and the University had been protected against the Jesuits' invasions; we were wrong and unjust; we demanded that the government applied its laws against these agents from a foreign government and we ask their forgiveness for it. They are good citizens who were slandered and misjudged; what can we do to show them the respect and esteem which are due to them?

"Put in their hands the teaching of the young generations".

"This in fact is the aim of the law of the 15th of March 1850. This law appoints a superior council for Public Instruction in which the clergy dominates, (first art.); it makes the clergy masters of the schools, (art.44); it gives religious associations the right to create free schools, without having to explain about the non-authorised congregations (Jesuits), (art. 17,2); it said that the letters of obedience would be their diplomas, (art.49); M. Barthelemy Saint-Hilaire tries in vain to demonstrate that the aim of the authors of that project is to give the monopoly to the clergy, and that this law would be fatal to the University... Victor Hugo exclaims, also vainly: "This law is a monopoly in the hands of those who try to make teaching come out of the sacristy and the government out of the confessional".(35)

But the Assembly ignores these protestations. It prefers listening to M. de Montalembert who exclaims: "We will be swallowed up if we don't stop immediately the current trend of rationalism and demagogy; what's more, it can be stopped only with the help of the Church".

"M. de Montalembert adds these words to make sure the significance of this law is well described: "To the demoralising and anarchical army of teachers, we must oppose the army of the clergy". The law was passed. Never before in France had the Jesuits won a more complete victory.

M. de Montalembert admitted it proudly... He said: "I am defending justice by backing as well as possible the government of the Republic, which has done so much to save order and maintain the union of the French people; it especially rendered more services to the Catholic Church than all the other governments in power during the last two centuries".(36)

---

(34) "Oeuvres de Napoleon III" (Amyot et Plon, Paris 1856, II, pp.31 and 33). (35) Adolphe Michel, op.cit., pp.66 ss.

All this happened more than one hundred years ago, but seems rather familiar today. But let us see how the "Republic", presided over by prince Louis-Napoleon, was acting internationally.

The revolution of 1848 had, amongst other repercussions in Europe, provoked the uprising of the Romans against Pope Pius IX, their temporal sovereign, who had fled to Gaete. The Roman Republic had been proclaimed. Through a scandalous paradox, it was the French Republic, in agreement with the Austrians and the king of Naples, who put back on the throne the undesirable sovereign.

"A French regiment besieged Rome, took it on the 2nd of June 1849 and restored pontifical power; it managed to maintain itself with the help of a French division of occupation which left Rome only after the first disasters in the Franco-German war of 1870".(37)

This beginning was very promising.

"The coup of the 2nd of December 1851 brought about the proclamation of the Empire. Louis-Napoleon, President of the Republic, had favoured the Jesuits in every way. Now emperor, he refused nothing to his accomplices and allies. The clergy poured out its blessings and "Te Deum" profusely on the massacres and proscriptions of the 2nd of December. The one responsible for this abominable ambush was looked upon as a providential saviour: "The archbishop of Paris, Monseigneur Sibour, who saw the massacres on the boulevard, exclaims:

"The man who was prepared by God has come; the finger of God was never more visible than in the events which produced these great results".

The bishop of Saint-Flour said from his pulpit: "God pointed out Louis-Napoleon; He already had elected him to be emperor. Yes, my dear brethren, God consecrated him beforehand through the blessing of His pontiffs and priests; He acclaimed him Himself; can we not recognise God's elect?"

The bishop of Nevers falsely saluted "Providence's visible instrument". "These pitiable adulations, which could be multiplied still further, deserved a reward. This reward was a complete freedom given to the Jesuits as long as the Empire lasted. The Society of Jesus was literally master of France for eighteen years... she enriched herself, multiplied her establishments and spread her influence. Her action was felt in all the important events of that time, especially in the expedition to Mexico and the declaration of war in

---

(36) Adolphe Michel, op.cit. pp.55,66.

(37) Larousse, VII, p.371.

187O".(38)

"The Empire means peace", declared the new sovereign. But, barely two years after he acceeded to the throne, the first of all those wars which succeeded each other throughout his reign started; history could regard the motives which brought about these wars as unconnected if we didn't see what united them: the defence of the Roman Church's interests. The Crimean war, the first of these mad enterprises which weakened us and was not nationally profitable, is a characteristic example.

It was not someone anticlerical, but the Abbe Brugerette, who wrote: "One must read the speeches the famous Theatine (Father Ventura) gave in the chapel of Les Tuileries during Lent in 1857. He presented the Empire's restorationas God's work... and praised Napoleon III for having defended the religion in Crimea and made the great days of the Crusades shine a second time in the East... The Crimean war was regarded as a compliment to the Roman expedition... It was praised by the whole clergy, full of admiration for the religious fervour of the troops besieging Sebastapol. Saint-Beuve movingly narrated how Napoleon III had sent an image of the Virgin to the French fleet".(39)

What was this expedition which aroused the enthusiasm of the clergy. M. Paul Leon, member of the Institute, explains: "A quarrel between monks revives the question of the East: it was born out of rivalries between the Latin and Orthodox Churches regarding the protection of the Holy places (in Palestine). Who would watch over Bethlehem's churches, hold the keys, direct the work? How is it possible that such small matters could set two great empires against each other?... But, behind the Latin monks is France's Catholic party, provided with ancient privileges and supporter of the new regime; behind the growing demands of the Orthodox, who had grown in numbers, is the Russian influence".(40)

The Czar invokes the protection of the Orthodox Church which he has to assure and, to make it effective, asks that his fleet should use the Dardanelles passage; England, which is backed by France, refuses, and the war breaks out.

"France and England can reach the Czar only through the Black Sea and the Turkish alliance... From now on, the war of Russia becomes the Crimean war and is entirely centered on the siege of Sebastopol, a costly episode without issue. Bloody battles, deadly epidemics and inhuman sufferings cost France one hundred thousand dead".(41)

We must point out that these one hundred thousand dead were Christ's soldiers and glorious "martyrs of the faith", according to Monseigneur Sibour, Archbishop of Paris, who declared at that time: "The Crimean war, between France and Russia, is not a political war, but a holy war; it is not a State fighting another State, people fighting other people, but singularly a war of religion, a Crusade..."(42)

---

(38) Adolphe Michel, op.cit., pp.71-72.

(39) Abbe J. Brugerette: "Le Pretre francais et la societe contemporaine" (Lethielleux, Paris 1933, I, pp.168 and 180).

(40) and (41) Paul Leon, of the Institute, "La guerre pour la Paix", (Ed. Fayard, Paris 1950 pp.321-323).

The admission is not ambiguous. Anyway, haven't we heard the same, not long ago, during the German occupation, expounded in identical terms by the prelates of His Holiness Pius XII and by Pierre Laval himself, president of the Council of Vichy?

In 1863, it is the expedition to Mexico. What is it about? To transform a lay-republic into an empire and offer it to Maximilien, archduke of Austria. Austria is the papacy's number one pillar. The aim is also to erect a barrier which would contain the influence of the Protestant United States over the States of South America, strongholds of the Roman Church.

M. Albert Bayet wrote with sagacity: "The war's aim is to establish a Catholic empire in Mexico and curtail the peoples' right to self rule; as during the Syrian campaign and the two Chinese campaigns, it tends especially to serve catholic interests".(43)

We know how, in 1867, after the French army had re-embarked, Maximilien, the unfortunate champion of the Holy See, was made prisoner when Queretaro surrendered and was shot dead, making way for a republic of which the victor Juarez was president.

Nevertheless, the time was getting nearer when France was to pay, once again, much more dearly for the political support the Vatican assured the imperial throne. While the French army was spilling its blood in the four corners of the world, and getting weaker while defending interests which were not hers, Prussia, under the heavy hand of the future "iron chancellor", was busy expanding its military might in order to unite the German states in a single block." Austria was the first victim of its will and power. In agreement with Prussia which was to seize the Danish duchess of Schleswig and Holstein, Austria was cheated by her accomplice. The war which followed was soon won by Prussia at Sadowa on the 3rd of July 1866. It was a terrible blow for the ancient Hapsburg monarchy which was declining; the blow was just as hard for the Vatican, as Austria had been for so long its most faithful stronghold within the germanic lands. From novw on, Protestant Prussia will exercise her hegemony over them. Unless... the Roman Church finds a "secular arm" capable of stopping completely the expansion of the "heretic" power.

But who can play this part in Europe apart from the French Empire? Napoleon III, "the man sent by Providence", will have the honour of avenging Sadowa. The French army is not ready. "The artillery is out of date. Our cannons are still loaded through the muzzle", wrote Rothan, French minister at Francfort who can see disaster coming. "Prussia knows of her superiority and our lack of preparation", he adds with many other observers. The war instigators are not concerned. The candidature of a Hohenzollern prince for the vacant Spanish throne is the excuse for that conflict; also, Bismark wants it. When he faked the dispatch of Ems, the advocates of war had the game in their hands and they aroused public opinion.

---

(42) Quoted by Monseigneur Journet: "Exigences chretiennes en politique"(Ed. L.V.F. Paris 1945, p.274).

(43) Albert Bayet: "Histoire de France" (Ed. du Sagittaire, Paris 1938, p.282).

France herself declared war. this "war of 1870 which was proved by history to be the work of the Jesuits", as M. Gaston Bally wrote.

The composition of the government which sent France to disaster is described as follows by the eminent catholic historian, Adrien Dansette: "Napoleon III started by sacrificing Victor Duruy, then resolved to appoint to his government men from the people's party (January 1870). The new ministers were nearly all sincere catholics, or ecclesiastics believing in social conservatism".(44)

It is easy to understand, now, what was inexplicable: the haste of this government to extract a "casus belli" from this faked dispatch, even before receiving a confirmation.

"The consequences were: the collapse of the Empire and the counter-coup for the papal throne which followed... The imperial edifice and the papal edifice, crowned by the Jesuits, fell in the same mud, in spite of the Immaculate Conception and papal infallibility; but, alas! it was over the ashes of France".(45)

---

(44) Adrien Dansette: "Histoire religieuse de la France contemporaine" (Ed. Flammarion, Paris 1948, I, p.432)

(45) Gaston Bally, op.cit., pp.100, 101.

Section IV

Chapter 6

The Jesuits in Rome—the Syllabus

One can read, in a book from the Abbe Brugerette, the following passage in the chapter entitled "The clergy under the Second Empire":

"Particular devotions, old or new, were honoured more and more at a time when romanticism still exalted the senses to the detriment of austere reason. The worship of saints and their relics, restrained for so long by the cold breath of rationalism, had taken a new vigour. The worship of the holy Virgin, thanks to apparitions at La Salette and Lourdes, acquired an extraordinary popularity. Pilgrimages to these places privileged by miracles multiplied.

"The French Episcopate... favoured new devotions. It warmly and thankfully welcomed, in 1854, the encyclical letter of Pius IX proclaiming the dogma of the Immaculate Conception... It was also the episcopate, brought together in Paris, in 1856, for the baptism of the imperial Prince, who asked Pius IX that the feast of the Sacred-Heart... should be made into a solemn feast of the universal Church".(46)

These few lines clearly show the preponderant influence exercsied by the Jesuits under the Second Empire, in France as much as over the Holy See, As we saw earlier on, they were and remain the great propagators of these "particular devotions, old or new", this "perceptible" and almost sensual piety made the masses excessively scrupulous in religious matters, especially women. As far as that is concerned, we must admit that they were realists. The time had gone—already under Napoleon III—when the public as a whole, the learned and the ignorant, took a deep interest in theological questions. Intellectually, Catholicism had ended its career.

It is then more by necessity than because of their formation that the sons of Loyola endeavoured, during the 19th century and today, to awaken superstitious religiosity, especially amongst women who make up most of the flock; this was to counter-balance "rationalism", For the secondary education of girls, the Order promoted the founding of several congregations of women. "The most famous and active was the "Congregation des Dames du Sacre-Coeur"; in 1830, it comprised 105 houses with 4,700 teachers and its influence over the higher classes was very important".(47)

---

(46) Abbe J. Brugerette: "Le pretre francais et la societe contemporaine", (Ed. Lethielleux Paris 1933, I, pp. 183-184).

As far as the worship of Mary is concerned, which was always so dear to the Jesuits, it was greatly helped, under the Second Empire, by the very opportune "apparitions" of the Virgin to a little shepherdess of Lourdes; this happened two years after Pius IX promulgated the dogma of the Immaculate Conception (1854), at the instigation of the Company of Jesus. The main acts of this pontificate were all victories for the Jesuits whose all-powerful influence over the Roman Curia affirmed itself more and more. In 1864, Pius IX published the encyclical letter "Quanta Cura", accompanied by the "Syllabus" which anathematized the best political principles of the contemporary societies.

"Anathema on all that is dear to modern France! Modern France wants the independance of the state; the 'Syllabus' teaches that the ecclesiastical power must exercise its "authority without the assent and permission of the civil power. Modern France wants the liberty of conscience and liberty of worship; the'Syllabus' teaches that the Roman Church has the right to use force and reinstate the Inquisition. Modern France acknowledges the existence of several types of worship; the 'Syllabus' declares that the Catholic religion must be considered as the only religion of the state and all others are excluded. Modern France proclaims that the people are sovereign; the 'Syllabus' condemns universal suffrage. Modern France professes that all French people are equal before the law; the 'Syllabus' affirms that ecclesiastics are exempt from ordinary civil and criminal tribunals."

"These are the doctrines taught by the Jesuits in their colleges. They are at the front of the army of counter-revolution... Their mission consists of bringing up the youth put in their care with a hatred for the principles on which French society rests, principles laid down by former generations at a great cost. By their teaching, they try to divide France into two and call into question all that has been done since 1789. We want harmony, they want strife; we want peace, they want war; we want France to be free, they want her enslaved; they are a combatant society receiving its orders from outside; they are fighting us, let us defend ourselves; they threaten us, let us disarm them".(48)

(47) H. Boehmer, op.cit., p.290.

(48) Adolphe Michel: "Les Jesuites" (Sandoz et Fischbacher, Paris 1879, pp.77 ss)

The Holy See's everlasting pretension to dominate civil society was then reaffirmed, as Renan had already said in 1848, in an article entiled "Clerical liberalism": "It demonstrated that the people's sovereignty, the liberty of conscience and all modern liberties were condemned by the Church. It presented the Inquisition as "the logical consequence of the whole orthodox system", as "the summary of the Church's spirit". It added: "When she will be able to, the Church will bring back the Inquisition; if she doesn't do it, it is because she cannot do it".(49)

The power of the Jesuits over the Vatican was shown even more strongly, a few years after the 'Syllabus', when the dogma of Pontifical Infallibility was promulgated; the Abbe Brugerette wrote that this dogma was to "throw over the tragic years of 1870-1871, which put France into mourning, the brightness of a great Christian hope".

The same author added: "One can say that, during the first half of the year 1870, the Church of France was not in France anymore; she was in Rome, passionately busy with the General Council which Pius IX had just called at the Vatican..." "According to Monseigneur Pie, this French clergy had completely "thrown off its own liveries, maxims and French or Gallic liberties". This bishop of Poitiers added that it was done as a sacrifice to the principle of authority, sound doctrine and common right; it placed all that under the feet of the sovereign pontiff, made a throne of it for him and sounded the trumpet, saying: "The pope is our king; not only is his will our command, but his wishes are our rules".(49a)

The resignation of the whole of a "national" clergy into the hands of the Roman Curia is clear enough and, because of it, the subjection of the French Catholics to the will of a foreign despot who, under the cover of dogma or morals, was going to impose on them his political directions without any opposition. The liberal Catholics protested in vain against the exorbitant pretention of the Holy See to dictate its laws in the name of the Holy Spirit. The Abbe Brugerette informs us, their head, M. de Montalembert, published in the Gazette de France an article in which he vehemently protested against those who "sacrifice justice and truth, reason and history, to the idol they set up at the Vatican".(50)

Several notorious bishops such as Fathers Hyacinthe Loyson and Gratry took the same line; the latter not without spirit; Father Gratry said: "He published successively his four Letters to Monseigneur Deschamps. In them, he did not merely discuss historical events, such as the condemnation of Pope Honorius, who, according to him, opposed the proclamation of pontifical infallibility; but, in a sharp and bitter manner, he denounced also the contempt of authoritative catholics for the truth, and scientific integrity. One of them, an ecclesiastical candidate for the Doctorate of (49), (49a) and (50) Abbe J. Brugerette, op.cit., pp.221, 223.

Theology, even dared to justify false decretals before the Faculty of Paris, declaring that "it was not an odious fraud". And Gratry added: "Even today it is being stated that Galileo's condemnation was opportune". "You, men of little faith, with miserable hearts and sordid souls! Your tricks are scandalous. On the day when the great science of nature was raised above the world, you condemned it."

"Do not be surprised if men, before forgiving you, expect from you confession, penance, deep contrition and amends for your faults".(51) No need to say that the Jesuits, inspiring agents of Pius IX and all-powerful over the Council, were not anxious about confession, penance, contrition or reparation, at a time when they almost reached the goal they had set themselves at the Council of Trent, in the middle of the 16th century. At that time Lainez already supported the idea of papal infallibility.

It only meant consecrating as a dogma a pretention nearly as old as the papacy itself. No other Council until then had been willing to ratify it, but the time seemed just right, then; besides, the patient work of the Jesuits had prepared the national clergy for the surrender of their last liberties; the imminent collapse of the popes' temporal power—it happened before the Council voted—called for a reinforcement of his spiritual authority, according to the ultramontanes. The argument prevailed and the"dictatus papae" of Gregory VII, principles of the mediaeval theocracy, triumphed right in the middle of the 19th century.

What the new dogma especially consecrated was the omnipotence of the Company of Jesus in the Roman Church.

"Under the cover of the Jesuits, who have established themselves at the Vatican since the secular powers have rejected them from all free countries as an association of malefactors, the papacy has aspired to new ambitions. These evil men, who have made the Gospel into a Spectacle of tears and blood and remain the worst enemies of democracy and freedom of thought, dominate the Roman Curia; all their efforts concentrate on maintaining, in the Church, their pernicious preponderance and shameful doctrines."

"Dedicated to the cause of extreme centralisation, irreducible apostles of theocracy, they are the recognised masters of contemporary Catholicism and stamp their seal on its theology, its official piety and its crooked politics".

"True janissaries of the Vatican, they inspire everything, rule everthing, penetrate everwhere, set up "informing" as a system of government, faithful to a casuistry whose profound immorality has been revealed by history and inspired Pascal's immortal pages of sublime mockery. Through the 'Syllabus' of 1864 which they themselves drew up, Pius IX declared war on all free thought and sanctioned, a few years later, the dogma of infallibility which is a real historical anachronism and of which modern science could not care less".(52)

---

(51) Father Gratry, quoted by the Abbe J. Brugerette, op.cit., p.229.

For those who, against all probability, would persist to see a spiteful exaggeration and disparagement in the lines we just quoted, we cannot do better than present the confirmation itself of these facts, from the very orthodox pen of M. Daniel-Rops. This confirmation carries even more weight by the fact that it was published in 1959, under the title "The Reestablishment of the Company of Jesus", in the Jesuits' own publication "Etudes". It is then in a true speech for the defence that we read:

"For many reasons, this reorganisation of the Company of Jesus had a considerable historical importance. The Holy See rediscovered this faithful band, utterly devoted to its cause, and which was to be needed soon after. Many Fathers were to exercise, during that century and until now, a discreet, but deep influence on certain dispositions taken by the Vatican; a kind of proverb was even heard in Rome: "The pope's penholders are Jesuits". Their influence was obvious in the development of the worship of the Sacred-Heart as well as in the proclamation of the dogma of the Immaculate Conception, in the editing of the 'Syllabus' as well as in the definition of 'Infallibility'. The "Civilta Cattolica", founded by the Neapolitan Jesuit Carlo Curci, was supposed to reflect the pope's thought during most of Pius IX's pontificate".(53)

This confession is clear enough. We would only remind the departed spirit of this pious academician that, logically, and judging by all the previous context, it was rather the pope's thought which was reflected in the opinions of the "Civilta Cattolica".

No need to say that the Jesuits, all-powerful in Rome, as much because of their spirit as of their organisation, were going to engage the papacy in international politics more and more, as M. Louis Roguelin wrote: "Since she lost her temporal power, the Church of Rome took advantage of every opportunity to regain all the ground she was constrained to abandon, through a recrudescence of diplomatic activities; as her cleverly concealed scheme is to divide in order to reign, she tried to turn every conflict in her favour."

Boivent, 1927, pp.79 to 81).

(53) Daniel-Rops: "Le Retablissement de la Compagnie de Jesus" (Etudes, September 1959)

According to the plan of Loyola's subjects, the dogma of Papal infallibility greatly favoured this action of the Holy See, whose importance can be measured from the fact that most states have a diplomatic representative accredited to it. Under the cover of dogma and morals, subjects which in principle restrict the infallible word, the pope today disposes of an unlimited authority over the consciences of the faithful. So, during the 20th century, we see the Vatican actively engaged in the interior and exterior politics of countries, and even govern them thanks to Catholic parties. What's more, we will see it support "providential" men such as Mussolini and Hitler who, because of its help, will unleash the worst kind of catastrophes.

Christ's vicar acknowledged profusely the services of this famous society which worked so hard and well in his favour. These "sons of Satan" as some brave ecclesiastics qualified them, are all tarnished, but they can, in return, boast about the august testimonial of complete satisfaction accorded to them by the deceased pope S.S. Pius XII whose confessor, we know, was a German Jesuit.

In this text, published by "La Croix" on the 9th of August 1955, we can read: "The Church does not want auxiliaries of another type than those of this Company... may the sons of Loyola strive to follow the footprints of former ones..."

Today, like yesterday, they are doing just that, to the great evil of the nations.

Chapter 7

The Jesuits in France from 1870 until 1885

The collapse of the Empire should, it seems, have brought about a reaction against the ultramontane spirit in France. But it was not so as Adolphe Michel shows:

"When the throne fell into the mud of Sedan on the 2nd of December, when France was definitely defeated, when the Assembly of 1871 met at Bordeaux, while waiting to come to Versailles, the clerical party was more audacious than ever. In all the disasters befalling the homeland, it spoke as master. Who wouldn't remember the Jesuits' presumptuous manifestations and their insolent threats during these past few years? Like a certain Father Marquigny announcing the civil burial of the principles of '89; or M. de Belcastel, on his own authority, dedicating France to the Sacred-Heart; the Jesuits erecting a church on the hill of Montmartre, in Paris, and so defying the Revolution; the bishops prompting France to declare war on Italy in order to reestablish the temporal power of the pope..."(54)

Gaston Bally explains very well the reason for that apparently paradoxical situation: "During that cataclysm, the Jesuits, as always, quickly went back into their hole, leaving the Republic to get herself out of the muddle as best she could. But when most of the work had been done, when our territory was delivered from the Prussian invasion, the black invasion started again and "pulled the chestnuts out of the fire". The land was just emerging from a kind of nightmare, a terrible dream, and it was just the right time to get hold of the panic-striken masses".(55)

But is it not the same after every war? It is an incontestable fact that the Roman Church has always benefited from the great public disasters; that death, misery and sufferings of every kind incite the masses to search for illusive consolations in pious practices. In that way, the power of those who let loose these disasters is strengthened, if not increased, by the victims themselves. As far as that is concerned, the two world wars had the same consequences as the one of 1870.

---

(54) Adolphe Michel: op.cit., pp.72, 73.

(55) (56) and (57) Gaston Bally, op.cit., pp. 101,107,108,109.

Then, France was conquered; on the other hand, it was a brilliant victory for the Company of Jesus when, in 1873, a law was passed, allowing the building of a basilica of the Sacred-Heart on Montmartre Hill. This church, said to be a "National wish", by a cruel irony no doubt, was going to materialise in stone the triumph of Jesuitism, at the place where it commenced its life.

At first glance, this invocation to the Sacred-Heart of Jesus extolled by the Jesuits may seem, though basely idolatrous, quite innocent.

"To realise the danger", wrote Gaston Bally, "we must look behind the facade, witness the manipulation of souls and see the aim of their various associations: the Brotherhood of "Perpetual Adoration"; the Brotherhood of the "Guard of Honour", the Apostolate of Prayer, the Reparative Communion, etc, etc. The brotherhoods, associates, apostles, missionaries, worshipers, zealots, guards of honour, restorers, mediators and other federates of the Sacred-Heart seem to intend exclusively to, as Mademoiselle Alacoque invited them to, unite their homage to those of the nine choirs of Angels.

So, in reality, it is far from innocent. "The brotherhoods stated their aims many times. They couldn't accuse me of slandering them; I will but quote a few passages from their most clear declarations and gather up their confessions.

"Public opinion was shocked with the remarks of Father Olivier when the victims of the Bazaar of Charity were buried. The monk had seen in the catastrophe only another proof of divine clemency. God was saddened by our "mistakes" and was inviting us, gently, to make amends.

"This seemed monstrous. The building of the Basilica on Montmartre was a result of the same "thought", but this was forgotten".(56)

What was then the terrible sin France had to confess? The aforementioned author answers: "...THE REVOLUTION".

This is the abominable crime we must "expiate".

"And the Basilica of the Sacred-Heart symbolises France's repentance (Sacratissimo cordi Jesu Gallioe poenitens et devoter); it expresses also our firm intention to repair the wrong-doings. It is a monument of expiation and reparation..."(57)

"Save Rome and France in the name of the Sacred-Heart", became the anthem of the Moral Order.

"So we were able to hope against all hopes", wrote the Abbe Brugerette, "and expect from the "pacified heaven" some time or other the great event of the restoration of order and the salvation of the homeland."(58)

It seems though that "heaven", angered with the France of the rights of man, was not "pacified" enough by the erection of the famous basilica, the three candle snuffers, as the "restoration of order", or rather the monarchical restoration, was slow in coming. The same author explains it in the following manner:

"Even though the grandiose manifestations of the Catholic faith, during the years following the war of 1870, may seem impressive, it would be a lack of the sense of observation if French society of that epoch was judged only on the grounds of that exterior piety; we would also be lacking in psychological spirit and be outside the truth. We must wonder then if the religious sentiment was a direct answer, for the whole of that society, to the expression of faith revealed by the imposing pilgrimages organised by the bishops and the earnestness of the masses in the churches...

"Without wanting to attentuate in any way the importance of the religious move in France brought about by the two wars of 1870 and 1914, which also raised such high hopes, we must nevertheless admit that this revival of the faith had not the depth, nor the extent which a true religious renewal would have...

"For, even then, the Church of France was unfortunately comprised of not only thousands of unbelievers and adversaries, but also a very large number of those who were catholics only by name and not conviction. Religious practices were performed, not by conviction, but rather from habit...

"Soon after it was done, France seemed to regret the desperate move which made her send a Catholic majority to the National Assembly, for, five months later, she reversed her position at the complementary elections of the 2nd of July! On that day, the country was to elect 113 deputies. It was a complete defeat for the Catholics and victory for between 80 to 90 Republicans. All the elections following that consultation of universal suffrage had the same character of republican and anticlerical opposition. It would be childish to pretend that they were not the expression of society's sentiments and wishes".(59)

The Abbe Brugerette, speaking about the great pilgrimages organised at that time for the "uplifting of the country", admits that they were the cause of "some mistakes and excesses" which aroused the suspicions of the "Church's adversaries".

"The pilgrimages will be for them enterprises organised by the clergy for the restoration of monarchy in France and pontifical power in Rome. And the attitude taken by the clergy on these two aims will look like justifying this accusation from the irreligious press and will give, on that account, as we shall see later, a mighty impetus to anticlericalism. Without breaking away from its religious habits revived so much during the years after the war, French society will rebel against this "government of priests", as (58) and (59) Abbe Brugerette, op.cit., II, pp.10 to 14.

Gambetta stigmatized it. Deep down, the French people had kept an invincible instinct of resistance against anything which even vaguely resembled the Church's political domination. On the whole, this nation loved religion, but the spectre of "theocracy" revived by the opposition press frightened it. The eldest daughter of the Church did not want to forget that she was also the mother of Revolution".(60)

Yet, the clergy with the Jesuits at their head were making such efforts to persuade the French people to abjure the republican spirit!

"Since the Falloux law was enforced, the Jesuits, expanded freely their colleges where they brought up the children of the ruling middle-classes and they obviously did not teach them a great love for the Republic..."

"As for the "Assumptionists" created in 1845 by the intransigent Father d'Alzon, they wanted to give back to the people the faith it had lost..."(61) But there were many other envious flourishing teaching congregations:

Oratorians, Eudistes, Dominicans of the Third-Order, Marianits, Marists, which Jules Simon called "the second volume" of the Jesuits bound in asses skin and the famous "Brothers of the Christian Schools", better known under the name of Ignorantins, who taught the "good doctrine" to the offsprings of the middle-classes as well as to more than one and a half million children of the ordinary people.

It is not surprising that this situation put the republican regime on the defensive. A law, proposed in 1879 by Jules Ferry, wanted to remove the clergy from the Councils for Public Instruction into which they had been introduced by the laws of 1850 and 1873, and give back to the state's faculties the exclusive right to grade the degrees of the teachers. Article 7 of this law also specified that "no one would be allowed to take part in public or free teaching if he belongs to an unauthorised religious congregation".

"The Jesuits are aimed at before anyone else in that famous article 7. The priests of the deanery of Moret (Seine-et-Marne) will declare then that "they are on the side of all religious communities, including the venerable Fathers of the Company of Jesus". "To strike them", they write, "is to strike ourselves"... The confession is explicit.

The Abbe Brugerette, who wrote that passage, describes the resistance put up by the Catholics against what he calls a "treacherous attack", but he adds:

"The clergy still ignore the immense progress of the laity; it has not understood yet that, because of its opposition to the principles of '89, it has lost all deep influence over the direction of public spirit in France".(62)

Article 7 is rejected by the Senate, but Jules Ferry invokes the existing laws concerning the congregations.

(60) Abbe Brugerette, op.cit., II, pp.164, 165.

(61) Adrien Dansette, op.cit., p.29.

(62) (63) (64) and (65) Abbe Brugerette, op.cit., II, pp.164, 165, 166, 167, 176, 185.

"In consequence, on the 29th of March 1880, the "Journal Officiel" contains two decrees compelling the Jesuits to break up, and all unauthorised congregations of men and women to "obtain recognition and approval for their regulations and legal status within three months..."

Without any delay, a movement of opposition is organised; "The Church, deeply wounded, is aroused", according to M. Debidour. After the 11th of March, Leo XIII and his Nuncio express a grievous protestation...

"Now it is the turn of all the bishops to defend energetically the religious Orders".(63)

The sons of Loyola were nevertheless expelled. But let us listen to what the Abbe Brugerette has to say on that subject: "In spite of all, the Jesuits, experts at re-entering through the windows when they have been thrown out through the door, had already been successful in putting their colleges into the control of laymen or secular ecclesiastics. Even though not residing in these colleges, they could be seen coming in at certain times of the day to perform duties of direction and supervision".(64)

But the deceit was discovered and the Jesuits' colleges finally closed.

In all, the decrees of 1879 were enforced on 32 congregations who refused to submit to the legal dispositions. In many places, the expulsion was carried out by the military arm "manu militari" against the opposition of the faithful aroused by the Fathers. These not only refused to ask for the legal authorisation, but also refused to sign a declaration disclaiming all idea of opposition to the republican regime; this would have been enough for M. de Freycinet, then president of the Council and favouring them, to still "tolerate" them. When the Orders decided to sign this formal declaration of loyalty, the manoeuvre had been made void and M. de Freycinet had to resign because he had tried to negotiate this accord against the wishes of parliament and his colleagues of the Cabinet.

The Abbe Brugerette comments on the declaration the religious Orders had to sign and found so repugnant:

"This declaration of respect for the institutions France gave herself freely... may seem very harmless and inoffensive, today, when compared with the solemn oath of loyalty demanded from the German bishops by the Concordat of the 20th of July 1933 between the Holy See and the Reich.

"Article 16.—"Before taking possession of their diocese, the bishops will take an oath of loyalty before the president of the Reich or a competent Reichsstatthalter in the following terms:

"Before God and on the Holy Scriptures, I swear and promise, as a bishop should, loyalty to the German Reich and the State. I swear and promise to respect and make my clergy respect the government established according to the constitutional laws. As is my duty, I will work for the good and in the interests of the German State; in the exercise of the holy ministry entrusted to me, I will try to stop everything which would be detrimental to it". (Concordat between the Holy See and the German Reich)(65).

The difference is certainly great between a mere promise of non-opposition to France's regime and this solemn pledge to uphold the nazi state. Just as great as the difference between the two regimes, one democratic and liberal, so hated by the Roman Church, the other totalitarian and brutally intolerent, wanted and set up by the united efforts of Franz von Papen, the pope's secret chamberlain, and Monseigneur Pacelli, nuncio in Berlin and future Pius XII.

It is again the Abbe Brugerette who, after having declared that the governnment's aim had been reached as far as the Company of Jesus was concerned, admits also:

"We could not speak of the destruction of the institution of congregations. The women's congregations had not been touched and the authorised ones, "as dangerous as the others for the lay spirit", were still standing. We knew also that nearly all the men's congregations, expelled from their houses because of the decrees of 1880, had quietly gone back to their monasteries".(66)

But this lull was short-lived. The intention of the state to collect taxes and rights of succession on the wealth of the ecclesiastical communities provoked a general outcry amongst them, as they had no intention to submit to the common law. "The organisation of resistance was the work of a committee directed by the PP. Bailly, "Assumptionist", Stanislas, a Capuchin, and Le Dore, superior of the Eudists... Father Bailly was reviving the great zeal of the clergy by writing: "Like Saint Laurent, the monks and nuns must go back to the rack or thumb-screws rather than surrender".(67)

As by accident, the main revivalist of that "great zeal", Bailly, was an "Assumptionist", or, in fact, a camouflaged Jesuit. As for the rack and the thumb-screws, we could have reminded the good Father that these instruments of torture are in the tradition of the Holy-See and not the one of the republican state.

Finally, the congregations paid—about half of what they owed—and the aforementioned Abbe admits that "the prosperity of their work was not impaired", as we can well imagine.

We cannot go into details concerning the laws of 1880 and 1886 which tended to assure the confessional neutrality of the state schools, this "secularisation"(67a) which is natural to all tolerant minds, but is rejected by the Roman Church as an abominable attempt at forcing consciences, something she has always claimed for herself. We could expect her to fight for this so-called right as violently as for her financial privileges.

---

(66) and (67) Abbe Brugerette, op.cit., pp. 185,196,191.

(67a) See Jan Cotereau: "Anthologie des grands textes laiques" (Fischbacher, Paris)

In 1883, the Roman congregation of the Index, inspired by Jesuitism, enters the fight by the condemnation of certain school books on moral and civic teaching. Of course, the matter is grave: one of the authors, Paul Bert, dared to write that even the idea of miracles "must vanish before the critical mind!" So, more than fifty bishops promulgate the decree of the Index, with fulminating comments, and one of them, Monseigneur Isoard, declares in his pastoral letter of the 27th of February 1883 that the teachers, the parents and the children who refuse to destroy these books will be barred from the sacraments.(67b)

The laws of 1886, 1901 and 1904, declaring that no teaching post could be held by members of religious congregations, also started a flood of protestations from the Vatican and the "French" clergy. But, in fact, the teaching monks and nuns only had to "secularise" themselves. The only positive result of these legal dispositions was that the professors of the schools "so-called free" had from now on to produce adequate pedagogic qualifications, a good thing when we know that, before the last war, the catholic primary schools in France numbered 11, 655 with 824,595 pupils As for the "free" colleges, and especially the Jesuits', if their number is being reduced it is because of several factors which have nothing to do with the legal wrangles. The superiority of the university's teaching, acknowledged by the majority of parents, and, more recently, its being without change, are the main causes for its growing popularity. Besides, the Society of Jesus has voluntarily reduced the number of its schools.

(67b) See Jean Cornec: "Laicite" (Sudel, Paris).

Section IV

Chapter 8

The Jesuits and General Boulanger
The Jesuits and the Dreyfus Affair

The hostility of which the devout party pretended to be the victim, at the end of the 19th century, from the Republican state, would not have lacked justification, even though this hostility, or more accurately mistrust, had been even more positive. In fact, the clerical opposition to the regime which France gave herself freely showed itself at every opportunity, according to the Abbe Brugerette. In 1873, the attempt to restore monarchy with the Count of Chambord failed, even though strongly supported by the clergy, because the Pretender stubbornly refused to adopt the tricoloured flag, to him the emblem of Revolution.

"Such as it is, Catholicism seems bound to politics, or to a certain kind of politics... Loyalty to the Monarchy was transmitted from generation to generation in the old noble families as well as in the middle-classes and the common people, in the Catholic regions of the West and South. Their nostalgia of an ancient and idealised Regime, pictured in an epic Middle Age was coupled with the wishes of fervent Catholics whose main preoccupation was the salvation of the religion; they rallied, behind Veuillot, with the legitimate and devout royal family of Chambord, considered to be the form of government most favourable to the Church. Out of the union of these political and religious forces was born, in the strained situation after the war, a kind of reactionary mysticism, illustrated perfectly by Monseigneur Pie, bishop of Poitiers, and its best incarnation in the ecclesiastical world: "France, who awaits another chief and calls for a master..., will again receive from God "the sceptre of the Universe which fell from her hands for a while", on the day when she will have learned anew how to go down on her knees".(68)

This picture, described by a Catholic historian, is significant. It helps to understand the moves which followed, a few years later, the unsuccessful restoration attempt of 1873.

---

(68) Adrien Dansette, op.cit., II, pp.37, 38.

The same Catholic historian describes in the following manner the political attitude of the clergy at that time:

"At election time, the presbyteries become centers for the reactionary candiates; the priests and officiating ministers make home-calls for the electoral propaganda, slander the Republic and its new laws on teaching they declare that those who vote for the free-thinkers, the present government or freemasons described as "bandits", "riffraffs" and "thieves", are guilty of mortal sin. One declares that an adulterous woman will be forgiven more easily than those who send their children to lay schools, another one: that it is better to strangle a child than give support to the regime, a third one: that he will refuse the last sacraments to those who vote for the regime's partisans. The threats are carried out: republican and anticlerical tradesmen are boycotted; destitute people are refused any help and workmen are dismissed".(69)

These excesses from a clergy affected more and more by Jesuitic ultramontanism are even less acceptable from the fact that they emanate "from ecclesiastics paid by the government, as the Concordat is still enforced".

Also, the majority of public opinion is not happy at all with this pressure on the consciences, as the aforementioned author writes:

"As we have seen, the French people, as a whole, is indifferent to religious matters, and we cannot mistake the hereditary observance of religious practices for a real faith... "The fact is that the political map of France is identical to her religious map... we can say that in the regions where faith is strong, the French people vote for Catholic candidates elsewhere, they consciously elect anticlerical deputies and senators... They do not want clericalism, which is ecclesiastical authority in the matter of politics and commonly called "the government of priests".

"For a large number of Catholics, the fact that the priest, this troublesome man, interferes through the sermon's instructions and the confessional's prescriptions in the behaviour of the faithful, checking thoughts, sentiments, acts, food and drink, and even the intimacies of married life, is enough; they intend, at least, to limit his empire by preserving their independence as citizens".(70)

We would like to see this spirit of independence as lively today.

But, even though the opinion of that "large number of Catholics" was such, the ultramontanes would not disarm and pursue, at every opportunity, the fight against the hated regime. They thought for a white that they had found the "providential man" in the person of General Boulanger, minister for War in 1886, who, having organised his personal propaganda extremely well, looked like being a future dictator.

---

(69) and (70) Adrien Dansette, op.cit., II, pp.46, 47, 48.

"A tacit agreement", wrote M. Adrien Dansette, "is established between the general and the Catholics, and becomes clear during the summer... He has also concluded a secret agreement with royalist members of parliament such as Baron de Mackau and Count de Mun, faithful defenders of the Church at the Assembly...

'The phlegmatic minister for the Interior, Constans, threatens to arrest him and, on the 1st of April, the dictator candidate escapes to Brussels, with his mistress.

"From now on, "Boulangism" declines rapidly. France has not been taken: she recovers... "Boulangism" is crushed at the polls on the 22nd of September and 6th of October 1889..."(71)

We can read, from the pen of the same historian, what the attitude of the pope of that time was regarding this adventurer; he was Leo XIII who, in 1878, had succeeded Pius IX, the pope of the Syllabus, and who pretended to advise the faithful of France to join the republican regime:

"In August (1889), the German ambassador to the Vatican pretends that the pope sees in the general (Boulanger) the man who will overthrow the French Republic and re-establish the throne; we can read an article in which the "Monitor of Rome" envisages that the dictatorial candidate will take over power and that the Church "could benefit greatly from it"... General Boulanger sent one of his former officers to Rome with a letter for Leo XIII in which he promises the pope "that on the day when he would hold in his hands the sword of France, he would do his uttermost to make the rights of the papacy acknowledged".(72)

Such was this Jesuit pontiff; the intransigent clerics objected to his supposed excess of "liberalism"!

The boulangist crisis revealed well enough the action led by the religious party against the lay Republic, under the cover of nationalism. But the colourless nature of the principal character, as well as the resistance of a majority of the nation, had defeated the attempt in spite of all this forced agitation. Nevertheless, these chauvinistic tactics had proved quite effective, especially in Paris, and they were to be used again at another, and better, opportunity. This came about—or was it provoked?—and the disciples of Loyola were, of course, at the head of this movement. "Their friends are here", wrote M. Pierre Dominique, "a bigoted nobility, a bourgeoisie which rejects Voltaire, and many military men. They will especially work on the army, and the result will be the famous alliance of "the sword and the sprinkler of Holy water".

"In 1890, it is not the king of France's conscience they rule any more, but the general-staff, or, at least, its chief; then, the "Dreyfus Affair" breaks out, a real civil war which divides France into two".(73)

---

(71) and (72) Adrien Dansette, op.cit., II, pp.114 ss.

The Catholic historian, Adrien Dansette, sums up the beginning of the Affair as follows:

"On the 22nd of December 1894, the Captain of artillery Alfred Dreyfus is proved guilty of treason, condemend to deportation for life imprisonment and cashiering. Three months earlier, our Intelligence Service had discovered, at the German Embassy, a list of several documents to do with national defence; it established a resemblance between the writing of Captain Dreyfus and the one on that list Immediately, the general-staff cried out: "It's him; it's the Jew". They only had this presumption as the treason had no psychological explanation (Dreyfus had a good reputation, was rich and led an orderly life); the unfortunate man is neverthelsss imprisoned, condemned by a military tribunal after an inquiry so swift and partial that the judgement must have been preconceived. To make it worse, it will be learned later that a secret document was given to the judges, without the knowledge of the counsel for the accused...

"But there was more leakage at the general-staff after Dreyfus' arrest and commandant Picquart, chief of the Intelligence Service after July 1895, learns of a certain project called "petit bleu" (express letters), between the German military attache and the French commandant (of Hungarian origin) Esterhazy; he is a disreputable man who has nothing but hatred and contempt for his country of adoption. But an officer in the Intelligence Service, Commandant Henry, adds to the Dreyfus file,—as we shall see- a false document which would be crushing for the Jewish officer if it was genuine; he also erases and re-writes the name of Esterhazy on the "petit bleu" to give the impression that the document was faked. So Picquart is disgraced in November 1896".(74)

The disgrace of the chief of the Intelligence Service is easy to understand: his zeal to dissipate the accumulated darkness was too excessive.

The most trustworthy testimony is found in the "Carnets de Schwartzkoppen", published after his death, in 1930. It was from Esterhazy, and not Dreyfus, that the author, then first military attache at the German embassy in Paris, received secret documents of the French national defence.

"Already sometime before, in July, Picquart thought the time had come to warn by letter the chief of the general-staff, who was then in Vichy, about his suspicions concerning Esterhazy. The first meeting was on the 5th of August 1896. General de Boisdeffre approved of everything Picquart had done so far concerning this affair and gave him the permission to carry on with his investigation. "The minister for War, General Billot, was equally informed from August about Picquart's suspicions; he also sanctioned the measures taken by Picquart. Esterhazy, whom I had dismissed, had tried, using his connections with the deputy Jules Roche, to be posted to the ministry for War. presumably to try to get in touch with me again, and had written several letters to the minister for War as well as to his aide-de-camp. One of his letters was given to Picquart who, for the first time, realised that his writing was the same as the one on the "list"! He showed a photo of that letter to Du Paty and Bertillon, without telling them, of course, who wrote it... Bertillon said: "Oh, that's the writing on the list!"(75) "Feeling his conviction of Dreyfus' culpability crumbling away, Picquart decided to consult the "small file" which had been given only to the Judges, The archivist Gribelin gave it to him. It was evening. Left alone in his office, Picquart opened Henry's unsealed envelope, on which was Henry's paraph written with a blue pencil... Great was his amazement when he realised the nullity of those pitiful documents, none of which could be applied to Dreyfus. For the first time, he knew that the condemned man on the "Ile du Diable" (Devils Island) was innocent. The following day, Picquart wrote a letter to General de Boisdeffre in which he exposed all the charges against Esterhazy and his recent discovery. When reading about that "secret file", the general jumped up, exclaiming: "Why was it not burned as agreed?"(76) Von Schwartzkoppen wrote further: "My position became extremely uncomfortable. This question was before me: should I tell the whole truth and so repair the horrible mistake and liberate that poor innocent man? If I had been able to act as I wanted to, I would certainly have done just that! Looking at these things in detail, I came to the conclusion that I shouldn't get involved in that matter, for, as things were, nobody would have believed me; also, diplomatic considerations were standing in the way of such an action. Considering that the French government was able to take the necessary measures to clear the matter and make up for the injustice, I really made up my mind not to do anything".(77)

---

(73) Pierre Dominique, op.cit., p.239.

(74) and (78) Adrien Dansette, op.cit., II, pp.263, 264.

"We can see coming to life the tactics of the general-staff, notes Adrien Dansette: "If Esterhazy is guilty, the officers who provoked the illegal condemnation of Dreyfus, and most of all General Marcier, minister for War at that time, are guilty also. The interests of the army require the sacrifice of Dreyfus; we must not interfere with the sentence of 1894".(78) We remain dumbfounded, today, at the thought that such an argument could be invoked to justify, if we dare express ourselves so, an iniquitous condemnation. It was to be so all through the Affair which was then just beginning. Of course, we were then in an Anti-Semitic fever. The violent dissertations of Edouard Drumont, in the "Libre Parole", showed up every day the children of Israel as agents of national corruption and dissolution. The unfavourable prejudice so created incited a large section of public opinion to believe, "a priori", in Dreyfus' guilt. But, later, when the innocence of the accused became evident, the monstrous argument of the "infallibility" of the military tribunal was still upheld, and from now on with a perfect cynicism.

(75) and (77) "Les Carnets de Schwartzkoppen" Rieder, Paris 1933, pp.147, 148, 162.

(76) Armand Charpentier, "Histoire de l'affaire Dreyfus" (Fasquelle, 1933, p.73).

(78) See earlier on.

Was it the Holy Spirit inspiring these judges in uniform who could not make any mistake? It would be tempting to believe in that celestial intervention—so similar to the one which guarantees papal infallibility-when we read about Father du Lac, of the Company of Jesus, who had a lot to do with the Affair:

"He directed the college of the "Rue des Postes" where the Jesuits prepared the candidates for the larger Schools. He is a very intelligent man with important connections. He converted Drumont, is the confessor of de Mun and de Boisdeffre, chief of the Army's general-staff, whom he sees every day".(79)

The Abbe Brugerette also mentions the same facts quoted by Joseph Reinach: "Is it not this Father du Lac who converted Drumont and urged him to write "The Jewish France", who supplied the means to create the "Libre Parole"? Does not General de Boisdeffre see the famous Jesuit every day? The chief of the general-staff doesn't take any decision before consulting first his director".(80)

There, on Devil's Island, which deserves its name so well in that deadly climate, the victim of this atrocious plot was treated in an extremely cruel manner, as the Anti-Semitic press had spread the report that he had tried to escape. The minister for Colonies, Andre Lebon, gave orders accordingly.

"On the Sunday morning, the 6th of September, the head warder, Lebar, informed his prisoner that he would not, from then on, be allowed to walk in the part of the island which had been reserved for him, and that he would be confined to his hut. In the evening, he was told that he would be chained at night. At the foot of his bed, made up of three planks, were rivetted two double iron shackles which encircled the convict's feet. When the nights were torrid, this punishment was especially painful."

"At dawn, the guards unfastened the prisoner who, when he got up, trembled on his feet. He was forbidden to leave his hut where he had to stay day and night. In the evening, he was shackled again, and this went on for forty nights. After a while, his ankles were covered with blood and they had to be bandaged; his guards, moved with compassion, secretly wrapped up his Icet before chaining them".(81)

---

(79) Pierre Dominique, op.cit., p.240.

(80) (83) and (85) Abbe Brugerette, op.cit., II, pp.454, 432, 467.

Nevertheless, the convict still proclaimed his innocence; he wrote to his wife: "There must be somewhere, in this beautiful and generous land of France, an honest man who is couragous enough to search for, and discover, the truth".(82)

In fact, the truth was not in doubt any more. What was lacking was the will to let it burst forth. The Abbe Brugerette himself testifies of the fact: "The presumptions of innocence of the convict on Devil's Island multiply in vain; M. de Bulow's declarations at the Reichstag and those transmitted by M. de Munster, his ambassador, to the French government, also state the innocence of Dreyfus in vain; an innocence proclaimed also by Emperor Guillaume and confirmed when Schwarzkoppen (the German military attache) was recalled to Berlin as soon as Esterhazy was accused by Mathieu Dreyfus (brother of the convict). The general-staff remains opposed to any re-examination of the trial... Someone is busy covering up for Esterhazy. Secret documents are communicated to him for his defence, and even his writing is not allowed to be compared with that on the "list"...

"Shielded in that way, the villain Esterhazy is audacious enough to ask to appear before a Council of war. There, he is unanimously acquitted, on the 17th of January 1898, after a deliberation lasting three minutes".(83)

We must mention that, a few months later, when Colonel Henry was convicted of forgery, Esterhazy fled to England and, in the end, confessed that he was the author of the famous "list" attributed to Dreyfus.

We cannot cite all the many happenings in this drama, the forgeries added to more forgeries in an attempt to conceal an obvious truth, the dismissal of the chief of the general staff, the downfall of ministers, the suicide of Henry, detained at Mont Valerien, who slit his throat and so signed with his own blood the confession of his culpability.

In December 1898, this semi-official note was published by the German press: "The declarations of the imperial government have established that no German personality, high or low, had any kind of relations with Dreyfus. Then, from the German point of view, we see no inconvenience as to the unabridged publication of the secret file.(84)

At last, the inevitable re-examination is decided by the High-Court. Dreyfus has to appear again before the council of war at Rennes, on the 3rd of June 1899, and it is the start of another torture for him. "He could not suppose that he was to meet hatred more odious than when he left and that his former chiefs, conspiring to set him again on the road to Devil's Island,

(81) Armand Charpentier, op.cit., p.75.

(82) "Lettres d'un innocent", January and February 1895.

(84) Maurice Paleologue: "Journal de l'Affaire Dreyfus" (Plon, Paris 1955, p. 149) would have no pity for this wretch, this poor creature who thought he has endured all the suffering there is to endure".(85)

"So", wrote the Abbe Brugerette, "the council of war at Rennes will only add a new injustice to the iniquity of the 1894 trial. The illegality of this trial, the guilt of Esterhazy, the criminal manoeuvres of Henry will come out clearly during the twenty-nine sessions of that trial at Rennes. But the council of war... will judge Dreyfus on other spying charges which were never the cause of an accusation or report. All the previous leakages will be attributed to him and documents will be produced which had nothing to do with him... At last, and contrary to all our legal traditions, we will require that Dreyfus himself establish that such a document or paper was not handed over by him, as if it was not the task of the prosecution to prove the crime any more".(86)

The partiality of Dreyfus' accusers was so obvious that public opinion outside France was aroused. In Germany, the semi-official "Cologne Gazette" published, on the 16th and 29th of August, in the middle of the trial, two articles in which we read the following phrase: "If, after the declarations of the German government and the debates of the highest court of appeal in France, someone still believes Dreyfus guilty, we can only answer that person that he must be mentally ill or he conscious wants an innocent to be condemned".(87)

But the hatred, nonsense and fanaticism were not disarmed for all that

Even new forgeries were used, replacing those which had lost all credit. To sum it all up, it was nothing more than sinister buffoonery. The end of it, for Dreyfus, was the condemnation to ten years' detention, with mitigating circumstances!

"This miserable trial provoked an indignant stupor all over the world France was despised. Who could have imagined such terrible sorrow?"(88) exclaimed Clemenceau at the reading of English and German newspapers. Mercy was indispensable. Dreyfus accepted it to "carry on", said he, "seeking the reversal of the awful military mistake of which he was the victim. "For this reversal, it was no use counting on the justice of the Councils of war. This justice had been seen at work! It came, once again, from the highest court of appeal which, after thorough investigations and long debates, annulled once and for all the verdict of Rennes. A few days later, the Assembly and Senate, by a solemn vote, reinstated Dreyfus in the army: Dreyfus, upon whom was conferred the Legion of Honour and who was publicly reinstated".(89)

---

(85) See earlier on

(86) and (89) Abbe Brugerette, op.cit., II, pp.469, 471, 472.

(87) Maurice Paleologue, op.cit., p.237.

(88) "L'Aurore", 14th of September, 1899.

This late reversal, obtained so laboriously, was due to "honest and couragous" men, such as those the innocent on Devil's Island wished to see coming forth. Their number grew more and more as truth came to light. After the swift acquittal of the traitor Esterhazy, by a Council of war in January 1898, Emile Zola published in the "Aurore", Clemenceau's publication, his famous open letter "I accuse". He wrote: "I accuse the first Council of war to have violated the law by condemning an accused person on the grounds of some document remaining secret, and I accuse the second Council of war to have covered up this illegality by committing also a judicial crime in knowingly acquitting a culprit".

But the "knights" of our famous Company were on the watch out to hush up anything which could have enlightened the public. A question from the Catholic deputy de Mun brought Zola before the Assize Court of the Seine, and the couragous writer was condemned to one year imprisonment, the maximum penalty, as a result of this iniquitous trial.

Public opinion had been deceived so well by the outcries of the "clerico-nationalists" that the elections of May 1898 were in their favour.

Nevertheless, the public revelation of forgeries, the dismissal of the chief of the general-staff, the evident criminal partiality of the judges opened the eyes of those sincerely seeking the truth more and more. But these came almost exclusively from the ranks of the Protestants, Jews and laymen.

"In France, the Catholics were few and far between, among whom few were prominent, who took sides with Dreyfus... The action of this handful of people made very little noise. The conspiracy of silence surrounded it..."(90)

"Most priests and bishops remain convinced of Dreyfus' culpability", wrote the Abbe Brugerette. Georges Sorel declares also: "While the Dreyfus affair brought division amongst all social groups, the Catholic world was absolutely united against a re-examination." Peguy himself admits that "all the political forces of the Church have always been against Dreyfus".

Must we recall the lists of subscriptions open by the "Libre Parole" and "La Croix", in favour of the widow of the forger Henry who committed suicide? The names of the subscribing priests were often accompanied by "comments not very evangelical", as we are told by M. Adrien Dansette who quotes these:

"A certain Abbe Cros asks for a bedside mat made of Jewish skin which he would be able to stamp on morning and evening; a young priest would like to crush Reinach's nose with his heel; three priests would love to slap the filthy face of the Jew Reinach".(91)

(89) See earlier on.

(90) and (91) Adrien Dansette, op.cit., II, pp.275, 276.

Only the secular clergy is still somewhat reserved. In the Congregations, things are more virulent:

"On the 15th of July 1898, prize-giving day at the College of Arcueil, presided over by Generalissimo Jamont (vice-president of the Superior Council of War), Father Didon, rector of the School Albert-le-Grand, gave a violent speech in which he advocated using violence against the men whose crime had been the couragous denunciation of a military error...

"Must we", said the eloquent monk, "let the wicked go free? Certainly not! The enemy is: intellectualism pretending to despise force, and civilians wanting to subordinate the military. When persuasion has failed, when love(!) has been ineffectual, we must brandish the sword, spread terror, chop off heads, make war, strike..."

"This speech seemed to be a challenge thrown before all the sympathisers of that condemned wretch".(92)

But how many of them have we heard since then? These calls to bloody repressions, coming from gentle clerics, especially during the German occupation! As for the cry of hatred against intellectualism, we can find the perfect echo to it in this declaration from a certain general: "When someone speaks of intelligence, I draw my revolver".

To crush the thought by force is a principle of the Roman Church which has never altered.

The Abbe Brugerette wonders, however, about the fact that nothing disturbed the clergy's belief in the culpability of Dreyfus: "Such a great and dramatic event, coming like a clap of thunder in a blue sky and bringing to light the Department for forgeries operating at the general-staff, must have opened the eyes, even of those not wanting to find the truth. We are referring to the discovery of forgeries made by Henry...

"Had not the time come for the French clergy and the Catholics to repudiate a mistake which had gone on for too long... They, the priests and the faithful could have gone, en-masse, and at the eleventh hour like the workmen mentioned in the gospels, to increase the ranks of the defenders of justice and truth... But the most evident facts do not always shed their light on minds dominated by certain prejudices, as prejudices are opposed to examination and, by their nature, rebel against evidence".(93)

Anyway, what efforts are made to maintain Catholics in error! "Could they guess that they were scandalously deceived by a press stubbornly keeping covered all the proofs of innocence, all the testimonies favourable to the convict of Devil's Island, and also determined to impede the course of Justice by any means?"(94)

At the forefront of that press was "La Libre Parole", created, as we have seen, with the help of the Jesuit Father du Lac, and "La Croix" of the "Assumptionist" Father Bailly. The Order of "Assumption" being a camouflaged branch of the Company of Jesus, we must then attribute to them the start and pursuit of the anti-Dreyfus campaign.

---

(92) Abbe Brugerette, op.cit., II, p.451.

(93) (94) and (96) Abbe Brugerette, op.cit., II, pp.443, 444, 448.

A not very suspicious witness, Father Lecanuet, writes boldly: "The Congregations and especially the Jesuits are denounced by the Affair's historians. And, this time, we must admit that the Jesuits took the first shot with a very thoughtless temerity".(95)

"The provincial Catholic newspapers, such as the "Nouvelliste" of Lyon, to informative and widely read, will nearly all take part in that dark plot against truth and justice. It seems that the watchword was passed around to stop light breaking through and to keep the public in the dark".(96)

In reality, one would need a peculiar blindness not to discern, behind the furor shown by the "Croix" in Paris and in the provinces, the "watchword" mentioned by the Abbe Brugerette. And one would also be very naive not to know the origin.(96a)

M. Adrien Dansette says this also: "It is the "Assumptionist" Order as a whole and with it the Church which are exposed by the campaign of "La Croix"... Father Bailly boasts that the 'Holy-Father' approved of him".(97)

In fact, there isn't any doubt concerning that approval! The Jesuits, to whom the " Assumptionists" lend their name, are they not, since the Order was founded, the pope's political instruments? We have to smile at the story cleverly spread around—which is echoed by apologist historians—that Leo XIII had apparently "advised moderation" to the directors of "La Croix". It is a classical trick, but still somewhat efficacious. Today, there are still some folk who believe in a kind of "independence" of the Holy-See's official voice!

Let us see now what was published in Rome itself by the "Civilta Cattolica", the Jesuits' official publication, under the title "Il caso Dreyfus":

"The Jews' emancipation has been the result of the so-called principles of 1789, whose yoke weighs heavily on all French people... The Jews hold the Republic in their hands, which is more Hebraic than French... The Jew has been created by God to be used as a spy wherever some treason is being prepared... It is not only in France, but also in Germany, Austria and Italy that the Jews must be excluded from the nation. Then, with the great harmony of former times re-established, nations will find again their lost happiness".(98)

---

(95) Father Lecanuet, "Les Signes avant-coureurs de la Separation", p. 179. (96a) The newspaper "La Croix" was then widely published. (Note of the author).

(97) Adrien Dansette, op.cit., p.277.

(98) The "Civilta Cattolica" of the 5th of February 1898.

In the previous chapters, we gave a short summary of the "great harmony" and "happiness" enjoyed by the nations when the sons of Loyola heard the confessions and inspired the kings. As we have just seen, "harmony" was also reigning when they were the confessors and counsellors of the general-staffs chiefs.

According to the Abbe Brugerette, General de Boisdeffre, penitent of the Jesuit Father du Lac, tasted the same bitterness as many others before him who were equally deceived by these "directors of consciences". The confessions of the forger Henry put him under an obligation to resign. "Being a very honest man, he will himself proclaim that he was "Scandalously deceived", and those who knew him were aware that he felt very bitter about the "plot" of which he had been the victim".(99)

And the Abbe Brugerette adds that he stopped "all communications" with his former confessor "and even refused to see him again when dying".

After reading all this, written and published in the "Civilta Cattolica", it would be superfluous to dwell even deeper on the Order's culpability and we can only agree with what Joseph Reinach wrote then: "You see, it is the Jesuits who contrived this dark affair. And, for them, Dreyfus is only a pretext. What they want, and they admit it, is to strangle the laity and a redirected French Revolution..., abolish foreign gods, the dogmas of 1789".

This is clear enough. But, as some still insist, against all evidence, that there was a possible disagreement between the pope and his secret army, between the intentions of one and the actions of the other, it is easy to show the emptiness of such a supposition. The case of Bailly is very enlightening in that aspect.

What can we read in "La Croix" of the 29th of May 1956? Nothing less than this: "As we have announced, His Eminence Cardinal Feltin ordered a research into Father Bailly's writings; he was the founder of our publication and the "Maison de la Bonne Press". Here is the text of that ordinance dated 15th of May 1956:

"We, Maurice Feltin, by the grace of God and of the apostolic Holy-See, cardinal-priest of the Holy Roman Church whose title is Holy-Mary-of-Peace, archbishop of Paris.

"In view of the plan submitted by the Congregation of the Assumption's Augustinians and approved by us, to introduce in Rome the cause of God's servant Vincent-de-Paul Bailly, founder of "La Croix" and "Bonne Press". "In view of the dispositions... and instructions of the Holy See regarding the act of beatification and research into the writings of God's servants: "We have ordered and order the following: "Anyone who knew this servant of God or who can tell us something special about his life must let us know about it... "Anyone who possesses writings of this servant of God must let us have them before the 30th of September 1956, be it printed books, handwritten notes, letters, memoranda... even instructions or advices not written by him, but which he dictated... "For all these communications, we designate Canon Dubois, secretary of our archbishopric, and promoter of faith for this cause".(100)

---

(99) Abbe Brugerette, op.cit., II, pp.435, 454.

Here is a "servant of God" well on the way to receive the just reward for his loyal services in the form of a halo. And we dare say that, as far as his "writings" are concerned and which were so carefully searched for, the "promoter of faith" will have too much to choose from. As for the "printed" material, the collection of "La Croix", especially between 1895 and 1899, will supply the most edifying kind.

"Their attitude (of the Catholic newspapers), and especially the one of "La Croix", constitute at the moment for all "enlightened and upright minds", what M. Paul Violet, Catholic member of the Institute calls an "indescribable scandal"; and this scandal upholds, in the Dreyfus Affair, the most shocking mistakes, the lying and crime against truth, uprightness and justice. "The Court of Rome", he adds, "knows it, as all the Courts of Europe do".(101)

Indeed, the Court of Rome knew better than anyone else! As we have seen, in 1956, she had not forgotten the pious exploits of this "servant of God" as she was preparing his beatification.

No doubt, the promoter of faith credited our future "saint" with those famous lists of subscriptions in favour of the widow of the forger Henry, about which the Abbe Brugerette says: "Today, when we consider those calls for the Inquisition to be brought back, for the persecution of the Jews, for the murder of Dreyfus' defenders, it is like listening to the delirious imaginations of wild and grotesque fanatics. Nevertheless, these are presented to us by "La Croix" as a great, comforting and cheering spectacle".(102)

All those pious wishes concerning the Jews, Father Bailly did not have the joy to see them realised, in his lifetime, by these wild fanatics, under the swastika. He could only take delight in that "great, comforting and cheering spectacle" from heaven, even though, up there, spectacles of that sort are quite common, according to the "learned", and especially Saint Thomas d'Aquin, the Angel of the School:

"In order to help the saints enjoy their blessedness more, and increase their thanksgivings to God, they are allowed to contemplate in all its awfulness the torture of the godless... The saints will rejoice in the torments of the godless". (Sancti de poenis impiorum gaudebunt) (103).

---

(100) "La Croix" of the 29th of May 1956.
(101) Abbe Brugerette, op.cit., p.443.
(102) Abbe Brugerette, op.cit., II, p.450.

As we can see, Father Bailly, Founder of "La Croix", had what it takes to make a saint: persecute the innocent, curse those who defend him, give them up to be murdered, uphold with all one's strength lying and iniquity, stir up discord and hatred; these are, to the eyes of the Roman Church, solid titles for glory, and we can understand her wish to bestow the halo on the author of these pious deeds.

However, this question is asked, "Is this 'servant of God' a wonder-worker also? Because we know that, to deserve such a promotion, one must have accomplished miracles well and truly checked."

What were the miracles accomplished by the director-founder of "La Croix"? Was it the transmutation, for his readers, of black into white and white into black? To have presented a lie as the truth and the truth as a lie? Naturally, but a greater miracle was the fact that he persuaded members of the general-staff (and then the public) that, after having committed an initial mistake, and when this mistake was discovered, it was in their "honour" to deny the evidence, transforming in that way the mistake into abuse of power! "Errare humanum est, perseverare diabolicum". The "servant of God" was not taking much notice of that proverb. Instead of letting it inspire him, he hid it under his cassock. In fact, the"mea culpa" is for the simple faithful and not the ecclesiastics, nor—as we have just seen— for the military chiefs who have Jesuit confessors.

The result—searched for—was the exaltation of partisan passions and the division of the French people.

This is stated by the eminent historian Pierre Gaxotte: "The Dreyfus Affair was the decisive turning point... judged by officers, it involved the military institution... The Affair grew, became a political conflict, divided families, cut France into two. It had the effects of a war of religion... It created hatred against the officers corps... It started anti-militarism".(104)

When we think of Europe at that time, Germany over-equiped with arms and surrounded by her two allies, when we recollect the Vatican's responsibility in the start of the 1914 conflict, we cannot believe that the diminution of strength in our military potential was not premeditated.

How could we not notice that, in fact, the "Dreyfus Affair" started in 1894, the year of the Franco-Russian alliance. Then, the spokesmen of the Vatican were very outspoken about the accord with a "schismatic" power which, to their eyes, was a scandal. Even today, a "prelate of His Holiness", Monseigneur Cristiani, dares write:

"Through politics strangely blind and ill considered, our country seemed to take pleasure in provoking war-like inclinations in her formidable

(103) "Somme theologique", in Supple. XCIV, I, 3.

(104) Pierre Gazotte, de l'Academie Francaise, "Histoire de Francais" (Flammarion, Paris 1951, tome II, pp.516, 517.

neighbour (Germany)... In fact, the Franco-Russian alliance seemed to threaten Germany with encirclement".(105)

For the respectable prelate, the Triple Alliance (Germany, Italy, Austria-Hungary) was not a threat to anyone and France was wrong not to stay isolated before such a block. With three against one, the "coup" would have been easier and our Holy Father the pope would not have had to deplore, in 1918, the defeat of his champions.

---

(105) Mgr Cristiani, "Le Vatican politique" (Ed. du Centurion, Paris 1957, p. 102).

Chapter 9

The Years before the war—1900-1914

So, as wrote the Abbe Brugerette: "Under the image of Jesus crucified, divine symbol of the idea of justice, "La Croix" had passionately co-operated with the work of deception and of crime against truth, uprightness and justice".(106)

Justice had nevertheless triumphed in the end and the Abbe Fremont, who did not fear mentioning the sinister crusade led by Innocent III against the Albigenses when referring to the Affair, seemed to be a true prophet when he said:

"The Catholics are winning and they think they will overthrow the Republic because of the hatred for the Jews. But they will, I am afraid, only overthrow themselves".(107)

In fact, when opinion was enlightened, the reaction was fatal. Ranc had learned the lesson of the Affair when he exclaimed: "The Republic will break the power of the Congregations, or she will be strangled". In 1899, a ministry "of republican defence" was constituted; Father Picard, superior of the "Assumptionists", Father Bailly, director of "La Croix", and ten other members of that Order were brought to trial before the tribunal of the Seine for breach of the law on associations. The Congregation of the "Assumptionists" was dissolved.

Waldek-Rousseau, president of the Council, declared in a speech pronounced at Toulouse on the 28th of October 1900: "Dispersed, but not suppressed, the religious Orders formed themselves again, bigger in numbers and more militant; they cover the territory with the network of a political organisation whose links are innumerable and tightly knit, as we have seen through a recent trial".

At last, in 1901, a law is passed, ruling that no Congregation can be formed without an authorisation, and that those who do not ask for it within the legal time will be automatically dissolved.

---

(106) Abbe Brugerette, op.cit., II, p.478.

(107) Agnes Siegfried: "L'Abbe Fremont" (F. Alcan. Paris 1932, II, p.163).

It will be these regulations, quite natural on the part of public authorities whose duty it is to check the associations found in their territory, which will be presented to the Catholics as an intolerable abuse. "A man's house is his castle", goes the saying; but the Church is not having any of it: the common law is not for her.

The resistance of the clerics to the application of the law would be enough to show how necessary it was. This resistance will only strengthen the government's attitude, especially under minister Combes; and Rome's intransigence, especially when Pius I succeeded to Leo XIII, will bring ubout the law of 1904, abolishing the teaching Orders.

After that, friction between the French government and the Holy See will be constant. Besides, the election of the new pope was done in significant circumstances.

"Leo XIII died on the 20th of July 1903. The conclave, meeting to designate his successor, gives, after several ballots, 29 votes for Cardinal Rampolla,—42 are needed to be elected—, when the Austrian Cardinal Puzyna stands up and declares that His Apostolic Majesty the Emperor of Austria, king of Hungary, is inspired officially to exclude the secretary of State to Leo XIII. We know that Cardinal Rampolla is pro-French".(108)

Cardinal Sarto is elected. Through the manoeuvre of Austria, which substituted itself for the Holy-Spirit to "inspire" the cardinals of the conclave, this election is a victory for the Jesuits. Indeed, the new pontiff, described as a mixture of "village priest and archangel with a fiery sword", is the perfect type of man wished for by the Order. This is what M. Adrien Dansette says about it:

"When we love the pope, we do not limit the field in which he can and must exercise his will".(109)

Or this from his first consistorial address: "We know that we will shock many people when we declare that we will necessarily be involved in politics. But anyone wanting to judge fairly can see that the Sovereign Pontiff, invested by God with a supreme authority, doesn't have the right to separate politics from the domain of faith and morals".(110)

So Pius X, as soon as he had acceeded to Saint-Peter's throne, publicly declared that, for him, the pope's authority must be felt in every domain, and that political clericalism is not only a right but a duty. He also chose for his secretary of State a Spanish prelate, Monseigneur Merry del Val who was thirty-eight years old and, like him, passionately pro-German and anti-French. This state of mind is not surprising when we read these words from the Abbe Fremont:

---

(108) (109) and (110) Adrien Dansette, op.cit., pp.317, 318, 319.

"Merry del Val, whom I met at the Roman College, was the "Jesuits' favourite pupil". (111)

The relations between the Holy See and France soon felt the effects of that choice. First of all, it was the nomination of bishops by the civil power which brought about a conflict.

"Before the war of 1870, the Holy See learned the names of the new bishops only after they had been nominated. The pope reserved the right, if one was not acceptable to him, to stop him being a bishop by withholding the canonical institution. In fact, the difficulties were enormous as the governments, under any kind of regime, were careful to elect candidates worthy of the episcopal office".(112)

As soon as Pius X was pope, most of the nominations for new bishops were refused by Rome. Besides, the nuncio in Paris, Lorenzelli, was, as we are told by M. Adrien Dansette, "a theologian who has gone astray in diplomacy and madly hostile to France". Some will say: "Just another one added to all the others!" But such a choice for such a post clearly shows what were the intentions of the Roman Curia towards our country.

This systematic hostility was going to show itself even more clearly in 1904, when M. Loubet, president of the Republic, went to Rome to return the visit paid to him in Paris sometime before by the king of Italy, Victor-Emmanuel III.

M. Loubet wished to be received by the pope also. But the Roman Curia produced a supposed "invincible protocol": "The pope could not receive a head of state who, when visiting the king of Italy in Rome, seemed to acknoweldge as lawful the "usurpation" of that ancient pontifical State. But there were precedents: twice, in 1888 and 1903, a head of state—and not one of the less important—had been received in Rome by the king of Italy and the pope. Of course, this visitor was not the president of a Republic, but the German Emperor Guillaume II... The same honour had been given to Edward VII, King of England, and the Czar.

The insulting intention of that refusal was evident, and even emphasised by a note sent to the various chancellories by the secretary of State Merry del Val. A Catholic author, M. Charles Ledre, recently wrote this concerning the matter:

"Could the pontifical diplomacy ignore the decisively important objective which, behind the visit of president Loubet to Rome, was really takingshape?"(113)

Of course, the Vatican knew about the plan to separate Italy from her partners of the Triple Alliance: Germany and Austria-Hungary, these two

---

(111) Agnes Siegfried, op.cit., p.342.

(112) Adrien Dansette, op.cit., p.323.

(113) Charles Ledre: "Un siecle sous la tiare" (Bibliotheque catholique Amiot-Dumont, Paris 1955, p. 125).

Germanic powers considered by the Roman Church to be her best secular arms. This was the very crux of the matter, and was, in fact the reason for the Vatican's frequent bursts of temper.

Other conflicts arose concerning French bishops, considered in Rome to be too Republican. At last, tired of the constant difficulties arising from the Vatican's infringements of the terms of the Concordat, the French government put an end, on the 29th of July 1904, to "relations which were made void by the Holy See".

The breaking of diplomatic: relations was bound to lead, soon after, to the separation of Church and state.

"We find it normal today", wrote M. Adrien Dansette, "that France should maintain displomatic relations with the Holy See, and that State and Church should live under the regime of separation. Diplomatic relations are necessary as France must be represented wherever she had interests to defend, outside any doctrinal consideration. But separation is necessary as, in a democracy founded on the sovereignty of a people divided by several beliefs, the state only owes liberty to the Church".(1 14) And the author adds: "This is, at least, the general opinion".

We can only agree with this reasonable opinion, without forgetting, of course, that the papacy would never endorse it. The Roman Church never stopped proclaiming her preeminence over civil history, throughout her own history, and, for want of being able to impose it openly in recent times, she has done her best to implant it with the help of her secret army, the Company of Jesus.

Besides, it was at that time that Father Wernz, general of this Order, wrote: "The State is under the Church's jurisdiction; so, secular authority is indeed under the subjection of ecclesiastical authorty and has to obey".(U5)

That is the doctrine of these intransigent champions of theocracy, counsellors as well as those who execute their commands, who made themselves indispensable at the Vatican, so much so that, today, it would he absolutely impossible to distinguish even the smallest difference hetween "the black pope" and "the white pope"; they are one and the same. And, when we refer to the politics of the Vatican, we simply mean the Jesuits' politics.

With many other qualified observers, the Abbe Fremont admits it as follows: "The Jesuits dominate the Vatican".(116)

Before the irreducible opposition of the Jesuits, all-powerful in the Church, to the Republic, the State is constrained to enforce the law of (114) and (117) Adrien Dansette, op.cit., pp.333, 361.

(115) Pierre Dominique, op.cit., p.241. (116) Agnes Siegfried, op.cit., p.421.

Separation, with several amendments, from 1905 to 1908. This law does not want to decrease the Church's wealth and her buildings set up for worship. The faithful can form themselves into local associations, under the direction of the priest, to manage them. What is Rome going to do?

"In the encyclical letter "Vehementer" (1 lth of February 1906), Pius X condemned the principle of separation and the one pertaining to the local associations. But does he go beyond the principles?"(117) We will soon know. In spite of the advice from the French episcopate, he rejects all settlement, on the 10th of August 1906, in the encyclical letter "Gravissimo".

This is another disappointment for the liberal Catholics: "When I think", exclaims Brunetiere, "that what is refused to the French Catholics, with the certain knowledge that such refusal will unleash a religious war in our poor country which needs peace so much, is granted to the German Catholics, that the "local associations" have been operating there for thirty years to everyone's satisfaction, I cannot help, as a patriot as well as a Catholic, feeling most indignant".(118)

There was some trouble, in fact, when an inventory of ecclesiastical properties was taken, but not a religious war... Even though the ultramontanes were stirring up trouble, the population as a whole remained calm when some of the Church's properties were returned to the state, by her, rather than submit to the conciliatory measures laid down by the law.

Did, then, the writer Brunetiere understand fully the reason for that difference in which the French Catholics and German Catholics were treated by the Holy See? The first world war was to reveal all the significance of it.

While the Jesuits had effectually worked, through the "Dreyfus Affair", at dividing the French people and weakening the prestige of our army, in Germany, they were doing the exact opposite.

Bismark who, himself, had launched in the past the "Kulturkampf" against the Catholic Church, was being loaded with her favours. This is what we are told by the Catholic writer, Joseph Rovan, who also explains it:

"Bismark will be the first Protestant to receive the "Order of Christ" with jewels, one of the highest honours of the Church. The German government allows newspapers devoted to it to publish the fact that the chancellor would be ready effecually to uphold the pope's pretentions of a partial restoration of his temporal authority".(119)

"In 1886, the Centre—German Catholic party—was hostile to the military projects presented by Bismark. Leo XIII intervened in the German interior affairs in favour of Bismark. His secretary of State wrote to the nuncio of Munich: "In view of the approaching revision of the religious legislation which, as we have reasons to believe, will be carried out in a conciliatory manner, the Holy-Father wishes that the Centre promote, in

---

(118) Adrien Dansette, op.cit., p.363.

(119) and (121) Joseph Rovan, op.cit., pp.121, 150 ss.

every possible way, the projects of the military".(120) This is what Joseph Rovan has to say: "German diplomacy intervenes— it is already an old habit—at the Vatican to make the pope exercise his influence over the Zentrum (Catholic party), so as to favour the military projects... The German Catholics are going to speak about the great "political mission" of Germany which is, at the same time, a universal moral mission... The "Zentrum" makes itself also responsible for the prolongation of a reign which, from, blustering in weakness, war-like speeches over naval armaments to more war-like harangues, will eventually lead Germany to catastrophy... The "Zentrum" enters the war (of 1914) convinced of the uprightness, purity and moral integrity of its country's leaders, of the agreement of their plans and programme with the plans of eternal justice".(121)

As we can see, the papacy had done what was necessary to implant this conviction. Besides, as Monseigneur Fruhwirth said in 1914:

"Germany is the base on which the Holy-Father can and must establish gtreat hopes".

---

(120) Jean Bruhat: "Le Vatican contre les peuples" (Paralleles, 21st of December 1950)

Section V

The Infernal Cycle

Chapter I

The First World War

To the fury aroused at the Vatican by the Franco-Russian alliance and shown so well in the Dreyfus Affair, to the anger which the Franco-Italian union incited, and to which the Loubet incident clearly testified, was added a bitter resentment caused by the Entente Cordiale with England. France had firmly decided not to stand alone opposite her 'formidable neighbour' and Austria-Hungary. Politics so "blind and ill-considered", according to Monseigneur Cristiani, were looked upon most unfavourably by the Catholic Holy of Holies. For, besides jeopardizing the "thorough bleeding" godless France needed, these politics were a priceless support for schismatic Russia, this lost sheep whose return to the Roman Catholic fold had never ceased to be hoped for, though its accomplishment might mean a war.

But for the time being the Orthodox Church stayed firmly implanted in the Balkans, especially in Serbia, where the treaty of Bucarest, ending the conflict of the Balkans, had made it a centre of attraction for the Slavs of the South and in particular for those under the yoke of Austria. The ambitious plans of the Vatican and the apostolic imperialism of the Hapsburgs were then in perfect accord, as in the past. To Rome and Vienna, the growing power of Serbia marked her out as the enemy to overthrow.

This is indeed established in a diplomatic document found in the Austrian-Hungarian archives; it reports, for the benefit of the Austrian minister Berchtold, on the talks Prince Schonburg had at the Vatican in October-November 1913:

"Amongst the subjects discussed first of all with the cardinal secretary of State (Merry del Val) last week, the question of Serbia came up, as anticipated. First of all, the cardinal expressed his joy at our firm and opportune attitude of recent months. During the audience I had that day with His Holiness, the Holy-Father, who started the conversation by mentioning our energetic steps taken in Belgrade, he made some characteristic remarks: "It would certainly have been better", said his Holiness, "if Austria-Hungary had punished the Serbians for all the wrongs they had done".(1)

So, the war-like sentiments of Pius X were clearly expressed in 1913 already. There is nothing surprising about this when we consider the inspirers of Roman politics.

"What were the Hapsburgs supposed to do? Chastise Serbia, an Orthodox nation. The prestige of Austria-Hungary, of these Hapsburgs who, with the Bourbons of Spain, were the last supporters of the Jesuits, and especially the prestige of the heir, Francois-Ferdinand, their man, would have been greatly increased. For Rome, the affair became one of almost religious importance; a victory of apostolic monarchy over Czarism could be considered as a victory of Rome over the schism of the East".(2)

However, the affair dragged on in 1913. But, on the 28th of June 1914, the archduke Francois-Ferdinand was murdered at Sarajevo. The Serbian government had nothing to do with this crime committed by a Macedonian student, but it was the perfect excuse for the emporer Francois-Joseph to start hostilities.

"Count Sforza maintains that the main problem was to persuade Francois-Joseph that war was necessary. The advice of the pope and his minister was the one which could best influence him".(3)

This advice was of course given to the emperor, and of the kind which could be expected from this pope and his minister, "favourite pupil of the Jesuits". While Serbia was trying to maintain peace by giving in to all the wishes of the Austrian government which had sent a threatening note to Belgrade, Count Palffy, Austrian representative to the Vatican, gave to his minister Berchtold, on the 29th of July, a summary of the talks he had had on the 27th with the cardinal-secretary of State, Merry del Val; this conversation was about "the questions which are disturbing Europe at the moment".

The diplomat scornfully denies the "fanciful" rumours about the supposed intervention of the pope who apparently "implored the emperor to spare the Christian nations the horrors of war". Having dealt with these "absurd" suppositions, he expounds the "real opinion of the Curia", as conveyed to him by the secretary of State:

"It would have been impossible to detect any spirit of indulgence and conciliation in the words of His Eminence. It is true that he described the note to Serbia as very harsh, but he nevertheless approved of it entirely and, at the same time and indirectly, expressed the wish that the Monarchy

(1) "Document" P.A. XI/291.

(2) and (3) Pierre Dominique, op.cit., pp.245, 246, 250.

would finish the job. Indeed, added the cardinal, it was a pity that Serbia had not been humiliated much earlier, as it could have been done, then, without such great risks attached. This declaration echoes the wishes of the pope who, over the past few years, often expressed regret that Austria-Hungary had neglected 'chastising' her dangerous neighbour on the Danube".(4)

This indeed is just the opposite to the "fanciful" rumours about a pontifical intervention in favour of peace.

In fact, the Austrian diplomat is not the only one who reports on the "real opinion" of the Roman pontiff and his minister.

The day before, on the 26th of July, Baron Ritter, Bavarian Charge d'Affaires to the Vatican, had written to his government:

"The pope agrees with Austria dealing severely with Serbia. He doesn't think much of the Russian and French armies and is of the opinion that they could not do very much in a war against Germany. The cardinal-secretary of State doesn't see when Austria could make war if she does not decide now".(5)

So, the Holy See was fully conscious of the "great risks" represented by a conflict between Austria and Serbia, but, nevertheless, did all in its power to encourage it.

The Holy-Father and his Jesuit counsellors were not concerned about the sufferings of "Christian nations"! It was not the first time that these nations were used for the benefit of Roman politics. The opportunity wished for had come at last to use the Germanic secular arm against Orthodox Russia, "godless" France which needed a "thorough bleeding", and, as a bonus, against "heretic" England. Everything seemed to promise a "lively and happy" war.

Pius X did not see its unfolding and result, both contrary to his forecasts. He died at the beginning of the conflict, on the 20th of August 1914. But. forty years later, Pius XII canonised this august pontiff, and the "Precis d'Histoire Sainte" (Summary of Holy History), used for parochial catechism, dedicated to him these edifying words:

"Pius X did all he could to prevent the start of the 1914 war and he died of anguish when he foresaw the sufferings it would unleash".

If this was satire, it could not be put in a better way!

A few years before 1914, M. Yves Guyot, a true prophet, said: "If war breaks out, listen, you men who think that the Roman Church is the symbol of order and peace, and do not search for blame outside of the (4) "Veroffentlichungen der (Commission fur Neuere Geschichte Osterreichs", 26 Wien-Leipzig 1930, pp.893, 894.

---

(5) This communication appears in"Bayerische Dokumentenzum Kriegssausbruch", III, p 205.

Vatican: it will be the sly instigator, as in the war of 1870".(6) Instigator of the slaughter, the Vatican was going to uphold no less craftily her Austro-German champions right through the war. The military excursion, in France, which the Kaiser boasted he was going to make, was stopped at the Marne and the aggressor brought back to the defensive after every one of his furious attacks. But, at least, pontifical diplomacy brought him all the help possible, and this is not surprising when we consider that Divine Providence seemed to delight in favouring the central empires.

Indeed, Cardinal Rampolla, considered to be pro-French—and for that reason kept away from the pontifical throne on a veto from Austria—wasn't any more amongst those who could become pope as he had died a few months before Pius X, a death it seems very opportune.

But this was not the whole of "God's" intervention: As he had promised, even before voting took place, the new pope, Benedict XV appointed Cardinal Ferrata as secretary of State.

But the cardinal(7) did not even have the time to take up fully his new position. Having entered the secretary's office at the end of September 1914, HE DIED SUDDENLY on the 20th of October, victim of a terrible indisposition after partaking of some "LIGHT REFRESHMENTS".

"He was sitting at his desk when he suddenly became violently sick. He fell as if lightning had struck him. The servants hastened to come to his help. The doctor, who had been called immediately, realised straightaway the gravity of the situation and asked for a quick consultation. As for Ferrata, he had already understood and knew there was no hope... He pleaded that he should not be left to die at the Vatican... The medical consultation took place immediately at his hotel with six doctors... They refused to draw up a medical bulletin; the one published bore no signatures".(8) He was not suffering from any kind of sickness or infirmity.

"The scandal of this death was such that an inquest could not be avoided. The result of it was: a jar had been broken at the office. The presence of pounded glass in the sugar bowl used by the cardinal was explained quite simply in that way. Granulated sugar can be useful! The inquest was stopped there..."(9)

The Abbe Daniel adds that the sudden departure, a few days later, of the servant of the deceased cardinal provoked quite a lot of remarks, especially as he had apparently been the servant of Monseigneur Von Gerlach before his master entered Holy Orders. This Germanic prelate, a notorius spy, was to flee from Rome in 1916: he was going to be arrested and charged with the sabotage of the Italian battleship "Leonard de Vinci" which blew up in the bay of Tarente, taking with it 21 officers and 221 seamen". His trial was resumed in 1919. Von Gerlach did not appear and was condemned to twenty years hard labour".(10)

---

(6) Yves Guyot: "Bilan politique de l'Eglise", p. 139.

(7) He was not very friendly towards the Jesuits.

(8) and (9) Abbe Daniel: "Le Bapteme de sang", (Ed. de l'Idee Libre, Herblay 1935, pp.28-30).

Through the case of this "participating chamberlain", editor of the "Osservatore Romano", we get a clear idea of the state of mind in the Vatican's high spheres.

It is again the Abbe Brugerette who describes the "entourage of the Holy See": "Professors or ecclesiastics, they are not put off by any obstacles in their pursuit of impressing on the Italian clergy and the Catholic world in Rome respect and admiration for the Germanic army, contempt and hatred for France".(1 1)

Ferrata, who favoured neutrality, had died just at the right time, and Cardinal Gasparri became secretary of State; in perfect agreement with Benedict XV, he did his best to serve the interests of the central empires

"Considering all this, it is not surprising then that Pope Benedict XV, in the following months, worked hard to maintain Italy on the path of intervention which would best serve the Jesuits, friends of the Hapsburgs..."(12)

At the same time, the morale of the Allies was cunningly undermined.

"On the 10th of January 1915, a decree signed by Cardinal Gasparn, secretary of State to Benedict XV, ordered that a day of prayer should be observed to hasten peace... One of the compulsory exercises of piety was the reciting of a prayer written by Benedict XV himself... The French government ordered that the pontifical document should be seized. This prayer for peace was considered to be a softening and destructive manifestation capable of slackening the efforts of our armies, at a time when the German hordes were feeling the irresistible pressure which would push them out of our territory, and when the Kaiser could see coming the terrible punishment his unpardonable crimes deserved... The pope, it was said, wanted peace come what may, at a time when it could only be in favour of the central empires. The pope does not like France; he is "German".(13)

M. Charles Ledre, another Catholic writer, confirms: "On two occasions, mentioned in some famous articles of "La Revue de Paris", the Holy See, by inviting Italy and later the United States to keep out of the war, did not merely wish for a quicker end of the conflict... According to the Abbe Brugerette, it served the interests of our enemies and worked against us".(14)

But the actions of the Jesuits, therefore the actions of the Vatican, were not only felt in Italy and the United States. Any means, every place, is good enough for them.

(10) (1 1) and (13) Abbe Brugerette, op.cit., III, pp.553, 528, 529. (12) Pierre Dominique, op.cit., p.252. (14) Charles Ledre, op.cit., p. 154.

"It is not surprising then to see pontifical diplomacy busy from the start at hindering our food supply; dissuading the neutrals from joining our side, in order to break the bond holding the 'Entente' together... Nothing was considered too insignificant if it could help this great task, and bring about peace by provoking some weakness amongst the Allies.

"There was worse: Solicitations for a separate peace. Between the 2nd and the 10th of January 1916, some German Catholics went to Belgium to preach, in the name of the pope they said, a separate peace. The Belgian bishops accused them of lying, but the nuncio and the pope remained silent...

"Then, the Holy See thought of bringing together France and Austria, so hoping to make France sign a separate peace or demand that, with her allies, they should negotiate a general peace... A few weeks later, on the 31st of March 1917, Prince Sixte of Bourbon gave the famous letter of the emperor Charlesto the president of the Republic.

"As the manoeuvre had failed on this side of the Alps, it was bound to be tried again elsewhere, in England, in America, and especially in Italy...

"Break up the temporal forces of the 'Entente' in order to stop its offensive attacks, ruin its moral prestige with the view to weaken its courage and bring it to terms... these two things make up the politics of Benedict XV and all the efforts of his impartiality always have been and are still aimed at hamstringing us".(15)

This was written by a notorious Catholic, M. Louis Canet; and this is what the Abbe Brugerette wrote:

"We only learned four years later, through the declarations of M. Erzberger published in the "Germania" of the 22nd of April 1921, that the proposal of peace proclaimed by the Pope in August 1917 had been preceded by a secret accord between the Holy See and Germany".(16)

Another interesting point is that the ecclesiastical diplomat who negotiated this "secret accord" was the nuncio in Munich, Monseigneur Pacelli, future Pius XII.

One of his apologists, the R.P. Jesuit Fernesolle, wrote: "On the 28th of May (1917), Monseigneur Pacelli presented his letters of appointment to the king of Bavaria... He tried hard to enlist the co-operation of William II and the chancellor Bethmann-Holveg. On the 29th of June, Monseigneur Pacelli was solemnly received by the emperor William II at the headquarters of Kreuznach".(17)

(15) Louis Canet: "Le Politique de Benoit XV", (Revue de Paris, 15th of October and 1st of November 1918).

(16) Abbe Brugerette, op.cit., III, p.543.

(17) R.P. Fernesolle, S.J. "Pro pontifice". Imprimatur 26th of June 1947,(Beauchesne, Paris 1947, p. 15.)

So, the future pope was starting his twelve years as nuncio in Munich, then in Berlin, in the way he meant to go on, for, during those years, he multiplied the intrigues to overthrow the German Republic established after the first world war and prepare the revenge of 1939 by bringing Hitler to power.

Yet, when the Allies signed the treaty of Versailles, in July 1919, they were so conscious of the part played by the Vatican in the conflict that it was carefully kept away from the conference table. And, even more surprising, it was the most Catholic State, Italy, which had insisted on its exclusion.

"Through art. XV of the pact of London (26th of April 1915), which defined Italy's participation in the war, Baron Sonnino had obtained the promise from the other Allies that they would oppose any intervention of the papacy in the peace arrangements". 18) This measure was wise but insufficient. Instead of applying the sanctions against the Holy See which it deserved for sparking off the first world war, the victors did nothing to prevent the further intrigues of the Jesuits and the Vatican; these eventually, 20 years later, led to a catastrophe even worse, maybe the worst the world has known.

---

(18) Charles Pichon: "Histoire du Vatican" (Sefi, Paris 1946, p. 143).

Section V

Chapter 2

Preparations for the Second World War

In 1919, the sons of Loyola reaped the bitter fruits of their criminal politics. France had not succumbed to the "thorough bleeding". The apostolic empire of the Hapsburgs, which they had encouraged to "punish the Serbians", had disintegrated, liberating the Orthodox Slavs from the yoke of Rome. Russia, instead of coming back to the Roman fold, had become marxist, anti-clerical and officially atheistic. As for invincible Germany, it foundered in the chaos.

But the proud nature of the Company would never consider confessing a sin. When Benedict XV died, in 1922, it was ready to start again on a new basis. Is it not all-powerful in Rome?

Let us listen to M. Pierre Dominique: "The new pope Pius XI who is, according to some, a Jesuit, tries to patch things up. He asks the Jesuit Father d'Herbigny to go to Russia, in an attempt to rally whatever is left of Catholicism, and especially to see what could be done. Vague and big hope: to rally around the pontiff the persecuted Orthodox world.

"In Rome, there are thirty-nine ecclesiastical colleges, whose foundation marks the dates of great counter-offensives; most of these counter-offensives were Jesuitical in their working and direction: Germanic college (1552), English (1578), Irish (1628, re-established in 1826), Scottish (1600), North-American (1859), Canadian (1888), Ethiopian (1919, re-constituted in 1930).

"Pius XI creates the Russian college (Ponteficio collegio russo di S. Teresa del Bambino Gesu) and puts it under the Jesuits' care. They also look after the Oriental Institute, the Institute of Saint-John Damascene, the Polish college, and later the Lithuanian college. Are these reminders of Father Possevino, Ivan the Terrible and the false Dimitri? The second of the three great objectives during Ignatius' time takes first place. The Jesuits, once again, are the inspiring agents and performers in that great enterprise".(19)

In the defeat they just suffered, the sons of Loyola can see a glimmer of some hope. The Russian revolution, by eliminating the Czar, protector of the Orthodox Church, had it not decapitated the great rival and helped the penetration of the Roman Church? We must strike while the iron is hot! The famous "Russicum" is created and its clandestine missionaries will take the Good News to this schismatic country.(19a) One century after their explusion by Czar Alexander the First, the Jesuits will again undertake the conquest of the Slav world. Since 1915, their general is Nalke von Ledochowski.

From M. Pierre Dominique again: "Some will say that I see Jesuits everywhere! But I am compelled to point out their presence and actions; to say that they were behind the monarchy of Alphonso XIII whose confessor was Father Lopez; that, when the Spanish monarchy was ended and their monasteries and colleges burned down, they were found again behind Gil Robles, then, when civil war broke out, behind Franco. In Portugal, they uphold Salazar. In Austria and Hungary, the Emperor Charles who was dethroned three times; (what part did they play in those attempts to regain the throne of Hungary? Who knows!) They kept the seat warm not knowing much for whom or what. Monsignor Seipel, Dolfuss and Schussnigg are from their ranks. They dream for a while of a great Germany, with a Catholic majority, to which the Austrians would necessarily belong: a modern version of the old 16th century alliance between the Wittelsbach and Hapsburg. In Italy, they support first of all Don Sturzo, founder of the popular party, then Mussolini... The Jesuit Father Tacchi Venturi, general-secretary of the Company, served as the middleman between Pius XI, whose confessors are Fathers Alissiardi and Celebrano (Jesuits), and Mussolini.

"The pope, in February 1929, at the time of the treaty of Lateran, calls Mussolini "the man whom Providence allowed us to meet". Rome does not condemn what is commonly called the "Ethiopian aggression" and, in 1940, the Vatican is still Mussolini's sincere friend.

"The Jesuits have their secret abode in it. From there, they survey the Universal Church with the cold and calculating eye of the politician".(20)

This is a perfect summary of the Jesuit activity between the two world wars. The "secret abode" of Loyola's sons is the political brain of the Vatican. The confessors of Pius XI are Jesuits; those of his successor, Pius XII, will also be Jesuits and Germans for good measure. No matter if, because of it, the plot becomes evident: everything, it seems, is ready for revenge.

(19) and (20) Pierre Dominique, op.cit., pp.253, 254.

(19a) See also Frederic Hoffet's "L'Equivoque catholique et le nouveau clericalisme" (Fischbacher, Paris).

But, under the pontificate of Pius XI, it is the preparatory period. The Germanic "secular arm", defeated, has dropped the sword. While waiting to put it back into its hands, we will prepare, in Europe, a field worth its future exploits, and first of all stop the threatening rise of democracy. Italy will be the first field of action. There is, there, a noisy socialist chief who gathers ex-servicemen around him. This man proclaims an apparently intrasigent doctrine, but he is ambitious and lucid enough to realise how precarious his position is, in spite of his extravagent boastings. Jesuit diplomacy will soon win him over to its side.

M. Francois Charles-Roux, of the Institute, who was our (i.e. French) ambassador to the Vatican at that time, says: "At the time when the future Duce was only a simple deputy, Cardinal Gasparri, secretary of State, had a secret interview with him... The fascist chief had immediately agreed that the pope should exercise a temporal sovereignty over a part of Rome... "When reporting to me about that interview, Cardinal Gasparri concluded: "With this promise, I was sure that, if this man came to power, we would succeed". "

"I will not mention his account of the negotiations between the secret agents of Pius XI and Mussolini..."(21)

These secret agents, the main one being the Jesuit Father Tacchi Venturi, fullfilled their mission extremely well. This is not surprising when we know that Father Tacchi Venturi was secretary of the Company of Jesus and Mussolini's confessor at the same time. In fact, he was "directed" into this "cajolery" of the Fascist chief by the general of his Order, Halke von Ledochowski, as we are told by M. Gaston Gaillard.(22)

"On the 16th of November 1922, Parliament elected Mussolini by 306 votes against 116, and, in that meeting, one saw the Catholic group of don Sturzo, supposedly Christian-Democrat, voting unanimously for the first fascist government".(23)

Ten years later, the same manoeuvre brought about a similar result in Germany. The Catholic "Zentrum" of Monsignor Kass assured, by its massive vote, the dictatorship of Nazism.

In fact, Italy had been, in 1922, the trial ground for the new formula of authoritarian conservatism: fascism, dressed up, when local circumstances demanded it, with some pseudo-socialism. From now on, all the efforts of the Vatican's Jesuits will tend to spread this "doctrine" in Europe, the ambiguity of which is typical of them.

Even today, the collapse of Mussolini's regime, nor the defeat, nor the ruins have been enough to discredit, to the eyes of Italy's Christian democrats, the megalomaniac Dictator imposed on their country by the Vatican. Disowned only outwardly, his prestige remains intact in the hearts of the clerics. The following could be read in the press:

---

(21) Francois Charles-Roux: "Huit ans an Vatican", Flammarion, Paris 1947, pp.47 ss

(22) Gaston Gaillard, p.353 "La fin d'un temps" (Ed. Albert, Paris, 1933). (23) Pietro Nenni "Six ans de guerre civile en Italie" (Librairie Valois, Paris 1930, p. 146)

"We have decided: visitors coming to Rome for the Olympic Games, in 1960, will see the marble obelisk erected by Benito Mussolini to his own glory as it dominates, from the banks of the Tiber, the Olympic stadium. This memorial thirty-three meters high bears the inscription "Mussolini-Dux" and is decorated with mosaics and inscriptions praising fascism. The phrase "Long live the Duce" is repeated more than one hundred times and the slogan "Many enemies means much honour" several times as well. The monument has, on either side, marble blocks commemorating the main events of fascism, from the foundation of the publication "Popolo d'ltalia", by Mussolini, until the establishment of the short-lived fascist empire, and including the war in Ethiopia. The obelisk was to be crowned with a gigantic statue of Mussolini, as a naked athlete, nearly one hundred metcrs high. But the regime collapsed before this strange project could be realised.

"After a year of controversy, the Segni government has just decided that the duce's obelisk should stay".(24)

The war, the blood which flowed profusely, the tears and the ruins do not matter. They are mere trifles, small spots on the monument erected to the glory of "the man whom Providence allowed us to meet", as he was described by Pius XI.

No shortcomings, mistakes or crimes can erase his main merit: the fact that he re-established the temporal power of the pope, proclaimed Roman Catholicism as the religion of the State, and gave the clergy, through laws still being enforced, complete power over the life of the nation.

It is to testify to this that Mussolini's obelisk must stand in the heart of Rome, for the benefit of foreign tourists looking at it admiringly or ironically, and in the hope of better times which would allow the erection of the "naked athlete" one hundred meters high, symbolic champion of the Vatican.

The Lateran Treaty, by which Mussolini showed his gratitude to the papacy, gave the Holy See, apart from the payment of one thousand 750 million liras (i.e. £20,000,000) the temporal sovereignty over the territory of Vatican city. Monseigneur Cristiani, prelate of His Holiness, explains the significance of this event:

"It is certain that the Constitution of the Vatican city was a matter of prime importance in order to establish the papacy as a political power".(25)

---

(24) "Press italienne, New York Herald Tribune, Time and Paris-Presse", 3rd of November 1959.

(25) Monseigneur Cristiani: "Le Vatican politique", Imprimatur 15th of June 1956 (Ed. du Centurion, Paris 1957, p. 136).

We will not waste time trying to conciliate this explicit confession with the phrase so often heard that "the Roman Church is not involved in politics". We will only point out the unique position in the world of a state which is secular and sacred, of equivocal nature as well, and the consequences of that position.

What are the Jesuitical crafty tricks used by this power which, depending on circumstances, makes use of her temporal or spiritual character, to be exempted from all the rules laid down by international laws? The nations themselves have lent their hand to this trickery and, by doing that, helped its penetration into their midst, the Trojan horse of clericalism. "The Pope seemed to identify himself too much with the dictators"(26), wrote M. Francois Charles-Roux, French ambassador to the Vatican. But could it be otherwise when the Holy See itself had raised these men to power?

Mussolini, the prototype, was the inaugurator of that series of "providential" men, these sword-bearers who would prepare the revenge for 1918. From Italy, where it prospered so well under the care of the Jesuit Father Tacchi Venturi and his acolytes, fascism was soon to be exported to Germany. "Hitler receives his impetus from Mussolini; the ideal of the Nazis is the same as in Italy... Since Mussolini is at the head, all the sympathies are for Berlin... In 1923, his Fascism merges with National-Socialism; he becomes friends with Hitler to whom he supplies arms and money".(27)

At that time, Monseigneur Pacelli, future Pius XII and, then, the Curia's best diplomat, is Nuncio in Munich, capital of Catholic Bavaria. There, the star of the future German dictator starts to rise; he is also a Catholic, like his most important associates. Of that country, cradle of nazism, M. Maurice Laporte tells us: "Its two enemies are called Protestantism and Democracy". Prussia's anxiety is therefore understandable.

"It is easy to guess what kind of special care the Vatican gives Bavaria where Hitler's National-Socialism recruits its strongest contingents".(28)

To take from "heretic" Prussia the control of the German "secular arm" and transfer it to Catholic Bavaria; what a dream! Monseigneur Pacelli puts all in his power to realise it, acting in concert with the chief of the Company of Jesus.

"After the other war (1914-1918), the Jesuits' general, Halke von Ledochowski, had conceived a vast plan... the creation, with or without emperor Hapsburg, of a federation of the Catholic nations in central and eastern Europe: Austria, Slovakia, Bohemia, Poland, Hungary, Croatia and, of course, Bavaria.

---

(26) Francois Charles-Roux, op.cit., p.231.

(27) Antonio Aniante: "Mussolini" (Grasset, Paris 1932, pp.123 ss.).

(28) Maurice Laporte: "Sous le casque d'acier" (A. Redier, Paris 1931, p. 105).

"This new central Empire had to fight on two fronts: on the eastern side against the Soviet Union, on the western side against Prussia, Protestant Great-Britain and republican, rebellious France. At that time, Monseigneur Pacelli, future Pius XII, was nuncio in Munich, then in Berlin, and an intimate friend of Cardinal Faulhaber, von Ledochowski's main collaborator. The Ledochowski plan was the dream of Pius XII's youth".(29)

But was it only a dream of youth? The "Mittel-Europa" Hitler tried to organise was very similar to that plan, apart from the presence, in that block, of Lutheran Prussia, a not very dangerous minority, and the recognised zones of influence which—maybe temporarally—belonged to Italy. In fact, it was the Ledochowski plan, adapted to the needs of the time, which the Fuhrer was trying to realise, under the patronage of the Holy See, with the help of Franz von Papen, secret chamberlain of the pope, and the nuncio to Munich, then Berlin, Monseigneur Pacelli.

M. Francois Charles-Roux writes: "During the contemporary epoch world politics never felt the Catholic intervention more than during the ministry of Monseigneur Pacelli".(30)

And from M. Joseph Rovan: "Now, Catholic Bavaria... is going to welcome and protect all those who sow trouble, all those confederates and assassins of de la Saint-Vehme".(31)

From amongst these agitators, the choice of Germany's "regenerators" will fall upon Hitler, who is destined to triumph over the "democratic mistakes" under the Holy Father's standard. Of course, he is a Catholic, like his principal collaborators.

"The nazi regime is like a return to the government of southern Germany. The names and origins of its chiefs demonstrate it: Hitler is specifically Austrian, Goering is Bavarian, Goebbels is Rhenish, and so on".(32)

In 1924, the Holy See signs a Concordat with Bavaria. In 1927, we can read in "Cologne's Gazette": "Pius XI is certainly the most German pope who ever sat on the throne of Saint-Peter".

His successor, Pius XII, will rob him of this palm. But, for the time being, he pursues his diplomatic career—rather his political career—in this Germany for which, as he later told Ribbentrop, "he would always have a special affection".

Promoted nuncio in Berlin, he works, with Franz von Papen, at destroying the Weimar Republic. On the 20th of July 1932, a state of siege is proclaimed in Berlin and the ministers expelled "manu militari". It is the first step towards hitlerian dictatorship. New elections are prepared which will establish the success of the nazis.

---

(29) VLa Tribune des Nations", 30th of June 1950.

(30) Francois Charles-Roux, op.cit., p.93.

(31) Joseph Rovan, op.cit., p.195.

(32) Gonzague de Reynold: "D'ou vient l'Allemagne" (Plon, Paris 1939, p. 185).

"With Hitler's approval, Goering and Strasser got in contact with Monseigneur Kaas, party chief of the Catholic Centre".(33)

Cardinal Bertram, archbishop of Breslau and primate of Germany, declared: "We, Christians and Catholics, do not recognise any religion or race...". With many other bishops, he tried to warn the faithful against "the pagan ideal of the nazis". Obviously, this prelate had not understood papal politics, but he was soon going to be taught.

"The "Mercure de France" gave an excellent study in 1934:

"In the beginning of 1932, German Catholics did not consider they had lost the cause but, in the spring, their chiefs seemed somewhat irresolute: they had been told that "the Pope was personally in favour of Hitler".

"That Pius XI was sympathetic to Hitler should not surprise us... For him, Europe could settle down again only through Germany's hegemony... The Vatican had thought of changing the centre of gravity of the Reich, through the Anschluss, for a long time, and the Company of Jesus was openly working towards that aim (Ledochowski's plan), especially in Austria. We know how Pius XI depended on Austria to make what he called his politics triumph. What had to be prevented was the hegemony of Protestant Prussia and, as the Reich was the one to dominate Europe... a Reich had to be rebuilt where the Catholics would be masters...

"In March 1933, the German bishops, meeting at Fulda, took advantage of the speech Hitler gave at Potsdam to declare: We must admit that the highest representative of the government of the Reich, who is at the same lime the head of the national-socialist movement, has made public and solemn declarations, by which the inviolability of the Catholic doctrine, the work and unchangeable rights of the Church are recognised... "Von Papen leaves for Rome. This man, whose past is so wicked, becomes a pious pilgrim with the mission to conclude a Concordat (for the whole of Germany) with the Pope. He too will have to emulate Mussolini's overtures towards the Vatican.(34)

In fact, the same happens in both countries: in Italy, the Catholic party of don Sturzo ensures Mussolini's accession to power; in Germany, the "Zentrum" of Monseigneur Kaas does the same for Hitler—and, on both occasions, a Concordat seals the pact.

M. Joseph Rovan admits this as follows: "Thanks to von Papen, deputy at the Zentrum since 1920 and owner of the party's official publication

---

(33) Walter Gorlitz and Herbert A. Quint: "Adolf Hitler" (Amiot, Dumont, Paris 1953, p.32).

(34) "Mercure de France"; "Pius XI and Hitler" (15th of January 1934).

'Germania'. Hitler came to power on the 30th of January 1933... "German political Catholicism, instead of becoming Christian Democrat, was eventually made to confer full powers on Hitler, on the 26th of March 1933... To vote in favour of full powers, a two-thirds majority was necessary and the votes of the "Zentrum" were indispensable to obtain it".(35) The same author adds: "In the correspondance and declarations of ecclesiastical dignitaries, we will always find, under the nazi regime, the fervent approval of the bishops".(36)

This fervour is easily explained when we read the following from von Papen: "The general terms of the Concordat were more favourable than all other similar agreements signed by the Vatican", and, "the Chancellor Hitler asked me to assure the papal secretary of State (Cardinal Pacelli) that he would immediately muzzle the anticlerical clan".(37)

This was not an empty promise. Already during that year (1933), apart from the massacre of Jews and assassinations perpetrated by the Nazis. there were 45 concentration camps in Germany, with 40,000 prisoners of various political opinions, but mostly liberals. Franz von Papen, the pope's secret chamberlain, defined perfectly the deep meaning of the pact between the Vatican and Hitler by this phrase worth engraving: "Nazism is a Christian reaction against the spirit of 1789".

In 1937, Pius XI, under the pressure of world opinion, "condemned" the racial theories as incompatible with Catholic doctrine and principles, in what his apologists amusingly call the "terrible" encyclical letter "Mit brennender Sorge". Nazi racism is condemned, but not Hitler, its promoter: "Distinguio". And the Vatican takes care not to denounce the "advantagous" Concordat concluded, four years earlier, with the nazi Reich.

While the cross of Christ and the Swastika were co-operating in Germany. Benito Mussolini set forth on the easy conquest of Ethiopia, with the Holy Father's blessing.

"... The Sovereign Pontiff had not condemened Mussolini's politics and had left the Italian clergy fully free to co-operate with the Fascist government... The ecclesiastics, from the priests of humble parishes to the cardinals, spoke in favour of the war...

"One of the most striking examples came from the Cardinal-Archbishop of Milan, Alfredo Ildefonso Schuster (Jesuit), who went as far as calling (35) and (36) Joseph Rovan, op.cit., pp. 197,209,214.

(37) Franz von Papen, op.cit., p.207.

(38) The enthusiasm of Cardinal Schuster is understandable as the Company of Jesus had suffered the same fate, in Abyssinia, as in the European countries. With the help of usurper Segud, whom they had converted and put on the throne, the sons of Loyola tried to impose Catholicism to the whole country, provoking uprisings and bloody repressions; but they were finally expelled by the Negus Basilides. (Note from the author).

this campaign "a Catholic crusade".(38) "Italy", clarified Pius XI, "thinks this war is justified because of a pressing need for expansion..." "Ten days later, when speaking to an audience of ex-servicemen, Pius XI expressed the wish that the legitime claims of a great and noble nation from which, he reminded them he himself descended, would be satisfied".(39) The Fascist aggression against Albania, on Good Friday in 1939, enjoyed the same "understanding", as we are told by M. Camille Cianfarra: "The Italian occupation of Albania was very advantagous for the Church... Out of a population of one million Albanian people, which became Italian subjects, 68% were Moslems, 20% Greek Orthodox and only 12% Roman Catholics... From the political point of view, the annexation of the country by a Catholic power was bound to improve the position of the Church and please the Vatican".(40)

In Spain, the establishment of the republic had not ceased to be resented by the Roman Curia as a personal offence. "I never dared mention the Spanish question to Pius XI", wrote M. Francois Charles-Roux. "He probably would have reminded me that the Church's interests, in that great and historical land of Spain, were a matter for the papacy only".(41)

So, this "protected hunting-ground" was soon provided with a dictator similar to those who had been already successful in Italy and Germany. The adventure of General Franco only started in mid-July 1936 but, on the 21st of March 1934, the "Pact of Rome" had been sealed, between Mussolini and the chiefs of Spain's reactionary parties, one of whom was M. Goicoechea, chief of the "Renovacion Espanola". By this pact, the Italian fascist party undertook to supply the rebels with money, war material, arms and ammunition. We know that they even did more than what they had promised, and that Mussolini and Hitler kept on "refuelling" the Spanish rebellion with material, aviation and "volunteers".

As for the Vatican, oblivious of its own principle that the faithful must respect the established government, it oppressed Spain with its threats.

"The Pope excommunicated the heads of the Spanish Republic and declared spiritual war between the Holy See and Madrid. Then he produced the encyclical letter 'Dilectissimi Nobis'... Archbishop Goma, new primate of Spain, proclaimed the civil war".(42)

The prelates of His Holiness joyfully accepted the horrors of this fratricidal conflict, and Monsignor Gomara, bishop of Carthagene, interpreted admirably their apostolic sentiments when he said: "Blessed are the cannons if, in the breaches they open, the Gospel springs up!"

---

(39) and (40) Camille Cianfarra: "La Guerre et le Vatican" (Le Portulan, Paris 1946, pp.46,47,48).

Note from the author: Cardinal Schuster was also rector of this strange institution: "L'Ecole de mystique fasciste" (school of fascist mysticism) (41)
Francois Charles-Roux, op.cit., p.181.

(42) Andre Ribard: "1960 et le secret du Vatican" (Libr. Robin, Paris 1954, p.45.)

The Vatican even recognised Franco's government, on the 3rd of August 1937, twenty months before the end of the civil war.

Belgium was also looked after by Catholic Action, needless to say, an organisation eminently ultramontane and Jesuitical. The ground had to be prepared for the approaching invasion of the Fuhrer's armies! So, under the pretence of "spiritual renewal", the Hitlerite Fascist gospel was diligently preached there by Monseigneur Picard, Jesuit, Father Arendt. Jesuit, Father Foucart, Jesuit, etc. A young Belgium, who was their victim like many others, testifies to this: "At that time, all of us were already obsessed with a kind of fascism... The Catholic Action to which I belonged was very sympathetic to Italian fascism... Monseigneur Picard proclaimed from the rooftops that Mussolini was a genius and wished fervently for a dictator... Pilgrimages were organised to favour contacts with Italy and Fascism. "When, with three hundred students, I went to Italy, everybody, on our return home, saluted in the Roman fashion and sang Giovinezza.(43)

Another witness says: "After 1928, the group of Leon Degrelle regularly collaborated with Monseigneur Picard... Monseigneur Picard enlisted the help of Leon Degrelle for a particularly important mission: to manage a new publishing house at the Catholic Action centre. This publishing house was given a name which soon became famous: it was 'Rex'...

"The calls for a new regime multiplied... The results of this propaganda in Germany were observed with much interest. In October 1933, an article in 'Vlan' reminded us that the Nazis numbered only seven in 1919, and that Hitler brought them, a few years later, no other dowry than his talent for publicity... Founded on similar principles, the 'rexist' team started an active propaganda programme in the country. Their meetings soon attracted a few hundreds, then thousands of listeners".(44)

Of course, Hitler had brought to the new-born national-socialism, as Mussolini did to Fascism, more than the talent for publicity:- the support of the papacy!

Being only a pale shadow of these two, Leon Degrelle, chief of "Christus Rex", was the beneficiary of the same support—but for a very different purpose, as his job was to open his country to the invader.

M. Raymond de Becker says: "I collaborated with the 'Avant-Garde'... This publication (issued by Monseigneur Picard) aimed at breaking the ties uniting Belgium, France and England".(45)

---

(43) and (45) Raymond de Becker: "Livre des vivants et des morts" (Ed. de la Toison d'Or Brussels 1942, pp.72,73,175).

(44) Jacques Saint-Germain: "La Bataille de Rex" (Les oeuvres francaises, Paris 1937, pp.67,69).

We know how quickly the German armies defeated the Belgian defence betrayed by the clerical fifth column. Maybe we remember also that the apostle of "Christus Rex", donning the German uniform, went, accompanied by much publicity, to "fight on the Eastern front" at the head of his "Waffen SS", recruited mainly amongst the youth of Catholic Action; then an opportune retreat enabled him to reach Spain. But, before that, he gave full vent to his "patriotic" feelings for the last time.

M. Maurice de Behaut writes: "Ten years ago (in 1944), the port of Anvers, the third most important in the world, fell almost intact into the hands of the British troops... At the time when the population was beginning to see the end of its sufferings and privations, the most diabolic nazi invention fell on it: the flying bombs, V1 and V2. This bombardment, the longest in History, as it went on for six months, day and night, was kept carefully hidden, on the order of the allied headquarters. This is the reason why, today, the martyrdom of the cities of Anvers and Liege is still generally ignored.

"On the eve of the first bombardment (12th of October), some had heard on Radio Berlin the alarming remarks of the "rexist" traitor Leon Degrelle: "I asked my Fuhrer", he screeched, "for twenty thousand flying bombs. They will chastise an idiotic people. I promise you that they will make of Anvers a city without a port, or a port without a city".

"... From that day on, the rhythm of the bombardments was going to accentuate, catastrophes and disasters being the results, while the traitor Leon Degrelle was bawling on Radio Berlin, promising cataclysms even more terrible".(46)

Such was the last farewell to his homeland of this monstrous product of the Catholic Action. Obedient pupil of Monseigneur Picard, Jesuit, Father Arendt, Jesuit, etc., the chief of "Christus Rex" strictly followed the papal rules.

"The men of the Catholic Action", wrote Pius XI, "would fail in their duty if, as opportunities allow it, they did not try to direct the politics of their province and of their country".(47)

Indeed, Leon Degrelle did his duty and the result—as we have seen— was in proportion to his zeal.

We read in M. Raymond de Beckers's book: "The Catholic Action had found, in Belgium, exceptional men to orchistrate its themes, such as Monsignor Picard (the most important)... Canon Cardijn, founder of the

---

(46) Review "Historia", December 1954.

(47) Pius XI's Letter "Peculari Quadam", quoted by R.P. Jesuit de Soras, in the "Action catholique et action temporelle" (Ed. Spes, Paris 1938, p. 105). Imprimatur 1938.

(48) Raymond de Becker, op.cit., p.66.

'jocist' movement, a bilious ill-tempered and visionary man..."(48)

This particular one swears today that he has never "seen or heard" his fellow-member Leon Degrelle. So, these two leaders of the Belgian Catholic Action, both working under the crook of Cardinal Van Roey, had apparently never met! By what miracle? Of course, the former Canon doesn't tell us that; since then, he has been made "Monseigneur" by Pius XII and director of the 'jocist' movements for the whole world.

Another miracle: nor has Monseigneur Cardijn ever met the disreputable chief of 'Rex' during the great congress described by Degrelle:

"I remember the great congress of the Catholic Youth at Brussels, in 1930. I was behind Monseigneur Picard, who himself was at the side of Cardinal Van Roey. One hundred thousand youths had marched past us for two hours, cheering the religious authorities assembled on the platform..."(49)

Where, then, was the head of the J.O.C. hiding, whose troops were taking part in that gigantic march past? Was it, through a special decree of Providence, that these two men were condemned to rub shoulders without seeing each other, on official platforms as well as at the Catholic Action centre which they attended constantly?

Monseigneur Cardijn, a Jesuit, goes further. He pretends to have also "verbally" fought 'rexism'.

Really, this Catholic Action was a peculiar organisation! Not only were the chiefs of its two principal "movements" 'J.O.C. and Rex' playing hide and seek in the corridors, but also one could as he says, "fight" what the other did with the full approval of the "hierarchy"!

This fact cannot be disputed: Degrelle was put at the head of 'Rex' by Monseigneur Picard himself, under the authority of Cardinal Van Roey and the apostolic nuncio Monseigneur Micara. So, according to Monseigneur Cardijn, he keenly disapproved of the actions of his colleague in Catholic Action, under the patronage, like himself, of Belgium's Primate,—and without any consideration for the Nuncio, his "protector and revered friend", according to Pius XII".(50)

The assertion is rather severe. We are even more aware of it when we examine what was the attitude, after Hitler's invasion of Belgium, of those such as Monseigneur Cardijn and his associates who, today, repudiate Degrelle and 'rexism'. In a book which was "put under the bushel" when it was published, the chief of 'Rex' himself refreshed memories, as we shall see, and, to our knowledge, what he said was never refuted.

Being a fervent Christian, and acquainted with the interpenetrations of spiritual and temporal, I would not have considered collaborating (with

(49) Leon Degrelle: "La cohue de 1940" (Robert Crausaz, Lausanne 1949, pp.214-215).

(50) "La Croix", 24th of May 1946.

Hitler) without first consulting the religious authorities of my country... I had asked for an interview with His Eminence, Cardinal Van Roey... The cardinal received me in a friendly manner, one morning, at the episcopal palace of Malines... He is animated by a total and cyclonic fanaticism... If he had lived a few centuries earlier, he would have, while singing the 'Magnificat', put the infidels to the sword, or burned or let fall into the convent dungeons the not so obedient sheep of his flock. As it is the 20th century, he only has the crosier, but makes it accomplish a great work. For him, everything was important as long as it served the Church's interests: if it was something good, we would support it, but anything bad was crushed; and the Church has so many avenues of 'service': her works, parties, newspapers, agricultural co-operatives (Boerenbond), banking institutions which assured the temporal power of the divine institution...

"And now, I can sincerely and honestly say that this was the meaning of the cardinal's remarks: "collaboration was the proper thing to do, in fact the only thing a sensible person would do. During the whole interview, he didn't even consider that another attitude could be possible. For the cardinal, in the Autumn of 1940, the war was finished. He didn't even mention the name 'English' or utter the supposition that an allied recovery was conceivable... The cardinal did not think that, politically, anything else but collaboration was possible... He did not object to any of my conceptions and projects... He could have—or should have—warned me if he thought my ideas concerning politics were going astray, as I had come for his advice... Before I left, the cardinal gave me his paternal blessing...

"Other Catholics as well, in the Autumn of 1940, looked towards the great tower of Saint-Rombaut... Many entered the episcopal palace to ask the advice of Monseigneur Van Roey or his entourage, concerning the morality, usefulness or necessity of collaboration...

"More than one thousand Catholic Burgomasters, all the general secretaries, even though carefully chosen, adapted themselves immediately to the new Order... All those good people imprisoned or insulted in 1944 must have wondered, in 1940: What does Malines think? But who would believe that neither Malines, their bishops, nor their priests had been able to put their minds at rest!

"Eight out of ten Belgian collaborationists were Catholics... "During those decisive weeks, because of the choice which had to be made, Malines and the various bishoprics ever issued written or verbal negative advice, to myself or to all those other collaborationists.

"Even though not very pleasant, this, is the plain or naked truth. The attitude of the high Catholic clergy abroad could only strengthen the conviction of the faithful that collaboration was perfectly compatible with the faith... In Vichy, the highest French prelates had their photo taken as they stood with Marshal Petain and Pierre Laval, after the interview between Hitler and Petain. In Paris, Cardinal Baudrillart publicly declared that he was a collaborationist.

"In Belgium itself, Cardinal Van Roey allowed one of the most farmous priests of Flanders—his greatest Catholic intellectual—Abbe Ver-schaeve, declare, on the 7th of November 1940, during a solemn session of the Senate and in the presence of a German general, president Raeder:

"It is the duty of the Cultural Council to build the bridge which will unite Flanders and Germany..."

"On the 29th of May 1940, the day after the surrender, Cardinal Van Roey described the invasion as a kind of present from heaven:

"Be sure", he wrote to the faithful, "that we are witnessing at the moment an exceptional intervention of Divine Providence which is displaying its power through great events".

"So, after all that, Hitler seemed to be nothing less than a purifying instrument, providentially chastising the Belgian people".(51)

Something very similar was happening in our own country, (France), where we were constantly reminded that "defeat is more fruitful than victory", as, before 1914, when a purifying "thorough bleeding" was wished upon France.

Also in these memoirs which fell—or rather were thrown into the oubliette—we find some very interesting details concerning the "Boerenbond, the great Catholic and political and financial machine of Cardinal Van Roey which largely financed the Flemish section of Louvain's University..."(52)

"The printing-house "Standaard" was making sure its presses were kept working by printing the most collaborationist appeals of the V.N.V. (Vlaamsch Nationalist Verbond). Very soon, the business was rolling in money... Being two hundred per cent Catholic and pillars of the Church in Flanders, the leaders of "Standaard" would not have considered collaborating unless the cardinal had first given his blessing to it clearly and distinctly.

"The same was said about the whole of the Catholic press..."(53)

All these efforts were aiming at nothing less than Belgium's break-up, as we are reminded by another Catholic writer, M. Gaston Gaillard:

"The Flemish-speaking Catholics and the autonomist Catholics of Alsace justified their attitude by their tacit support always given to the Germanic propaganda by the Holy See. When they referred to the memorable letter sent by Pius XI to his secretary of State, Cardinal Gaspari, on the 26th of June 1923, they were easily convinced that their politics had the approval of Rome, and, of course, Rome did nothing to persuade them otherwise. Had not the nuncio Pacelli (future Pius XII) ably supported German nationalists and encouraged the so-called "oppressed" population of High-Silesia? Had not the autonomist plots of Alsace, Eupen-Malmedy and Silesia received ecclesiastical approval which had not always been given discreetly? It was then easy for the Flemish to hide their deeds against Belgium's unity behind the Roman directives..."(54)

(51) (52) and (53) Leon Degrelle, op.cit., pp.213,216ss, 219ss.

Also, in 1942, Pope Pius XII asked his nunciature in Berlin to convey his condolences to Paris on the death of Cardinal Baudrillart, so signifying that he considered the annexation of Northern France by Germany as a fact. It also confirmed once again the "tacit support" always given to the Germanic expansion by the Holy See, and himself in particular.

Today, we can but scornfully smile when we see the Jesuits of His Holiness quibble over something so obvious and repudiate all complicity with the fifth column they themselves had organised, and especially with Degrelle. As for him— safely kept in his refuge as he knows too much—he can recollect at leisure the famous verses of Ovid: "Donee eris felix, multos munerabis amicos. Tempora si fuerint nubila, solus eris".(55)

We smile when we read the following from R.P. Fessard (Jesuit):

"In 1916 and 1917, we waited for the American reinforcements with so much impatience! In 1939, we sadly realised that, even after war had been declared, Hitler was looked upon favourably by a large part of American opinion; even, and especially by Catholics! In 1941 and 1942, we wondered again if the United States would or would not intervene".(56)

So, it seems the Good Father viewed the results obtained in America by his own Jesuitical brothers "With sadness"! For, and this is an historical fact, the "Christian Front", a Catholic movement opposed to the United State's intervention, was directed by the Jesuit Father Coughlin, a notorious pro-Hitlerite.

"This pious organisation lacked nothing and received, from Berlin, a plentiful supply of propaganda material prepared by Goebbel's office.

"Through is publication 'Social Justice' and radio broadcasts, the Jesuit Father Coughlin, apostle of the swastika, reached a vast public. He also looked after secret "commando cells" in the main urban centres, led according to the sons of Loyola's methods and trained by Nazi agents".(57)

A secret document of the Wilhelmstrasse clarifies the following point: "Studying the evolution of anti-semitism in the United States, we note that the number of listeners to the radio broadcasts of Father Coughlin, well-known for his anti-semitism, exceeds 20 millions".(58)

---

(54) Gaston Gaillard: "La fin d'un temps" (Ed. Albert, Paris 1933, II, p. 141).

(55) As long as you will be happy, you will have many friends; when the clouds appear, you will be alone.

(56) R.P. Fessard S.J.: "Libre meditation sur un message de Pie XII", (Plon, Paris 1957, p.202).

(57) Edmond Paris: "The Vatican against Europe" (P.T.S., London 1959, p.141)

Must we recall the actions of the Jesuit Father Walsh, an agent of the pope, Dean of the School of political sciences at the University of Georgetown, Jesuitic nursery of American diplomacy—and a zealous propagandist of German politics?

At that time, the General of the Society of Jesus was, as by chance, Halke von Ledochowski, a former general in the Austrian army; he succeeded Wernz, a Prussian, in 1915.

Has the R.P. Fessard also forgotten what 'La Croix' wrote all through the war, and especially this: "There is nothing to be gained from an intervention of troops from the other side of the Channel and Atlantic".(59)

Does he not remember either this telegram of His Holiness Pius XII: The pope sends his blessing to 'La Croix', the voice of pontifical thought".(60)

Considering so much forgetfulness, must we come to the conclusion that members of the Society of Jesus have very short memories? They did not incur this reproach even from their enemies, though! Let us rather point out that R.P. Fessard expressed his patriotic fears of 1941-1942 in 1957 only. His "free meditations" over fifteen years brought some results and he had time to re-read a certain passage of the "Spiritual Exercises" which says that "the Jesuit must be ready, if the Church declares that what he sees as black is white, to agree with her, even though his senses tell him the opposite".(61)

As far as that is concerned, R.P. Fessard seems to be an excellent Jesuit!

On the 7th of March 1936, Hitler brought the Wehrmacht into the de-militarised Rhine region, so tearing up the pact of Locarno. On the 11th of March 1938, it was the Anschluss (union of Austria and Germany), and on the 29th of September of the same year, in Munich, France and England had imposed on them by the Reich the annexation of Sudetenland in Czechoslovakia.

The Fuhrer had come to power, thanks to the votes of the Catholic Zentrum, only five years before, but most of the objectives cynically revealed in 'Mein Kampf were already realised; this book, an insolent challenge to the western democracies, was written by the Jesuit Father Staempfle and signed by Hitler. For—as so many ignore the fact—it was the Society of Jesus which perfected the famous Pan-German programme as laid out in this book, and the Fuhrer endorsed it.

---

(58) Secret archives of the Wilhelmstrasse, document 83-26 19/1, (Berlin, 25th of January 1939).

(59) "La Croix", 10th of August 1943.

(60) "La Croix", 28th of January 1942).

(61) "... siquid quod oculis nostris apparet album, nigrum illaesse definierit debemus itidem quod nigrum sit pronuntiare". "Institutum Societatis Jesus" (Roman edition of 1869, II p.417).

Section V

Chapter 3

German aggressions and the Jesuits Austria - Poland - Czechoslovakia - Yugoslavia

Let us see how the Anschluss was prepared:

First of all, and by a "providential" synchronism, when Mussolini seized power in Italy thanks to don Sturzo, Jesuit and chief of the Catholic party, Monseigneur Seipel, a Jesuit, became chancellor of Austria. He held that position until 1929, with an interregnum of two years, and, during those decisive years, he led the Austrian interior politics on to the reactionary and clerical road; his successors followed him on that road which led to the absorption of that country into the German block. The bloody repression of working-class uprisings earned him the nickname "Keine Milde Kardinal": the Cardinal Without Mercy.

"In the early days of May (1936), von Papen entered into secret negotiations with Dr Schussnigg (Austrian Chancellor) working on his weak point and showed him how advantagous a reconciliation with Hitler would be as far as the Vatican's interests were concerned; the argument may seem odd, but Schussnigg was very devout, and von Papen the pope's chamberlain". (62)

Not surprisingly, it was the secret chamberlain who led the whole affair which ended, on the 11th of March 1938, with the resignation of the pious Schussnigg (pupil of the Jesuits), in favour of Seyss-Inquart, chief of the Austrian Nazis. The following day, the German troops entered Austria and the puppet government of Seyss-Inquart proclaimed the union of the country to the Reich. This event was welcomed by an enthusiastic declaration of Vienna's archbishop: Cardinal Innitzer (Jesuit).

"On the 15th of March, the German press published the following declaration from Cardinal Innitzer: "The priests and the faithful must unhesitatingly uphold the great German state, and the Fuhrer whose struggle to set up Germany's power, honour and prosperity is in accord with the wishes of Providence.

---

(62) G.E.R. Gedye: "Suicide de l'Autriche" (Union latine d'editions, Paris 1940, p. 188).

The newspapers printed a facsimile of this declaration to dispel any doubt as to its authenticity. Reproductions were posted up on walls in Vienna and in the other Austrian cities. Cardinal Innitzer.. had, with his own hand, written the following words before his signature: "Und Heil Hitler!"

"Three days later, the whole of the Austrian episcopate addressed a pastoral letter to its diocesans; the Italian newspapers published the text of this letter on the 28th of March: it was a straightforward adhesion to the Nazi regime whose virtues were highly extolled".(63)

Cardinal Innitzer, highest representative of the Roman Church in Austria, also wrote in his declaration: "I invite the chiefs of Youth organisations to prepare their union to the organisation of the German Reich".(64)

So, not only did the cardinal-archbishop of Vienna, followed by his episcopate, throw in his lot with Hitler most enthusiastically, but he handed over also the "Christian" youth to be trained according to nazi methods; these methods had been "officially condemned" in the 'terrible' encyclical letter: "Mit brennender Sorge"!

Then, the 'Mercure de France' justifiably observed: "... These bishops have not taken a decision which involves the Church as a whole on their own accord; the Holy See gave them directives which they merely followed".(65)

This is obvious. But what other "directives" could be expected from this Holy See which brought to power Mussolini, Hitler, Franco and, in Belgium, created the 'Christus-Rex' of Leon Degrelle?

We understand, then, why English authors such as F.A. Ridley, Seeker and Warburg object to the Politics of Pius XI which favoured fascist movements everywhere".(66)

As for the Anschluss, M. Francois Charles-Roux tells us why the Church was so much in favour of it: "Eight million Austrian Catholics united to the Catholics of the Reich could make a German Catholic body more able to make its weight felt".(67)

Poland was in the same situation as Austria when Hitler, after having invaded it, annexed part of it in the name of the Fatherland. A few more million Catholics to reinforce the German contingent under the Roman obedience: the Holy See could only be in favour of this, in spite of all its love for its "dear Polish people". In fact, it did not frown at the brutal regrouping of Catholics in Central Europe, according to the plan of the Jesuits' general, Halke von Ledechowski.

---

(63) Francois Charles-Roux, op.cit., pp.118, 122.

(64) Ernest Pezet, former vice-president of the Commission for Foreign Affairs, "L'Autriche et la paix" (Ed. Self, Paris 1945, p. 149).

(65) Austria and Hitler ("Mercure de France", 1st of May 1938, p.720).

(66) J. Tchernoff: "Les Demagogies contre les democracies" (R. Pichon and Durand-Auzias, Paris 1947, p.80).

(67) Francois Charles-Roux, op.cit., p.114.

The Vatican's licensed thurifers keep on reminding their readers that Pius XII "protested" against the aggression in the encyclical letter "Summi Pontificatus". In reality, this ludicrous document, like all other such documents, which numbers no less than 45 pages, contains only one phrase, at the end, concerning Poland crushed by Hitler. And this short allusion is an advice to the Polish people to pray much to the Virgin Mary!

The contrast is striking between those few words of trite condolences and the nattering pages devoted to fascist Italy and the exaltation of the Lateran Treaty; this treaty was concluded by the Holy See and Muss'olini, Hitler's collaborator who, at the time when the pope was writing his encyclical letter, delivered a scandalous speech, as a challenge to the world, and started it with these words: "Liquidata la Polonia!"

But what risks are there in using these derisory alibis, when preaching to the converted? Besides, how many of them would be anxious to examine such references?

Nevertheless, when we study the Vatican's behaviour in this affair, what do we see? First of all, we see the nuncio in Warsaw, Monseigneur Cortesi, urge the Polish government to give in to Hitler in everything: Dantzig, the "corridor", the territories where German minorities live (68). Then, when this is done, we see also the Holy-Father lend his help to the aggressor when trying to make Paris and London ratify the amputation of a large part of his "dear Poland".(69)

To those who would be surprised at such behaviour towards a Catholic country, we will quote a famous precedent: after the first division of Poland in 1772, a catastrophe in which the Jesuits' intrigues played a large part, Pope Clement XIV, when writing to the Empress of Austria, Marie-Therese, expressed his satisfaction as follows:

"The invasion and division of Poland were not done for political reasons only; it was in the interests of religion, and necessary to the spiritual profit of the Chruch, that the Court of Viennna should extend its domination over Poland as much as possible".

Obviously, there is nothing new under the sun—especially at the Vatican. In 1939, there was no need to change one single word in that cynical declaration, apart from "the spiritual profit of the Church" which, this time, consisted of several million Polish Catholics joining the Great Reich.

---

(68) Cf. the "Journal", (1933-1939) of Count Szembeck (Plon, Paris 1952, pp.499).

(69) Cf. Camille Cianfarra, op.cit., pp.259, 260.

This fact easily explains the parsimony of papal condolences in "Summi Pontificatus".

In Czechoslovakia, the Vatican did even better: it provided Hitler with one of its own prelates, a secret chamberlain, to be made into the head of this satellite state of the Reich.

"The Anschluss had made a great noise in Europe. From now on, the hitlerian threat was hovering over the Republic of Czechoslovakia and war was in the air. But, at the Vatican, nobody seemed concerned. Let us listen to M. Francois Charles-Roux:

"In the middle of August, I had tried to persuade the pope that he should speak in favour of peace—a just peace, of course... My first attempts were unsuccessful. But, from the beginning of September 1938 on, when the international crisis reached its worst level, I started gathering, at the Vatican, soothing impressions contrasting strangely with the rapidly deteriorating situation.".(70)

"All my attempts", adds the former French ambassador, "received the same answer from Pius XI: "It would be useless, unnecessary, inopportune". I could not understand his obstinacy in keeping silent". (71)

Events were soon going to explain this silence. It was first of all the annexation of Sudetenland by the Reich, with the support of the Christian Social Party, of course; this annexation was ratified by the Munich accord, and the Republic of Czechoslovakia was divided. But Hitler, who had undertaken to respect its territorial integrity, intended in reality to annexe the Czech countries independent of Slovakia, and reign over it as well by his own appointee.

It was easy for him to attain these ends as most of the main political Slovakian chiefs were Catholic ecclesiastics, according to Walter Hagen (72), and, amongst these, the priest Hlinka (Jesuit), had at his dosposal a "guard" trained on nazi S.A. principles.

We know that, according to canon law, no priest can accept a public post or a political mandate without the Holy See's consent.

This is confirmed and explained by the R.P. Jesuit de Soras: "How could it be otherwise? We have said so already: a priest, by virtue of the 'character' his ordination marked him with, by virtue of the official functions he exercises within the Church itself, by virtue of the cassock he wears, is bound to act as a Catholic, at least when a public action is concerned. Where the priest is, there is the Church".(73)

It was then with the Vatican's consent that members of the clergy sat in the Czechoslovak Parliament. Still more, one of these priests had to have

(70) Francois Charles-Roux, op.cit., pp.127, 128.
(71) Frnacois Charles-Roux, op.cit., 127, 128.
(72) Cf. Walter Hagen: "Le Front secret" (Les lies d'Or, Paris 1950).
(73) R.P. de Soras, op.cit., p.96.

the Holy See's approval when the Fuhrer himself invested him as head of state -and later conferred on him the highest hitlerian distinctions: the Iron Cross and the Black Eagle decoration.

As anticipated, on the 15th of March 1939, Hitler annexed the rest of Bohemia and Moravia, and put the Republic of Slovakia, which he had created with a stroke of his pen, "under his protection". At the head, he placed Monseigneur Tiso (Jesuit), "who dreamed of combining Catholicism and Nazism". A noble ambition, and easily realised as it had already been proved by the German and Austrian episcopates. "Catholicism and Nazism", proclaimed Monseigneur Tiso, "have much in common; they work hand in hand at reforming the world".(74)

Such must have been also the Vatican's opinion as—in spite of the "terrible" encyclical letter "Mit Brennender Sorge"—it did not haggle over its approval of the gauleiter priest.

"In June 1940, Radio Vatican announced: "The declaration of Monseigneur Tiso, chief of the Slovakian state, stating his intention to build up Slovakia according to a Christian plan, has the full approval of the Holy See".(75)

"Tiso's regime, in Slovakia, was especially afflicting for the Protestant Church of that country, which comprised one fifth of the population. Monseigneur Tiso tried to reduce the Protestant influence to its minimum, and even eliminate it... Influential members of the Protestant Church were sent to concentration camps".(76)

These could count themselves fortunate, as we consider this declaration from the Jesuits' general Wernz, a Prussian (1906-1915): "The Church can condemn heretics to death as any rights they have is because of our forbearance".

Let us see now what kind of apostolic gentleness was used by the gauleiter prelate Tiso towards the Jews: "In 1941, the first contingent of Jews from Slovakia and upper-Silesia arrive at Auschwitz; from the start, those who were not able to work are sent to the gas chamber, in a room of the building containing the crematory furnaces".(77)

Who wrote this? A witness who could not be challenged, Lord Russell of Liverpool, a judicial counsellor at the trials of war criminals.

So, the Holy See had not "lent" one of its prelates to Hitler in vain. The Jesuit head of state was doing a good job and the satisfaction expressed by Radio Vatican is understandable. To have been Auschwitz's first provider, what a glory for this holy man and for the whole Company of Jesuits!

In fact, this triumph lacked nothing. At the time of the Liberation, this prelate was handed over to Czechoslovakia by the Americans, condemned to death in 1946 and hanged—the palm, for a martyr!

---

(74) and (75) Henriette Feuillet: "France Nouvelle", 25th of June 1949.

(76) "Reforme", 17th of August 1947.

(77) Lord Russell of Liverpool: "Sous le signe de la croix gammes", (L'Ami du livre, Geneva 1955, p.217).

"Anything done against the Jews, we do it because of our love for this nation of ours. The love for our fellow-men and the love for our country have developed into a fruitful fight against the enemies of nazism".(78)

Another high dignitary of the Roman Church, in a neighbouring country, could have appropriated this declaration of Monseigneur Tiso to himself. For, if the foundations of the Slovakian "City of God" were hatred and persecution, according to the steadfast tradition of the Church, what can be said of the eminently Catholic state of Croatia, offspring of the collaboration between the killer Pavelitch and Monseigneur Stepinac, and with the assistance of the pontifical legate Marcone!

We would have to look back as far as the conquest of the New World, couple the actions of the adventurers of Cortes and the no less ferocious converter monks to find something worth comparing with the atrocities of those Oustachis", upheld, commanded and prompted by madly fanatical clerics. What these "Assassins in the Name of God", as they were so rightly nicknamed by M. Herve Lauriere, did over four years defies all imagination, and the annals of the Roman Church, even though so rich in such material, cannot produce the equivalent in Europe. Do we need to add that the crony of the blood-thirsty Ante Pavelitch was Monseigneur Stepinac, another Jesuit?

The Croatian terrorist organisation of the "Oustachis", led by Pavelitch, had come to the notice of the French people through the assassination, in Marseille, of King Alexander the First of Yugoslavia and our Foreign-Affairs' minister, Louis Barthou, in 1934. "As Mussolini's government was obviously mixed up in the crime"(79), the extradition of Pavelitch, who had taken refuge in Italy, was demanded by the French government; the Duce obviously took care not to grant it, and the Assize Court of Aix-en-Provence had to impose the death sentence by default on the head of the "Oustachis". This chief of terrorists, hired by Mussolini, "worked" for the Italian expansion on the Adriatic coast. When, in 1941, Hitler and Mussolini invaded and divided Yoguslavia, this supposed Croatian patriot was put. by them, at the head of the satellite state they created under the name of "Independent State of Croatia". On the 18th of May of that same year, in Rome, Pavelitch offered the crown of that state to the Duke of Spolete who took the name "Tomislav II". Of course, he took care never to set foot on the blood-stained soil of his pseudo-kingdom. "On the same day, Pius XII gave a private audience to Pavelitch and his

---

(78) Henriette Feuillet: "France Nouvelle", 25th of June 1949.

(79) Francois Charles-Roux, op.cit., p. 132.

'friends', one of whom was Monseigneur Salis-Sewis, vicar-general ot Monseigneur Stepinac. "So, the Holy See did not fear shaking hands with a certified murderer, sentenced to death by default for the murder of King Alexander the First and Louis Barthou, a chief of terrorists having the most horrible crimes on his conscience! In fact, on the 18th of May 1941, when Pius XII gladly welcomed Pavelitch and his gang of killers, the massacre of Orthodox Croats was at its height, concurrently with forced conversions to Catholicism".(79a)

It was the Serbian minority of the population they were after, as the author Walter Hagen explains: "Thanks to the 'Oustachis', the country was soon transformed into a bloody chaos... The deadly hatred of the new masters was directed towards the Jews and Serbians who were officially outlawed... Whole villages, even whole regions were sytematically wiped out... As the ancient tradition wanted Croatia and the Catholic Faith, Serbia and the Orthodox Church to be synonymous, the Orthodox believers were constrained to join the Catholic Church. These compulsory conversions constituted the completion of "croatisation".(80)

Andrija Artukovic, minister of the Interior, was the great organiser of these massacres and compulsory conversions; but, while doing it, he "morally" defended himself, according to a witness in a high position.

Indeed, when the Yugoslav government asked for his extradition from the United States where he had taken refuge, someone spoke on his behalf: the R.P. Jesuit Lackovic, residing also in the United States, and secretary to Monseigneur Stepinac, archbishop of Zagreb, during the last war.

"Artukovic", states the Jesuit, "was the lay spokesman of Monseigneur Stepinac. Between 1941 and 1945, not one day went by without seeing him in my office or myself going to his. He asked the archbishop's advice on all his actions, as far as their moral aspect was concerned".(81)

When we know what the "actions" of this executioner were, we realise what kind of edifying "moral" advice Monseigneur Stepinac gave him.

Massacres and "conversions" took place until the Liberation, and the good-will of the Holy-Father towards the killers never altered.

One must read, in the Croatian Catholic newspapers of that time, the exchanges of compliments between Pius XII and Pavelitch, the "Poglavnik", to whom Monseigneur Saric, Jesuit archbishop of Sarajavo and a poet in his spare time, dedicated verses impregnated with a rapturous adoration.

(79a) Cf. Herve Lauriere: "Assassins in the Name of God", (Ed. Dufour, Paris 1951, pp.40 ss)

(80) Walter Hagen op.cit., pp. 168,176,198,199.

(81) "Mirror News" of Los Angeles, 24th of January 1958.

(82) With other catholic ecclesiastics such as Monseigneur Aksamovic, the Jesuits Irgolis. Lonacir, Pavunic, Mikan, Polic, Severovic, Sipic, Skrinjar, Vucetic (note of the author).

But this was only a show of good manners: "Monseigneur Stepinac becomes member of the "Oustachi" parliament (82). He wears "Oustachi" decorations, he is present at all important "Oustachi" official manifestations at which he even gives speeches... "Must we then wonder at the respect given to Monseigneur Stepinac by the satellite state of Croatia'? or that his praises were sung by the "Oustachi" press? It is, alas, too evident that, without the support of Monseigneur Stepinac, on the religious and political side, Ante Pavelitch would never have obtained the collaboration of Catholic Croats to such an extent".(83)

To comprehend the full extent of that collaboration, one must read the Croatian Catholic press, the "Katolicki Tjednik", the "Katolick List", the "Hrvatski Narod", and so many other publications which vied with each other in flattering the bloody "Poglavnik"; Pius XII was so pleased that he was a "practising Catholic", and the high esteem of the Sovereign Pontiff embraced even the accomplices of the great man.

The "Osservatore Romano" informs us that, on the 22nd of July 1941. the pope received one hundred members of the Croatian Security Police, led by the chief of Zagreb's police, Eugen Kvaternik-Dido. This group of Croatian S.S., the pick of the executioners and torturers operating in the concentration camps, were presented to the Holy-Father by one who perpetrated crimes so monstrous that his own mother committed suicide in despair.

The goodwill of His Holiness Pius XII is easily explained by the apostolic zeal of these killers. Another "practising Catholic", Mile Budak, minister for Worship, exlcaimed in August 1941, at Karlovac: "The "Oustachi" movement is based on religion. All our work rests on our loyalty to religion and the Catholic Church".(84)

Besides, on the 22nd of July, at Gospic, the same minister for Worship had perfectly defined this work: "We will kill some Serbians, deport others, and the rest will be compelled to' embrace the Roman Catholic religion".(85)

This fine programme was carried out to the letter. When the Liberation put an end to this tragedy, 300,000 Serbians and Jews had been deported and more than 500,000 massacred. By this means the Roman Church had also made 240,000 Orthodox believers enter its fold... who quickly went back to the religion of their ancestors when their freedom was restored.

But, to obtain this ridiculous result, what horrors fell on that unfortunate country! One must read, in the book of M. Herve Lauriere "Assassins in the Name of God", details of the monstrous tortures that (83) "Le Monde" 27th of May 1953.

(84) Cf. Herve Lauriere: "Assassins in the Name of God", (Ed. Dufour, Paris 1951, p.97).

(85) "L'Ordre de Paris", 8th of February 1947.

these practising Catholics who were the Oustachis inflicted on their poor victims."

The English journalist J.A. Voigt wrote: "Croatian politics consisted of massacres, deportations or conversions. The number of those who were massacred reaches hundreds of thousands. The massacres were accompanied by the most bestial tortures. The "Oustachis" put out their victims' eyes and made garlands with them, which they wore, or presented as mementos".(86)

"In Croatia, the Jesuits implanted political clericalism".(87) It is the present invariably offered by the famous Company to the nations which welcome it. The same author adds: "With the death of the great Croatian tribune, Raditch, Croatia loses its main opponent to political clericalism which will embrace the mission of the Catholic action defined by Friedrich Muckermann. This German Jesuit, well-known before Hitler's advent, made it known, in 1928, in a book whose foreword was written by Monseigneur Pacelli, then apostolic nuncio in Berlin. Muckermann expressed himself as follows: "The pope appeals in favour of the Catholic Action's new crusade. He is the guide who carries the standard of Christ's Kingdom... The Catholic Action means the gathering of world Catholicism. It must live its heroic age... The new epoch can be acquired for Christ only through the price of blood".(88)

Ten years after this was written, the one who wrote the foreword of the Jesuit Father Muckermann's book sat on the throne of Saint-Peter and, during his pontificate, "the blood for Christ" literally flowed in Europe; but Croatia suffered the worst of the atrocious deeds of that "new epoch". There, not only were the priests advocating all out slaughter from the pulpit, but some even marched at the head of the murderers. Others held, apart from their sacred ministry, official posts as prefects or chiefs of the "Oustachi" police, even as chiefs of concentration camps where horrors were not outdone by even Dachau or Auschwitz.

To this bloody list of honours, we must enter the names of the Abbe Bozidar Bralo, the priest Dragutin Kamber, the Jesuit Lackovic and the Abbe Yvan Salitch, secretaries to Monseigneur Stepinac, the priest Nicolas Bilogrivic, etc... and numberless Franciscans; one of the worst of these was Brother Miroslav Filipovitch, main organiser of those massacres, chief of and executioner at the concentration camp of Jasenovac, the most hideous of these earthly hells.

Brother Filipovitch's fate was the same as Monseigneur Tiso's, in Slovakia: when Liberation came, he was hanged, wearing his cassock. But many of his rivals, not very anxious to win the palm of the martyr, fled to

---

(86) "Nineteenth Century and After", August 1943. (87) and (88) Herve Lauriere, op.cit., pp.82,84,85.

Austria, pell-mell with the assassins they had assisted so well.

But what was the "hierarchy" doing, when confronted with the bloodthirsty frenzy of so many of its subordinates?

The "hierarchy", or the episcopate and its leader, Monseigneur Stepinac, voted in the "Oustachi" Parliament for the decrees concerning the conversion of the Orthodox to Catholicism, sent "missionaries" to the terrorized peasants, converted without wincing whole villages (89), took possession of the Serbian Orthodox Church's properties and without ceasing showered praises and blessings on the Poglavnik, copying the example set from on high by Pope Pius XII.

His Holiness Pius XII was personally represented at Zagreb by an eminent monk, the R.P. Marcone. This "Sancti Sedis Legatus" was given the place of honour at all the ceremonies of the "Oustachi" regime, and had himself sanctimoniously photographed at the home of the chief of killers— Pavelitch— with his family which received him as a friend. "Birds of a feather flock together".

So, the most sincere cordiality always reigned in the relations between the assassins and ecclesiastics—of course, many of these ecclesiastics held both positions, for which they were never blamed. "The end justifies the means".

When Pavelitch and his 4,000 "Oustachis"—which included archbishop Saric, a Jesuit, bishop Garic and 400 clerics—left the scene of their exploits to go first to Austria then on to Italy, they left behind part of their "treasures": films, photographs, recorded speeches of Ante Pavelitch, chests full of jewels, gold coins, gold and platinum from the teeth, bracelets, wedding rings and pieces of dentures made of gold and platinum. This spoil taken from the poor wretches who had been murdered were hidden at the Archiepiscopal palace where they were eventually found.

As for the fugitives, they took advantage of the "Pontifical Commission for Assistance", created expressly to save war criminals. This charitable institution hid them in convents, mainly in Austria and Italy, and provided the chiefs with false passports which enabled them to go to "friendly" countries, where they would be able to enjoy the fruits of their robberies in peace. This was done for Ante Pavelitch, whose presence in Argentina was revealed, in 1957, through an attempt upon his life in which he was wounded.

Since then, the dictatorial regime collapsed in Buenos Aires. Like former president Peron himself, his protege had to leave Argentina. From Paraguay where he went first, he reached Spain where he died on the 28th of December 1959, at the German hospital of Madrid. On that occasion, the French press recalled his bloody career and—more discreetly the "powerful accomplices" who enabled him to escape punishment.

(89) In Monseigneur Stepinac's own diocese, Kamensko, 400 came back to the Roman Catholic fold in one day. On the 12th of June 1942, "Radio Vatican" announced these mass-conversions, stating that it had been "spontaneous and without any pressure on the part of civil and ecclesiastical authorities".

Under the title "Belgrade demanded his extradition in vain", we read in "Le Monde": "The brief information published in the press this morning revived, amongst the Yugoslav people, souvenirs of a past filled with sufferings and bitterness towards those who, by hiding Ante Pavelitch, for nearly fifteen years, obstructed the course of justice".(90) "Paris-Presse" points out the last shelter offered to the terrorist with this short, but significant phrase: "He ended up in a Franciscan monastery of Madrid".(91)

It is from there, in fact, that Pavelitch was taken to hospital where he paid his debt to nature—but not to justice, scoffed at by these "powerful accomplices" who are easy to identify.

Monseigneur Stepinac who had, as he said, a "clear conscience", stayed in Zagreb where he was tried in 1946. Condemned to hard labour, he was in fact only made to reside in his native village. The penance was easy to bear, as we can see, but the Church needs martyrs. The archbishop of Zagreb was then made a member of the holy cohort, in his lifetime, by Pius XII who hastened to confer on him the title of "Cardinal", in recognition of "his apostolate which displays the purest brightness".

We are acquainted with the symbolic meaning of the Cardinals' Purple: the one who dons it must be ready to confess his Faith "usque ad sanguinis effusionem": to the point of shedding blood. We cannot deny that this shedding was abundant in Croatia, during the apostolate of this holy man, but the blood which flowed there in torrents was not the prelate's: it was the blood of Orthodox believers and Jews. Must we see there a "reversibility of merits."

If that is the case, the right to cardinalship of Monseigneur Stepinac cannot be contested. In the diocese of Gornji Karlovac, part of his archbishopric, out of 460,000 Orthodox people who lived there, 50,000 were able to hide in the mountains, 50,000 were sent to Serbia, 40,000 were converted to Catholicism through the regime of terror and 280,000 were massacred".(92)

On the 19th of December 1958, we read in "Catholic France": "To exalt the greatness and heroism of His Eminence the Cardinal Stepinac, a great meeting will take place on the 21st of December 1958, at 4 o'clock, in the crypt of Sainte-Odile, 2, Avenue Stephane-Mallarme, Paris 17. It will be presided over by His Eminence the Cardinal Feltin, archbishop of Paris.

---

(90) "Le Monde", 31st of December 1959.

(91) "Paris-Presse", 31st of December 1959.

(92) Cf. Jean Hussard: "Vu en Yougoslavie" (Lausanne 1947, p.216).

Senator Ernest Pezet and the Reverend Father Dragoun, national rector of the Croatian Mission in France, will take part. His Excellency Monseigneur Rupp will celebrate mass and communion".

This is how a new figure, and not one of the least important, the one of Cardinal Stepinac, came to enrich the gallery of Great Jesuits.

Another aim of this meeting on the 21st of December 1958, in the crypt of Sainte-Odile, was to "launch" a book written in the defense of Zagreb's archbishop, by the R.P. Dragoun himself; Monseigneur Rupp, coadjutor of Cardinal Feltin, wrote the foreword. We cannot give here a full analysis but will say this:

The book is entitled "The Dossier of Cardinal Stepinac", which seems to promise the reader an objective exposition of the trial at Zagreb. In fact, in this volume which numbers 285 pages, we find the speeches of the archbishop's two counsels in full, accompanied by extensive remarks from the author, but, neither the charge itself, nor the speech for the prosecution are mentioned, even briefly.

The R.P. Dragoun seems to ignore the French proverb "Qui n'entend qu'une cloche n'entend qu'un son" (there are two sides to every story)-unless, of course, he knows it too well!

Be that as it may, this systematic obliteration of the opposite side of the story would be enough to close the debate.

Let us consider, though, the good reasons invoked for the discharge of Zagreb's archbishop. But first of all, this question: Was Monseigneur Stepinac really the metropolitan of Croatia and Slovenia? The book of the R.P. Dragoun does not answer this question. On page 142 of that book, we read this concerning the copy of a report by Monseigneur Stepinac, the authenticity of which was contested by the defence:

"In the text of the copy, the archbishop is described as "Metropolitan Croatiae et Slavoniae", but the archbishop is not a metropolitan and never presented himself as such.

This would clear the matter up if we didn't read, on page 114, the following taken from Monseigneur Stepinac's own declarations before the tribunal:

"The Holy See often emphasized that the small nations and the national minorities have the right to be free. Should not I, as "bishop and metropolitan", have the right to discuss it?" The more we read, the less we understand!

No matter! As we are reminded again and again, Monseigneur Stepinac could not influence in any way the behaviour of his flock and clergy. The

To those who bring out the articles of the Catholic press praising the accomplishments of Pavelitch and his hired assassins, the answer is: "It is simply ridiculous to make Monseigneur Stepinac responsible for what the newspaper wrote".

Even when this paper was the "Katolicki List", the most important Catholic publication in Zagreb, diocese of Monseigneur Stepinac! In those conditions, we won't bother mentioning the "Andjeo Cuvar" (The Guardian Angel) belonging to the Franciscans, the "Glasnik Sv. Ante" (The Voice of Saint-Anthony) to the conventuals of the "Katolicki Tjednik", (The Catholic Weekly) of Sarajevo, bishop Saritch, nor, of course, the "Vjesnik Pocasne Straze Srca Isusova" (The Publication of the Guard of Honour of the Heart of Jesus(!), belonging to the Jesuits).

So, it is claimed that Monseigneur Stepinac, "contested metropolitan", had no influence over these publications, of which he was president, and which constantly tried to surpass each other in their adulation of Pavelitch and his regime of blood.

Neither did he have any authority, so they say, over the "Oustachi" bishops Sacric, Garic, Aksamovic, Simrak, etc., who showered praise on the Poglavnik and applauded his crimes, nor over the "Crusaders" of the Catholic Action, these auxiliaries of "Oustachi" converters, nor over the Franciscans murderers, nor over the nuns of Zagreb who marched past, their hands raised in the hitlerian fashion.

What a strange "hierarchy" which had authority over nothing and nobody!

The fact that he sat, with ten other Catholic priests, in the "Sabor" ("Oustachi" Parliament) does not compromise the archbishop—or, at least, we must presume this, as the fact is simply ignored.

We should not reproach him either for his presidency over Episcopal Conferences nor over the Committee for the application of the Decree concerning the conversion of Orthodox people. In this apology, the "humanitarian" pretext of having made so many enter the Roman Church by force, is fully—and skilfully—expounded. We read this, concerning the "awful dilemma" facing Monseigneur Stepinac: "His pastoral duty was to maintain intact the canonical principles but, on the other hand, dissidents who refused to embrace Catholicism were massacred; so, he lessened the severity of the rules."

We become even more bewildered when we read a little further on: "He tried to resolve this dramatic alternative in the circular letter of the 2nd of March 1942, in which he ordered the priests to closely screen the motives for conversion".

This is indeed a peculiar method to "attenuate the severity of the rules" and resolve the "dramatic alternative"!

Was Monseigneur Stepinac opening or shutting the doors of the Roman Church to the false converts? It would be absolutely impossible to find it out if we referred only to this speech for the defence. The archbishop's apologists seem to choose the "shutting", though, when they declare: "... The cases of re-baptisms were very rare in the territory of Zagreb's archdiocese (92a)."

Unfortunately, statistics tell us otherwise, as we said earlier: "... In the diocese of Gornji Karlovac alone, part of Zagreb's archbishopric, 40,000 people were re-baptised".

It is evident that such results could be obtained only through mass-conversions of whole villages, such as Kamensko, in that same archdiocese of Monseigneur Stepinac, where 400 lost sheep returned to the Roman fold in one day, "spontaneously and without any pressure on the part of civil and ecclesiastical authorities".

Then why conceal these numbers? If they were really due to the "charitable sentiments" of the Croatian Catholic clergy, and not to the cynical exploitation of terror, they should have been proud of them. The truth is that the veil thrown over these infamies in an attempt to hide them is transparent and not wide enough. To cover Stepinac, others have to be uncovered: Bishops Saric, Garic, Simrak, the priests Bilogrivic, Kamber Bralo and their associates—the Franciscans and Jesuits have to be uncovered, and finally the Holy See.

We might as well leave this peculiar archbishop to enjoy his "clear conscience", this primate of Croatia supposedly stripped of any authority, calling himself "metropolitan" when he wasn't so and who, to crown the paradox, was opening doors when shutting them. But, at the side of this fantastic prelate, there was another one, consistent and corpulent, the R.P. Marcone, personnal representative of Pius XII.

Was this "Sancti Sedis legatus" also destitute of any authority over the Croatian clergy? Nobody knows! For the "dossier" so well expurgated makes no mention whatsoever of this great person; we could even be oblivious of his existence if we didn't have other information, such as photographs which show him officiating at Zagreb's cathedral, enthroned, amongst the "Oustachi" general-staff, and above all sharing a meal with the family of Pavelitch, the "practising" Catholic who organised the massacres.

Confronted by such a document, it is not surprising that the presence of the pope's representative was "blacked-out"; the mystics would call this "enlightening darkness"! But these few lines from the "dossier" are even more enlightening:

"The procurator himself, in his bill of indictment, names the Holy See's Secretary of State, Cardinal Maglione, who had, in 1942, advised Archbishop Stepinac to establish more cordial and sincere relations with the "Oustachi" authorities".(92b)

This is sufficient to put an end to any more quibbling.

(92a) R.P. Dragoun: "The Dossier of Cardinal Stepinac" (Nouvelles Editions Latines, Paris 1958, pages 46 and 163).

(92b) R.P. Dragoun: "The Dossier of Cardinal Stepinac", (Nouvelles Editions Latines, Paris 1958, p.32).

The collusion between the Vatican and the "Oustachi" murderers is clear enough. The Holy See itself was urging Monseigneur Stepinac to collaborate with them, and the personnal representative of Pius XII, by taking his place at Pavelitch's table, was applying the pontifical instructions to the letter: sincerity and cordiality in the relations with murderers of Orthodox believers and Jews.

This does not surprise us!

But what do the Jesuits think of it all, as they obstinately affirmed that the constant co-operation given to the dictators, by the prelates of His Holiness, was an "option" entirely personal and not dictated by the Vatican?

When Cardinal Maglione sent the previously mentioned recommendations to Zagreb's archbishop, was it his "personal option' he expressed, under the seal of the State's secretary's office?

The proof of the connivance between the Holy See and the "Oustachis" supplied by the R.P. Dragoun, which has just been mentioned, puts an end to this chapter.

But here is a new confirmation of the evangelical sentiments which flourished, and still flourish amongst the faithful of the Croatian Catholic Church towards the Orthodox Serbians.

The "Federation Ouvriere Croate en France" (Federation of Croatian workmen in France) sent out an invitation to the solemn meeting organised for Sunday, 19th of April 1959, at the "General Confederation of Christian workmen" centre, in Paris, to celebrate the 18th anniversary of the foundation of the "Oustachi" Croatian state.

This invitation read: "The ceremony will start with holy mass being said at the Church of Notre-Dame-de-Lorette. But the reader, edified by this pious start, is the more startled when he discovers, soon after, this straight exhortation: "DEATH TO THE SERBIANS... !"(93)

So, this not so banal document expresses the regrets that not more of these "brothers in Christ" were killed.

The book of the R.P. Dragoun, rector of the Croatian Mission in France, implies that the welcome given by the French Catholics to the Croatian refugees was not warm enough. We are told this on pages 59 and 60, and, on pages 280 and 281, the author mentions the "grevious disappointment" these refugees experienced at "being met by a total lack of understanding on the part of their brothers in the faith".

Considering the aforementioned document, this "lack of understanding" seems comprehensible; we are glad that our fellow-countrymen, in spite of the most grand invitations, show little sympathy to a form of piety in which the call to murder walks hand in hand with the "holy mass", in the best Roman and "Oustachi" tradition. We would be even more glad if such blood-thirsty tracts were not allowed to be printed and distributed openly in Paris itself.

(93) Cf. "Le Monde", 19th of April 1959.

On the 10th of February 1960, the infamous archbishop of Zagreb, Alois Stepinac, died at his native village of Karlovice, where he had been made to reside. This death gave the Vatican an opportunity to organise one of its spectacular manifestations for which it excels.

On that occasion, a lot had to be done as many Catholics had no illusions as far as the Stepinac "case" was concerned. So, the Holy See surpassed itself to give this apotheosis all the pomp possible. The "Osservatore Romano" and all the Catholic press dedicated many columns to the rapturous praises of the "martyr",, his "spiritual testament", and the speeches of His Holiness John XXIII proclaiming "his respect and supernatural affection"; these were the motives which prompted him to give to this cardinal who was not part of the Curia the honours of a solemn service at St. Peter's, in Rome, where he himself would give the General Absolution. And to complete this glorification, the press announced that the beatification of that illustrious person would soon be started.

We must admit that he deserved so much praise, and even the halo, for 'having observed the "holy obedience", and carried out to the letter the pressing instructions of the Holy See concerning the "cordial and sincere" relations wished for between himself and the "Oustachis".

But, even amongst Catholics, we hope that some will be found who will discern, behind the exaltation of this future saint and the burial under flowers of the bloody souvenirs of his "apostolate", the attempt of the Vatican to hide its own crime.

Chapter 4

The Jesuit movement in France before and during the 1939-1945 war

We have seen how the Catholic Action, with Leon Degrelle and his associates at the head, prepared the way for Hitler in the Belgium of "Christus Rex". In France, the same undermining action was going on; it started when Mussolini came to power and ended up, in 1940, with the collapse of the national defence. As for Belgium, it was, so we are told, the "spiritual values" which had to be restored for the good of the country. The F.N.C.: "Federation nationale catholique" (National Catholic Federation) was born and placed under the presidency of General de Castelnau; as many as three million adherents joined it. The choice of its chief was clever: the general, a great military figure and, then, 78 years of age, covered with his personal prestige—but, of course, unknown to him—an intense clerico-fascist propaganda programme.

That the F.N.C, as the whole Catholic Action, was Jesuit through and through is obvious to anyone. But we know also that the good Fathers, whose besetting sin is pride, like to put their signature on the creations of their genius. This they did for the F.N.C. when they consecrated this Catholic army to the Sacred-Heart of Jesus, a worship set up by their Company and whose basilica stands on Montmartre hill, from where Ignatius of Loyola and his companions set off to conquer the world.

A book concerning the F.N.C, whose foreword was written by the R.P. lanvier, preserved for posterity the act of consecration read "at the altar" by the old general. We will quote just a few phrases:

"Sacred Heart of Jesus, The chiefs and representatives of French Catholics, prostrating themselves now before you, have assembled and organised the National Catholic Federation (F.N.C.) to re-establish your reign over this land... All of us, those who are present and those who are absent, have not always been irreproachable... We carry the burden of the crimes the French nation committed against you... It is then with the view to repair and expiate that we present to you, today, our desires, intentions and unanimous resolution to re-establish over the whole of France your sacred and royal sovereignty, and liberate the souls of her children from a sacriligious teaching... We will not flinch any more before this fight for which you condescended to arm us. We want everything to be bent before and devoted to your service...

"Sacred Heart of Jesus, we beseech you, through the Virgin Mary, to receive the homage... "etc".(94)

As for the "crimes of the French nation", the same Catholic author enumerates them:

Fatal words and general directives: socialism is condemned... liberalism is condemned... Leo XIII showed that the freedom of worship is unjustifiable. The pope also showed that the freedom of speech and expression cannot be justifiably accorded... So, the freedom of thought, press, teaching and worship, considered by some as rights natural to man, cannot possibly be given...

"We must", said Pius XI, "re-instate these teachings and regulations of the Church".

Such is the main aim of the F.N.C., under the Hierarchy's control assured by the decentralization of the diocesan Committees.

"In the Catholic Action, as in the war, the famous word of General de Castelnau remains true: "Forward".(95)

This is certainly clear and explicit. We know, then, what to expect when we read this, from Pius XI: "The Catholic Action is the faithful's apostolate..." (Letter to Cardinal Van Roey, 15th of August 1929).

Strange apostolate, consisting of the rejection of all liberties valued by civilised countries and to be the patron of, instead of, of the totalitarian gospel! Is this "the right to communicate to other minds the treasures of Redemption"? (Pius XI, "Non abbiamo bisogno").

In Belgium Leon Degrelle and his friends, heroes of the Catholic Action spread around them these "treasures of Redemption"... revised and up-dated by the Jesuit Father Staempfle, the discreet author of "Mein Kampf".

It was the same in France where lay apostles, "joining in the activity of the hierarchical apostolate" (Pius XI "dixit"), were busy setting up another "collaboration". Let us read what Franz von Papen, the pope's secret chamberlain and the Fuhrer's right hand man, wrote concerning this subject:

"Our first meeting took place in 1927, when a German delegation, to which I had the honour to belong, came to Paris, for the "Social Week of the Catholic Institute", under the presidency of Monseigneur Baudrillart

---

(94) and (95) Georges Viance: "La Federation nationale catholique", foreword by the R.P. Janvier (Flammarion, Paris 1930, pp. 186,187,188,78).

This was indeed a fruitful first contact as it marked the start of a long exchange of visits between important personalities from France and Germany.

"On the French side, the RR. PP. Delattre (Jesuit), de la Briere (Jesuit) and Denset (Jesuit)... were present at these conferences".(96)

Further on, the good apostle adds that, at times, "this conference of Catholics reached superhuman heights of greatness".

This "greatness" reached its zenith on the 14th of June 1940, the day which saw the flag adorned with the swastika fly victoriously over Paris. We know that Goebbels, chief of hitlerian propaganda, indicated that date three months before, on the 14th of March, and that the German offensive was only launched on the 10th of May.

The accuracy of this forecast is not as astonishing as it may seem.

"Here is the secret report of agent 654 J.56, working for the German Secret Service, who sent these revelations to Himmler: "Paris, 5th of July 1939. "I can declare that, in France, the situation is now in our hands. Everything is ready for J day and all our agents are at their posts. Within a few weeks, the police force and military system will collapse like a pack of cards".

Many secret documents relate that the traitors had been chosen a long time before. Men like Luchaire, Bucard, Deat, Doriot... and Abel Bonnard (of the French Academy)".(97)

(This particular one fled to Spain at the Liberation. He came back to France on the 1st of July 1958, gave himself up, but was immediately released on a temporary basis by the president of the High-Court of Justice!)

The extremely well documented book of M. Andre Guerber gives details of payments allocated to these traitors by the German SR. This money was well and truly earned, for their work was very effective. Besides, the atmosphere had been prepared for a long time, now. To "regenerate" the land according to the wishes of the Catholic Action, a whole brood of apprentice-dictators, on the model of Leon Degrelle, had hatched, men like Deat, Bucard, Doriot who was—according to M. Andre Guerber—"agent No.56 BK of the German Secret Service". Of all this motley band he was also the one best thought of by the archbishopric and those well-disposed towards them... and, of course, by Hitler who, later on at Sigmaringen, gave him full power.

Doriot was the rising star; but, for the immediate future and to treat cautiously the transition after the foreseen and wanted defeat, another man was needed, a highly respected military chief who would be able to dress up the disaster and present it as a "national recovery".

---

(96) Franz von Papen: "Memoires" (Flammarion, Paris 1953, p.91). (97) Andre Guerber: "Himmler et ses crimes" (Les Documents Nuit et Jour, Paris, 1981)

In 1936 already, Canon Coube wrote: "The Lord who brought forth Charlemagne and the heroes of the Crusades can still raise up saviours... Amongst us, there must be men whom He has marked with His seal and who will be revealed when his time has come... Amongst us, there must be men of the cloth who are the workmen in the great national restorations. But what are the necessary conditions they need to accomplish this mission? Natural qualities of intelligence and character; also supernatural qualities that is to say obedience to God and His Law is just as indispensable, as this political work is moral and religious before anything else. These saviours are men with generous hearts who work only for the glory of God..."(98)

When the disciple of Loyola expounded these political and religious thoughts, he knew who this pious "saviour" would be, as his name was not a secret amongst clerics and fascists; this is told us by M. Francois Ternand:

"A clever and persistant propaganda campaign began in favour of a "Petain dictatorship"...

"In 1935, Gustave Herve published a pamphlet which we are going to examine... The tract is entitled "We need Petain"... its foreword is an enthusiastic apology of the "Italian recovery" and "the even more amazing recovery of Germany", also an exaltation of the wonderful chiefs who were the authors of these recoveries. Now what about our own French people?... There is a man around whom we could gather... We also have a providential man... Do you want to know his name? It is Petain".

"We need Petain", for the homeland is in a dangerous position; and not only the homeland, but Catholicism also: "Christian civilisation is condemned to death if a dictatorial regime is not set up in every country"...

"Listen: "In peace time, a regime can only be swept away by a coup d'Etat if it is willing or if it has no support from the army and administrations. The operation can be a success only through a war and especially a defeat".(99)

So, the path to follow was already made clear in 1935 to "re-christianise" France, the regime had to be swept away, and the best way to attain this was to suffer a military defeat which would place us under the German yoke. In 1943, this was confirmed by Pierre Laval, the pope's count and president of the Vichy government:

"I hope Germany will be victorious. It may seem strange to hear the one who is defeated wish for the victor's victory. It is because this war is not like previous ones. It is a true war of religion! Yes, a war of religion".(100)

(98) Canon Coube: "Sainte Therese de l'Enfant Jesus et les crises du temps present", (Flammarion, Paris 1936, pp.165 ss). Imprimatur: 11th of January 1936.

(99) Francois Tenand: "L'Ascension politique du Marechal Petain", (Ed. du livre francais, Paris 1946, pp.40 ss).

(100) National Radio, 2nd of January 1943.

This indeed was what the Church wanted, even though unpleasant for the forgetful Jesuit Fessard, whom we mentioned earlier on, who doesn't want to know any more what was said on the American radio for the 20 million listeners of the "Christian Front", by his Loyolan brother Father Coughlin: "The German war is a battle for Christianity".(101)

But during the same period, in occupied France, Cardinal Baudrillart, rector of the Catholic Institute in Paris, was saying the same thing. Listen to him:

"Hitler's war is a noble enterprise undertaken for the defence of European culture".(102)

So, on both sides of the Atlantic, as indeed all over the world, the clerical voices were singing the praises of victorious Nazism.

In France, Cardinal Suhard, archbishop of Paris, set the example to all the episcopate by "collaborating" fully, and so did the Jesuit nuncio Monseigneur Valerio Valeri.

After the Liberation, the government asked the Vatican to recall no less than thirty bishops and archbishops who were deeply compromised. In the end, it consented to recall three of them.

"France has forgotten...", wrote M. Maurice Nadeau. 'La Croix', the most dangerous mouthpiece at the service of collaboration, takes its place amongst the publications of a liberated France; the prelates who were urging the French youth to work for the victory of Germany have not been brought to trial".(103)

One could read in "Artaban" of the 13th of December 1957:

"In 1944, 'La Croix' was prosecuted for having favoured the enemy and brought before the Court of Justice in Paris; the case was put in the hands of Judge Raoult who dismissed it. The affair was discussed at the Chamber, on the 13th of March 1946 (see J.O. Parliamentary Debates, pages 713-714) and it was learned, then, that M. de Menthon, minister for Justice and thorough at purging the French press, had spoken in favour of'La Croix'.

In fact, "the voice of pontifical thought"—as Pius XII called it, in 1942, when sending it his blessing—was the only one exempted from the general measures taken to suppress all the newspapers published during the occupation, even though, as 'Artaban' reminds us:

"'La Croix' received instructions from the German Lieutenant Sahm and, in Vichy, from Pierre Laval".

Of course, the 'pontifical thought' and hitlerian instructions happily coincided. This is confirmed when we study the war-time editions of this estimable paper.

(101) 7th of July 1941.

(102) 30th of July 1941. ,

(103) Foreword to "L'Eglise a-t-elle collabore"?, by Jean Cotereau (Spartacus, Paris, May 1946).

One of the Jesuits' attributions, and not one of the least important, is to supervise all the Catholic press. In the various papers adapted to the need of their readers, they bring out, as necessary, the various shades of the 'pontifical thought' which, under its undulating aspects, nevertheless reaches implacably towards its aims. There is not one "Christian newspaper or periodical that does not enjoy the collaboration of some-discreet—Jesuits.

These Fathers who are "all things to all men" are of course the best at playing Chameleons. This they did, as we know, and, after the Liberation, we had the surprise to see coming up, everywhere, Fathers "who had belonged to the resistance" (they joined it later than others!), and who testified that the Church had NEVER NEVER "collaborated".

Forgotten, abolished, evaporated were the articles of 'La Croix' and other Catholic newspapers, the episcopal mandates, the pastoral letters, the official communications from the Assembly of Cardinals and Archbishops, the exhortations of Cardinal Baudrillart calling on French youths to don the nazi uniform and serve in the L.V.F. after having taken an oath of allegiance to Hitler! All this was past and forgotten!

"History is a novel", said a disillusioned thinker. The one of our epoch will be true to this definition: the novel is being written under our eyes. Many 'historians' are contributing to it, well-disposed ecclesiastics and laymen, and we can be certain that the result will be edifying: a Catholic novel, of course. The Jesuits' contribution is extensive, as worthy heirs of Father Loriquet whose "History of France" gave such a fanciful picture of Napoleon.

Compared to this skilful feat, it was a simple matter to camouflage the collaboration between the clerics and the German occupier, from 1940 to 1944, and make it vanish. And this is still going on; over the years, so many articles have been written in newspapers, periodicals, books, under the patronage of the "Imprimatur", to sing the praise of the misjudged super-patriots such as Suhard, Baudrillart, Duthoit, Auvity, Du Bois de la Villerabel, Mayol de Luppe, etc.! What a lot of pages blackened to exalt the attitude—so heroic—of the episcopate, during the war years in which France experienced "a situation which led the French bishops to become the "defenders of the city"!, as a wry joker wrote.(104)

"Slander, and slander again! there is bound to be something left", advised Basile, this perfect type of Jesuit. "Whitewash, and whitewash again", say his successors, great writers of "historical novels".

And this whitewashing is being carried out extensively.

Future generations, submerged by a torrent of exaggerations, will devote a thankful thought—at least, we hope they will—to these "defenders" of the city, these heroes of the Roman Church and Homeland, "dressed with a candid honesty of white linen" by the work of their apologists; some of them were even canonised!

---

(104) R.P. Deroo: "L'Episcopat francais dans la melee de son temps", (Bonne Presse, Paris 1955, p. 103). Imprimatur 1955.

On the 25th of August 1944, the Jesuit Cardinal Suhard, archbishop of Paris (since the 11th of May 1940!) and leader of the clerical collaborators, imperturbably decided to celebrate the "Te Deum" of victory at Notre-Dame. We were spared this unseemly farce only through "the strong protest of the general chaplain of the F.F.I."

We read in "France-Dimanche" of the 26th of December 1948: "His Eminence, Cardinal Suhard, archbishop of Paris, on the anniversary of his entering the priesthood has just received an autographic letter from His Holiness Pius XII who congratulates him, amongst other things, for the part he played during the occupation. We know that the cardinal's behaviour during that period had been severely criticized after the Liberation. When General de Gaulle arrived back in Paris, in August 1944, he refused to meet the cardinal at the "Te Deum" in Notre-Dame. At that time, the prelate was openly accused of "collaborationist tendencies".

The Holy-Father's congratulations are then understandable. But there is another story of "Te Deum" even more edifying!:

After the allies disembarked, the city of Rennes suffered much in the fighting which followed, and many died amongst the civilian population as the commanding officer of the German garrison had refused to evacuate them. When the city was taken, the traditional "Te Deum" was going to be celebrated, but the archbishop and primate of Britany, Monseigneur Roques, absolutely refused, not only to officiate himself but also to allow this ceremony to take place in his cathedral. To thank Heaven for the liberation of his city was an intolerable scandal to the eyes of this prelate. Because of this attitude, he was confined to the archbishop's residence by the French authorities.

Such loyalty to the "pontifical thought" called for an equivalent reward. It came from Rome, soon after, in the shape of a Cardinal's hat.

We can blame the late Pius XII with many things, but we must admit that he always "acknowledged his own". A flattering letter to Cardinal Suhard, distinguished collaborator, the Cardinal's purple for Monseigneur Roques, hero of the... German Resistance: this "great pope" was practising a strict distributive justice.

Of course, his entourage was of the kind which could advise him wisely: two German Jesuits, R.P. Leiber and R.P. Hentrich, "his two private secretaries and his favourites".(105) His confessor was the German Jesuit Bea. Sister Pasqualina, a German nun, supervised his household and above all cooked for him. Even the canary, answering to the sweet name of "Dumpfaf", had been imported from beyond the Rhine.

---

(105) 'La Croix', 10th of October 1958.

But had not the Sovereign Pontiff told Ribbentrop, after Hitler invaded Poland, that "he would always have a special affection for Germany"?(106).

---

(106) We read in "Documentation catholique" of the 15th of March 1959: "As far as the very estimable German nation is concerned, we will follow the example given to us by our Predecessor (Pius XII), signed John XXIII. The spirit of continuity is one of the Vatican's attributes.

Section V

Chapter 5

The Gestapo and the Company of Jesus

If Pius XI and Pius XII's goodwill and friendliness never failed towards the Fuhrer whom they had brought to power, we must admit that he fullfiled all the conditions of the pact by which he was bound to the Vatican. As he had expressly promised to "strangle" the anticlericals, they soon followed the liberals and Jews into the concentration camps. We know how the chief of the Third Reich had decided the fate of the Jews: they were simply massacred or, when more advantagous, made to work until worn out then liquidated. In this case the 'final solution' was only delayed.

But let us see, first, how an especially "authorised" personality, Franco, Knight of the Order of Christ, expressly confirmed the collusion between the Vatican and the nazis. According to "Reforme", this is what the press of the Spanish dictator (Franco) published on the 3rd of May 1945, the day of Hitler's death:

"Adolf Hitler, son of the Catholic Church, died while defending Christianity. It is therefore understandable that words cannot be found to lament over his death, when so many were found to exalt his life. Over his mortal remains stands his victorious moral figure. With the palm of the martyr, God gives Hitler the laurels of Victory".(107)

This funeral oration of the nazi chief, a challenge to the victorious allies, is voiced by the Holy See itself, under the cover of Franco's press. It is a communique of the Vatican given via Madrid.

Of course, this missing hero well deserved the gratitude of the Roman Church and they do not attempt to conceal it. He served her faithfully: all those this Church pointed out to him as her adversaries felt the consequences. And this good 'son' wasn't slow in admitting what he owed to his Most Holy Mother, and especially to those who made themselves her soldiers in the world.

---

(107) "Reforme", 21st of July 1945.

"I learned much from the Order of the Jesuits", said Hitler... "Until now, there has never been anything more grandiose, on the earth, than the hierarchical organisation of the Catholic Church. I transferred much of this organisation into my own party... I am going to let you in on a secret... I am founding an Order... In my "Burgs" of the Order, we will raise up a youth which will make the world tremble... Hitler then stopped, saying that he couldn't say any more.."(108)

Another highly placed hitlerian, Walter Schellenberg, former chief of the German counter-espionage, completed this confidence from the Fuhrer, after the war:

"The S.S. organisation had been constituted, by Himmler, according to the principles of the Jesuits' Order. Their regulations and the Spiritual Exercises prescribed by Ignatius of Loyola were the model Himmler tried to copy exactly... The "Reichsfuhrer SS"—Himmler's title as supreme chief of the SS—was to be the equivalent of the Jesuits' "General" and the whole structure of the direction was a close imitation of the Catholic Church's hierarchical order. A mediaeval castle, near Paderborn in Westphalia, and called "Webelsbourg", was restored; it became what could be called a SS monastery".(109)

For their part, the best theological pens were busy demonstrating the similarity between the Catholic and Nazi doctrines. And, for that work, the sons of Loyola were the busiest. As an example, let us see how Michaele Schmaus, Jesuit theologian, presented to the public a series of studies on this subject:

"Empire and Church" is a series of writings which should help the building up of the Third Reich as it unites a national-socialist state to Catholic-christianity... The national-socialist movement is the most vigorous and massive protest against the spirit of the 19th and 20th centuries... A compromise between the Catholic faith and liberal thinking is impossible... Nothing is more contrary to Catholicism than democracy... The re-awakened meaning of "strict authority" opens up again the way to the real interpretation of ecclesiastical authority... The mistrust of liberty is founded on the Catholic doctrine of original sin... The national-socialist Commandments and those of the Catholic Church have the same aim..."(110)

---

(108) Hermann Rauschning, former national-socialist chief of the government of Dantzig: "Hitler m'a dit", (Ed. Co-operation, Paris 1939, pp.266, 267, 273 ss).

(109) Walter Schellenberg: "Le Chef du contre-espionnage nazi vous parle" (Julliard, Paris 1957, pp.23-24).

(110) "Begegnungen zwichen Katholischen Christentum und nazional-sozialitischer Weltanchaunung", by Michaele Schmaus, professor at the Faculty of Theology of Munich. (Aschendorf, Munster 1933).

This aim was the "new middle-ages" Hitler promised Europe. The similarity is obvious between the passionate anti-liberalism of this Jesuit from Munich and the equal fanaticism expressed during the "act of consecration of the F.N.C. in the basilica of Montmartre". During the occupation, the R.P. Merklen wrote: "These days, liberty no longer seems to merit any esteem".(111)

Quotations such as these could be multiplied by the thousand. Is not this hatred of liberty under all its forms the character itself of the Roman Master? It is easy also to understand how the Catholic "doctrine" and the nazi "doctrine" could harmonise so well. The one who ably demonstrated this accord, "The Jesuit Michaele Schmaus", was called by 'La Croix', ten years after the war, the "great theologian of Munich"(112), and nobody will be surprised to learn that he was made a "Prince of the Church" by Pius XII.

Under the circumstances, what becomes of the "terrible" encyclical letter "Mit brennender Sorge", from Pius XI, which was supposed to condemn nazism? No casuist has tried to tell us... naturally!

The "great theologian" Michaele Schmaus had many rivals, according to a German author who sees in the "Katolisch-Konservatives Erbgut" the strangest book ever published by the German Catholic Publications:

"This anthology which brings together texts from the main Catholic theorists of Germany, from Gorres to Vogelsang, makes us believe that national-socialism was born out of Catholic ideas".(113)

When writing this, the author certainly didn't realise he was describing it so perfectly.

Another well informed person, the mainspring of the pact between the Holy See and Berlin and the pope's secret chamberlain, Franz von Papen, was even more explicit:

"The Third Reich is the first world power which not only acknowledges but also puts into practice the high principles of the papacy".(114)

To this, we will add the result of this "putting into practice": 25 million victims of the concentration camps—the official figure issued by the United Nations Organisation.

Here, we find it necessary to add something especially for candid minds, for those who cannot admit that the organised massacres were one of the papacy's "high principles". Of course, this candour is diligently maintained:

---

(111) "La Croix", 2nd of September 1951.

(112) "La Croix", 2nd of September 1954.

(113) Gunter Buxbaum- "Les Catholiques en Europe centrale" ("Mercure de France", 15th of January 1939).

(114) Robert d'Harcourt of the French Academy: "Franz von Papen, l'homme a tout faire" L'Aube, 3rd of October 1946).

—"Such barbarian deeds belong to the past"!

So say some good apostles to the simple, while shrugging their shoulders before the non-catholics "for whom the fires of the Holy Inquisition are still burning".(115)

So be it! Let us set aside the superabundant testimonies about the clerical ferocity of years gone by to consider the 20th century.

We will not recall either the exploits of men like Stepinac and Marcone in Croatia, nor Tiso in Slovakia, but will confine ourselves to examining the orthodoxy of certain "high principles" they put so well into practice.

Are they really out-dated today—these principles—disowned by an "enlightened doctrine", officially rejected by the Holy See with other mistakes of a dark past? It is easy to find out.

Let us, for example, open the "Great Apologetics", by the Abbe Jean Vieujan, which can hardly be described as mediaeval as it is dated "1937". What do we read?

"To accept the principle of the Inquisition, one only needs a Christian mentality, and this is what many Christians lack... The Church has no such timidity".(116)

One could not put it better.

Is another proof, no less orthodox and modern, necessary? Listen to the R.P. Janvier, a famous conference speaker at Notre-Dame:

"By virtue of her indirect power over temporal matters, should not the Church have the right to expect Catholic States to oppress heretics even to the point of death, so as to suppress them?

Here is my answer:

"I do advocate this, even to the point of death!... Leaning first of all on the practice, then on the teaching of the Church itself; and I am convinced that no Catholic would say the opposite without erring gravely".(117)

We could not accuse this theologian of speaking in riddles. His speech is clear and concise. It would be impossible to say more with fewer words. Everything is there, concerning the right the Church arrogates to herself to exterminate those whose beliefs do not correspond with hers: the "teaching" which compels her, the "practice" which legitimates by tradition, and even the "call to the Christian states", of which the hitlerian crusade was such a perfect example.

The following words, far from ambigious, were not pronounced in the darkness of the Middle-Ages either:

"The Church can condemn heretics to death, for any rights they have are only through our tolerance, and these rights are apparent not real". The author of this was the Jesuits' general Franz Wernz (1906-1915), and the fact that he was German as well gives even more weight to his declration.

---

(115) "Temoignage chretien", 6th of December 1957.

(116) Abbe Jean Vieujan: "Grande Apologetique" (Bloud et Gay, Paris 1937, p.1316).

(117) Conference of the 25th of March 1912.

During the 20th century also, Cardinal Lepicier, notoroius prince of the Church, wrote: "If someone professes publicly to be an heretic or tries to pervert others, by his speech or example, he can not only be excommunicated, but also justly killed..."(118 & 118a). If that's not a characteristic appeal to murder, I might as well be "changed into a peppermill" as the late Courteline said.

Is the Sovereign Pontiffs contribution wanted as well? Here it is, from a modern pope whose "liberalism" was criticised by intransigent clerics, the Jesuit Pope Leo XIII: "Anathema on the one who says: the Holy Spirit does not want us to kill the heretic".

What higher authority could be invoked after this one, apart from that of the Holy Spirit?

Even though this may displease those who manipulate the smokescreen (reference to those who put out smoke signals during the choice of a Pope), the soothers of disquieted consciences, the papacy's "high principles" remain unchanged and, amongst other things, the extermination for the Faith is as valid and canonical today as it was in the past. A conclusion most "enlightening"—to use a word dear to mystics—when we consider what happened in Europe between 1939 and 1945.

"Hitler, Goebbels, Himmler and most members of the party's "old guard" were Catholics", wrote M. Frederic Hoffet. "It was not by accident that, because of its chiefs' religion, the National-socialist government was the most Catholic Germany ever had... This kinship between National-socialism and Catholicism is most striking if we study closely the propaganda methods and the interior organisation of the party. On that subject, nothing is more instructive than Joseph Goebbel's works. He had been brought up in a Jesuit college and was a seminarist before devoting himself to literature and politics... Every page, every line of his writings recall the teaching of his masters; so he stresses obedience... the contempt for truth... "Some lies are as useful as bread!" he proclaimed by virtue of a moral relativism extracted from Ignatius of Loyola's writings..."(119)

Hitler did not award the palm of Jesuitism to his chief of propaganda, though to the Gestapo's chief, as he told his favourites: "I can see Himmler as our Ignatius of Loyola"(120).

(118) "De stabilitate et progressu dogmatis", first part, art VI 9 I ("Typographia editrix romana, Romae 1908").

(118a) See Sol Ferrer-Francisco Ferrer. Un Martyr au XXe siecle (Fischbacher, Paris). (119)) Frederic Hoffet: "L'lmperialisme protestant" (Flammarion, Paris 1948, pp.172 ss). (120) Adolf Hitler: "Libres propos" (Flammarion, Paris 1952, p.164).

To speak thus, the Fuhrer must have had some good reasons. First of all, we notice that Kurt Heinrich Himmler, Reichsfuhrer of the SS, Gestapo and German police forces, seemed to be the one most impregnated by clericalism amongst the Catholic members of Hitler's entourage. His father had been director of a Catholic school in Munich, then tutor of Prince Ruprecht of Bavaria. His brother, a Benedictine monk, lived at the monastery of Maria Laach, one of the Pan-German high places. He also had an uncle who had held the important position of Canon at the Court of Bavaria, the Jesuit Himmler.

The German author Walter Hagen gives also this discreet information: "The Jesuits' general, Count Halke von Ledochowski, was ready to organise, on the common basis of anti-communism, some collaboration between the German Secret Service and the Jesuit Order".(121)

As a result, within the SS Central Security Service, an organisation was created, and most of its main posts were held by Catholic priests wearing the black uniform of the SS. The Jesuit Father Himmler was one of its superior officers.

After the Third Reich's capitulation, the Jesuit Father Himmler was arrested and imprisoned at Nuremberg. His hearing by the international tribunal would have apparently been most interesting, but Providence was keeping a watchful eye: Heinrich Himmler's uncle never appeared before that court. One morning, he WAS FOUND DEAD IN HIS CELL, and the public never learned the cause of his death.

We will not insult the memory of this cleric by supposing that he willingly ended his days, against the solemn teaching laws of the Roman Church.

Nevertheless, his death was as sudden and opportune as the one of another Jesuit, sometime before, Father Staempfle, the unrecognised author of 'Mein Kampf'. Strange coincidence indeed...

But let us come back to Kurt Heinrich Himmler, chief of the Gestapo, which meant he held in his hand the essential reins of power of the regime. Was it his personal merits which earned him such a high position? Did Hitler see in him a superior genius when he compared him to the creator of the Jesuit Order? It is certainly not what the testimonies of those who knew him imply as they saw in him nothing more than mediocrity.

Was that star shining with a borrowed brightness? Was it really Kurt Heinrich Himmler, the ostensible chief, who actually reigned over the Gestapo and the secret services? Who was sending millions of people, deported for political reasons, and Jews to their death? Was it the flat-faced nephew or the uncle, former Canon at the Court of Bavaria, one of von Ledochowski's favourites, a Jesuit Father and superior officer of the SS?

It may seem reckless, and even presumptuous, to take such an indiscreet look behind the scenes of History. The play is performed on the stage, before the combined lights of the footlights, the stagelights and the arc lights. This is normal for any show; and the one who wants to see behind the props may well be regarded as troublesome and ill-bred.

---

(121) Walter Hagen, op.cit., p.358.

However, the spell binding actors on whom the public's gaze is fixed have all come from behind the scenes. This is more than evident when we study these "sacred monsters" and realise that they are far from equal to the individuals they are supposed to represent.

Such seems to have been the case of Himmler. But wouldn't it be right to say the same of the one whom he helped as his right hand man, Hitler?

When we saw Hitler gesticulating on the screens or heard him bawling his hysterical speeches, did we not have the impression of looking at the movements of an automaton ill adjusted, with overstretched springs? Even his most simple and composed movements reminded us of a mechanical puppet. And what about his dull and globular eyes, flabby nose, bloated physiognomy whose vulgarity could not be disguised by that famous lock of hair and brush moustache which seemed glued under his nostrils.

Was this snarler at public meetings really a chief? the "real" master of Germany, an "authentic" Statesman whose genius was going to turn the world upside-down?

Or was he just a bad substitute for all that? A covering skin cleverly blown up and a phantom for the use of the masses, a rabble rouser?

He himself admitted it when he said: "I am only a clarion". M. Francois-Poncet, then French ambassador to Berlin, confirms that Hitler worked very little, was not a reader and let his collaborators have their own way.

His helpers gave the same impression of emptiness and unreality. The first one, Rudolf Hess, who flew to England in 1941, looked on his own trial at Nuremberg as a total stranger, and we never learned if he was completely insane or just a lunatic. The second one was the grotesque Goering, vain and obese, who wore the most spectacular comic-opera uniforms, a glutton, a great robber of paintings and, to top it all, a morphine drug addict.

The other main personalities of the party bore the same resemblance and, at the trials of Nuremberg, it was one of the journalists greatest surprises to have to report that—apart from their own particular defects— these Nazi heroes lacked in intellect, character, and were more or less insignificant.

The only one who stood above that vulgar mob—because of his astuteness and not his moral worth—was Franz von Papen the chamberlain of His holiness, "the man for every job"... who was bound to be acquitted.

If the Fuhrer comes out as an extraordinary puppet, was the one he modelled himself upon more consistent? Let us recall the ridiculous exhibitions of that "Caesar fit for a carnival", rolling his big black eyes that he wanted to flash under that strange hat decorated with curtain tassels! And those photographs meant for propaganda, taken from his feet and depicting only his jaws, jutting out against the sky, the wonder man, as an immovable rock—symbol of a will which knew no obstacles!

What a will! From the confidences of some of his companions, we get the picture of a man constantly undecided; this "formidable man" who was going to "invade everything", with elemental force (to use terms of Cardinal Ratti, future Pius XI), did not resist the advances made to him by the Jesuit Cardinal Gasparri, secretary of State, on behalf of the Vatican.

Just a few secret meetings persuaded the revolutionist to enlist bag and baggage under the Holy Father's standard, to carve out the brilliant career we know so well, and the well known former minister Carlo Sforza could write:

"One day, when time will have attenuated the bitterness and hatred, it will be recognised we hope, that the orgy of bloody brutalities which turned Italy into a prison for twenty years, and ruins through the 1940-1945 war, found its origin in an almost unique historical case: the utter disproportion between the legend artificially created around a name and the real capacities of the poor devil who bore that name, a man who was not obstructed by culture".(122)

This perfect formula is applicable to Hitler, as well as Mussolini: same disproportion between the legend and capacities, same lack of "culture" in those two mediocre adventurers with almost identical pasts; their lightning careers can find an explanation only in their gift for haranguing the masses, a gift which brought them before the glare of publicity.

That the legend was "artifically created" is evident enough when we know that, today, the Fuhrer's retrospective apparition on the screens of Germany provokes nothing more than a huge laugh.

But was not the obvious inferiority of these "providential men" the very reason for which they were chosen to be elevated to power? The fact is that the same lack of personal qualities can be found in all those the papacy elected to be its champions.

In Italy and Germany, there were some "real" statesmen, "real" chiefs, who were able to take the helm and govern without having to resort to this delirious "mystic". But these were too bright intellectually and not sufficiently pliable. The Vatican, and especially the "black pope", von Ledochowski, could not have held them "as a baton in his hand", according to the fiery formula, and made them serve his aims at all costs until catastrophe struck.

We have seen how the revolutionist Mussolini was turned inside out, as one would do with a glove, by the Holy See's emissaries who promised him power.

---

(122) Count Carlo Sforza: "L'ltalie telle que je l'ai vue", (Grasset, Paris 1946, p.158).

The unbending Hitler was to prove just as malleable. The Ledochowski's plan was, originally, to create a federation of the Catholic nations in central and eastern Europe, in which Bavaria and Austria (governed by the Jesuit Seipel) would have had the pre-eminence. Bavaria had to be separated from the German Republic of Weimar—and, as by chance, the agitator Hitler, of Austrian origin, was then a Bavarian separatist.

But the chance to realise this federation and place a Hapsburg at its head became more and more slim, whilst Monseigneur Pacelli, the nuncio who had left Munich for Berlin, became the more conscious of the German Republic's weakness because of the poor support the Allies gave it. The hope to get hold of Germany as a whole was then born at the Vatican and the plan was modified accordingly:

"The hegemony of Protestant Prussia had to be prevented and as the Reich was to dominate Europe—to avert the Germans' federalism—a Reich had to be reconstituted in which the Catholics would be masters".(123)

This was enough. Turning completely round with his "brown shirts", Hitler, who had been until then a Bavarian separatist, became overnight the inspired Apostle of the Great Reich.

---

(123) Mercure de France: "Pius XI and Hitler", 15th of January 1934.

Chapter 6

The Death Camps and the Anti-Semitic Crusade

To what extent the Catholics were masters of Nazi Germany soon became apparent as also did the severity with which some of the "Papacy's high principles" were applied.

The liberals and Jews had plenty of spare time to find out that these principles were far from out-dated, as the most orthodox voices confirmed it. The right the Church arrogates herself to exterminate slowly or speedily those who are in the way was "put into practice" at Auschwitz, Dachau, Belsen, Buchenwald, and other death camps.

The Gestapo of Himmler, "our Ignatius of Loyola", diligently performed these charitable deeds; civilian and military Germany had to submit "perinde ac cadaver" to this all-powerful organisation.

No need to say that the Vatican washed its hands of these horrors. When giving an audience to Dr Nerin F. Gun, a Swiss journalist who had been deported himself and who wondered why the pope had not intervened, at least by providing some assistance to so many unfortunate people, His Holiness Pius XII had the affrontery to answer:

"We knew that, for political reasons, violent persecutions were taking place in Germany, but We were never informed as to the inhuman character of the Nazi repression".(124)

And that at the time when the speaker of Radio Vatican, the R.P. Mistiaen, was declaring that "overwhelming documentary proof" concerning the cruelty of the Nazis had been received".(125)

Without any doubt, the Holy Father was not informed either on what was going on in the "Oustachi" concentration camps, in spite of his own legate's presence in Zagreb.

---

(124) "Gazette of Lausanne", 15th of November 1945.

(125) R.P. Duclos: "Le Vatican et la seconde guerre mondiale", (Ed. Pedone, Paris 1955. p.255) Imprimatur 1955.

Once, though, the Holy See was seen to take some interest in the fate of certain people condemned to deportation. They were 528 Protestant missionaries, survivors of all those who had been taken prisoners, by the Japanese, in the islands of the Pacific and interned in concentration camps in the Philippines. M. Andre Ribard, in his excellent book "1960 and the secret of the Vatican", reveals the pontifical intervention on behalf of these unfortunates.

The text appears under No.1591, dated: Tokio 6th of April 1943, in a report from the Department for Religious Affairs in occupied territories, and I quote the following extract: it expressed the wish of the Roman Church to see the Japanese pursue their politics and prevent certain religious propagators of error to regain a freedom to which they were not entitled".(126)

From the "Christian" point of view, this charitable step needs no comment, but is it not most significant, politically speaking? In Slovakia— as we know—Monseigneur Tiso, the Jesuit Gauleiter, was also free to persecute the "separated brethren" even though Germany, to which his State was a satellite, was mainly Protestant. It says a lot about the influence the Roman Church had in the Hitlerian Reich!

We have also seen the part played in Croatia by the representatives of that Church, in the extermination of Orthodox believers.

As for the anti-Jewish crusade, the Gestapo's masterpiece, it may seem superfluous to mention again the part played in it by Rome, as we have already related the exploits of Monseigneur Tiso, the first provider of Auschwitz's gas chambers and crematoria furnaces. We will just add a few characteristic documents to this dossier.

First of all, here is a letter from M. Leon Berard, ambassador of the Vichy government to the Holy See:

Marshall Petain, Sir,

In your letter dated 7th of August 1941, you honoured me in asking certain information touching the questions and difficulties which could arise, from the Roman Catholic point of view, out of the measures your government took concerning the Jews. I have the honour to answer that nothing has been said to me, at the Vatican, which could be interpreted as a criticism or disapproval of the laws or directive deeds in question..."(127)

The periodical "L'Arche", when mentioning this letter in an article entitled "The Silence of Pius XII", tells of a subsequent and complementary report which M. Leon Berard sent to Vichy on the 2nd of September 1941:

---

(126) Andre Ribard: "1960 et le secret du Vatican", (Librairie Robin, 38, rue de Vaugirard. Paris 1954, p.80) and Frederic Hoffet: "Politique romaine et demission des Protestants" (demission des laiques) (Fischbacher, Paris).

(127) and (129) Leon Poliakov: "Breviaire de la haine" (Calmann-Levy, Paris 1951, pp 345, 350, 351).

Is there a contradiction between the Status of the Jews and the Catholic doctrine? Only one, and Leon Berard respectfully points it out to the head of State. It resides in the fact that the law of the 2nd of June 1941 defines the Jews as a race... The Church (wrote Vichy's ambassador), never professed that the same rights should be given to all citizens... As someone in authority at the Vatican told me, you will not find yourselves in difficulties over the Status of the Jews".(128)

There is, "translated into practice", the "terrible" encyclical letter "Mit brennender Sorge", against racism, widely referred to by apologists.

But we find something even better, in M. Leon Poliakov's book:

"The proposal of the Protestant Church in France that, together with the Roman Church, they should take some measures against the rounding-up of Jews, during the Summer of 1942, was rejected by the Catholic dignitaries".(129)

Many Parisians still remember how the Jewish children were taken from their mothers and sent, by special trains, to the crematory furnaces of Auschwitz. These deportations of children are confirmed, amongst several other official documents, in a note of the "SS Haupsturmfuhrer Danneker", dated 21st of July 1942.

The awful callousness of the Roman Church—and of its chief in particular—inspired, not long ago, these revengeful lines from the aforementioned periodical "L'Arche":

"Over five years, Nazism was the author of outrage, profanation, blasphemy and crime. Over five years, it massacred six million Jews. Amongst these six million, 1,800,000 were children. Who, yes, who said once: let the little children come unto me? And for what reason "Let them come unto me so that I can butcher them?" The militant Pope has been followed by a diplomatic pope.

From occupied Paris, we go to Rome, occupied also by the Germans after the Italian collapse. Here is a message addressed to von Ribbentrop, Nazi Foreign Affairs minister:

"German Embassy at the Holy See. Rome, 28th of October 1943.

Even though urged on every side, the pope has not expressed any demonstrative reprobation of the deportation of Jews from Rome. He can expect our enemies to reproach him in this attitude, and see it exploited by the Protestants of Anglo-Saxon countries in their propaganda against Catholicism; when considering this delicate question, the endangerment of our relations with the German government was the deciding factor..."

---

(128) "L'Arche", November 1958.

(129) See earlier on.

Signed: Ernst von Weiszaeker(130)

When relating the career of this Baron von Weiszaeker—tried as a war criminal "for having prepared extermination lists"—"Le Monde" of the 27th of July 1947 wrote:

"Perceiving a German defeat, he had himself appointed at the Vatican, taking this opportunity to work closely with the Gestapo".

For the benefit of our readers not yet fully convinced, we will quote the following official German document which sets out the Vatican's dispositions—and those of the Jesuits—towards the Jews, before the war:

"Studying the evolution of anti-semitism in the United States, we note with interest that the number of listeners to the radio broadcasts of Father Coughlin (a Jesuit), well known for his anti-semitism, exceeds 20 millions".(131)

The militant anti-semitism of the Jesuits in the United States, as everywhere else, is not surprising on the part of these ultramontanes, as it is in perfect accord with the "doctrine". Let us see what M. Daniel-Rops, of the French Academy, has to say on the subject; this author specialises in pious literature and publishes only under the auspices of "the Imprimatur". We read in one of his best known works, "Jesus and His times", published in 1944, during the German occupation:

"Over the centuries, wherever the Jewish race was scattered, blood flowed, and always the call for murder uttered at Pilate's judgment hall drowned the cry of despair repeated a thousand times. The face of a persecuted Jewish nation fills History, but it cannot obliterate this other face, smeared with blood and spittle, for which the Jewish crowd felt no pity. No doubt, Israel had no choice in the matter and had to kill its God after disowning Him, and, as blood mysteriously calls for blood, Christian charity may have no choice either; should not the divine will compensate with the horror of the progroms the unbearable horror (the Crucifixion') (132)

How well said! Or, to put it more bluntly: if millions of Jews had to go through the gas chambers and crematory furnaces of Auschwitz, Dachau and elsewhere, it was their just desert. This adversity was wanted by the "divine will" and "Christian charity" would err if turning towards them.

The eminent professor M. Jules Isaac, president of the "Amitie judeo-chretienne", exclaimed when referring to this passage:

"These terrible and blasphemous phrases provoke an unbearable horror

---

(130) "Secret archives of the Wilhelmstrasse".

(131) "Secret archives of the Wilhelmstrasse", (document 83-26 19/1, Berlin 25th of January 1939).

(132) Daniel-Rops: "Jesus en son temps" (Artheme Fayard, Paris 1944, pp.526, 527). Imprimatur, 17th of April 1944.

themselves", aggravated the more by a note which says: "Amongst the Jews today..., some of them... try to shrug off this heavy responsibility... Honourable sentiments indeed, but we cannot go contrary to the evidence of History... the terrible weight (of Jesus' death) which Israel must bear is not up to men to reject".(133)

M. Jules Isaac brings to our notice that the phrases in question have been altered by the publisher "in the more recent editions" of this edifying book—that is to say, after the Liberation. There is "a time" for everything: the crematory furnaces were out-dated.

So, from the doctrinal affirmation of the papacy's high principles to their putting into practice by Himmler, "our Ignatius of Loyola", the ring is closed—and we will add the half mad anti-semitism of the Fuhrer thus loses much of its mystery.

But—going back to this subject—does it not also shed more light on that baffling individual?

The things which were imagined, before the war, in an attempt to explain the evident disproportion between the man and the part he had to play! There was a gap, an obvious vacuum felt by all. To fill this gap, legends were abounding: stories were spread abroad not always without the secret purpose of misleading!, Occult sciences, oriental magicians, astrologers inspired, so we were told, the sleep-walking hermit of Berchtesgaden. And the choice of the swastika as the Nazi party's insigna, which originated from India, seemed to corroborate the idea.

M. Maxime Mourin refuted this particular assertion:

"Adolf Hitler had been a pupil at the school of Lambach and sang amongst the choir boys in the abbey bearing the same name. He discovered the swastika there, as it was the heraldic sign of Father Hagen, the abbey's administrator".(134)

The Fuhrer's "inspirations" are also easily explained, without having to resort to mysterious or exotic philosophies. If it is obvious that this "son of the Catholic Church", as he was described by Franco, was submitted to the impulses of mysterious leaders, we know also that these had nothing to do with oriental magic.

The earthly hells which devoured 25 million victims bear another stamp, easily recognisable: the one of people who had to go through a lengthy and meticulous training, as prescribed in the "Spiritual Exercises" (of the Jesuits).

---

(133) Jules Isaac: "Jesus et Israel" (Albin Michel, Paris 1948, p.382).

(134) Maxime Mourin: "Histoire des Grandes Puissances" (Payot. Paris 1958, p.134).

Section V

Chapter 7

The Jesuits and the Colleqium Russicum

Amongst the various causes which decided the Vatican to start the first world war, by urging the emperor of Austria, Francis-Joseph, to "chastise the Serbians", the main one was, as we have seen, to strike a decisive blow against the Orthodox Church, this hated and centuries old rival.

Beyond the small Serbian nation, the Vatican aimed at Russia, the traditional protector of Orthodox believers in the Balkans and the East.

M. Pierre Dominique wrote:

"To Rome, this affair became most important; a victory of apostolic monarchy over Czarism could be looked upon as a victory of Rome over the schism of the East".(135)

The Roman Curia was in no way concerned that such a victory could only be acquired through a gigantic holocaust. The risk, rather the certainty of it, was accepted, as the alliances made it unavoidable. Urged on by his secretary of State, the Jesuit Merry del Val, Pius X made no secret of it and the Bavarian Charge d'Affaires wrote to his government, on the eve of the conflict: "He (the pope) does not think the French and Russian armies would be successful in a war against Germany".(136)

This wicked calculation proved wrong. The first World War, which ravaged the north of France and left several millions dead, did not fulfil Rome's ambitions; it divided Austria-Hungary instead, so depriving the Vatican of its main stronghold in Europe and liberating the Slavs who were part of that double monarchy from Vienna's apostolic yoke.

In addition, the Russian revolution liberated from the Vatican's control those Roman Catholics, for the most part of Polish origins, who lived in the Czars former empire.

The defeat was total. But the Roman Church "patiens quia aeterna" was going to pursue with fresh efforts her politics of the "Drang nach Osten", the thrust towards the East which combined so well with the Pan-German ambitions.

---

(135) Pierre Dominique, op.cit., p.246.

(136) Bayerische Dokumente zum Kriegsausbruch, III, p.206.

For that, as we mentioned earlier on, the raising up of Dictators and the second world war with its retinue of horrors; the "cleaning up" of the Wartheland, in Poland, and the "compulsory catholicisation" of Croatia were two examples, especially atrocious, of these horrors.

It was of no importance that 25 millions died in concentration camps, 32 millions soldiers were killed on the battle fields and 29 millions were wounded and maimed; these are the official statistics of the United Nations Organisation (137) and show the magnitude of that carnage! This time, the Roman Curia thought her aims had been reached, and one could read in 'Basler Nachrichten' of Basle:

"The German action in Russia poses the question of that country's evangelisation; the Vatican is most highly interested in it".(138)

And this, from a book devoted to the glorification of Pius XII:

"The Vatican and Berlin signed a pact allowing the Catholic missionaries of the Russicum college to go to occupied territories and the placing of the Baltic territories under Berlin's nunciature".(139)

The "catholicisation" of Russia was about to be launched, under the protection of the Wehrmacht and SS, in the manner Pavelitch and his associates were carrying it out in Croatia, but on a much vaster scale. This was indeed a triumph for Rome!

What a disappointment, then, when the hitlerian thrust was stopped at Moscow and when von Paulus and his army were trapped in Stalingrad! It was Christmas time, Christmas of 1942, and one must re-read the Message—rather the vibrant call to arms—addressed to the "Christian nations" by the Holy Father:

"This is not a time for lamentation, but action. May the Crusades' enthusiasm get hold of Christianity, and the call of "God wants it!" will be heard; may we be ready to serve and sacrifice ourselves, as the Crusaders of old..." We exhort and implore you to take upon yourselves the awful gravity of the present situation... As for the volunteers who participate in this Holy Crusade of modern times, "raise the standard high, declare war on the darkness of a world separated from God".(140)

On this day of the Nativity, we were far from "Pax Christi"!

This war-like address was not the expression of the "strict neutrality" the Vatican flatters itself to observe in international matters. This address was made even more improper by the fact that Russia was the ally of England,

(137) "La Croix", 7th of September 1951.

(138) "Basler Nachrichten", 27th of March 1942.

(139) and (140) "War messages to the world", by Pius XII (Ed. Spes, Paris 1945, pp.34 and 257 ss).

America and Free France. We smile while reading the vehement contestation of Pius XII's thurifers who tell us that Hitler's war was not a real "crusade", when that word is mentioned in the Holy Father's Message.

The "volunteers" the pope called to arms were those of the "Azul Division" and those recruited by Cardinal Baudrillart in Paris.

"Hitler's war is a noble enterprise in the defence of European culture", he exclaimed on the 30th of July 1941.

We note, though, that the Vatican is not interested any more in the defence of this culture now that it strives to make African nations revolt against France. Pius XII said: "The Catholic Church does not identify herself with western culture". (141 and 141a)

The impostures and gross contradictions are endless on the part of those who accuse Satan of being the "father of all lies".

The defeat sustained in Russia by Hitler's armies, "these noble defenders of European culture", involved also the Jesuit converters. One wonders what Saint-Theresa was doing before such a disaster! Pius XI had proclaimed her "patron-saint of unfortunate Russia" and Canon Coube represented her standing, "smiling but as terrible as an army set for battle against the Bolshevist giant".(142)

Had the Saint of Lisieux—used for all kinds of work by the Church—succumbed under the new and gigantic task assigned to her by the Holy lather? It would not be surprising.

But, instead of the little saint, there was still the Queen of Heaven who had taken upon herself, in 1917 already, under certain conditions, to bring back schismatic Russia to the Roman Church's fold. Let us read what 'La Croix' said about it:

"We will remind our readers that the Virgin of Fatima had herself promised the conversion of the Russians, if all Christians sincerely and joyfully practised all the commandments of the evangelical law".(143)

We want to point out that, according to the Jesuit Fathers who are great specialists in miraculous matters, the celestial Mediator recommended as especially effective the daily use of the rosary.

This promise from the Virgin had even been sealed by a "dance of the Sun", a wonder which occurred again in 1951, in the gardens of the Vatican, for the benefit of His Holiness Pius XII only.

Nevertheless, the Russians entered Berlin, in spite of the crusade called tor by the pope—and, until now, the fellow-countrymen of Mr. Khrushchev have not shown any eagerness, as far as we know, to appear

---

(141) "Le Monde", 13th of April 1956 (Congress of African catholic students).

(141a) See also Francois Mejan: "Le Vatican contre la France d'Outre-Mer" (Fischbacher).

(142) Canon Coube: "Sainte Therese de l'Enfant Jesus et les crises du temps present" (Flammarion, Paris 1936, p.6 ss). IMPRIMATUR 11th of January 1936.

(143) "La Croix", 11th of June 1947.

before the doors of Saint-Peter in penitent garb with the halters around their necks.

What went wrong? Had christains not 'told' sufficient beads on their rosaries? Were Heaven's requisite number of 'tens' not fulfilled?

We would be tempted to believe this to be the cause if there wasn't that rather scabrous detail in the wonderful story of Fatima. The promise of Russia's conversion, sensibly given to the clairvoyant Lucia in 1917, was "revealed" by her in 1941 only, when she had become a nun, and made public in October 1942 by Cardinal Schuster, a keen partisan of the Rome-Berlin Axis; it was made public by request, or shall we say order, from Pius XII—this same Pius XII who, three months later, expressed the aforementioned call for a Crusade.

Very "enlightening" indeed: One of Fatima's apologists admits that, because of it, the matter "evidently loses some of its prophetic value..."(144) This is the least one could say about it! A certain canon, great specialist in the matter of the "Portuguese miracle" tells us in confidence: "I must confess that, as far as I am concerned, it is only with great reluctance that I added to my first editions the text revealed to the public by His Eminence Cardinal Schuster..."(145)

We certainly understand the good canon's feelings:

So, the Holy Virgin told the shepherdess Lucia, in 1917: "If my requests are heeded, Russia will be converted...", while charging her to keep this "secret" to herself. How, then, could the Christians have come to know these "requests" and meet them?

"Credibile quia ineptum".

It seems that, from 1917 until 1942, "unfortunate Russia" did not need to have prayers offered on her behalf, and that they were urgently needed only after the Nazi defeat at Moscow and when von Paulus was trapped in Stalingrad.

At least, it is the only conclusion this late revelation allows. The supernatural—as we have said already—is a powerful thing, but it must be handled with some care.

After Montoire, the Jesuits' general, Halke von Ledochowski, already spoke haughtily about the general meeting the Company would hold in Rome, after England had capitulated, the importance and brilliance of which would not find an equal in all its history.

But Heaven had decided otherwise, in spite of Saint-Theresa and the Lady of Fatima. Great Britain braced herself against the enemy, the United States entered the war, (even though the Jesuit Father Coughlin had worked so hard), the Allies disembarked in North Africa and the Russian campaign was a disaster for the Nazis.

---

(144) Michel Agnellet: "Miracles a Fatima" (Ed. de Trevise, Paris 1958, p.54). Imprimatur 1958.

(145) Canon Barthas: "Fatima, merveille du XXe siecle", (Fatima Editions, Toulouse 1957, p.81) Imprimatur 1957.

For Ledochowski, it was the collapse of his great dream. Wehrmacht, SS, "cleaner-ups" and Jesuit converters were retreating together. The general's health did not stand up to such a disaster and he died.

Let us see, though, what this "Russicum" is which Pius XI and von Ledochowski added, in 1929, to the already so rich and varied Roman organisation.

"With the apostolic Constitution "Quam Curam", Pius XI created this Russian seminary, in Rome, where young apostles of every nationality would be trained, "on condition that they adopt, before anything else, the Byzantine-Slav rite, and that their minds were made up to devote themselves entirely to the task of bringing Russia back into Christ's fold"(146)

This is the aim of the Russian pontifical College, alias "Russicum", the Oriental pontifical Institute and the Roman College—these three Centres are also administered by the Company of Jesus.

At the "Roman College"—45, Piazza del Gesu—we find the Jesuits' noviceship and, amongst the novices, some bear the name of "Russipetes", as they are destined to "petere Russiam", or go to Russia.

Orthodox believers should watch out, for so many valorous champions are determined to crush them. We must point out, though, that the aforementioned "Homme nouveau" affirms:

"All these priests are certainly destined to go to Russia. But this project cannot be realised for the time being".(147)

According to this particular publication, the Soviet press calls these apostles "the Vatican's parachutists". And, from the testimony of someone well-informed on the subject, we come to the conclusion that this name fits them quite well.

The person in question is no less than the Jesuit Alighiero Tondi, professor at the Gregorian pontofical University, who repudiated Ignatius of Loyola, the "Spiritual Exercises" though not without a considerable row and resigned from the famous Company, together with its pomp and deeds.

We can read the following, amongst other declarations, in an interview he gave to an Italian newspaper:

"The activities of the Collegium Russicum and other organisations linked to it are many and varied. For example, together with Italian fascists and what remains of Geman nazism, the Jesuits organise and co-ordinate the various anti-Russian groups, on the ecclesiastical authority's order. The ultimate aim is to be ready, eventually, to overthrow the governments of the East. Finances are provided by the ruling ecclesiastical organisations. This is the work the leaders of the clergy apply themselves to. These same ones would readily tear their cassocks apart, out of grief, when they are accused of meddling in politics and urging the bishops and priests of the East to conspire against their governments."

(146) "L'Homme nouveau" (L'Avenir catholique), 7th of December 1958.

(147) "L'Homme nouveau" (L'Avenir catholique), 7th of December 1958.

"When talking to the Jesuit Andrei Ouroussof, I said that it was disgraceful to affirm in the "Osservatore Romano", the Vatican's official voice, and in other ecclesiastical publications, that the unmasked spies were "martyrs of the faith". Ouroussof burst out laughing.

"—What would you write, Father? he asked me. Would you call them spies, or something worse? Today, the Vatican's politics need martyrs. But, at the moment, martyrs are difficult to find. So they are fabricated.

—But this is a dishonest game!

"He shook his head ironically.

—You are ingenous, Father. Because of your work, you should know better than anyone else that the Church's leaders have always been inspired by the same rules.

—And what about Jesus-Christ? I asked.

He laughed: "One must not think of Jesus-Christ", he said. "If we thought of Him, we would end up on the cross. And, today, the time has come to put others on the cross and not be hoist on it ourselves."(148)

So, as the Jesuit Ouroussof said it so well, the Vatican's politics need martyrs, volunteers or not. It "created" millions of them during two world wars.

---

(148) Interview which appeared in "Il Paese" on the 2nd of October 1954.

Section V

Chapter 8

Pope John XXIII removes the mask

Out of all the fictions generally accepted in this world, the spirit of peace and harmony attributed to the Holy See is probably the most difficult to root up—as this spirit seems inherent to the nature of the apostolic magister itself.

In spite of the lessons of History, not fully known or too quickly forgotten, the one who calls himself "Christ's vicar" must necessarily incarnate, in the eyes of many, the ideal of love and fraternity taught by the Gospel. Does not logic, as well as sentiment, want it to be so?

In reality, the events make us realise that this favourable presumption must be greatly abated—and we believe that it has been sufficiently demonstrated. But the Church is prudent—as we are often reminded—and it is seldom that her real actions are not surrounded by the indispensable precautions which will take care of appearances. "Bonne renommee vaut mieux que ceinture doree" (A good reputation is better than a golden belt), says the proverb. But it is even better to possess both. The Vatican— immensely rich—guides itself by this maxim. Its political lust for domination always assumes "spiritual" and humanitarian pretexts, proclaimed "urbi and orbi" by an intense propaganda which a goldplated belt provides for—and the "good reputation", thus preserved, maintains the inflow of gold to the said belt.

The Vatican does not deviate from that line of conduct and, when the stand it takes in international affairs is clearly revealed through the attitude of its hierarchy, the legend of its absolute impartiality is kept alive by those solemn and ambiguous encyclical letters and other pontifical documents. Recently, the hitlerian era multiplied such examples. But could it be otherwise of an authoritative power which is supposed to be transcedent and universal at the same time?

The instances when that mask was seen to fall are very rare. For the world to be a witness of such a spectacle, a contingency is necessary which, to the Holy See's eyes, endangers its vital interests. Only then does it throw aside all ambiguity and openly places all the credit at its disposition on one of the scales.

This is what happened in Rome, on the 7th of January 1960, concerning the "summit" conference which was to bring together heads of Eastern and Western governments, in an attempt to settle the conditions of a truly peaceful co-existence between the defenders of two opposite ideologies.

Of course, the Vatican's position before such a project did not leave us in any doubt. In the United States, Cardinal Spellman demonstrated it plainly by urging Catholics to show their hostility to Mr. Khrushchev when he was the guest of the American president. For his part, and without expressing it clearly, His Holiness John XXIII had shown little enthusiasm for the "detente" in his Chritmas message. The "hope" it expressed, to see peace set up in the world, a wish which is a "must" in such a document, seemed very weak accompanied as it was with many calls to Western leaders to be prudent. But, so far, the Vatican put on a good face.

What happened, then, within less than two weeks? Did another long-cherished "hope"—to see the first one fail—prove vain? Did the decision of Mr. Gronchi, president of the Italian Republic, to go to Moscow make the cup of Roman bitterness overflow?

Whatever happened, the storm broke out suddenly on the 7th of January—and the ecclesiastical thunders burst (with unprecedented fury) upon the "Christian" Statesmen, guilty of wanting an end to the cold war. On the 8th of January, "Le Monde" printed the following:

"On the day the president of the Italian Republic was to leave to pay a minutely-prepared official visit to Moscow's leaders, Cardinal Ottaviani, successor of Cardinal Pizzardo as secretary of the Holy-Office congregation, or chief of the Church's supreme tribunal, delivered a most astonishing speech in the bascilica of "Saint-Marie-Majeure", during a morning propitiatory service for "the Church of Silence".

"Never before had a prince of the Church, holding one of the Vatican's most important posts, attacked the Soviet authorities, so furiously, nor reprimanded so harshly the Western powers who dealt with them".

"Le Monde" gave substantial excerpts of that violent speech which amply justified the qualificative of "most astonishing" it had just used. "Tamerlanes's times are back", affirmed Cardinal Ottaviani—and the Russian leaders were described as "new antichrists" who "condemn to deportation, imprison, massacre, and leave nothing but wasteland behind them". The orator was shocked that nobody anymore was "scared to shake hands with them", and that, "on the contrary, a race was arranged to see who would be the first to do so and exchange smiles with them". Then he reminded his listeners that Pius XII withdrew to Castelgandolfo when Hitler came to Rome—forgetting though to add that this same pontiff had concluded with the said Hitler a Concordat most advantagous for the Church.

Space travel was not spared either in that violent denunciation: "the new man... believes he can violate Heaven by feats in space and so demonstrates once more that God does not exist".

The Western "politicians and statesmen" who, according to the cardinal, "grow stupid with terror", were severely hauled over the coals—as were all the "Christians" who "do not react or leap with rage any more..."

Finally, this virulent and significant conclusion:

"Can we declare ourselves satisfied with any kind of detente when, in the first place, there cannot be any sort of calm, within humanity, unless we observe an elementary respect for conscience, our faith, the face of Christ covered once more with spittle, crowned with thorns and struck? Could we hold out our hand to those who do this?"

These dramatic words cannot make us forget that the Vatican can hardly speak of "respect for consciences" as it shamelessly oppresses them in countries where it dominates, such as in Franco's Spain where the Protestants are persecuted. In fact, it is most impudent—on the part of the Holy-Office's secretary especially!—to demand that others observe this elementary respect" when the Roman Church rejects it entirely.

The encyclical letter "Quanta cura" and the "Syllabus" are explicit:

Anathema on the one who says: every man is free to embrace or profess the religion his judgment considers to be right".
("Syllabus", article XV)

"... It is madness to think that the freedom of conscience and worship are mere rights to every man." ("Encyclical letter "Quanta cura")

Judging by the way it treats "heretics", it is no wonder that the Vatican systematically condemns all attempts to come to terms between "Christian" States and those who are officially atheistic. "Non est pax impilis"—"No peace for the wicked"!

And the Jesuit Father Cavelli, like many others before him, proclaims that this "intransigence" is the Roman Church's "most imperative law".

As a counterpart to this explosion of fury on the cardinal's part, we will quote another article which appeared in the same number of "Le Monde", on the 9th of January 1960:

"Humanity is approaching a situation where mutual annihilation becomes a possibility. In the world today, there is no other event which can be compared, in importance, to this... We must then strive incessantly for a just peace". So said President Eisenhower, yesterday, Thursday, before the United States Congress, at the same time as Cardinal Ottaviani, in Rome, condemned the co-existence as partaking of the crime of Cain.

The contrast between two manners of thought cannot be more striking: the human and the theocratic—nor more obvious the mortal danger hovering over the world because of that nucleus of blind fanaticism we call the Vatican. Its "sacred" egoism is such that circumstances and the urgent necessity for an international accord, in order to avoid the almost total extermination threatening humanity, do not matter.

The Holy Office's secretary—this supreme tribunal whose past is too well-known—does not take into account such negligible contingencies. Do the Russians go to mass? This is the important thing, and if President Eisenhower does not understand it, it is because he "seems to have grown stupid with terror", to use the terms of the fiery "Porporato".

The delirious frenzy of Cardinal Ottaviani's speech makes us smile at the same time as shocking us. And many think that this firebrand will find it difficult to persuade "Christians" that the atomic bomb must be accepted gracefully. But we must be on our guard! Behind this spokesman of the Holy See, there is all the pontifical organisation—and especially this secret army of Jesuits not made up of ordinary soldiers. All the members of that famous Company work within the corridors of power, and their action, without making a great deal of noise, can be singularly effective, that is to say evil.

A rumour was spread that Cardinal Ottaviani's brutal stand was not the exact reflection of the Holy See's thought, but only that of one of the so-called "integrist" clan. The Catholic press, in France at any rate, tried to attenuate the import of that violent speech—and "La Croix", in particular, only printed a short extract from which all violence had been omitted. Wise opportunism indeed, but it could not deceive anyone. It is just impossible that such a sharp criticism, of an exceptional political importance, could have been uttered from the pulpit of "Sainte-Marie-Majeure" by the Holy Office's secretary, without the approval of that Congregation's chief, of its "prefect", the Sovereign Pontiff himself. And, as far as we know, he never disowned his eloquent subordinate. Pope John XXIII could not throw that bomb himself, but by making one of the most important of the Curia's dignitaries take his place, he wanted to make his connivance obvious to everyone.

Moreover, and by a strange "coincidence", a more modest explosion took place at the same time, in the form of an article in the "Osservatore Romano", condemnding once again socialism, even non-marxist, as "opposed to Christian truth". However, those who practice this political "mistake" are not excommunicated "ipso facto" like the communists. They still have the hope of escaping Hell—but the threat of Purgatory remains!

By showing its opposition to any attempt at bringing together East and West so vehemently, was the Vatican expecting some positive results? Was it really hoping to intimidate the Statesmen who pursue these politics of peace? Or was it at least hoping to provoke a move contrary to the "detente" amongst the faithful?

As unreasonable as such a hope may seem, it may well have haunted these clerical minds. Their peculiar views are bound to produce such illusions. What's more, these soothsayers, they could not have forgotten a certain illusion used for so long to deceive those who trusted them—and which they apparently shared. We are referring to "Russia's conversion", apparently announced at Fatima by the Holy Virgin in person—in 1917— to Lucia the shepherdess, who eventually embraced holy orders and testified of it somewhat late, in 1942, in the "memoirs" she wrote at her superiors' request.

This cock and bull story may make us smile, but the fact remains that the Vatican—under Pius XII's pontificate—propogated it throughout the world with any amount of speeches, sermons, solemn declarations, a torrent of books and pamphlets, and the peregrinations of the statue of that new and very political "Notre-Dame" across every continent—where even the animals, so we were told, came to pay homage. This noisy propaganda is still clearly remembered by the faithful—as are the wild affirmations such as this one, printed on the 1st of November 1952 by "La Croix":

"Fatima has become a cross-roads... The fate of the nations can be decided better there than around tables".

Its thurifers cannot find refuge in ambiguity any more. The alternative is perfectly clear: "detente or cold war".—The Vatican chooses war—and does not hide the fact.

This choice should not surprise anyone—if past experience, even in the recent past, has been a lesson to us. And if it surprised some, we believe that it is because of its unceremonious proclamation, or without the usual camouflage."

We begin to understand the violence when we consider the importance of the stake to the Roman pontiff. We would misjudge the Vatican by thinking it capable of renouncing a hope as old as the Eastern schism itself, the one of bringing back Orthodox believers under her obedience through a military success. Hitler's rise was due to this obstinate hope—but the final defeat of his Crusade still did not open the eyes of the Roman Curia to the folly of such an ambition.

There is another and even more pressing desire: to liberate in Poland, Hungary and Czechoslovakia this famous "Church of Silence" which has only become such because of the unexpected turn of events—for the Holy See—in the Nazi Crusade. "Qui trop embrasse mal etreint (grasp all, lose all): a wise proverb which has never inspired fanatics.

To resume its march towards the East, its clerical "Drang nach Osten", and first retrieve the lost strongholds, the Vatican still relies upon the Germanic "secular arm", its main European champion in need of new strength and vigour. At the head of Federal Germany—western section of the great Reich—it had placed a trusty man, Chancellor Konrad Adenauer, the pope's secret chamberlain—and the politics he pursued for more than fifteen years clearly display the Holy See's stamp. Exhibiting at first great caution and an opportune "liberal" state of mind, the man his fellow-countrymen nicknamed "der alte Fuchs"—"The old fox" worked at rearming his country. Of course, the "moral" rearmament of the population, and of the German youth in particular, was an imperative supplement to the first.

That is why important posts in the ministries and administrations of Western Germany are held by many individuals with notorious hitlerian pasts—the list is long—and captains of industry such as von Krupp and Flick, who had not long since been condemned as war criminals, direct again their gigantic works which were restored to them. The end justifies the means. And this end is clear enough: to forge Siegfried's new sword, the arm necessary for revenge—a revenge which would be shared by the Vatican.

It is then with a perfect synchronsim that the chancellor-chamberlain, during an interview given to a Dutch periodical, echoed the fulminating speech Cardinal Ottaviani had just expressed:

"...The peaceful co-existence of nations whose views are totally opposite is just an illusion which, alas, still finds too many supporters".(150)

The incendiary "sermon" given on the 7th of January at "Sainte-Marie-Majeure" preceded by a few days—as by accident—the visit of Konrad Adenauer to Rome. The reports the press gave were unanimous at underlining the friendly and sympathetic atmosphere which prevailed during the private audience His Holiness John XXIII gave to the German chancellor and his Foreign Affairs minister, Mr. von Brentano.

We could even read in "L'Aurore":

"This meeting provoked a rather unexpected declaration from the chancellor, when answering the pontifical address which praised the courage and faith of the German government's head:

"I think that God has given the German people a special part to play in these troubled times: to be the protector of the West against the powerful influences of the East threatening us".(151)

"Combat" accurately noted:

We had heard this before, but in a more condensed manner: "Gott mit uns"—"God with us". (The motto on the belt buckle of the German soldiers in the 1914/18 war).

And that newspaper added:

"Dr Adenauer's evocation of the work attributed to the German nation

(150) "ELSEVIERS WEEKBLATT", quoted by "Combat" on the 11 th of January I960.

(151) "L'Aurore", 23rd of January 1960.

(152) "Combat", 23rd of January 1960.

(153) "Le Figaro", 23rd of January I960.

found its inspiration in a similar declaration from the previous pontiff. We are therefore allowed to presume that if Dr Adenauer pronounced this phrase in the present circumstances, it is because he thought his listeners were ready to hear him".(152)

In fact, one would have to be singularly naive and utterly ignorant of elementary diplomacy to think that this "unexpected" declaration was not part of the programme. We wager also that it did not cast any shadow over "the prolonged conversation Mr. Adenauer had with Cardinal Tardini, the Holy See's secretary of State, whom he entertained for luncheon at the German Embassy".(153)

The spectacular intrusion of the Holy-Office in international politics, voiced by Cardinal Ottaviani, shocked even Catholics who were long accustomed to the Roman Church's encroachments in the affairs of State. Rome was aware of it. But the perpetuation of the cold war is so vitally important to the Vatican's political power, and even its financial prosperity, that it did not hesitate repeating such political views, even though the first one had been badly received.

The journey Mr. Khrushchev made to France, in March 1960, gave it another opportunity. Dijon was one of the cities the Soviet leader was to visit. Like all his colleagues in the same situation, the mayor of Dijon had to welcome courteously the guest of the French Republic. The chief city of Burgandy had an ecclesiastic as its deputy-mayor, Canon Kir.

According to the canonical law, the Holy See had expressly authorised thc priest to accept this double mandate—with all the functions and duties entailed. However, his bishop forbade the mayor-canon to receive Mr. Khrushchev. On that occasion, the municipal sash had to give way to the cassock.

So, the visitor was welcomed by an assistant who stood in for the absent deputy-mayor. But the unconstrained manner in which the "hierarchy" scoffed at civil authority on that occasion aroused the sharpest comments, On the 30th of March, "Le Monde" wrote:

"Who is actually exercising authority over the mayor of Dijon: the bishop or the prefect? And above these representatives of a central power: the pope or the French government? This is the question asked In everyone..."

The answer is not doubtful: theocracy first. But, from now on, to be received by a cassock wearing mayor, will the guests of the French Republic have to be supplied with confession tickets?

In the aforementioned article, the editor of "Le Monde" also rightly says:

"Beyond this French interior question, the Kir affair brings to our notice a larger problem. The Vatican's action is not concerned only with the relations between a mayor and his government. In the way it took place, it constitutes a direct and spectacular intervention in international diplomacy"

This is certainly true—and the reactions this affair provoked nearly everywhere show that its import was clearly understood by world opinion. In the United States especially, the public, which had already witnessed the hostile demonstrations organised by the cardinals Spellman and Cushing during Mr. Khrushchev's visit, started to question the real independence a Roman Catholic president could preserve with regard to the Holy See.

Many feared, in that case, to see the foreign politics of the country bent in favour of the Roman Church's interests—to the prejudice of the nation's interests, no small danger in any circumstances, but above all in the present situation.

The resistance to the move for an East-West "detente" was then organised "openly", after the "bomb" thrown by Cardinal Ottaviani.

A ridiculous instrument, some may say, compared with those which threatened to bury under ruins—sooner or later—nations mad enough to remain in the deadlock of a snarling antagonism. But we can see that the Vatican, compelled to use "spiritual" arms, endeavoured to make the best of them. The Jesuits, who steer its diplomacy, were doing their uttermost to ward off the worst "calamity" which ever hovered over the Holy See: an international accord which excluded resorting to war.

What would become of the Vatican's prestige, its political importance and all the advantages, pecuniary and others, which proceed from it if, because of such an accord, it could not plot anymore, use its influence, haggle over its co-operation with governments, favour some and bully others, oppose nations, create conflicts for the benefit of its own interests— and if, to serve its immoderate ambitions, it could not find any more soldiers?

*No one can be deceived—and the Jesuits even less than others—a general disarmament would toll the knell of the Roman Church as a world power. And the "spiritual" head itself would totter.

We must then expect to see the sons of Loyola opposing with all their arsenal of tricks the desire for peace of nations and governments. To ruin the edifice whose foundations are tentatively laid, they will not spare their mines and counter mines. It is a war without mercy, a holy war, sparked off by Cardinal Ottaviani's mad speech. And the Company of Jesus will pursue it with the blind obstinacy of the insect—"ad majorem papae gloriam"— without any anxiety as to the catastrophes which will result. The world must perish, rather than the supremacy of the Roman Pontiff!

*PUBLISHER'S NOTE:

Edmond Paris was at a disadvantage in that he wasn't aware that a shift was already under way by the 'Whore of Revelation" to fulfill Bible prophecy. She is prepared for all eventualities.

The Jesuits evaluated World War III and decided the U.S. would lose, and the Vatican always goes with the winner. Since then she has enthusiastically thrown her support to Moscow and even acquired a communist pope from Poland. She is secretly preparing a concordat with Russia, and currently pushing a Marxist gospel world wide. The Jesuits are currently behind the disarmament movement to subdue the U.S.

Moscow will serve the Vatican as the muscle to conquer nations where Roman Catholicism will he the only religion tolerated world wide. Russia will be pushed to attack Israel, fulfilling the prophecies of the Bible (Ezekiel, chapters 38 & 39) and the antichrist of the Vatican will await his doom at the second coming of Christ.

J.T.C.

Conclusion

We have recapitulated, in this book, the main manifestations of the multiform activity deployed by the Company of Jesus, during four centuries; we have established also that the militant, even military, character of this famous and ultramontane institution fully justifies the title often attributed to it of "secret army of the Papacy".

To the front of the action, for the glory of God—and especially of the Holy See—is the order these ecclesiastical soldiers gave themselves and of which they are proud; at the same time, they endeavour, through the book and pious press which they supervise, to disguise as much as possible and present as "apostolic" enterprises the action they exercise in their favourite field: the nations' politics.

The clever camouflage, the protestations of innocence, the railleries about the "dark schemings" attributed to them by the disordered imagination of their enemies—and which are groundless, according to them—all this is outweighed by the unanimous hostility of public opinion towards them, always and everywhere, and by the inevitable reaction to their intrigues which brought about their explulsion from every country, even from the most strongly Catholic.

These fifty-six expulsions, to quote only the main ones, provide an invincible argument! It would be sufficient to prove the evil nature of this Order.

How could it not be injurious to civil societies as it is the papacy's most efficacious instrument in imposing its law on temporal governments, and that this law—by nature—has no consideration for the various national interests? The Holy See, being essentially opportunist, does embrace these interests when they coincide with its own—we saw this happen in 1914 and 1939—but, if it brings them a substantial help then, the final result is not beneficial for all that. This was seen also in 1918 and 1945.

Terrible to its enemies, or those who oppose it, the Vatican, this amphibious clerico-political organisation, is even more deadly to its friends. By observing some vigilance, one can be forewarned of its underhand thrusts, but its embraces are deadly.

On that subject, Mr. T. Jung wrote, in 1874, the following lines which have not grown old-'The power of France is in inverse ratio to the intensity of her obedience to the Roman Curia".(1)

And from a more recent witness: M. Joseph Hours, when studying the effects of our very relative "disobedience", he wrote:

"There is no doubt about it; right through the continent (and maybe, today, all over the globe), wherever Catholicism is tempted to become political, it is also tempted to become anti-French".(2)

A just remark indeed, even though the term "tempted" is rather weak. We will nevertheless conclude that "to obey" would be more to the point.

Is it not better, in fact, to expose oneself to this hositlity, rather than to have to come to this conclusion, like Colonel Beck, former Foreign Affairs minister of the very Catholic Poland (2a)".

"The Vatican is one of those principally responsible for the tragedy of my country. I realised too late that we had pursued our foreign politics just to serve the sole interests of the Catholic Church".

Moreover, the fate of the very apostolic empire of the Hapsburgs was not too encouraging; as for Germany, so dear to the hearts of popes, and especially Pius XII's, she could not be pleased, finally, with the costly favours Their Holiness lavished on her.

In fact, we wonder if the Roman Church reaped any profit at all from this mad aspiration to govern the world, a pretension kept alive by the Jesuits more than anyone else. In the course of four centuries in which these firebrands spread strife and hatred, slaughter and ruins in Europe, from the Thirty Years War until the Hitler Crusade, did the Church enjoy gain or suffer loss?

The answer is easy: the clearest and most incontestable result is a continuous diminution of the "heritage of Saint-Peter"—a sad end to so many crimes!

Did the Jesuits' influence obtain better results within the Vatican itself? It is very doubtful.

A catholic author wrote:

"They always aim at concentrating the ecclesiastical power which they control. The pope's infallibility exasperates bishops and governments: they nevertheless ask forit at the Council of Trent and obtain it at the Vatican Council (1870)... The Company's prestige fascinates, within the Church, its adversaries as much as its friends. We have respect or, at least, we fear it; we think it can do anything, and we behave accordingly".(3)

---

(1) T. Jung: "La France et Rome", (Charpentier, Paris 1874, p.369).

(2) "L'Annee politique et economique", 19, quai Bourbon, Paris 4e, January-March 1953, pp.2 ss.

(2a) Declaration made on the 6th of February 1940.

Another catholic writer strongly stated the effects of this concentration of power in the Pontiffs hands:

"The Society of Jesus was suspicious of life, the source of heresy, and opposed authority to it.

The Council of Trent seems already to be the testament of Catholicism.

It is the last genuine Council.

"After that, there will only be the Vatican Council which consecrates the abdication of the councils.

We are well aware of the popes' gain at the end of the councils.

What a simplification—what an impoverishment also!

Roman Christianity takes possession of its character of absolute monarchy, founded now and forever on papal infallibility.

The picture is beautiful but life bears its costs.

Everything comes from Rome, and Rome is left to lean only on Rome".(4)

Further on, the author sums up what the famous Company must be credited for: "It delayed maybe the death of the Church, but by a kind of pact with death".(5)

A kind of sclerosis, if not necrosis, is spreading and corrupting the Church, under that Loyolan ascendancy. Vigilant guardians of the dogma, whose antiquated character they accentuate with their aberrant worship of the Virgin Mary, the Jesuits, masters of the Gregorian Pontifical University which was founded by Ignatius of Loyola, check the teaching of the seminaries, supervise the Missions, reign at the Holy-Office, animate the Catholic Action, censure and direct the religious press in every country, patronize with tender love the great centres of pilgrimages: Lourdes, Lisieux, Fatima, etc. In short, they are everywhere, and we can regard as significant the fact that the pope, when ministering at the mass, is necessarily assisted by a Jesuit; his confessor is always a Jesuit, too.

By working at perfecting the concentration of power in the hands of the Sovereign Pontiff, the Company is in fact working for itself and the pope, apparent beneficiary of that work, could echo these famous words: "I am their chief, so I follow them".

So, it becomes more and more hopeless trying to distinguish the action of the Holy See from the one of the Company. But this Order, the very back bone of the Church, tends to dominate her entirely. For a long time now, the bishops have been nothing more than "civil servants", docile executors of the orders coming from Rome, or rather from the Gesu.

(3) Andre Mater- "Les Jesuites" (Reider, Paris 1932, p. 118).

(4) and (5) Henri Petit: "L'Honneur de Dieu" (Grasset, Paris 1958, p.88).

Without any doubt, Loyola's disciples endeavour to mask from the eyes of the faithful, the harshness of a more and more totalitarian system. The Catholic press, under their direct control, assumes some variety of inspiration, to give its readers the illusion of a kind of independence, to be open to "new" ideas: the Fathers, who are all things to all men, willingly practise these juggler's tricks which deceive only the star-gazers. But, behind these petty amusements, the everlasting Jesuit is watching, about whom an aforementioned author wrote: "Intransigence is inborn in him. Capable of being a shuffler, because of his craftiness, he only excels at being stubborn".(6)

We find excellent examples of that stubborness and insidious bias in the patient work of the Company's members, to conciliate, for better or worse, the "modern" and scientific spirit to which they take care to be attentive with the demands of the "doctrine" in general and, especially, with these rather idolatrous forms of devotion—the worship of Mary and wonderworking—of which they remain the most zealous propagators.

To say that these efforts are crowned with success would be an exaggeration: when blending water and fire, we obtain mainly steam. But even the inconsistency of these clouds is rather pleasing to certain subtle minds, even though warned about the dangers too much precision in the thoughts brings to a sincere piety. "Vade retro, Satanas"!

As far as that is concerned, German metaphysics are most helpful; we find in them everything we need, and even the opposite. There isn't any childish superstition which, after pedantic treatment, does not acquire some appearance of seriousness and even depth. It is rather amusing to follow the game in the periodicals and bulletins of various cultural groups.

There, the enquirer finds the material he needs, and especially the one who, through an inclination somewhat aberrant, enjoys reading between the lines.

However, these men full of bitterness do not live only the speculative sphere, the good Fathers made sure they gave their apostolate amongst "intellectuals" a solid temporal foundation. To the gifts of the Spirit the lavishly bestow upon their disciples are added substantial advantages. Besides, it is an ancient tradition. In Charlemagne's time, the converted Saxons received a white shirt. Nowadays, the beneficiaries of a newly-found or re-discovered Faith enjoy other favours, especially in the academic and scientific worlds: the not very clever student passes examinations without difficulties; the professor is given the professorial chair of his choice; the physician who is a "believer", in addition to rich clients, has preference when wanting to join some important society, etc.. Through a natural mechanism, these choice recruits will bring others and, as there is strength in numbers, their conjugated action will be most efficacious in what we call the leading spheres.

---

(6) Andre Mater, op.cit., p. 192.

This can be seen in Spain, so we are told, and even elsewhere.

In "Le Monde" of the 7th of May 1956, M. Henri Fesquet devoted an important article to the Spanish "Opus Dei". When defining the action of the pious and occult organisation, he wrote: "Its members... aim at helping intellectuals to reach a religious state of perfection through the exercise of their professions, and sanctify professional work".

This is no new story, and M. Fesquet knows it, for he says a little further on: "They are accused—and the fact doesn't seem deniable—of wanting to occupy the keyposts of the land, to be at the core of the University, administration, government, to prevent from entering or even expel from them unbelievers and liberals".

The "Opus" apparently entered France "clandestinely" in November 1954, "brought in" by two priests and five laymen, doctors or medical students. That may be so, but we doubt if this reinforcement coming from "tras los montes" was really necessary to the pursuit of their work which has been going on for a long time now, in France, mainly in the medical and academic worlds, as certain scandals in examinations and competitions revealed it.

In any case, the French branch of this Action, supposed to be "God's work", doesn't seem to be clandestine after all, judging by what Francois Mauriac wrote about it:

"... I was the recipient of a strange confidence, so strange in fact that, if it had not been signed by a Catholic writer who is one of my friends and whom I trust, I would think it was a practical joke. He had offered an article to a periodical which accepted the offer gladly, but never acknowledged its receipt. Months go by, my friend becomes anxious, makes inquiries, and eventually receives this answer from the director of that periodical: "As you probably know, the "Opus Dei" has been checking what we publish for the past few months. And this "Opus Dei" absolutely refused to allow that text to be printed". This friend asks me the question: "What is the "Opus Dei"? And I, too, openly and candidly ask it..."(7)

This question—about which M. Francois Mauriac hints is not as "candid" as he says—the eminent academician could have asked it from people he knew well: writers, publishers, booksellers, men of science, lecturers, theatre and cinema people—unless he preferred to inform himself quite simply at the editing centres.

As for the opposition the "Opus Dei" is supposed to meet from certain Jesuits, we see in it nothing more than group rivalry. The Company as we have said and proved—is "modernist" as easily as "integrist", according to the opportunities, as it is determined to have a foot in both camps. In fact, the same publication "Le Monde" printed an article by M. Jean Creach, ironically inviting us to admire an "Auto-da-fe of the Spanish Jesuits", fortunately limited to the works of French literature. Indeed, this Jesuit censor doesn't seem to be a "modernist", judging by what M. Jean Creach says:

---

(7) "Le Bloc-notes de M. Francois Mauriac", in the "Express" of the 29th of October 1959

"If Father Garmendia had the power of Cardinal Tavera, the one whose gaze was resuscitated by Greco like lightning in a greenish mask, above the purple, Spain would be acquainted only with our literature by emasculated... or even beheaded authors".

Then, after quoting several amusing examples of the Reverend Father's purifying zeal, the author tells this pertinent reflection:

"Are the brains formed by our Jesuits so weak that they cannot confront even the smallest danger to triumph over it themselves?", whispered a mischievous tongue? "Tell me, dear friend; if they are incapable of it, what is the value of the teaching which renders them so feeble?"(8)

To this humorous critic, we can answer that the said weakness of the brains moulded by the Jesuits is, in fact, the main value of their teaching—and its danger as well.

This is the place to which we always have to return. Through a special vocation—and in spite of some honourable, even famous, exceptions— they are the sworn enemies of freedom of the mind: Brainwashed brainwashers!

This is their strength, as well as their weakness and injuriousness. M. Andre Mater stated extremely well the absolute totalitariansim of their Order when he wrote: "Through the discipline which unites him, in spirit, to all his fellow-members, each one of them acts and thinks with the intensity of thirty-thousand others. This is Jesuitic fanaticism".(9)

More terrible nowadays than ever before, this Jesuitic fanaticism, absolute master of the Roman Church, has embroiled her deeply in the competitions of world politics in which the militant and military spirit distinguishing this Company delights in. Under its care the papal organisation and the swastika launched a deadly attack on the hated liberalism and tried to bring about the "new Middle-Ages" Hitler promised Europe.(10)

In spite of von Ledochowski's prodigious plans, in spite of Himmler, "our Ignatius of Loyola", in spite of the slow-death camps, in spite of the corrupting of minds by Catholic Action and unrestrained propaganda of the Jesuits in the United States, the "providential man's" enterprise was a failure, and the "heritage of Saint-Peter", instead of increasing in the East, was reduced by that much.

---

(8) "Le Monde",.31st of August 1950.

(9) Andre Mater, op.cit., p. 193.

(10) Frederic Hoffet, op.cit., p.172.

An undeniable fact remains: the national-socialist government, "the most Catholic Germany ever had"(10), was also and by far the most abjectly cruel—without excluding from the comparison the barbarian epochs. Painful declaration indeed for many believers, but one it would be wise meditating upon. In the Order's "burgs", where the training was a copy of the Jesuitic method, the master—apparent, at least—of the Third Reich formed this "SS elite" before which, according to his wishes, the world "trembled"—but also vomited with disgust. The same causes produce the same results. "There are disciplines too heavy for the human soul to bear and which would utterly break a conscience... Crime of alienation of oneself masked by heroism... No commandment can be good if, first of all, it corrupts a soul. When one has engaged oneself fully in a society, other beings lose much of their importance".(1 1)

In fact, the Nazi chiefs had no consideration for the "other beings"; we can say the same as well of the Jesuits!

"They made obedience their idol".(12)

And this utter obedience was invoked by the accused of Nuremberg to excuse their awful crimes.

Finally, we borrow from the same author, who analysed Jesuitic fanaticism so well, this final judgment:

"We reproach the Company with its skill, its politics and deceit, we ascribe to it all the calculations, all the hidden motives, all the underhand blows; we reproach her even with the intelligence of its members. Yet there isn't one country where the Society has not experienced great disappointment, where it hasn't behaved in a scandalous manner and drawn upon itself righteous anger.

"If their machiavellism had the depth generally attributed to it, would these grave and thoughtful men constantly throw themselves into abysses human wisdom can foresee, into catastrophes they were bound to expect as the Order experienced similar ones in all civilized States?

"The explanation is simple: a powerful genius governs the Society, a genius so powerful that it thrusts it sometimes even against stumbling-blocks, as if it could break them, ad majorem Dei Gloriam".

"This genius is not the one of the general, of his advice, of the provincials, nor the heads of every household...

"It is the living genius of this vast body, it is the inevitable strength resulting from this gathering of sacrificed consciences, bound intelligences; it is the explosive strength and domineering fury of the Order, resulting from its nature itself.

---

(11) and (12 Henri Petit: "L'Honneur de Dieu", pp.25, 72, 73.

"In a great accumulation of clouds, lightning is powerful and the storm is bound to break out".(13)

Between 1939 and 1945, the storm killed 57 million souls ravaging and ruining Europe.

We must be on our guard; another and even worse catastrophe may lie hidden in these same clouds; lighting may strike again, throwing the world into "abysses human wisdom can foresee", but out of which, if it had the misfortune to let itself be thrown into, no power could rescue it.

In spite of what Rome's spokesmen may say, it is not "anticlericalism" which prompted us to study carefully the Vatican's politics, or those of the Jesuits', and to denounce its motives and means, but the necessity to enlighten the public about the sly activity of fanatics who do not retreat before anything—the past has proved this too often—to reach their aims.

We have seen how, during the 18th century, the European monarchies united to demand the suppression of this evil Order. Nowadays, it can concoct its intrigues in peace and the democratic governments do not seem to appear concerned.

The danger the world is exposed to because of this Company is far greater today than at the time of the "family pact", and even greater than when the two World Wars broke out.

No one can nurse any illusion as to the deadly consequences another conflict would have.

---

(13) Henri Petit, op.cit, pp.152-153.

THE SATURN MYTH

A reinterpretation of rites and symbols illuminating some of the dark corners of primordial society

DAVID N. TALBOTT

David N. Talbott

THE SATURN
MYTH

A reinterpretation of rites and symbols illuminating some of the dark corners of primordial society

Intrigued by Velikovsky’s claim that Saturn was once the pre-eminent planetary god, David Talbott resolved to examine its mythical character. “I wanted to know,” he wrote, “if ancient sources had a coherent story to tell about the planet . . . I had no inkling of the spectacular tale hidden in the chronicles.”

In this startling re-interpretation of age-old symbolism Talbott argues that the “Great God” or “Universal Monarch” of the ancients was not the sun, but Saturn, which once hung ominously close to the earth, and visually dominated the heavens.

Talbott’s close textual and symbolic analysis reveals the fundamental themes of Saturn imagery and proves that all of them—including the “cosmic ship”, the “island at the top of the world”, the “eye of heaven” and “the revolving temple” were based on celestial observations in the northern sky. In addition he shows how such diverse symbols as the Cross, “sun”-wheels, holy mountains, crowns of royalty and sacred pillars grew out of ancient Saturn worship. Talbott contends that Saturn's appearance at the time, radically different from today, inspired man's leap into civilization, since many aspects of early civilization can be seen as conscious efforts to re-enact or commemorate Saturn’s organization of his “celestial” kingdom.

A fascinating look at ancient history and cosmology, The Saturn Myth is a provocative book that might well change the way you think about man’s history and the history of the universe.

David N. Talbott is the founder and former publisher of Pensee, an out-growth of the Student Academic Forum which developed the book, Velikovsky Reconsidered. He is also the co-author of The Ecstasy of Sati-Ra, a cosmological mystery. He now lives with his family in Oregon.

Talbott, David N., The Saturn Myth

ISBN: 0-385-113376-5

Library of Congress Catalog Card Number 76-51986

Copyright © 1980 by David N.Talbott.

All Rights Reserved.

Printed in the United States of America.

First Edition.

Kindle version created by PapaLazzzaru, August 2013; revised March 2014, February 2015. Final revision June 2016.

CONTENTS

I: INTRODUCTION

Myth And Catastrophe

II: THE GREAT FATHER

The "One God" Of Archaic Monotheism

The Universal Monarch

The Age Of Kronos

India

Iran

China

Northern Europe

The Rites Of Kingship

The Heaven Man

Who Was Adam?

The Great Father Saturn

The Saturn Myth Reconstructed

III: THE POLAR SUN

Sun And Saturn

Day And Night

Saturn And The Pole

The Unmoved Mover

Egypt

Mesopotamia

India

China

The Americas

IV: SATURN'S COSMOS

The Enclosed Sun

The Lost Island

The Egg

The Cosmos And The Divine Assembly

The Circle Of The Gods

The Great Mother

Womb And Thigh

Womb And Cosmos

The Hermaphrodite

V: THE HOLY LAND
The Mother Land
Saturn’s Earth
The Egyptian Paradise
The World Wheel
The One-Wheeled Chariot
The City Of Heaven
The Enclosure As Prototype
The World Navel
The Ocean
VI. THE ENCLOSED SUN-CROSS
The Four Rivers Of Paradise
The Crossroads
The Four-Eyed Or Four-Faced God
The Foundation Stone
The Four Pillars Of Heaven
Symmetrical Elaborations Of The Sun-Cross
VII: TEMPLE, CROWN, VASE, EYE, AND CIRCULAR SERPENT
The Temple
The Egyptian Temple
Temple And Womb
The Crown
The Vase
The Eye
The Circular Serpent
In Summary: A Coherent Doctrine
VIII: THE COSMIC MOUNTAIN
- Egypt
- Mesopotamia
- India
- Japan, China, Iran, Siberia
- Siberia
- Greece And Rome
- Western Semitic
- The Americas

A Collective Memory

- The Mount Of Masculine Power
- The Cosmic Mountain Personified
- The Single Leg
- The Serpent/Dragon
- The Stream Of Life
  - Boreas And The Hyperboreans
  - The North Wind Shu
  - The River Of Life
  - The Eden-Fountain
- The King Of The Mountain

IX: THE CRESCENT

- The Crescent And Saturn
- The Crescent And Womb
- Crescent And Motherland
- The Crescent And Mount
- The Heavenly Twins
- Who Were The Dioscuri?
- The Black And White Twins
  - The Two Assemblies
  - The Two Lands
  - The Two Crowns
  - The Two Eyes
  - The Two Serpents
  - The Two Thrones
  - The Two Vases (=Two Eyes)
  - The Two Lakes or Rivers
  - The Two Cords
- Symbolism Of The Crescent
- The Crescent Horn
- The Horned Mountain

X: THE CRESCENT-SHIP (PART 2)

  - The World-Ship
  - The Island-Ship
  - The City-Ship
  - The Temple-Ship
  - The Wheel-Ship

The Egg-Ship
The Eye-Ship
The Vase-Ship
The Shield-Ship
The Throne-Ship
The Serpent (Dragon)-Ship
THE CRESCENT-ARMS
THE KA-ARMS
THE CRESCENT-WINGS
INTERCONNECTED SYMBOLS
The Plant Of Life
Sword
The Altar
ABOVE AND BELOW, LEFT AND RIGHT
SATURN'S DAY
XI: CONCLUSION
BIBLIOGRAPHY
ENDNOTES

I: Introduction

The planet Saturn today is recognizable only to those who know where to look for it. But a few thousand years ago Saturn dominated the earth as a sun, presiding over a universal Golden Age.

Modern man considers it self-evident that our familiar heavens differ hardly at all from the heavens encountered by the earliest star worshippers. He assumes that the most distinctive bodies venerated in primitive times were the sun and moon, followed by the five visible planets and various constellations—all appearing as they do today, but for such ever-so-slight changes as the precession of the equinoxes.

This long-standing belief not only confines present discussion of ancient myth and religion; it is the fixed doctrine of modern astronomy and geology: every prevailing theory of the solar system and of earth's past rests upon an underlying doctrine of cosmic uniformity—the belief that the clocklike regularity of heavenly motions can be projected backward indefinitely.

But the evidence assembled in the following pages indicates that within human memory extraordinary changes in the planetary system occurred: in the earliest age recalled by man the planet Saturn was the most spectacular light in the heavens and its impact on the ancient world overwhelming. In fact Saturn was the one "great god" invoked by all mankind. The first religious symbols were symbols of Saturn, and so pervasive was the planet god's influence that the ancients knew him as the creator, the king of the world, and Adam, the first man.

Since the only meaningful defense of this claim is the entire body of evidence presented here, I shall not presume upon the reader's credulity, but only ask that he follow the narrative to its end.

Myth And Catastrophe

If our generation disdains the possibility of fact in the language of myth it is because we are aware of discrepancy between myth and the modern world view, and we ascribe it to the blindness or superstition of the ancients. There is hardly an ancient tale which fails to speak of world-destroying upheavals and shifting cosmic orders. Indeed, we are so accustomed to the catastrophic character of the stories that we hardly give it a second thought. When the myths tell of suns which have come and gone, or of planetary gods whose wars threatened to destroy mankind, we are likely to take them as amusing and absurdly exaggerated accounts of local floods, earthquakes, and eclipses—or write them off altogether as expressions of unconstrained fancy. How many scholars, seeking to unravel the astronomical legends and symbols of antiquity, have questioned whether the heavenly bodies have always coursed on the same paths they follow today? In the past three hundred years barely a handful of writers have claimed any connection between myth and actual celestial catastrophe:

William Whiston published in 1696 A New Theory of the Earth, arguing that the biblical Deluge resulted from a cometary cataclysm. The book produced a storm of scientific objections and had no lasting impact outside Christian orthodoxy.

In 1882 and 1883 two books by Ignatius Donnelly appeared: Atlantis, the Antediluvian World, and Ragnarok: the Age of Fire and Gravel. Relying on global myths, Donnelly claimed that a massive continent called Atlantis once harboured a primordial civilization, but the entire land sank beneath the sea when a comet rained destruction on the earth. Both of Donnelly's books became best sellers and are still available today. Yet conventional theories of earth and the solar system remain unaffected by these works.

Around the turn of the century Isaac Vail argued in a series of brief papers that myths of cosmic upheaval relate to the collapse of ice bands surrounding our planet.[1] Three quarters of a century after his death, his work is familiar only to the esoteric few.

In 1913 Hans Hoerbiger published his Glacial-Kosmogonie, contending that the great catastrophes described in ancient myth occurred when the Earth captured another planet which became our moon.[2] The relatively small interest in Hoerbiger's thesis vanished within a couple of decades.

This was the extent of noteworthy research into myth and catastrophe when Immanuel Velikovsky, in early 1940, first wondered whether a cosmic disturbance may have accompanied the Hebrew Exodus. According to the biblical account, massive plagues occurred, Sinai erupted, and a pillar of cloud and fire moved in the sky. His quest for a solution led Velikovsky through a systematic survey of world mythology and eventually to the conclusion that ancient myths constitute a collective memory of celestial disorder. The great gods, Velikovsky observed, appear explicitly as planets. In the titanic wars vividly depicted by ancient chroniclers the planets moved on erratic courses, appearing to wage battles in the sky, exchanging electrical discharges, and more than once menacing the earth.

Velikovsky set forth his claims of celestial catastrophe in his book Worlds in Collision (published in 1950), proposing that first Venus and then Mars, in the period 1500-686 B.C., so disturbed the Earth's axis as to produce world-wide destruction. The book became an immediate best seller and the focus of one of the great scientific controversies of this century.[3]

I mention Velikovsky not only because his work obviously relates to the thesis of this book, but because, as a matter of record, Velikovsky first directed my attention toward Saturn. In a manuscript still awaiting publication Velikovsky proposed that the now-distant planet was once the dominant heavenly body, and he identified Saturn's epoch with the legendary Golden Age. While I have not seen Velikovsky's unpublished manuscript on Saturn, a brief outline of his idea inspired the present inquiry: was Saturn once the preeminent light in the heavens?

Yet I possessed at the outset no conception of the broad thesis presented here—which fell into place with surprising rapidity, once I set out to reconstruct the Saturn myth. While expecting to find, at best, only faint echoes of Saturn (or no hint at all), I found instead that the ancients, looking back to "the beginnings," were obsessed with the planet-god and strove in a thousand ways to relive Saturn's epoch. The most common symbols of antiquity, which our age universally regards as solar emblems (, etc.) were originally unrelated to our sun. They were literal pictures of Saturn, whom the entire ancient world invoked as "the sun." In the original age to which the myths refer, Saturn was no remote speck faintly discerned by terrestrial observers; the planet loomed as an awesome and terrifying light. And if we are to believe the wide-spread accounts of Saturn's age, the planet-god's home was the unmoving celestial pole, the apparent pivot of the heavens, far removed from the visible path of Saturn today.

At first glance, however, the Saturn myth seems to present an entanglement of bizarre images. The earliest, most venerated religious texts depict the great god sailing in a celestial ship, consorting with winged goddesses, fashioning revolving islands, cities and temples, or abiding upon the shoulders of a cosmic giant. It is impossible to pursue Saturn's ancient image without encountering the paradise of Eden, the lost Atlantis, the fountain of youth, the one-wheeled "chariot of the gods," the all-seeing Eye of heaven, or the serpent-dragon of the deep. Though celebrated as living, visible powers, none of Saturn's personifications or mythical habitats conforms to anything in our familiar world. Yet once one seeks out the concrete nature of these images, it becomes clear that each referred to the same celestial form. The subject is a Saturnian configuration of startling simplicity—whose appearance, transformation, and eventual disappearance became the focus of all ancient rites.

---

[1] A number of Vail's papers have been collected and published by Donald Cyr, Annular Publications, 25 West Anapamu Street, Santa Barbara, California.

[2] A general and less-than-convincing survey of mythological evidence will be found in H. S. Bellamy, Moons, Myths and Man.

[3] This is not the place to recount the details of the "Velikovsky affair" or to recite the many unexpected space age discoveries weighing in Velikovsky's favor. The story receives comprehensive coverage in the recent book Velikovsky Reconsidered, a series of papers by scholars acknowledging substantial scientific evidence in support of Velikovsky's claims.

I now have little doubt that, if Velikovsky had pursued the Saturn question to the end, he would have perceived a vastly greater influence of the planet than he originally recognized. He would have discovered also that the full story of Saturn adds a new perspective to much of the mythological material gathered in Worlds in Collision. (In this connection I must stress that I alone am responsible for the themes and conclusions presented in this book. Realizing that Velikovsky has had to defend his own heresy for better than a quarter of a century, I have no desire to burden him with the heresy of others.)

Nothing came as a greater surprise to me than the sheer quantity of material bearing directly on the Saturn tradition. The scope of the subject matter made it necessary to separate the material into two volumes: the first dealing with the original Saturnian apparition, the second with Saturn's catastrophic fate. This initial volume then, focuses on the primordial age of cosmic harmony and the unified image of Saturn as king of the world.

II: The Great Father

Anyone attempting to trace the Saturn legend must reckon with the primordial god-figure whom ancient races celebrate as "the great father," and who is said to have first organized the heavens and founded the antediluvian kingdom of peace and plenty, the "Golden Age." While few of us today could locate Saturn in the starry sphere, the earliest astral religions insist that the planet-god was once the all-powerful ruler of heaven. But paradoxically, they also declare that he resided on earth as a great king. He was the father both of gods and men.

This dual character of the great father has been the subject of a centuries-long, but unresolved debate. Was he a living ancestor subsequently exaggerated into a cosmic divinity? Or was he originally a celestial god whom later myths reduced to human proportions? For an explanation of the great father researchers look to such varied powers as the solar orb, an esteemed tribal chief, or an abstract "vegetation cycle." Almost uniformly ignored is the connection of the primordial man-god with the actual planet Saturn—even though it is precisely the latter that can tell us why the great father appears in both human and celestial form.

The overwhelming preoccupation of ancient ritual is with an ancient "great god":

1. The myths say that the god emerged alone from the cosmic sea as the preeminent power in the heavens. Out of watery chaos he produced a new order. The ancients worshipped him as the creator and the supreme lord of the Cosmos.

2. This solitary god, according to the legend, founded a kingdom of unparalleled splendour. He was the divine ancestor of all earthly rulers, his kingdom the prototype of the just and prosperous realm. Throughout his reign an unending spring prevailed, the land produced freely, and men knew neither labour nor war.

3. In the god-king's towering form the ancients perceived the Heaven Man, a primordial giant whose body was the newly organized Cosmos. The legends often present the figure as the first man or "primordial man," whose history personified the struggle of good and evil.

4. Whether emphasizing the great father's character as creator, first king, or Heaven Man, widespread traditions proclaim him to be the planet Saturn.

In investigating the traits of the archaic god we must give greatest weight to the oldest astral religions—those which are closest to the original experience. The best material, coming from ancient Egypt and Mesopotamia, provides a remarkably coherent picture of the god and enables one to see the development and the distortions of the idea among later peoples. What is most surprising, however, is the enduring power of the root themes.

The "One God" Of Archaic Monotheism

In the beginning the ancients knew one supreme god only, a divinity invoked as the creator and the father of all the gods.

According to a long-established school of thought, man's consciousness of a supreme being emerged slowly from a primitive fascination with petty spirits and demons. Adherents to this opinion tell us that human reason gradually modified capricious spirits of "vegetation," "spring," "the ancestors," or "sexual power" into the great gods of global religion.

Of such an evolutionary process, however, one finds little evidence. The great edifices erected by Herbert Spencer, E.B. Tylor, and James G. Frazer[4] appear to rest exclusively on the assumption that one can learn the origins of theism by studying existing primitive cultures. The idea is that the civilized races of old must have first passed through "primitive" phases. Before the Hebrews, Greeks, or Hindus developed their elevated ideas of a supreme god, they must have possessed beliefs and customs similar to those of modern-day tribes of Africa, Australia, or Polynesia. Only by slow development, say these theorists, could a race rise above the ludicrous magic, totems, and fetishes of the savage.

It is interesting that the advocates of the various evolutionary theories, in their fascination with present-day primitive cultures, almost never concern themselves with the oldest religious texts and symbols which have come down to us. The sacred hymns and eulogies of ancient Egypt and Mesopotamia reveal a tradition of a "great god" reaching back into prehistoric times. Moreover, a comparison of early and later sources, rather than suggesting a development, actually indicates the disintegration of a once-unified idea into magic, astrology, totemism, and other elements with which the evolutionists associate the "first stages" of religion.

Figure 1. Atum, the solitary god of beginnings.

There are grounds for speaking of an archaic monotheism, astral in nature, existing long before the idea of God received its spiritual and philosophical elevation in Hebrew and Greek thought. To the ancients themselves the entire question was simply a matter of concrete history: the present world is a fragmented copy of an earlier age, in which the supreme light god stood alone in a primeval sea, occupying the cosmic centre.

Ancient Egyptian texts repeatedly invoke a singular figure worshipped as the greatest and highest light of the primeval age. One of his many names was Atum, a god "born in the Abyss before the sky existed, before the earth existed."[5] These are the words of the Pyramid Texts, perhaps the world's oldest religious hymns, but the texts of all periods look back to the same primordial time when Atum shone forth alone. "I came into being of myself in the midst of the Primeval Waters," states the god in the Book of the Dead.[6] More than once the Coffin Texts recall the time when Atum "was alone, before he had repeated himself."[7] He "was alone in the [4] Spencer, The Principles of Sociology; Tylor, Primitive Culture and Researches into the Early History of Mankind; Frazer, The Golden Bough.

---

In 1934 E.A. Wallis Budge published his From Fetish to God in Ancient Egypt, whose very title indicates the influence of the evolutionary theory on specialists. Budge writes (p.56): "Animism must have preceded the magical cults of the predynastic Egyptians, and it, in its turn, was succeeded by the cults of animals, birds, reptiles, trees, etc., which after animism formed the predominant part of the later religion of the Egyptians. The great merit and fact that it embraced a qualified totemism and fetishism and prepared the way for the higher classes of spirits to become 'gods.'" Yet one looks in vain for evidence of this assumed evolution among the Egyptians.

[5] Pyramid Text 1040.

[6] Clark, Myth and Symbol in Ancient Egypt, 40, from Chapter 85 of the Egyptian Book of the Dead.

[7] Clark, op. cit., 94.

Primeval Waters," they say.[8] "I was [the spirit in?] the Primeval Waters, he who had no companion when my name came into existence."[9]

Each locality in Egypt appears to have possessed its own special representative of the father god.[10] To some he was Horus, "the god who came first into being when no other god had yet come into existence, when no name of anything had yet been proclaimed."[11] Other traditions knew him as Re, "the God One who came into being in the beginning of time . . . O thou who didst give Thyself birth! O one, mighty one of myriad forms and aspects, king of the world . . ."[12]

The followers of Amen proclaimed their god "the Ancient of Heaven . . . , father of the gods."[13] Ptah was "the splendid god who existed alone in the beginning."[14]

The different local names of the primeval deity, though adding complexity to Egyptian religion as a whole, do not cloud the underlying idea. He is the "god One," the "Only One," the "father of beginnings," the "Supreme Lord," the singular god "except whom at the beginning none other existed."[15]

Surveying Egyptian religion one cannot fail to notice the priests' obsession with the past—and their vivid portrait of the great god in his "first appearance." Those who look for an unseen creator in early Egyptian religion will be disappointed. He is a visible and concrete power, the "lord of terror," or "the great of terror."[16] The memory of this solitary light god and creator was as old as the most ancient Egyptian ritual. His appearance—and eventual departure—shaped every aspect of the Egyptian world view.

So also in Mesopotamia, about which Stephen Langdon raises the question of archaic monotheism. After prolonged study of Semitic and Sumerian sources, Langdon concludes that veneration of spirits and demons had nothing to do with the origins of Mesopotamian religion. Rather, "both in Sumerian and Semitic religions, monotheism preceded polytheism and belief in good and evil spirits."[17]

Langdon notes that on the pictographic tablets of the prehistoric period, the picture of a star repeatedly appears. The sign , he claims, is virtually the only religious symbol in the primitive period, and in the early Sumerian language this star symbol is the ideogram for writing "god," "high," "heaven," and "bright." It is also the ideogram of An, the oldest and loftiest of the Sumerian gods.

An (or Anu) was the father of the gods and the central light at the universe summit, a god of "terrifying splendour" who governed heaven from his throne in the cosmic sea Apsu.

---

[8] Ibid., 95.

[9] Ibid., 74. Elsewhere the texts employ the phrases "while he was still alone," (77), "when I [Atum] was still alone in the waters . . . " (38).

[10] Muller observes, for example, that within the capital of each of the forty-two nomes, the original patron god was extolled "as though he was the only god or was at least the supreme divinity." Egyptian Mythology, 17-18.

[11] Frankfort, Kingship and the Gods, 37.

[12] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, Introductory Hymn to Re.

[13] Lenormant, Chaldean Magic, 80.

[14] Ptah is "le dieu splendide qui existait tout seul au commencement. Il n'y a pas son pareil, celui qui s'est créé au commencement sans avoir ni père ni mère. Il a façonné son corps tout seul, celui qui a créé sans être créé, celui qui porte le ciel comme le travail de ses mains." Hassan, Hymnes Religieux du Moyen Empire, 160-61.

[15] Budge, The Gods of the Egyptians, Vol. I, 131 ff., 400, 501: also Budge, From Fetish to God in Ancient Egypt, 4-5, 138-39.

[16] Hassan, op cit., 24, 27; Budge, Gods, Vol. II, 14.

[17] Langdon, Semitic Mythology, xviii.

But the Sumero-Babylonian pantheon is filled with competing figures of the primordial creator. Enki (or Ea), Ningirsu, Ninurta, Tammuz—each appears as a local formulation of the same great god.[18] Each shares in the character of the singular An, ruling as universal lord, fashioning his home above and radiating light in the midst of the celestial ocean.

Here, as in Egypt, the god of archaic monotheism is not a transcendent spirit or invisible power, but a central light. A Sumerian epic to Ninurta proclaims, "Anu in the midst of Heaven gave him fearful splendour." Ninurta, according to the text, is "like Anu," and casts "a shadow of glory over the land."[19] All Mesopotamian figures of the primeval god possess this tangible character, and accounts of the god's radiant appearance are more of a historical than a speculative nature.

Egyptian and Mesopotamian traditions of the solitary creator find many parallels in later Hebrew, Greek, Persian, Hindu, and Chinese mysticism and philosophy. But it is the earlier imagery which illuminates the later. And however unorthodox the idea may seem, the oldest records treat the great god's birth in the deep and his acts of "creation" as events experienced by the ancestors. "Hearts were pervaded with fear, hearts were pervaded with terror when I was born in the abyss," proclaims the god in the Pyramid Texts.[20] The solitary god, in the presence of the ancestors, brought forth the primeval world or "earth." To understand the great god's creation one must put aside modern philosophical and religious conceptions. The tradition has nothing to do with the origins of our planet or of the material universe. The subject of the original creation legend is the formation of the great god's visible dwelling above. The legend records that when the creator rose from the cosmic sea a great band or revolving island congealed around the god as his home. The band appeared as a well-defined, organized, and geometrically unified dwelling—a celestial "land" fashioned by the great father. All space outside this enclosure belonged to unorganized Chaos.

In a later section of this book I intend to show that ancient races the world over recorded pictures of the great god and his circular abode. The images were and (the second, more complete form showing streams of light radiating from the god to animate his "city of heaven"). The words which in the ancient languages denote this enclosure receive various translations as "heaven," "cosmos," "world," "land," "earth," "netherland"—terms which take on vastly different meanings in modern usage. In their original sense the words signified one and the same thing: a band of light which appeared to set apart the "sacred ground" of the great god from the rest of space.

(One cannot begin a survey of the great father without confronting his celestial enclosure, but a full discussion of this dwelling will be possible only after certain other aspects of the single god receive clarification. I mention the enclosure now in order to indicate the general, and unconventional, direction of this investigation. When texts cited in the following pages employ the terms "heaven," "earth," or "world" the reader should know that the usual interpretation will not be my interpretation.)

---

[18] Ibid., 93. "Les épithètes laudatives insisteront sur son caractère de dieu des cieux, père des cieux, et surtout de roi des cieux. Il trône au sommet de la voûte céleste." Dhorme, Les Religions de Babylonie et d'Assyrie, 23.

[19] The iconography of such dieties, states Frankfort, reveals a single underlying idea. Op. cit., 282. According to Van Dijk, "les différents dieux des panthéons locaux sont les 'Erscheinungsformen'—des formes pluralistes—d'une même divinité." "Le Motif Cosmique dans la Pensée Sumérienne," 4.

But Jeremias in his discussion of these "monotheistic streams" described the supreme god as an "invisible divine power." It is difficult to imagine a less appropriate description of An or any of his representative deities. In the texts An is not only the "light of the gods," but a light of "terrifying glory." Alfred Jeremias, Handbuch der Altorientalischen Geisteskultur, 227. Also Jeremias, Monotheistische Strömungen . . .

If only one god prevailed in the beginning, how did the Sumero-Babylonian religion acquire its almost endless number of deities? Langdon writes: "By giving special names to the functions of each deity [or representative of An] the theologians obtained an enormous pantheon, and by assigning special functions of the three great gods to their sons, and again giving special names to their functions the parent tree became a forest of gods and minor deities." Op. cit., 91.

[20] Langdon, op. cit., 124.

Of the Egyptian Atum (or Re) I note these special characteristics:

1. Primeval Unity. Atum is the "One," but also the "All." Though he is the solitary god of beginnings, an assembly of lesser gods emanate from him and revolve in his company. These secondary deities, the paut or "circle" of the gods, constitute Atum's own "limbs." Atum's body is the primeval Cosmos,[21] denoted by the circle in the sign .

2. Regulator. Atum is the stationary god, the "Firm Heart of the Sky." His hieroglyph, however, is the primitive sledge , signifying "to move." As the central light or pivot, he imparts motion to (or "moves") the heavens, while he himself remains em hetep, "at rest." Directing the celestial motions (and the related cycles) he becomes the god of Time.[22]

3. The Word. The Egyptians recall Atum as the ancient Voice of heaven:

The Word came into being.

All things were mine when I was alone.

I was Re [=Atum] in his first manifestations.

The texts describe the god's "first manifestations"[23] as the bringing forth of his companions (his "limbs"), which issue—or explode—from the god as his fiery "speech." This circle of secondary divinities receives the name Khu, meaning "words of power," but also "brilliant lights" or "glorious lights."

4. Water God. A well-known chapter of the Book of the Dead includes this description of Re:

I am the Great God who created himself.

Who is he?

The Great God who created himself is the water

it is the Abyss, the Father of the Gods.[24]

The great god and the celestial ocean—"a lake of fire"—are fundamentally one. The waters issue from the god yet, paradoxically, give birth to him.

5. The Seed. Atum is the masculine power of heaven, the luminous Seed embodying all the elements of life (water, fire, air, etc.), which flow from him in streams of light. He is the universal source of fertility animating and impregnating the Cosmos.[25]

What is most compelling about the portrait of Atum-Re is that numerous Egyptian divinities duplicate the image. The very traits of the great god, outlined above, are endlessly repeated in the figures of Osiris, Ptah, Horus, Khepera, and Amen—each of whom appears as the solitary god in the fiery sea; the god One who brought forth the company of gods as his own limbs; the god of the reverberating speech; the unmoving god producing the celestial revolutions; the final source of waters and the impregnating Seed of the Cosmos.[26]

If we were to inquire of an Egyptian priest how he arrived at this notion of the supreme god, the priest would tell us that he did not "arrive" at the idea at all. The great god was a historical divinity, who ruled heaven for a time, then departed amid great upheavals. The hymns and ritual texts (the priest would say) simply record the incarnation of the god in the primordial era and recount the massive cataclysms which accompanied the collapse of that era.

---

[21] Pyramid Texts 1039-40.

[22] See especially the section on "The Circle of the Gods".

[23] See the discussion of the Egyptian "Unmoved Mover".

[24] Clark, op. cit., 79.

[25] Piankoff, The Shrines of Tut-Ankh-Amon, 121.

[26] See the section on the cosmic womb.

As the following sections will show, the general tradition is global and highly coherent.

The Universal Monarch

The same cosmic figure whom the oldest races knew as the creator and supreme god appears in the myths as a terrestrial king, reigning over the Golden Age. His rule was distinguished for its peace and abundance, and he governed not one land alone but the entire world, becoming the model of the good king. Every terrestrial ruler, according to the kingship rites, received his charisma and authority from this divine predecessor.

No mythical figure remains more enigmatic than the great king to whom so many ancient peoples traced their ancestry. Who was Osiris, the legendary ruler who led the Egyptians out of barbarianism and reigned as king of the entire world? Who was Enki, whom the ancient Sumerians revered as the "universal lord" and founder of civilization?

The same figure appears repeatedly as one passes to India, Greece, China, and the Americas. For the Hindus it was Yama; for the Greeks, Kronos; for the Chinese, Huang-ti. The Mexicans insisted that the white god Quetzalcoatl once ruled not only Mexico but all mankind. In North America the same idea attached to the primordial figure Manabozo.

So vivid are the recollections of the Universal Monarch that his story usually forms the first chapter in the chronicles of kingship. And the kingship rites meticulously preserve a memory of the god-kings rule. Each stage in the inauguration of a new king reenacts the "first" king's life and death. The rites take the initiated back to the beginning—to the mythical "creation."

An extraordinary theme emerges: In the original age of cosmic harmony and human innocence the gods dwelt on earth. Presiding over the epoch of peace and plenty was the Universal Monarch, who founded temples and cities and taught humanity the principles of agriculture, law, writing, music, and other civilized arts. This Golden Age, however, ended in the god-king's catastrophic death.

What is most puzzling to modern commentators is that the king of the world, "ruling on earth," is at the same time the creator, the "god One." How did the ancients come upon this paradoxical notion?

The Age Of Kronos

Greek legends recall a remote and mysterious era of Kronos, the creator god who, wielding his sickle, ruled from the summit of Olympus. Eventually displaced by his own son, against whom he warred violently, Kronos seems to have appeared to the Greeks as a split personality, at once a radiant god—the very author of the world—and a dark, demonic power.

But in an old tradition, with roots in earliest antiquity, Kronos is preeminently the good king, his darker side concealed. "First of all the deathless gods who dwell on Olympus made a golden race of mortal men who lived in the time of Kronos when he was reigning in heaven. And they lived like gods without sorrow of heart, remote and free from toil and grief: miserable age rested not on them . . . The fruitful earth unforced bare them fruit abundantly and without stint. They dwelt in ease and peace upon their lands with many good things, rich in flocks and loved by the blessed gods."[27]

When Hesiod wrote these lines the Golden Age of Kronos was but a faint and often confused memory. To observe the antiquity of the idea one need only refer to the cradles of ancient civilization—Egypt and Mesopotamia.

Among the Egyptians the father of the paradisal age possessed many names, but each tradition proclaimed the same original excellence of creation, subsequently corrupted. The peaceful epoch was distinctly the age of

---

[27] Evelyn-White, Hesiod, the Homeric Hymns and Homerica, 11.

Kronos, under a different title. “Throughout their history the Egyptians believed in a time of perfection at the beginning of the world,” observes Clark.[28]

In the earliest age, say the Egyptian sources, the great god was the first king, a ruler whose life served as a model for all succeeding ages. With the god-king Osiris the Egyptians constantly associated a vanished Golden Age. As king, Osiris, the “Beneficent Being,” taught his subjects to worship the gods, gave them the arts of civilization, and formulated the laws of justice. Founding sacred temples and cities and disseminating wisdom from one land to another, he became the benefactor of the whole world.[29] But his eventual murder brought world-wide destruction.

Among classical writers (Herodotus, Diodorus, Plutarch) the idea prevailed that Osiris lived on our earth as a man or man-god. Egyptian sources, too, often portray him in human form. Yet the early religious texts say again and again that Osiris was the supreme light of heaven, ruling from the cosmic centre. He was, in fact, “the lord of the gods, god One.”[30] His body formed the Circle of the Tuat, the celestial residence of the gods. And the secondary gods themselves constituted the limbs of Osiris.[31]

Indeed, the traditions of Osiris melt into those of Re, the “god One, who came into being in primeval time.” Just as Osiris’ followers remembered his rule on earth, so did other Egyptians recall the terrestrial reign of the Creator Re. To this age, states Lenormant, the Egyptians “continually looked back with regret and envy.” To declare the superiority of one thing above all other things imaginable, it was enough to affirm, “its like had never been seen since the days of Re.”[32]

Re, the father of the gods, reigned over the terrestrial world, but wandered away when the heavens fell into disorder. “All chronological tradition affirms that Re had once ruled over Egypt,” writes Budge, “and it is a remarkable fact that every possessor of the throne of Egypt was proved by some means or other to have the blood of Re flowing in his veins . . .”[33] But the same belief applied to Horus, the god-king par excellence, as well as Atum, Khepera, Ptah, and Amen. The fact which must be explained is that the memory of the creator-king and his original age of abundance was far broader than any local tradition.

And the story was not limited to Egypt. According to the theologian and historian Eusebius (who relates the account of the Babylonian priest-historian Berossus), the ancient tribes of Chaldea owed their civilization to a powerful and benevolent figure named Oannes, who ruled before the Deluge. Prior to Oannes, the tribes lived “without order, like the beasts.” But the new god-king, who issued from the sea, instructed mankind in writing and various arts, the formation of cities, and the founding of temples. “He also taught them the use of laws, of bounds and divisions, also the harvesting of grains and fruits, and in short all that pertains to the mollifying of life he delivered to men; and since that time nothing more has been invented by anybody.”[34]

Oannes was simply the Greek name for the Babylonian Ea (the Sumerian Enki), worshipped in the city of Eridu at the mouth of the Euphrates. The tradition dates to the earliest stage of Sumerian history, a time when the myths say that Enki and his wife Damkina governed the lost paradise of Dilmun, the “pure place” of man’s genesis.

They alone reposed in Dilmun;

---

[28] Op. cit., 103.

[29] Budge, Osiris; the Egyptian Religion of Resurrection, 1-23.

[30] Budge, Gods, Vol. I, 131.

[31] Of Osiris Budge writes, “His Body formed the circle of the Tuat . . . Osiris enshrined within himself all the cosmic gods or gods of nature.” From Fetish to God, 183.

[32] Les Origines de l’Histoire, 58.

[33] Gods, Vol. I, 329.

[34] Quoted in The Cambridge Ancient History, Vol. I, Part 2, 102.

Where Enki and his wife reposed,

That place was pure, that place was clean . . .

In Dilmun the raven croaked not.

The kite shrieked not kite-like.

The lion mangled not.

The wolf ravaged not the lambs.[35]

The inhabitants of this paradise lived in a state of near perfection, drinking the waters of life and enjoying unbounded prosperity.

Ruling over this favoured domain, Enki introduced civilization to mankind, founded the first cities and temples, and set down the first laws.

If, in the account of Berossus, the bringer of civilization appears as a man (or part man, part fish), the earlier accounts call him the creator. His home was the cosmic sea Apsu, the celestial waters of "fire, rage, splendour and terror."[36] The priests of Ea or Enki deemed him Mummu, the creative "Word." Like the Egyptian creator, Enki brought forth the secondary gods through his own speech.

Diverse localities worshipped the same cosmic power under different names. In the ancient city of Lagash the priests honoured the god Ninurta as the father of the paradisal age. Ninurta founded temples and cities; the years of his rule, connected with the beginning of the world, were "years of plenty."

Ninurta—scaled the mountain and scattered seed far and wide,

And the plants with one accord named him as their king.[37]

The Sumerians themselves knew that Ninurta was the same as the "vegetation god" Damuzi (or Tammuz), "son of the Apsu"—the shepherd of mankind whom classical mythology knew as Adonis and whose catastrophic departure or death became the focus of ritual lamentations for many hundreds of years.

But Enki, Ninurta, and Damuzi were only aspects of the creator An, whose ideogram (as previously noted) appears as the earliest Mesopotamian sign of divinity. In all the myths and temple hymns, the Sumerians distinguish the present age from "that day," or "the days of old," when the gods "gave man abundance, the day when vegetation flourished."[38] The supreme figure reigning over this remote age was AN, the central and highest light, whose foremost epithet was lugal, "king." The Sumerians claimed that the very institution of kingship descended from "the heaven of An." It was An who produced the beneficent age—"when the destiny was fixed for everything that was engendered (by An), when An engendered the year of abundance."[39]

How widespread was this memory of a Golden Age, foundered and governed by the creator himself? It appears that the tradition was either preserved in or migrated to every section of the world. In Mexico, legends recount the ancient rule of Quetzalcoatl, who appeared from the sea to become the good and wise ruler of Tollan, in the Golden Age of Anahuac. The legend describes the god as a "lawgiver, teacher of the arts, and founder of purified religion."[40] He was the "Ancestral Founding King," and all later Toltec kings considered themselves his direct descendants.[41] Of Quetzalcoatl the Toltecs sang:

---

[35] Langdon, op. cit., 194.

[36] Ibid., 105.

[37] Ibid., 119.

[38] Van Dijk, op. cit., 16*ff.*

[39] Ibid., 23. Van Dijk writes (p. 32): "Cette pensée que le jour de l'origine est devenu le prototype des autres jours où, tant dans la mythologie que dans l'histoire sumérienne, de grandes catastrophes se sont produites, se trouve perpétuée dans l'expression . . . comme dans les temps lointains."

All the arts of the Toltecs, their knowledge, everything came from Quetzalcoatl.
The Toltecs were wealthy,
their foodstuffs, their sustenance, cost nothing.
They say that the squash
were big and heavy . . .
And those Toltecs were very rich,
they were very happy;
There was no poverty or sadness.
Nothing was lacking in their houses,
There was no hunger among them . . .[42]

In the story of Quetzalcoatl one finds the same confusion of man and god as in the legends of Egypt and Mesopotamia. The chronicler Sahagun writes, "Although this Quetzalcoatl had been a man they respected him as a god."[43] Indeed, he was the creator, for "He made the heavens, the sun, the earth."[44] The Toltecs claim that in the beginning their race knew only one god:

Only one god did they have,
and they held him as the only god, they invoked him, they supplicated him; his name was Quetzalcoatl.[45]

Not only was Quetzalcoatl the "Giver of Life"; the legend proclaims that the first divine generation emanated directly from him. But eventually the god (like his counterparts around the world) suffered a violent fate, bringing to an end his Golden Age. To the Egyptian, Mesopotamian, and American Indian accounts of the remote epoch correspond numerous legends of India, Iran, China, and northern Europe:

India

The Hindu Brahma, Yama, Vishnu, and Manu converge as representatives of a solitary supreme god and creator governing a lost paradise as the first king, setting forth the first moral codes, and imparting to mankind the fundamentals of civilization. Yama appears as the "universal lord"; Manu, as the "king of the world" or "universal legislator," to whom later monarchs traced their lineage.[46]

---

[40] Alexander, Latin American Mythology, 66.

[41] Perry, Lord of the Four Quarters, 195. Burland, The Gods of Mexico, 33, 47.

[42] León-Portilla, Pre-Columbian Literatures of Mexico, 40-41.

[43] Quoted in Burland, op. cit., 149.

[44] Alexander, op. cit., 69.

[45] Perry, op. cit., 196.

[46] Guenon, Le Roi du Monde, 13*ff.* Perry, op cit., 126*ff.*

"In the beginning," say the Upanishads, "there arose the Golden Child. As soon as born he alone was lord of all that is."[47] This was Brahma, the "god One." His prosperous epoch, however, ended in his own death and a world-destroying conflagration.

Iran

Yima, the Iranian transcript of the Hindu Yama, is the patriarchal lord of mankind, the "brilliant Yima" who first introduced law and civilization to the world. His age knew "neither cold nor heat . . . neither age nor death." So resplendent was his rule that "the world assembled round his throne in wonder." But then (when Yima diverged from the path of justice), the Glory fled from his kingdom, and he was put to death. Thereupon, the eternal spring became a devastating winter.[48]

China

In the earliest age, according to ancient Chinese lore, the purest pleasure and tranquillity reigned throughout all nature. Mankind suffered neither hunger, nor pain, nor sorrow. "The whole creation enjoyed a state of happiness . . . , and things grew without labour; and a universal fertility prevailed." It was over just such a paradise that the "Yellow Emperor" Huang-ti ruled. Considered the father of the Taoist religion, Huang-ti was the creator, a universal lawmaker and founder of arts and civilization. He was also a mortal, and his fruitful era vanished upon his death.[49]

Northern Europe

During the "peace of Frodi," a mythical Danish king, no man injured another and a magical mill ground out peace and plenty for the entire land. Frodi is the Norse god Frey, founder of temples and religious rites, the "generous lord under whom peace and fruitfulness abounded," both the "lord of the Swedes" and "god of the world." In the footsteps of the Scandinavian Odin (the creator) well-being, peace, and good seasons followed. The legends style him the first king, the "inventor of arts," and the source of human wisdom. But the age of Frey dissolved in flames, just as Odin and his prosperous kingdom came crashing down in the fires of Ragnarok.[50]

Here then, is a world-wide motif, deeply ingrained in the religious and historical records of all principal races. "The idea of the Edenic happiness of the first human beings constitutes one of the universal traditions," states Lenormant.[51] Ministering over this age is the Universal Monarch. While extolled as the solitary supreme god and the creator of the world, he yet appears as a ruler on earth, the ancestor of terrestrial kings. By his teaching mankind rose from barbarianism. But in the end the god met a catastrophic fate, and his death or departure brought a violent termination of the first world order.

The Rites Of Kingship

The ritual surrounding ancient kings amounts to a summary of ancient beliefs about the Universal Monarch, for every local sovereign was the successor and representative of the great god who ruled the world during the Golden Age. The rites of kingship testify to the enormous power which the collective memory of this god-king held over later generations. Chronicles of kingship from Egypt, to Mesopotamia, to Persia, to China, to Italy, to northern Europe, to pre-Columbian Mexico all trace the line of kings back to the first king, a supreme cosmic deity who "founded" the kingship rites.

---

[47] Fluegel, Philosophy, Qabbala and Vedanta, Vol. I, 179. Of Vishnu, the inscription on the famous Iron Pillar of Delhi declares, "The beauty of that king's countenance was as that of the full moon [candra];—by him, with his own arm, sole world-wide dominion was acquired and long held; and although, as if wearied, he has in bodily form quitted this earth, and passed to the other-world country won by his merit, yet, like the embers of a quenched fire in a great forest, the glow of his foe-destroying energy quits not the earth . . . " Vincent A. Smith, "The Iron Pillar of Delhi," 6.

[48] Carnoy, Iranian mythology, 304-5; Darmesteter, The Zend-Avesta, lxv, lxxxviii, 10-11.

[49] Faber, The Origins of Pagan Idolatry, Vol. II, 139; Ferguson, Chinese Mythology, 21.

[50] Davidson, Gods and Myths of Northern Europe, 92*ff*., 56, 202*ff*.; MacCulloch, Eddic Mythology, 32, 39, 113-14, 133.

[51] Les Origines de l'Histoire, Vol. I, 58.

"When history begins there are kings, the representatives of the gods," states Hocart.[52] No greater mistake could be made by historians than to assume that the sovereignty of kings grew out of economic or material concerns. Instead, the crucial forces were religious. The king was a product of ancient ritual, and the ritual centered in cosmic beliefs which, for several millennia, could not be shaken loose. To comprehend the mighty influence of kingship in the ancient world one must penetrate the mystery of the king's prototype, the Universal Monarch.

In the first king's life and rule originated the prerogatives and obligations of all local sovereigns. It was the duty of every king to perform the rites instituted by the great god in the beginning, and to renew, if only symbolically, the primordial era of peace and plenty.

In the ritual, the king turns the wheel of law first turned by the great god, rides on the god's own cosmic ship, takes as spouse the great mother (mistress of the great father), builds temples and cities patterned after the god's celestial abode, and subdues the forces of darkness (barbarians), just as the god defeated chaos in the beginning. Whatever the marvels of the great father, it is the duty of each local king to repeat them, or at least ritually to reenact these accomplishments as if he were the great god himself.

In his study of kingship in Egypt, Henri Frankfort tells us that the great god was the first king: "Whether named Re, Khepri or Atum, he is the prototype of Pharaoh, and the texts abound in phrases drawing the comparison."[53] To certify his authority as a successor of the Universal Monarch, the king credits himself with having introduced an age of abundance like that of the ancestral sovereign. Thus, Thutmose III not only sits "upon the throne of Atum," but claims to have achieved "what had not been done since the time of Re" and to have restored conditions "as they were in the beginning."[54] Amenhotep III strives "to make the country flourish as in primeval times"[55]

Similarly, when the Sumerian king Dungi ascended the throne, the people supposed that a champion had arisen to restore the Paradise which existed before the Flood (but was lost through transgression).[56] Each king, states Alfred Jeremias, was expected to reproduce the wonders of the great god, the primeval king.[57] Thus does Assurbanipal proclaim that upon his ascension to the throne "Ramman has sent forth his rain—the harvest was plentiful, the corn was abundant—the cattle multiplied exceedingly."[58]

Among the Hebrews, "Every king is a Messiah, and at times the hope is expressed that the king will introduce a new Golden Age."[59] Such is the test of the just or good ruler, who brings prosperity and a fruitful earth. This belief, which seems to have held sway over the entire ancient world, receives insufficient attention from historians: it points directly to the extraordinary memory of the Universal Monarch.

---

[52] Kingship, 7.

[53] Op. cit., 148.

[54] Ibid., 149.

[55] Ibid., 51.

[56] Canney, "Ancient Conceptions of Kingship," 74n.

[57] "Aus dem Anspruch des Gottkönigtums ergibt sich der des Weltimperiums. Der Heros Ninib wird in einem zweisprachigen Text als König eingeführt, dessen Herrschaft bis an die Grenzen Himmels und der Erde leuchten soll . . . Dasselbe gilt vom historischen König. Naramsin besteigt als Eroberer den Weltberg. Wie jeder Kult als kosmisch gilt, so wird jede Stadt, jedes Land, jedes Reich als Kosmos angesehen. Nicht die Grösse des Territoriums, sondern die Idee ist massgebend. Auch ein Stadtkonig nennt sich in diesem Sinne lugal kalama, 'Weltkönig.' Die Länderbezeichnungen und Königstitel sind in diesem Sinne kosmisch gemeint: šar kibrât irbitti 'König der vier Weltteile,' šar kissati 'König des Weltalls.'" Handbuch, 178.

[58] Eliade, Patterns in Comparative Religion, 405.

[59] Canney, op. cit., 74.

Consider: Homer gives as the ideal "a blameless king whose fame goes up to the wide heaven, maintaining right, and the black earth bears wheat and barley and the trees are laden with fruit, and the sheep bring forth and fail not, and the sea hives store of fish, and all from his good guidance, and the people prosper."[60]

Can this be anything other than the lost age of Kronos? Why should a fertile soil confirm the righteousness of kings? The connection becomes clear once one takes the Universal Monarch as more than an esoteric fiction and recognizes him as the shaping force behind the ideals of kingship. Just as peace and plenty followed in the footsteps of the first (ideal, "good") king, they should follow those of his successors who share in the charisma of the great predecessor.

"The further we go back in history," observes Jung, "the more evident does the king's divinity become . . . In the Near East the whole essence of kingship was based far more on theological than on political considerations . . . it was self-evident that the king was the magical source of welfare and prosperity for the entire organic community of man, animal, and plant; from him flowed the life and prosperity of his subjects, the increase of the herds, and the fertility of the land."[61] This image of the local king is drawn directly from the image of the Universal Monarch.

Thus did every ancient ruler call himself the "king of the world" and claim to radiate power and light. Thompson tells us that the Mayan ruler declared himself "as something like King of Kings, ruler of the world, regent on earth of the great Itzam Na . . . a sort of divine right of kings which would have turned James I green with envy."[62] What Thompson calls an "inflated notion of grandeur" seems to characterize all ancient kings (who "shine like the sun" and direct the heavenly motions); but the reason must be appreciated: every king was, in a magical way, the Universal Monarch reborn. The institution and ritual of kingship point to the same great god and the same Golden Age as do the myths of cosmic beginnings.

In what historical conditions did this collective memory originate? And if the Universal Monarch governed the entire heavens as the god One, why was he called an "ancestor"?

The Heaven Man

So vivid was the great father's celestial image and so overpowering was his influence on civilization in its infancy, that the ancient chroniclers often gave him human form, recalling him as the "first man." But he was no mortal of flesh and blood. In his original character he upheld the Cosmos as the Heaven Man, a celestial giant whose body encompassed all the gods and composed the "primeval matter" of creation.

The great father reigned over the prosperous age and then departed amid great upheavals. The mythical accounts give this imposing figure such tangible and "human" traits that more than one scholar reduces him to a living man—an esteemed tribal ancestor whose heroic exploits succeeding generations progressively enlarged until the entire universe came under his authority.

This is the approach of William Ridgeway, who, in a survey of the best-known figures of the great father, argues that only an actual tribal chief could have left such a profound imprint on primitive communities. Ridgeway asks us whether the abstract "sky," or the solar orb, or a vegetation spirit—common explanations of the great father—could produce such devotion as is evident in the annual lamentations over the ruler's catastrophic death. Osiris, Brahma, Tammuz, Quetzalcoatl—their devotees remember each as a living ancestor, whose passing was a terrifying calamity.[63]

---

[60] Ridgeway, Dramas and Dramatic Dances of Non-European Races, 6. Compare the role of the Irish king: "Prosperity was supposed to characterize every good king's reign in Ireland, perhaps pointing to earlier belief in his divinity and the dependence of fertility on him; but the result is precisely that which everywhere marked the golden age." MacCulloch, Celtic Mythology, 137-38.

[61] Jung, Mysterium Coniunctionis, 258.

[62] J. Eric and S. Thompson, Maya History and Religion, 232.

Of course Ridgeway does not assume that one man alone accounts for all the traditions of a great father. Rather he seeks to identify each in terms of a historical figure quite distinct from the venerated ancestors of other tribes. If his arguments against prevailing astronomical and vegetation theories carry great weight, they fail to explain the global parallel between the respective myths. Nor can one reconcile Ridgeway's interpretation with the incontrovertible fact that, in the earliest accounts, the great father is manifestly cosmic.

That many sacred histories, however, present the creator-king in human form is a paradox requiring an explanation. The solution lies in the nature of the legendary "first man."

Who Was Adam?

If one compares the traditions of Adam with the global image of the great father there can be little doubt that this primal ancestor was simply a special form of the Universal Monarch. According to Hebrew legends Adam's stature was so great that he extended from earth to the centre of heaven.[64] His countenance obscured the sun.[65] Like the Universal Monarch, "Adam was lord on earth, to rule and control it,"[66] teaching his subjects the first arts and sciences.[67] The myths say that terrestrial creatures "took him to be their creator, and they all came to offer him adoration."[68] While the chroniclers call this a "mistake," substantial evidence shows that the tradition pertained more to a god than a man.

In Gnostic and other mystic systems Adam is not a mortal but a cosmic being whose body contained the seed of all later creation. As observed by G.G. Scholem, summarizing the traditions of the Hebrew Kabala, Adam—or Adam Qadmon—is the "primordial man," that is, "a vast representation of the power of the universe," which is concentrated in him.[69] This Adam is a "man of light" occupying the centre of the Cosmos and radiating energy along the axis of the universe. He is creator and supporter of the world, whose body encloses all the elements of life.[70]

Islamic mystics called Adam "the universal man" or "the perfect man" upholding the cosmos.[71] To the Ophites of the early Christian era, he was Adamas, "the man from on high" or, in the words of Lenormant, "the typical perfect man, that is, the heavenly prototype of 'man.'" In one of the cosmogonic fragments preserved in the extracts of Sanchuniathon (as recorded by Philo of Byblos) Adam is born at the beginning of all things and is identical with the Greek ouranos, "heaven."[72] The modern day Mandaeans of Iraq know Adam as the "King of the Universe," a personification of all that spiritual man is intended to be and achieve.[73]

---

[63] Ridgeway, The Origin of Tragedy; and Dramas and Dramatic Dances.

[64] Graves and Patai, Hebrew Myths: The Book of Genesis, 61; Ginzberg, The legends of the Jews, Vol. I, 59.

[65] Ginzberg, op. cit., 60.

[66] The Book of the Secrets of Enoch 31:3, in Charles, The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the old Testament, Vol. II, 450.

[67] Jung, op. cit., 398-99.

[68] Ginzberg, op. cit., 64; Graves and Patai, op. cit., 62.

[69] Quoted in Cirlot, A Dictionary of Symbols, 4.

[70] "Adam-Kadmon ist nach der Kabbala der erste Mensch, der Urmensch, die erste aus dem Unendlichen, der absoluten Vollkommenheit (En Sof), unmittelbar hervorgehende Emanation, in der ältesten hebräischen Mystik Gott selber." Schwabe, Archetyp und Tierkreis, 9.

[71] "El insânul-qadim, c'est-à-dire l'Homme primordial,' est, en arabe, une des désignations de l''Homme universel' (synonyme d'El-insânul-kamil, qui est littéralement l''Homme parfait' on total); c'est exactement l'Adam Qadmon hébraique." Guenon, Formes Traditionelles et Cycles Cosmiques, 64n.

This, of course, sounds almost exactly like the primordial god One of global legend. Indeed, in the myths of many lands the first man and creator-king are identical. Though the Hindu Yama and his counterpart Manu appear as the creator and king of the world, they also signify the primal ancestor. Their character as first man, however, does not mean flesh and blood. They are the celestial prototypes, notes Lenormant, symbolic of "man" in general.[74]

The role of the Hindu Yama is filled in Persian myth not only by Yima, but also by Gaya Maretan, a legendary first king, a man of perfect purity, "produced brilliant and white, radiant and tall."[75] He, too, "appears as the prototype of mankind."[76]

Many myths make no distinction between the creator and first man. The Oceanic Tiki "is at once the first man, and the creator or progenitor of man."[77] Among the Koryak the creator of the world is also "the first man, the father and protector of the Koryak."[78] The Assiniboin, a North American Siouan tribe, say that it was the First Man who brought the World out of the primeval water. ". . . They also say of the First Man, the Creator, that no one made him, and that he is immortal."[79]

The Altaic Tatars similarly speak of a World Man or First Man. In the creation myths he doubles for god himself and raises the World from the cosmic waters.[80] Comparable is the World Man of the Laps,[81] or the Lonely Man whom the Yakuts deem the first ancestor and whose dwelling pierced the summit of heaven.[82]

If the general tradition be our guide, Adam is the solitary god of beginnings, presented in human form. This was the opinion of the controversial Gerald Massey, who, enchanted by the depth of Egyptian cosmology, proposed that the Hebrew Adam echoed the older Egyptian Atum, the god who shone forth alone in the Abyss.[83] It matters little whether the relationship of the two figures is as direct as Massey suggested. Throughout the ancient world the original god One passed into the legendary first ancestor.

---

[72] "Les Ophites ou Nahasséniens, dans les premiers siècles du christianisme, avaient adopté cette idée due Adam Qadmon dans leur Adamas . . . qu'ils appelaient 'l'Homme d'en haut,' traduction exacte du titre de la Kabbale, 'l'Adam supérieur.' A leur tour, les Barbélonites, qui étaient une branché dérivée des Ophites, disaient que Logos et Ennoia, par leur concours, avaient produit Autogénes (Qadmon), type de la grande lumière et entouré de quatre luminaires cosmique . . . Remarquons que dans un des morceaux cosmogoniques, cousus maladroitement les uns au bout des autres, que nous offrent les extraits du Sanchoniathon de Philon de Byblos, tels que nous les possédons, Epigeios ou Autochthon, c'est-à-dire Âdâm (avec la mème allusion a adâmâth que dans le texte de la Genèse), nait à l'orignine des choses due dieu supreme 'Elioûn, et est identique à Ouranos . . . " Lenormant, Les Origines de l'Histoire, 41n.

[73] Drower, The Coronation of the Great Šišlam, IX.

[74] Lenormant, Les Origines De l'Histoire, 170.

[75] Carnoy, op. cit., 293*ff.*

[76] Dresden, "Mythology of Ancient Iran," 342.

[77] Dixon, Oceanic Mythology, 23-27.

[78] Hocart, Kings and Councilors, 53.

[79] Alexander, North American Mythology, 105-6.

[80] Uno Holmberg, Siberian Mythology, 316.

[81] De Santillana and von Dechend, Hamlet's Mill, 130.

[82] Uno Holmberg, Der Baum des Lebens, 59-60.

[83] Ancient Egypt, Vol. I, 437-38.

As the creative intelligence and voice (Word) of heaven, the great father came to be viewed as the thinking and speaking "man"—a towering giant whose body was the original Cosmos. Both Atum and the later Adam possess this distinctive character as Heaven Man, but certain developments of the idea stand out:

1. In the Egyptian version of the myth the great god (Atum-Re), through tumultuous "speech," brings forth a circle of subordinate gods as satellites revolving in his company and forming his own limbs. The central god and his revolving members compose the primordial cosmos (Heaven, World). The crucial term is paut, "primeval matter," referring to the material emitted by Atum, which took form as the Cosmos. Paut is equivalent to the Khu or fiery "words of power" uttered by the great god. The term signifies at once the "circle" of the gods and the "body" of Atum-Re. Which is to say:

Cosmos=Company of Gods=Creator's Limbs, Body.

That the created Cosmos emanated from the primordial god is a theme which persisted in later traditions of Adam. From Adam Qadmon sprang successive degrees of creation. Gnostic tradition knew Adam as the prima materia of the Cosmos[84]—a remarkable parallel to the Egyptian primeval matter, the limbs of Atum-Re.

The great god's body embraces and is "heaven"—not only in Egyptian but in all principal cosmologies. Like Atum, the Sumerian An encompasses "the entire heaven"; indeed, his very name signifies "heaven," and one can trace the equation of "god" and "heaven" (or "shining heaven") through all of the ancient languages. The Chinese tien signifies both the high god and "heaven," as does the Altaic tengri. The Sanskrit dyaus (Latin deus) carries the double meaning "god" and "heaven." It is useless to look to the open sky for an explanation of this equivalence. Originally, "heaven" meant the organized Cosmos (or body) of the god One, formed by the circle of lesser gods. The myths unanimously insist that this celestial order collapsed with the death of the great god, the Heaven Man.

2. The all-embracing character of the great father facilitated an important development of the god's image at a time when cultural mixture could have destroyed the "monotheistic" theme. In ancient Egypt almost every district seems to have had its favoured representative of the god One, a fact which gives the great compendiums of Egyptian religion (Pyramid Texts, etc.) a misleading appearance of confusion. How can we speak of a solitary god when Egyptian texts refer to an endless number of primary deities?

In more than one locality the priests themselves at least partially resolved the problem by adopting alien gods as the limbs of the local great god—a process obviously encouraged by the preexisting image of the god as Heaven Man. This habit was widespread in Egypt and occurred as early as the Pyramid Texts, which assimilate a number of once-independent gods into the body of Atum:

Your head is Horus of the Netherworld, O Imperishable . . .

Your nose is the Jackal [Ap-uat],

Your teeth are Sopd, O Imperishable,

Your hands are Hapy and Duamutef . . .

Your feet are Imsety and Kebhsenuf . . . etc.[85]

A hymn from the Papyrus of Ani similarly honours Osiris:

The hair of Osiris Ani is the hair of Nu.

The face of Osiris Ani is the face of Re.

The eyes of Osiris Ani are the eyes of Hathor.

The ears of Osiris Ani are the ears of Ap-uat.

---

[84] Jung, op. cit., 385, 409.

[85] Pyramid Text 148-49. "Man kann hier wohl sogar soweit gehen dass alle anderen Götter in Atum beschlossen sind," Writes L. Grevan, Der Ka in Theologie unb Königskult der Ägypter des Alten Reichs, 15.

The lips of Osiris Ani are the lips of Anpu . . .[86]

In almost the same words, the Papyrus of Nu joins the divinities Osiris, Ptah, Anpu, Hathor, Horus, Isis, and others to the body of Re.[87] In the Memphite theology Atum, Horus, Thoth, and the company of gods became the limbs of Ptah.[88] Syncretization of this sort, though appearing absurd to us today, actually helped to preserve the original idea against the eroding forces of cultural assimilation. Faced with a growing number of competing deities, the priests proclaimed: there was only one great god in the beginning, whose body encompassed a circle of subordinate deities.

3. In a subsequent development of the myth, the Heaven Man passed into a mythical-philosophical explanation of our Earth and the material universe as a whole. Here the god appears as a primordial giant who existed before the Deluge and gave his body to creation—not the creation of the primordial Cosmos, but of our world with its mountains, seas, clouds, and surrounding heavenly bodies.

A noteworthy example is the Scandinavian primeval giant Ymir. In the Prose Edda the gods fashion "the world" from the giant's body—"from his blood the sea and lakes, from his flesh the earth, from his bones the mountains." His teeth become rocks and pebbles, his skull the sky, and his brains the clouds. The sparks and burning embers produced by his dismemberment become the stars.[89]

Compare the Hindu giant Purusha, whose body formed the world: "His mouth was the Brahman, . . . his two thighs the Vaisya; from his two feet the Sudra was born. The moon was born from his mind; from his eye the sun was born. From his navel was produced the air; from his head the sky was evolved; from his two feet the earth; from his ears the quarters."[90]

Purusha is the Primal Man. In Buddhist lore this cosmic giant is Bodhisattva Manjucri; elsewhere in China the role belongs to the demiurge Pan-Ku, whose body provides the material for creation.[91] The Zoroastrians claimed that the created world was the giant Spihr ("Cosmos"), the body of the great god Zurvan.[92] All such heaven-sustaining giants can be best understood by reference to the original Cosmos of the god One, rather than the open expanse to which the term "heaven" normally refers today.

4. If the giant myths emphasized the material form of the Heaven Man, an age of metaphysics stressed the god's character as universal intelligence, raising his image to a high degree of philosophical purity. The god One became the First Principle, First Cause, Mind, Word, or Self (logos, nous, sophia, tao, etc.). Yet in none of these cases did detached philosophy succeed in creating a pure abstraction. The Greek nous, the animating "Mind" or "Intelligent Spirit," was never fully divorced from the antecedent tradition of the Heaven Man. Both Eusebius and Syncellus identify the great Mind with Prometheus, the Primordial Man who lived before the Deluge.[93] In Orphic description of the universal Mind it is hardly distinguishable from the Hindu giant Purusha: ". . . All things were contained within the vast womb of the god. Heaven was his head: the bright beams of the stars were his radiant locks . . . The all-productive earth was his sacred womb: the circling ocean was his belt . . . ; his body, the universe, was radiant, immovable, eternal; and the pure ether was his intellectual soul, the mighty Nous, by which he pervades, animates, preserves, and governs, all things."[94]

---

[86] Budge, Gods, Vol.I, 111.

[87] Ibid.

[88] Clark, Myth and Symbol, 61-63.

[89] Sturluson, The Prose Edda.

[90] Zaehner, Zurvan: A Zoroastrian Dilemma, 137.

[91] Uno Holmberg, Siberian Mythology, 372.

[92] Zaehner, op. cit., 140.

[93] Faber, op. cit., Vol. II, 172.

Nous was the primordial One, from which all things emanated—the central light which produced and regulated the Cosmos (body). An exactly equivalent notion was the Hindu Universal Self. Here the original concept certainly did not mean "invisible soul" or anything like it. The cosmic Self was Brahma or Prajapati, the "Golden Child" who appeared alone on the first occasion. "In the beginning," say the Upanishads, "Prajapati stood alone."[95]

The same texts say, "In the beginning there was Self alone." From the primordial Self, enclosing all the life elements, issued the creation in successive degrees. "From the Self sprang ether; from ether, air; from air, fire; from fire, water" . . . etc.[96] (Adam Qadmon radiated the elements in similar fashion.)

Hindu thought portrays the Universal Self as the first form (and the animating soul) of the Heaven Man. "In the beginning this universe was nothing but the self in the form of a man. It looked around and saw that there was nothing but itself, whereupon its first shout was 'It is I!'; whence the concept 'I' arose." Then the Self "poured forth" the creation. The created World (Cosmos), in Hindu myth, took form as the giant Purusha, recognized as the body of Prajapati-Brahma (Self).

Numerous traditions view the emanation or pouring out of creation as the great god's "speech." This is the root meaning of the Greek and Hebrew "Word," which signify, really, "visible speech." (The Chinese tao, the primeval unity or First Cause, also conveys the idea "to speak.") "By the word of the Lord the heavens were made," states the Hebrew Psalmist (Ps. 33:6). "This idea of the creative Word of God," observes John Allegro, "came to have a profound philosophical and religious importance and was, and still is, the subject of much metaphysical debate. But originally it was not an abstract notion; you could see the 'Word of God.'" [Emphasis added.] In the Hebrew creation legend the "speech" of the creator is poured out as "spittle" or "seed." "The most forceful spurting of this 'seed' is accompanied by thunder and the shrieking wind."[97] The imagery takes us back to the thundering voice of Atum.

In most creation legends and certainly in the Egyptian and Sumerian prototypes, the great father, his life-bearing rays, his voice (word), and the company of gods (limbs)—all appear as powers seen and heard. The god is the celestial "Man" whose history became the overwhelming obsession of ancient ritual. Residing at the stationary centre—the domain which the Egyptians called Maat ("truth" or "wisdom") and the Mesopotamians denominated Apsu (residence of "wisdom")—the god commanded the cosmic revolutions. He was, in short, the creative "intelligence," producing a new and harmonious celestial order. Thus was the Heaven Man the ideal man and the ideal king.

The Great Father Saturn

The lost epoch of peace and plenty was the age of the planet Saturn. Ancient myths and rites present Saturn as the god One, the first king, and the all-encompassing Heaven Man.

Adam, the first ancestor, presided over a garden of abundance. Among the Hebrews such sacred occasions as the Sabbath and Jubilee commemorated this original state of man and the world, when Adam ruled Eden and the land produced freely without human effort. The Greek celebration of the Kronia similarly hearkened back to the lost Golden Age of Kronos. The parallel was no coincidence: Adam was Kronos, in human form.

---

[94] Ibid., 42.

[95] Fluegel, op. cit., k203-4.

[96] Ibid., 202.

[97] Allegro, The Sacred Mushroom and the Cross, 21.

What the Greeks called the Kronia, celebrating the fortunate era of Kronos, the Latins termed the Saturnalia, a symbolic renewal of the Saturnia regna or reign of the planet Saturn. In the mystic heritage Saturn is the Universal Monarch, whose prosperous age all ancient people sought to recover.

These are the words with which James G. Frazer summarizes the Latin tradition:

> [Saturn] lived on earth long ago as a righteous and beneficent king of Italy, drew the rude and scattered dwellers on the mountains together, taught them to till the ground, gave them laws, and ruled in peace. His reign was the fabled Golden Age: the earth brought forth abundantly: no sound of war or discord troubled the happy world: no baleful love of lucre worked like poison in the blood of the industrious and contented peasantry. Slavery and private property were alike unknown: all men had all things in common. At last the good king, the kindly king, vanished suddenly; but his memory was cherished to distant ages, shrines were reared in his honour, and many hills and high places in Italy bore his name.[98]

The Latin poet Ovid knew the tradition well:

The first millenium was the age of gold;

Then living creatures trusted one another;

People did well without the thought of ill:

Nothing forbidden in the book of laws,

No fears, no prohibitions read in bronze,

Or in the sculpted face of judge and master . . .

No brass-lipped trumpets called, nor clanging swords

Nor helmets marched the streets, country and town

Had never heard of war: and seasons traveled

Through the years of peace. The innocent earth

Learned neither spade nor plough;

she gave her Riches as fruit hangs from the tree; grapes

Dropping from the vine, cherry, strawberry

Ripened in silver shadows of the mountain,

And in the shade of Jove's miraculous tree

The falling acorn, Springtide the single

Season of the year.[99]

But then, states Ovid, "old Saturn fell to Death's dark country." There is not a race on earth that forgot this cataclysmic event—the death of Saturn, the Universal Monarch; or the fall of Adam, the Heaven Man. And peoples the world over, for thousands of years, awaited the full turn of Time's wheel, when Saturn's kingdom would appear again to rescue the world from a decadent age of Iron (the present age, marking the lowest of the descending ages after the Golden Age). The powerful memory of Saturn's age gave rise to a prophesied return, as announced in the famous lines of Virgil:

> Now is come the last age of the Cumean prophecy: the great cycle of periods is born anew. Now returns the Maid, returns the reign of Saturn: now from high heaven descends a new generation. And O holy goddess of

---

[98] Frazer, The Golden Bough, abridged edition, 675.

[99] Ovid, The Metamophoses, 33-34.

childbirth Lucina, do thou be gracious at the boy's birth in whom the Iron race shall begin to cease and the Golden to arise all over the world . . .[100]

That Saturn governed the Golden Age is a supreme tenet of the ancient mysteries. This is why the most sacred day of the week, commemorating the primordial era, was dedicated to Saturn. The Hebrew Sabbath, the seventh day of the week, was the day of Saturn, as was the seventh day of the Babylonian and Phoenician weeks.[101] For the Romans the seventh day was Saturni dies, "Saturn's day." This was the Anglo-Saxon "day of Seater [Saturn]," which, of course, became our Saturday.

The archaic god One, the father of all the gods, was not the solar orb, not the "open sky," but the planet Saturn. "Saturn possessed the double property of being the forefather of all other planetary gods, and of having his seat in the highest heaven," write R. Klibansky, E. Panofsky, and R. Saxl in their study of Saturn and Melancholy.[102] The tradition was maintained with striking consistency from its early expressions in Sumero-Babylonian religion through the age of medieval astrology.

On the subject of Mesopotamian religion and astronomy, three widely respected researchers are Peter Jensen, Alfred Jeremias, and Stephen Langdon. A survey of their works will reveal these conclusions concerning the identity of the great god in Mesopotamia: An, the oldest and highest of the Sumero-Babylonian gods, whose primordial age was "the year of abundance," signified Saturn, according to Jensen.[103] The same verdict is tacitly maintained by Jeremias and Langdon, who identify the great god Ninurta as both the planet Saturn and a form of Anu.[104] The shepherd Tammuz was likewise Saturn, according to Jeremias.[105] And one can add the well-known fact that the Sumerian Enki (Babylonian Ea, the Oannes of Berossus) came to be translated Kronos (Saturn) by the Greeks.[106]

The identity of the creator-king as the planet Saturn seems to occur throughout the ancient world. The Canaanite (and Hebrew) El—closely corresponding to the Sumero-Babylonian An—was Saturn.[107] The Hindu Manu, the king of the world, was Satyavratta, the planet Saturn.[108] Collitz tells us that Yima, the Iranian transcript of the Hindu Yama, god of the Golden Age, likewise denoted Saturn.[109] The Zoroastrians knew Saturn as the heaven-sustaining Zurvan, "the King and Lord of the Long Dominion."[110] The Chinese Huang-ti, mythical founder of the Taoist religion, "is acknowledged to be Saturn."[111] Even the Tahitians say of Fetu-tea, the planet Saturn, that he "was the King."[112]

---

[100] Quoted in Campbell, Occidental Mythology, 322-23.

[101] Hildegard and Julius Lewy, "The Origin of the Week and the Oldest West Asiatic Calendar."

[102] Faber op cit., Vol. II, 235; Klibansky, Panofsky, and Saxl, Saturn and Melancholy, 152.

[103] Die Kosmologie der Babylonier, 136-37.

[104] Langdon, op. cit., 55; Jermias, Handbuch, 137, 278.

[105] Handbuch, 92, 137.

[106] O'Neill, The Night of the Gods, 77.

[107] Patai, The Hebrew Goddess, 32-33; Faber, op. cit., 223.

[108] Faber, op. cit., 491; Grimm, Teutonic Mythology, 248-49n.

[109] "Konig Yima and Saturn," 95aff.

[110] O'Neill, op. cit., 778-79.

[111] De Santillana and von Dechend, op. cit., 129.

[112] Makemson, The Morning Star Rises, 47*ff.*

In classical thought Saturn is the primordial satus, "seed," from which the Cosmos sprang; the mind or cause which brought forth the original creation; the universal source of water, fertility, and vegetation; and father Time, the regulator of the cosmic cycle.113

It was Saturn who, before retiring to the nether realm, dwelt on earth, establishing his rule over the entire world. An Orphic fragment declares: "Orpheus reminds us that Saturn dwelt openly on earth and among men."114 Thus before the reign of Zeus, "Kronos [Saturn] ruled on this very earth," writes Dionysius of Halicarnassus.115

Saturn was the cosmic Adam, bringing forth a company of secondary deities as his own limbs. In the ancient Sumerian city of Lagash the priests deemed Saturn (Ningirsu or Ninurta) "the man whose stature filled the an-ki," the entire Cosmos.116

The Sumero-Babylonian worshippers of the planet Saturn, observes Hildegard Lewy, "conceived their god as the embodiment of the whole universe, the various deified astral as well as natural phenomena being imagined as members of this divine body and, therefore, as executors of a unique will." "The guiding idea . . . [was] the belief in the existence of only one great god."117

To preserve "the strictly monotheistic principle," notes Lewy, the priests composed this hymn to Saturn (Ninurta):

O Lord, Thy face is the sky . . .

Thy two eyes, oh Lord, are the gods Enlil and Ninlil.

The lids of thy two eyes are Gula (and) Belit-ili.

The white of thy two eyes Oh Lord, are the twin (god)s Sin and Nergal.

The lashes of Thy two eyes are the radiance of the Sun god . . .

Thy chin, oh Lord, is the astral Istar.

The gods Anum and Antum are thy two lips.

*Thy tongue is the god Pabilsag . . .*118

Though the language pertains to the later-evolved imagery of the Heaven Man, it leaves no doubt that the archaic doctrine conceived Saturn's body as the entire Cosmos. The legendary cosmic giant originated in the mythical recollections of Saturn's all-encompassing form.

In Zoroastrian myth this celestial giant is Zurvan, widely recognized as Saturn. The mystic traditions define Zurvan as the "first principle" and the "original seed." He is, writes Zaehner, "the father of the Cosmos. From his seed proceeds the entire material Cosmos . . ."119 In the creation Zurvan provided, or emitted, the "original unformed matter" from which the wheel of the Cosmos was produced. The idea is precisely that of the Egyptian "primeval matter" or the alchemist's prima materia, i.e., Adam, the Primordial Man.

---

113 Collitz, op. cit., 102; Faber, op. cit., 167; O'Neill, op. cit., 778.

114 Quoted in de Santillana and von Dechend, op. cit., 222.

115 Ibid.

116 Campbell, Occidental Mythology, 118. On the meaning of an-ki, usually translated "heaven and earth," see here.

117 Origin and Significance of the Mâgen Dâwîd," 356-57. [Emphasis added.]

118 Ibid., 354-56.

119 Zaehner, op. cit., 222.

The created Cosmos, say the Zoroastrian texts, took the form of an immense giant named Spihr, housing the elements of fire, wind, water, and earth. The Spihr was "the First Body," "the body of Zurvan of the Long Dominion."[120] "As the god whose body is the firmament he is the macrocosm [Cosmos as a whole] corresponding to man, the microcosm [Cosmos in miniature]," observes Zaehner. Thus did Zurvan come to be viewed as "the prototype of man," eventually acquiring human form as the first ancestor—"the origin of the human race."[121]

Saturn's identity as the Heaven Man and first ancestor occurs again and again in Gnosticism, in alchemy, and in the traditions of the Kabala. "As the first man," observes Jung, "Adam is Homo maximus, the Anthropos [Man par excellence] from whom the macrocosm arose, or who is the macrocosm. He is not only the prima materia but a universal soul which is also the soul of all men."[122] Saturn, Jung adds, is a synonym for Adam and the prima materia. The planet is the Philosophical Man or Original Man—"the blessed Man on high, the arch man Adamas."[123]

In the Great Magical Papyrus of Paris, Kronos/Saturn is "Lord of the World, First Father."[124] Orphic thought identifies the primordial man Prometheus with Saturn;[125] the Lapps speak of the ancient Waralden Olmay or "World Man"—who "is the same as Saturnus";[126] and Norse legend identifies Saturn as the Heaven Man Kroder.[127]

All of this means simply that the primordial Cosmos originally signified the limbs of Saturn, a circle of secondary lights revolving in the company of the giant planet. The terms conventionally translated as "Cosmos," "heaven," "world," "universe," or "firmament" (as in the previous paragraphs) denoted the primeval celestial order of which Saturn was king and which collapsed with Saturn's fall.

The Saturn Myth Reconstructed

From the foregoing evidence a distinctive portrait of Saturn emerges. In the earliest age recalled by the ancients the planet—or proto-planet—came forth from the cosmic sea to establish dominion over the primeval Cosmos. The planet-god ruled as the solitary, central light, worshipped as the god One—the only god in the beginning.

Saturn's epoch left a memory of such impact that later generations esteemed the god as the Universal Monarch, the first and ideal king, during whose rule occurred the prehistoric leap from barbarianism to civilization. Throughout Saturn's era of cosmic harmony no seasonal vicissitudes threatened men with hunger or starvation, and men suffered neither labour nor war.

In the "creation" Saturn, the primal Seed, ejected the fiery material ("primeval matter"), which congealed into a circle of lesser lights (the Cosmos). The myths describe this resounding birth of the secondary gods as Saturn's "speech": Saturn was the Word or voice of heaven.

The ancients conceived Saturn as the visible intelligence bringing forth the Cosmos as his own body and regulating its revolutions. Thus was the planet denominated the Heaven Man, a being eventually recalled as the prototype of the human race—the first ancestor.

---

[120] Ibid., 112.

[121] Ibid., 112-113, 136.

[122] Jung, op. cit., 409.

[123] Ibid., 409, 493, 335; also Jung, Aion, 197, 208.

[124] De Santillana and von Dechend, op. cit., 147. [Emphasis added.]

[125] Orphic Hymns, no. 13.

[126] De Santillana and von Dechend, op. cit., 130.

[127] Schwabe, op. cit., 8.

When Saturn departed the world, the Golden Age catastrophically ended. This is the universal tale of the dying god, the overthrown "first king" or fallen "first man." Whether betrayed by a dark force, or chastised for having committed the forbidden sin, or inflicted with old age and a weariness of mankind, the result is the same: a corruption of nature and a progressive worsening of the human condition. The story is the first—and one could almost say, only, theme of tragedy and drama in antiquity: Saturn's Golden Age came to a sudden and catastrophic end, either caused by or accompanied by the fall of the great god.

That the distant planet Saturn should loom at the centre of ancient rites is a fact which conventional wisdom will not easily explain. One looks in vain for any characteristic of Saturn, the present-day planet, which might account for Saturn, the primeval god. Could the present speck of light have provoked the ancient memory of a creator standing alone in the deep? Or produced the universal legend of the first king and the lost age of abundance? Or inspired the myth of the Heaven Man?

If, as is almost universally believed, the heavens have undergone no major changes in astronomically recent times, then the myth—however meticulously developed—can only be a fabrication, produced through the purest disregard for actual observation and experience. I do not ask the reader to ignore this possibility, and I am fully aware that to many mythologists myth and fancy are synonymous. Since the argument of this book rests on the coherence of the Saturn myth as a whole, and since many details remain to be covered I urge only a willingness to consider the evidence in its entirety. Whatever the true origins of the myth, it constituted for the ancients a compelling vision—a vision deserving careful study by all students of history, religion, and mythology.

III: The Polar Sun

Saturn's mythical history includes two themes which not only contradict the planet's visible appearance today, but seem to mock the canons of modern astronomy:

1. Saturn, not the solar orb, was the authentic "sun"-god of ancient ritual.

2. Throughout Saturn's reign this sun-planet remained fixed at the north celestial pole.

These two themes, affirmed by the straightforward testimony of ancient sources, compose a global memory: in the beginning Saturn did not move on its present remote orbit, but ruled as the central sun around which the other heavenly bodies visually revolved. Of this tradition early man has left us evidence far too numerous to cover fully in this volume. I offer below a summary of the principal sources.

Sun And Saturn

The myths and rites celebrate Saturn as the primeval sun.

Today, few mythologists looking back across several millennia to the beginnings of astral religion see anything more than worship of the rising and setting sun, the solar orb. This preoccupation with the solar orb is evident in popular surveys: "The preeminence of the Sun, as the fountainhead of life and man's well-being," writes W. C. Olcott, "must have rendered it at a date almost contemporaneous with the birth of the race, the chief object of man's worship . . . It was sunrise that inspired the first prayers uttered by man, calling him to acts of devotion, bidding him raise an altar and kindle sacrificial flames." "Before the Sun's all-glorious shrine the first men knelt and raised their voices in praise and supplication, fully confirmed in the belief that their prayers were heard and answered."[128]

Not without reason do scholars identify the Greek Helios, Assyrian Shamash, or Egyptian Re with the solar orb. Can it be doubted that Helios, radiating light from his brow and mounted on a fiery chariot, is our sun? That helios became the Greek word for the solar orb is beyond dispute.

In Egypt countless hymns to the god Re extol him as the divine power opening the "day."[129] "The lords of all lands . . . praise Re when he riseth at the beginning of each day." Re is the "great Light who shinest in the heavens . . . Thou art glorious by reason of thy splendours . . ."[130] Such imagery would seem to leave no question as to the god's solar character.

Yet if the preceding analysis of the great father is correct, Re (or Atum) is not the solar orb but the planet Saturn. The Golden Age of Re was the age of An, Yama, or Kronos. One thus finds of interest an Egyptian ostrakon (first century B.C.) cited by Franz Boll: the ostrakon identifies the planet Saturn as the great god Re.[131]

---

[128] Olcott, Myths of the Sun, 141-42.

[129] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 627.

[130] Ibid., 76.

[131] Boll, "Kronos-Helios," 343, R8.

Taken alone, this identification could only appear as a very late anomaly divorced from any solid tradition. But many scholars notice that among the Greeks and Latins there prevailed a mysterious confusion of the "sun" (Greek helios, Latin sol) with the outermost planet. Thus the expression "star of Helios" or "star of Sol" was applied to Saturn.[132] Though the Greek Kronos was the Latin Saturn, Nonnus gives Kronos as the Arab name of the "sun." Hyginus, in listing the planets, names first Jupiter, then the planet "of Sol, others say of Saturn."[133] Why was the planet most distant from the sun called both "sun" and "Saturn"?

Concerning the confusion of the sun and Saturn among classical writers, a simple explanation was offered: the Greek name Helios so closely resembles the Greek transliteration of the Phoenician El that classical authors confused the two gods; since El is the Greek Kronos—and is so translated by Philo—Kronos/Saturn came to be confused with Helios, the sun.[134] Yet, as noted by Boll, the identification is more widespread than generally acknowledged and is much more than a misunderstanding of names.[135] The "confusion" is also far older than Philo, who lived in the first century of the Christian era. In the Epinomis of Plato (who lived in the fifth and fourth centuries B.C.), there is an enumeration of the planets, which, as customarily translated, entails this unstartling statement: "There remain, then, three stars (planets), one of which is preeminent among them for slowness, and some call him after Kronos."[136] Yet the original reading is not Kronos but Helios[137]—which is to say that Plato (or his pupil Phillip of Opus, to whom some ascribe authorship of the Epinomis) gave the name Helios to Saturn. But copyists, who could not believe that Helios was anything other than the sun, "corrected" the reading to "Kronos." Moreover, writes Boll, this practice of "correcting" the name Helios to Kronos was not uncommon among later copyists.[138] Originally, Boll concludes, Helios and Saturn were "one and the same god."[139]

The equation of sun and Saturn is very old, with roots in Sumero-Babylonian astronomy. Of the Babylonian star-worshippers the chronicler Diodorus writes: "To the one we call Saturn they give a special name, 'Sun-Star.'"[140] Among the Babylonians the "sun"-god par excellence was Shamash, the "light of the gods," whom scholars uniformly identify with the solar orb. But M. Jastrow, in an article entitled "Sun and Saturn," reports that in the Babylonian astronomical texts the identification of Shamash with Saturn is unequivocal: "the planet Saturn is Shamash," they boldly declare.[141]

---

[132] Bouché-Leclerq, L'Astrologie Grecque, 93, note 2.

[133] Hyginus, Poetica astronomica II, 42.

[134] This explanation is tentatively accepted by Bouché-Leclerq, op. cit., 93, note 2.

[135] "Allein seither ist völlig klar geworden und wohl auch allgemein zugestanden, dass die Gleichsetzung von Kronos, dem Gotte des Planeten Saturn, mit dem Sonnengotte weit vor jedem möglichen griechischen Missverständnis liegt: es handelt sich um ein altes und durch Keilinschriften vollkommen sicher bezeugtes Stuck des babylonischen Sternglaubens . . . " Boll, op. cit., 343.

[136] Plato, Epinomis, 987c.

[137] Ibid.

[138] "Ich habe seitdem die gleiche Variante noch an verschiedenen Stellen beobachtet: in Ptolem. Tetrab, p. 67, 8 schreiben die zwei alten Ausgaben Kronon während die beste Hs. V (Vatic. 1038) hlion hat; bei Rhetorios in Catal, codd. astrol. VII 203, 9 steht in dem Hss. R V Kronon, in T hlion: gemeint ist hier wie bei Ptolemaios der Planet Saturn. auffallender und wohl kaum ursprünglich ist die gleiche Variante in dem Pinax des Kebes, wo die 3. Hand des sehr späten Cod. C (XV. Jahr.) und dije Hs. Meibojms am Rande zweimal (p. 1, 1.2, 7 Pr.) den Namen (Kronon) des Gottes, dem der Tempel mit jenem Pinaz geweiht ist, durch 'Hlion ersetzen." Op. cit., 344.

[139] "So viel ist aber sicher, dass nach einer oft bezeugten Vorstellung der Babylonier und Syrer Kronos und Helios eine und dieselbe Gottheit sind, die sich in den zwei mächtigsten Gestirnen des Tages und der Nacht offenbarte," Ibid., 345-46. It must be emphasized, however, that the proposed distinction between day and night sun is unnecessary. There is only one primitive sun: Kronos-Helios.

[140] Diodorus II. 30-33.

[141] Jastrow, "Sun and Saturn ", 163-78.

In support of this identity Jastrow notes numerous examples involving "the interchangeable application of the term 'Samas' to either the great orb of the day or the planet Saturn."[142]

The apparent equivalence of Saturn and the "sun" goes back to Sumerian times, as is evident in the dual aspect of the creator god Ninurta. Langdon deems Ninurta both the sun and Saturn: ". . . the sun-god Ninurta . . . in the original Sumerian Epic of Creation, defeated the dragon of chaos and founded cities . . . In Sumero-Babylonian religion he is the War-god and planet Saturn."[143]

It is not difficult to see why Ninurta, or Ningirsu, though identified with the planet Saturn in the astronomical texts, came to be confused with the solar orb. "Ningirsu, coming from Eridu, rose in overwhelming splendour. In the land it became day."[144] Saturn, as Ningirsu, is "the god who changes darkness into light."[145] The priests of Lagash invoke him as "King, Storm, whose splendour is heroic."[146] This unexpected quality of the planet led Jensen to designate Saturn as a symbol of the "eastern sun" or "the sun on the horizon," though he offered no explanation for the proposed connection.[147]

The sunlike aspect of Saturn prevails from the earliest astronomy through medieval mysticism and astrology. "Saturn with its rays sends forth transcendent powers which penetrate into every part of the world," wrote an Arabic astrologer of the tenth century.[148] When the alchemists, inheritors of ancient teachings, spoke of Saturn as "the best sun,"[149] it is unlikely that they themselves knew what to do with the idea. But that the tradition was passed down from remote antiquity is both indisputable and crucial.

In claiming that the great father Saturn, presiding over the lost epoch, was the primeval "sun," I do not propose that our sun was absent—rather, that it simply did not preoccupy the ancients. To avoid confusion on this point I must indicate here a conclusion for which I intend to cite additional evidence in a later section.

Day And Night

Those scholars who notice the identification of the ancient sun and the planet Saturn usually speak of Saturn as a mythical "night sun" or "second sun."[150] But in truth, Saturn was the sun-god pure and simple, for the body we call "sun" today was not a subject of the early rites.

The problem is to discern the original meaning of "day" and "night." Many hymns to Shamash and Re—the celebrated suns of Mesopotamia and Egypt—describe these gods coming forth at the beginning of the ritual day, and the terminology often appears to signify the rising solar orb. One of the chapters of Book of the Dead, for example, is "The Chapter of Coming Forth by Day."[151] Does this not refer to the solar orb rising in the east?

A quite different interpretation is possible. Considerable evidence suggests that, to the ancients, the day began with what modern man calls "night"—that is, with the setting of the solar orb. It is widely acknowledged that the Egyptian day once began at sunset.[152] The same is true of the Babylonian and Western Semitic days.[153] The Athenians computed the space of a day from sunset to sunset, and the habit appears to have prevailed among northern European peoples.[154]

---

[142] Ibid., 171.

[143] Semitic Mythology, 55. [Emphasis added.]

[144] Albright, "The Mouth of the Rivers," 165.

[145] Jastrow, The Religion of Babylonia and Assyria, 57.

[146] Hildegard Lewy, "Origin and Significance of the Mâgen Dâwîd," 335.

[147] Die Kosmologie der Babylonier, 115-116, 136*ff.*

[148] Klibansky, Panofsky, and Saxl, Saturn and Melancholy, 129.

[149] Schwabe, Archetyp und Tierkreis, 492.

[150] This is, for example, the opinion of both Boll and Jastrow, in the articles cited above in notes 131 and 141.

[151] Chapter II.

This widespread custom poses a special problem for solar mythology. If, originally, the day began with the disappearance of the solar orb and the coming out of other heavenly bodies, who is the great god who shines at the beginning of this day? The explicit answer comes from the Sumerian texts identifying Saturn as god of the "dawn." Saturn "came forth in overwhelming splendour. In the land it became day."[155] This does not (as Jensen proposed) equate Saturn with the "sun [solar orb] on the horizon." It means that the coming forth of Saturn inaugurated the archaic day, which began at sunset. So long as the solar orb was visible, the fiery globe of Saturn remained subdued, unable to compete with the sheer light of the former body. But once the solar orb sank beneath the horizon, Saturn and its circle of secondary lights acquired a terrifying radiance.

Therefore, in archaic terms, Saturn was the great god of the "day," not the "night sun" as scholars usually propose. But obviously, the eventual shifting of the "dawn of day" from the solar sunset to the solar sunrise could only create a widespread confusion of day and night and morning and evening. On this distinction among the Egyptians, Budge writes, "At a very early period, however, the difference between the Day-sky and the Night-sky was forgotten."[156] Under normal circumstances would one likely forget this distinction?

If there is confusion, it is because radically different celestial orders separate the present age from the former. The primeval sun was the solitary god of the deep, the one god of archaic monotheism, the planet Saturn. Only in a later age did Saturn come to be confused with the solar orb.

There is, in fact, a decisive difference between the primeval god and the body we call the sun today: unlike the rising and setting solar orb, the original sun-god never moved.

Saturn And The Pole

In ancient ritual Saturn appears as the stationary sun or central fire at the north celestial pole.

When Saturn ruled the world, his home was the summit of the world axis: with this point all major traditions of the great father agree. Even today, in our celebration of Christmas, we live under the influence of the polar Saturn. For as Manly P. Hall observes, "Saturn, the old man who lives at the north pole, and brings with him to the children often a sprig of evergreen (the Christmas tree), is familiar to the little folks under the name Santa Claus."[157]

---

[152] E. Neumann, for example, speaks of a presolar ritual in which "the reckoning of time begins and ends with nightfall. Even in Egypt the evening is the time of 'birth,' and the morning, when the luminous world of the stars vanishes, is a time of death, in which the day-time sky devours the children of night. This conception, which was universal among early mankind, becomes understandable if we free ourselves from the correlation day=sun." The Great Mother, 26.

One of the many peculiarities of the Egyptian sun-god is that he not only brings the day, but shines at "night." The Book of the Dead reads, "I am that god Re who shineth in the night." To the "father of the gods" the Egyptians sang, " . . . thou lightest up the habitation of the night . . . " Re Harmachis, in the Dendera temple inscriptions appears as "the shining Horus, the ray of light in the night." Budge, op. cit., Chapter CXXXI; Jung, Symbols of Transformation, 269; Brugsch, Thesaurus Inscriptionum Ägyptiacarum, 16.

In this connection one cannot fail to notice the number of ancient gods whom scholars customarily deem "night suns." Egypt is a good example. The popular god Osiris is almost always termed a sun of night, as is Ptah Seker. Budge, op. cit., 7n, follows a well-established practice when he designates Atum "a form of Re and the type of the night sun." The same appellation is given to the Sumero-Babylonian Tammuz, the Hindu Varuna and Yama, the Iranian Yima, and the Greek Dionysus to name a few of many examples. In the conventional view Saturn, for reasons which remain unspecified, is the planetary representative of the night sun.

[153] On the original priority of the night among the Hebrews and Arabs see Ignaz Goldziher, Mythology Among the Hebrews, 62-74. In Babylonia it was in "later times" that "the reckoning of time was altered to the extent of making the day begin with sunrise, instead of with the approach of night." Jastrow, The Religion of Babylonia and Assyria, 78.

[154] Faber, The Origins of Pagan Idolatry, Vol. I, 236-37.

[155] Albright, op. cit., 165-66.

[156] Budge, The Gods of the Egyptians, Vol.II, 102.

Santa Claus, descending yearly from his polar home to distribute gifts around the world, is a muffled echo of the Universal Monarch, the primordial Osiris, Yama, or Kronos spreading miraculous good fortune. His polar abode, which might appear as an esoteric aspect of the story, is in fact an ancient and central ingredient. Saturn, the "best sun" and king of the world, ruled from the polar zenith. But while popular tradition located Santa Claus at the geographical pole, the earlier traditions place his prototype, the Universal Monarch, at the celestial pole, the pivot of the revolving heavens.

The home of the great father is the cosmic centre—the "heart," "midst," or "navel" of heaven. As the earth rotates on its axis the northern stars wheel around a fixed point. While most stars rise and set like the sun and moon, the circumpolar stars—those which describe uninterrupted circles about a common centre—never fall below the horizon. The invisible axis of the earth's rotation leads directly to that central point—the celestial pole—around which the heavens visually turn. All of the ancient world looked upon the polar centre as the "middle place," "resting place," or "steadfast region" occupied by the Universal Monarch.

One of the first writers to recognize the pole as the special domain of the great god was W. F. Warren, who wrote in Paradise Found (published in 1885): "The religions of all ancient nations . . . associate the abode of the supreme God with the North Pole, the centre of heaven; or with the celestial space immediately surrounding it. [Yet] no writer on comparative theology has ever brought out the facts which establish this assertion."

In the following years a number of scholars, each focusing on different bodies of evidence, reached the same conclusion. The controversial and erratic Gerald Massey, in two large works (The Natural Genesis and Ancient Egypt), claimed that the religion and mythology of a polar god was first formulated by the priest-astronomers of ancient Egypt and spread from Egypt to the rest of the world. In a general survey of ancient language, symbolism, and mythology, John O'Neill (The Night of the Gods) insisted that mankind's oldest religion centered on a god of the celestial pole.

Zelia Nuttall, in Fundamental Principles of Old and New World Civilizations, undertook an extensive review of ancient Mexican astronomy, concluding that the highest god was polar. From Mexico she shifted to other civilizations, finding the same unexpected role of a polar god.

Reinforcing the surprising conclusions of the above researchers was the subsequent work of others, among them Uno Holmberg (Der Baum des Lebens), who documented the preeminence of the polar god in the ritual of Altaic and neighbouring peoples, suggesting ancient origins in Hindu and Mesopotamian cosmologies;[158] Leopold de Saussure (Les Origines de l'Astronomie Chinoise), who showed that primitive Chinese religion and astronomy honour the celestial pole as the home of the supreme god; Rene Guenon (Le Roi du Monde and Le Symbolisme de la Croix), who sought to outline a universal doctrine centering on the polar gods and principles of ancient man.

That these and other researchers, each starting down a different path, arrived at much the same conclusion concerning a supreme polar god of antiquity should have been sufficient to provoke a reappraisal of long-standing assumptions. Is it possible that, as these writers claimed, the ancient star-worshippers paid greater heed to a god of the pole than to the solar orb? Rather than respond to the question, solar mythologists diplomatically ignored it, thereby assigning the above investigators to an undeserved obscurity.

I want to reopen the question, but to approach it from a different perspective. Most of the aforementioned writers possessed a common—if unspoken—faith in the ceaseless regularity of the solar system, seeking to explain the polar god in strictly familiar terms: the centre of our revolving heavens is the celestial pole; the great god of the centre and summit must have been the star closest to this cosmic pivot.

---

[157] An Encyclopedic Outline of Masonic, Hermetic, Qabalistic and Rosicrucian Symbolic Philosophy, LXXIX. [Emphasis added.]

[158] See Uno Holmberg, Die Religiösen Vorstellungen der Altaischen Völker, 37.

But as observed in the previous pages, the great father was not a mere "star"; he was the planet Saturn, recalled as the preeminent light of the heavens. Moreover, the Saturn myth states that the planet-god resided at the celestial pole![159]

In the myth and astronomy of many lands Saturn's connection with the pole is direct and unequivocal. Chinese astronomers designated the celestial pole as "the Pivot," identifying the "Genie of the Pivot" as the planet Saturn.[160] Saturn was believed to have his seat at the pole, reports G. Schlegel.[161] This strange and unexplained image of Saturn caught the attention of de Saussure (one of the foremost experts on Chinese astronomy), who added an additional startling fact: the Iranian Kevan, the planet Saturn, also occupies the polar centre.[162]

But the theme is older than Chinese or Iranian tradition, for it finds its first expression in the Sumero-Babylonian An (Anu), the highest god, acknowledged as the planet Saturn. Each evening, at Erech, the priests looked to the celestial pole, beginning their prayer with the words, "O star of Anu, prince of the heavens."[163]

Saturn ruled from the summit of the world axis.[164] I must note, however, that I am not the first to observe this general principle. A recent volume by Giorgio de Santillana and Hertha von Dechend, entitled Hamlet's Mill, offers the revolutionary conclusion that according to an ancient doctrine Saturn occupied the celestial pole.

But the authors, maintaining an unqualified attachment to the uniformitarian premise, exclude in advance any extraordinary changes in the solar system. Instead they speak of Saturn's polar station as a "figure of speech" or astral allegory whose meaning remains to be penetrated.

"What," they ask, "has Saturn, the far-out planet, to do with the Pole? . . . It is not in the line of modern astronomy to establish any link connecting the planets with Polaris, or with any star, indeed, out of reach of the members of the zodiacal system. Yet such figures of speech were an essential part of the technical idiom of archaic astrology, and those experts in ancient cultures who could not understand such idioms have remained helpless in the face of the theory."[165]

If one could find, in the present order of the heavens, a possible inspiration for the widespread tradition of Saturn's polar station, then the historians and mythologists, operating on uniformitarian principles, would have something concrete to work with. But the primordial age, as defined by universal accounts, stands in radical contrast to our own era. One can no more explain Saturn's ancient connection with the pole by reference to the present arrangements of the planets than one can explain, within the uniformitarian framework, Saturn's image as the Universal Monarch, the Heaven Man, or the primeval sun. Yet the fact remains that throughout the ancient world these images of Saturn constituted a pervasive memory which many centuries of cultural evolution could not obliterate.

The Unmoved Mover

In the sixth century B.C. Xenophanes of Colophon offered this definition of the true god:

---

[159] Quoted in Faber, A Dissertation on the Cabiri, Vol. I, 134.

[160] Schlegel, L'Uranographie Chinoise, 630-31.

[161] Ibid., 631.

[162] De Saussure, "Le Système Cosmologique Sino-Iranienne," 235-97; "La Série Septénaire, Cosmologique et Planétaire," 333-70; see discussion of de Saussure's findings.

[163] Langdon, op. cit., 94.

[164] On Anu as the ruler of the celestial pole, see also Jensen, op. cit., 17-19.

[165] Ibid., 136.

“There is one God, greatest among gods and men, neither in shape nor in thought like unto mortals . . . He abides ever in the same place motionless, and it befits him not to wander hither and thither.”[166]

A remarkable parallel occurs in the Hindu Upanishads:

There is only one Being who exists,
Unmoved yet moving swifter than the mind;
Who far outstrips the senses, though as gods
They strive to reach him, who, himself at rest,
Transcends the fleetest flight of other beings.
Who, like the air, supports all vital action.
He moves, yet moves not.[167]

To the supreme power in heaven Aristotle gave the name “Unmoved Mover,” a term which expressed succinctly the paradoxical character of the god One: though turning the heavens, he himself remained motionless. According to the general tradition, the god stood at the stationary cosmic centre, imparting movement to the celestial bodies which revolved about him.

A fact which conventional interpretation cannot explain is that the very terms which ancient astronomers apply to the celestial pole are applied also to Saturn. Consider the image of the pole:

I am constant as the northern star,
*Of whose true-*fix’d and resting quality.
There is no fellow in the firmament.

So declared Shakespeare’s Caesar. [Emphasis added.] Many centuries before Shakespeare, Hipparchus spoke of “a certain star remaining ever at the same place. And this star is the pivot of the Cosmos.” Among the Chinese, the pole star is the “star of the Pivot,”[168] to the Polynesians it is the “Immovable One.”[169] The Pawnee call it “the star that stands still”; this star, they say, “is different from other stars, because it never moves.”[170] To the Hindus, the star is Dhruva, “firm.”[171]

Consider now the image of the planet Saturn. In China, as noted above, Saturn rules “the Pivot.” The Sumero-Babylonian Ninurta—Saturn—is the god of the “steady star” and of “repose.”[172] Enki, also the planet Saturn, is “the motionless lord.”[173] Mithraic teaching portrays the planet as the cosmic man Aion, the “resting” god.[174] In Sanchuniathon’s description of the Phoenician El (Saturn) the god “flew while at rest and rested in flight." To this description, O'Neill responds: "Just the symbolism of the Polar Power whirling the heavens round, but ever reposing himself at the motionless centre."175

---

[166] Quoted in Campbell, Occidental Mythology, 243. [Emphasis added.]

[167] Quoted in O’Neill, The Night of the Gods, 737. [Emphasis added.]

[168] Schlegel, op. cit., 631.

[169] Makemson, The Morning Star Rises, 5.

[170] Alexander, North American Mythology, 95.

[171] Coomaraswamy and Nivedita, Myths of the Hindus and Buddhists, 378.

[172] Langdon, Sumerian Liturgical Texts, 137.

[173] Lenormant, Origines de l’Histoire, Vol. I, 393.

[174] Schwabe, op. cit., 8, 388.

Saturn's stationary character is the trait most overlooked by conventional mythologists. The reason is that the mythologists expect the image of the primeval light god to fit the rising and setting solar orb, while in fact ancient ritual and myth portray the god as a central sun at the polar zenith.

To the modern mind nothing could be less "scientific" than a polar sun. Yet the unmoving sun is the ancient tradition, as noted by E. A. S. Butterworth: "[The primeval sun] is not the natural sun of heaven, for it neither rises nor sets, but is, as it seems, ever at the zenith above the navel of the world. There are signs of an ambiguity between the pole star and the sun."176

If Butterworth is correct we have a convergence of three vital truths: Saturn was the primeval sun; Saturn occupied the celestial pole; the primeval sun occupied the pole. Each of these points contradicts modern understanding, yet each finds verification in the independent research of specialists, none of whom seem to have been aware of the work of the others. (That is, de Santillana and von Dechend, while documenting Saturn's connection with the pole, seem unaware of the planet's identity as sun; Jastrow and Boll, though perceiving the equation of Saturn and sun, ignore Saturn's polar station; Butterworth, though recognizing the polar sun, fails to notice that he is dealing with the planet Saturn.)

On the tradition of the polar god or polar sun numerous traditions concur.

Egypt

If there is an orthodoxy among Egyptologists, it is the belief that the Egyptian great god has his inspiration in the rising and setting sun. Atum, Re, Osiris, Horus, Khepera, and virtually all the great gods of the Egyptians are explained as symbols of the solar orb—either the sun of day, or the sun "during its night journey."

Because the Egyptian concept of the "sun" involves many complexities which might distract from the present general inquiry, I shall reserve many details for treatment in later sections. I cite below, however, a few of the evidences indicating the polar station of the Egyptian supreme god.

1. Of the Egyptian great father there is no better representative than the mighty Atum, whom Egyptologists usually regard as a sun-god shining at night. He is the acknowledged alter ego of the primeval sun Re, founder of the lost Golden Age.

The Coffin Texts say:

The Great God lives,

fixed in the middle of the sky

*upon his support.*177

The reference is to Atum, whom the eminent Egyptologist R. T. Rundle Clark calls "the arbiter of destiny perched on the top of the world pole."178

The creation legend states that when Atum came forth alone in the beginning, he stood motionless in the cosmic sea.179 His epithet was "the Firm Heart of the Sky."180 To the Egyptians, states Enel, "Atum was the

---

175 Op. cit., 748.

176 The Tree at the Navel of the Earth, 124. [Emphasis added.]

177 Clark, Myth and Symbol in Ancient Egypt, 59.

178 Ibid., 41.

179 Budge, Gods, Vol. I, 309.

180 Piankoff, The Shrines of Tut-Ankh-Amon, 36.

chief or centre of the movement of the universe" at the celestial pole, for the Egyptians knew the pole as the "midst" or "heart" of heaven—"the single, immovable point around which the movement of the stars occurred."[181]

Clark tells us that "the celestial pole is 'that place' or 'the great city.' The various designations show how deeply it impressed the Egyptian imagination. If god is the governor of the universe and it revolves around an axis, then god must preside over the axis."[182]

Clark is so certain of the great god's polar station that he writes, "No other people was so deeply affected by the eternal circuit of the stars around a point in the northern sky. Here must be the node of the universe, the centre of regulation."[183] (As we will see, Clark underestimates the influence of the polar centre in other lands.)

Atum was the "Unmoved Mover" described in Egyptian texts many centuries before Aristotle offered the phrase as a definition of the supreme power. The Egyptian hieroglyph for Atum is a primitive sledge , signifying "to move." To the god of the cosmic revolutions, the Book of the Dead proclaims "Hail to thee, Tmu [Atum] Lord of Heaven, who givest motion to all things."[184] But while moving the heavens Atum remained em hetep, "at rest" or "in one spot."

2. Moreover, and contrary to nearly universal opinion, the great god Re has little in common with the solar orb. Unlike our ever-moving sun, Re stands at the stationary "midst" or "heart" of heaven.[185] He is the motionless sun "who resteth on his high place."[186]

His home is the polar zenith:

> . . . May your face be in the north of the sky, may Re summon you from the zenith of the sky.[187]
>
> My father ascends to the sky among the gods who are in the sky; he stands in the Great Polar Region and learns the speech of the sun folk. Re . . . sets his hand on you at the zenith of the sky.[188]

Concerning the enigmatic symbolism of the Egyptian sun-god, Kristensen tells us that "the place where the light sets is also called the place where it rises."[189] In reference to the solar orb the statement appears meaningless. But the notion that Re rises and sets in one spot is inseparable from the vision of Re as the lord of hetep, "rest." In fact the god does not literally "rise" or "set" at all. With the phases of day and night his light "comes forth" and "recedes"; the god "comes out" and "goes in." When we say today that the moon "comes out" at night we do not mean that it rises in the east; we mean simply that the moon grows bright. Precisely the same meaning attaches to the Egyptian words which so often receive the translation "rise" (uben, pert, un).[190]

---

[181] Les Origines de la Genèse et l'Enseignement des Temples de l'Ancienne Egypte, 20-21, n.2.

[182] Clark, op. cit., 58.

[183] Ibid., 58.

[184] Renouf, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 147.

[185] Faulkner, The Coffin Texts, Spell 257.

[186] Budge, From Fetish to God in Ancient Egypt, 394.

[187] Pyramid Texts 1016.

[188] Pyramid Texts 1168-70.

[189] Quoted in Piankoff, Mythological Papyri, 29.

[190] Hence Re not only "comes out" in the Tuat, but "rests" there also. Piankoff, The Litany of Re, 25.

Thus, rather than a moving sun, Re is the central pivot round which the lesser gods revolve. “They [the companions of Re] go round about behind him,”[191] states one text. The deceased king aspires to attain the great god’s position so that “these gods shall revolve round about him.”[192]

Figure 2. The resting Osiris.

3. The god-king Osiris, an obvious counterpart of the primeval sun Re, is the god of the tet, “firmness” or “stability.” “He is always a passive figure,” notes Budge. “As a cosmic god he appears as a motionless director or observer of the actions of his servants who fulfil his will.”[193] In this he is the prototype of the terrestrial king, who takes up symbolic residence at the cosmic centre.

Thus is Osiris the stationary heart of heaven: “Beautiful is the god of the motionless heart,” proclaims the Book of the Dead.[194] The hymns extol Osiris as the lord of hetep, “rest,” or as “the resting heart.” One Egyptologist after another seeks to understand the imagery in terms of a night sun “resting” in an imagined underworld. But numerous Egyptian sources show that the place of rest is the motionless centre and summit. Osiris is “exalted upon his resting place,”[195] or “in the heights.”[196]

The hieroglyphs portray a column of steps leading to the polar zenith; it is here that the hymns locate Osiris: “Hail, O Osiris, thou hast received thy sceptre and the place whereon thou art to rest, and the steps are under thee.”[197] The deceased beseeches the great god: “. . . May I be established upon my resting place like the Lord of Life.”[198]

It is also futile to interpret Osiris’ “rest” or “motionless heart” as mere symbols of death. The state of rest, one must remember, belongs to the living or resurrected Osiris, for the texts apply the term hetep, “rest,” to Osiris em ankh, “as a living being.”[199] It should be clear to all who consider the language of the hymns that the unmoving heart means the unmoving god, for the heart is the god (as when the texts describe the heart “upon its seat”).[200] Osiris, the motionless heart, is the central, stationary sun: “O still heart, Thou shinest for Thyself, O still heart.”[201]

---

[191] Budge, The Book of the Dead, 398.

[192] Ibid., 644.

[193] From Fetish to God, 190. [Emphasis added.]

[194] Renouf, op. cit., 120.

[195] Budge, The Book of the Dead, 260.

[196] Renouf, op cit., 7.

[197] Budge, The Book of the Dead, 388-89.

[198] Ibid., 251.

[199] Budge, The Papyrus of Ani, 123, 134.

4. The stationary sun, the sun at the polar zenith, also occurs under many other names in Egyptian religion, including:

—Horus, the “firm and stable” god who “takes his place at the zenith of the sky.”[202]

—Ptah, “in the great resting place.”

—Iemhetep, whose name means “the one who comes forth while standing in one place.”[203]

—Sepa, whose name means “stable.”[204]

—Men, whose name means “fixed,” “abiding,” “stable,” “firm.”[205]

—Tenen, connected with the root enen, meaning “motionless,” “rest,” “inactivity.”[206]

—Khepper, the Turning One, who spins around while occupying the same stationary position.[207]

Thus, in the hieroglyphs, all of the Egyptian great gods appear as firmly seated figures. This immovable posture— —which corresponds to divine imagery in many other lands is no accident. The seated or resting god is the Unmoved Mover.

Figure 3. Khepher, the Turning One.

---

[200] Ibid., 105.

[201] Budge, Gods, Vol, I, 332.

[202] Pyramid Text, 854.

[203] Massey, Ancient Egypt, 426.

[204] Énel, op. cit., 117.

[205] Budge, A Hieroglyphic Vocabulary to the Theban Recension of the Book of the Dead, 174.

[206] Budge, Gods, Vol. I, 508-9.

[207] Renouf, op. cit., 151.

Figure 4. The firmly seated (resting) god.

5. That the Egyptians conceived the cosmic centre as the source of celestial motions is clear from the terminology of the centre. The "heart" of heaven is ab ( ), a word which has the concrete meaning of "centre" or "midst." But as noted by Renouf, ab ( ) also conveys "the sense of lively motion."[208] In the latter usage, the determinative appears to depict a human figure turning around while standing on one foot, i.e., in one place, at rest. Denoted by the word ab is the resting but ever-turning heart of heaven. Similarly, while the term men means "fixed" or "abiding," in reference to the god of the stable centre and summit, mennen means "to go round."[209]

To the great god, as the steadfast centre or foundation stone of the Cosmos, the Egyptians gave the name Benben (see discussion of The Foundation Stone). But ben alone "is a verb of motion, and particularly of 'going around'" This dual, seemingly paradoxical relationship of motion and rest occurs throughout the Egyptian texts and becomes intelligible only when one recognizes the central sun, the Unmoved Mover, as the source of the imagery.

"I am the Heir, the primary power of motion and of rest," reads the Book of the Dead. Though the words have a modern sound, Renouf assures us that they express the literal sense of the hieroglyph text. It is in the root character of every polar god to "move" while at "rest."[210]

6. Inseparable from the Egyptian motion of "rest" is the concept of "silence." The motionless centre of the heavens is the Still Place or Region of Silence. (Our English word still accurately conveys the close relationship between the concepts unmoving and silent.)

> [The great god is] King of the Tuat . . . Noble Body whose rest is complete in the Region of Silence.[211]
>
> King is he who rests in the Silent Region.[212]

---

[208] Ibid., 67.

[209] Ibid., 45.

[210] Ibid., 113.

[211] Piankoff, The Tomb of Ramesses VI, 106. [Emphasis added.]

[212] Piankoff, The Litany of Re, 40-41. [Emphasis added.]

But those experts who connect the solar orb with the great god have nothing to say concerning such language. The god who stands at rest in the Silent Region is Re, the sun-god par excellence; yet the entire concept contradicts the image of our wandering sun.

7. What often prevents generalists from perceiving the stationary character of the primeval sun is the translator's unfortunate habit of substituting vague and intangible terms for literal meanings. Budge follows a common practice when he renders a hymn to Re in these words: "Homage to thee, O thou who art in peace."[213] From such terminology one could hardly be expected to formulate a clear concept of the god. But the phrase "in peace" actually conceals a vital meaning, for the Egyptian original is em hetep. Literally, the hymn celebrates the god who shines "at rest" or "while standing in one place." (In seeking to interpret Egyptian sources I have found that specific, literal, and concrete meanings of the original texts are uniformly preferable to the more general and abstract language so often chosen by translators. Of this truth, the reader will find many examples in the following sections.)

Mesopotamia

Like the central sun of Egypt, the primeval light god of Sumero-Babylonian religion "comes forth" (shines) and "goes in" (declines, diminishes) at the "centre" or "midst" of heaven (Kirib sami; Kabal sami), which is also the zenith (ilatu). "In the centre he made the zenith," states one text.[214] Residing at the centre and summit, the great god is the "firm" or "steadfast" light.[215]

The oldest representative of this stationary sun is the polar god An (Anu).[216] An fills the sky with his radiant—even terrifying—light: "the terror of the splendour of Anu in the midst of heaven."[217] Thus does Robert Brown, Jr., term the polar god a nocturnal sun, the "Lord of the Night."[218]

All principal forms of An appear as stationary gods. Enki is "the motionless lord" and the god of "stability."[219] A broken Sumerian hymn, in reference to Ninurash (a form of Ninurta) reads:

Whom the "god of the steady star*" upon a foundation.*

To . . . cause to repose in years of plenty.[220]

Failing to perceive the concrete meaning of such terms, solar mythologists like to think of a place of "repose" as a hidden "underworld" beneath the earth, a dark region visited by the sun after it has set. But the place of repose is no underworld. It is:

The lofty residence . . .

The lofty place . . .

The place of lofty repose . . .[221]

---

[213] Budge, From Fetish to God, 401.

[214] Jensen, op. cit., 11.

[215] Ibid., 16-19; Brown, Researches into the Origins of the Primitive Constellations, Vol. I, 269; Vol. II, 191.

[216] Langdon, Semitic Mythology, 94; Jensen, op. cit., 17*ff.* I certainly cannot accept, however, Jensen's identification of Anu with the pole of the ecliptic.

[217] Sayce, Lectures on the Origin and Growth of Religion, 482.

[218] Op. cit., Vol. II, 184, 190.

[219] Lenormant, op. cit., 393. Ea (Eriki) was the "king of destinies, stability and justice." O'Neill, op. cit., 490.

[220] Langdon, Sumerian Liturgical Texts, 137. [Emphasis added.]

[221] Lenormant, Chaldean Magic, 172.

Ninurta, in his "place of lofty repose," is the precise equivalent of the Egyptian Re, who "resteth on his high place." That both gods are identified with the planet Saturn further confirms the striking parallel. What, then, of the great god Shamash, whom one expert after another identifies with the solar orb alone? The prevailing consensus cannot hide the fact that Shamash, like Ninurta and Anu, is addressed as the planet Saturn ("Shamash is Saturn," say the astronomical texts). Thus Shamash sends forth his light from the immovable centre or "midst" of heaven:

Like the midst of heaven may he shine![222]

O Shamash . . . suspended from the midst of heaven.[223]

O Sun-god, in the midst of heaven . . .[224]

I have cried to thee, O Sun-god, in the midst of the glittering heaven.[225]

Let there be no misunderstanding as to the literal and concrete meaning of the "midst." It is, states Robert Brown, the stationary centre, "that central point where Polaris sat enthroned."[226] Accordingly, in the symbolism of the ziggurat and other "sun" temples, Shamash occupies the "summit house," the "fixed house," or the "house of rest."[227] The top of the ziggurat, a symbolic model of the Cosmos, is the "light of Shamash," and the "heart of Shamash," denoting (in the words of E. G. King) the pivot "around which the highest heaven or sphere of the fixed stars revolved."[228]

The Babylonian tradition of the polar sun has been preserved up to the modern era in the tradition of the Mandaeans of Iraq. In their midnight ceremonies these people invoke the celestial pole as Olma I'nhoara, "the world of light." With the following words they beseech the polar god: "In the name of the living one, blessed be the primitive light, the Divinity self-created." This polar god, states one observer, is the "primitive sun of the star-worshippers."[229]

India

The Hindu Dhruva, whose name means "firm," stands at the celestial pole—"a Spot blazing with splendour to which the ground is firm, where is fixed the circus of the celestial lights of the planets, which turn all around like oxen round the stake, and which [the Spot] subsists motionless."[230] What remains to be explained by mythologists is that the "obviously solar" god Surya "stands firmly on this safe resting place."[231] Surya, states V. S. Agrawala, "is himself at rest, being the immovable centre of his system."[232] And just as the Egyptian primeval sun "rises and sets" in one place, Surya occupies samanam dhama—"the same place of rising and setting."[233]

---

[222] Sayce, op. cit., 177, note 1. [Emphasis added.]

[223] Pritchard, Ancient Near Eastern Texts Relating to the Old Testament, 387. [Emphasis added.]

[224] Sayce, op. cit., 177, note 1. [Emphasis added.]

[225] Ibid., 173. [Emphasis added.]

[226] Op. cit., Vol. II, 191.

[227] Jastrow, op. cit., 638-41. [Emphasis added.]

[228] Akkadian Genesis, 24, quoted in O'Neill, op. cit., 78.

[229] Nuttall, Fundamental Principles, quoting an article in the London Standard, October 19, 1894, entitled "A prayer meeting of the star-worshippers." [Emphasis added.]

[230] Bhagavata Purana, Chapter 4.

[231] Eggeling, Satapatha-Brahmana IV, 3, 4, 9. [Emphasis added.]

[232] Agrawala, Sparks from the Vedic Fire, 82-83.

Another name for the stationary sun is Prajapati. "The sun in the centre is Prajapati: he is the horse that imparts movement to everything," writes Agrawala.[234]

Figure 5. Resting Brahma.

Figure 6. Resting Buddha.

The motionless Dhruva, Surya, and Prajapati compare with the light of Brahma, called the "true sun," which, "after having risen thence upwards . . . rises and sets no more. It remains alone in the centre."[235] Brahma, observes Guenon, is "the pivot around which the world accomplishes its revolution, the immutable centre which directs and regulates cosmic movement."[236]

In fact, every Hindu figure of the primeval sun appears as the fixed mover of the heavens. The Hindu Varuna, "seated in the midst of heaven," is the Recumbent," the "axis of the universe."[237] "Firm is the seat of Varuna," declares one of the Vedic hymns.[238] In him "all wisdom centres, as the nave is set within the wheel."[239] One of Varuna’s forms is Savitar, the “impeller.” While the rest of the universe revolves, the impeller stands firm. “. . . Firm shalt thou stand, like Savitar desirable.”240

---

[233] Velanker, Rigveda Mandala VII, 147.

[234] Agrawala, op. cit., 66.

[235] Chatterji, The Bhagavad Gita, 145.

[236] Études sur l'Hindouisme, 19.

[237] Keith, The Religion and Philosophy of the Veda and Upanishads, Vol. I, 96; Coomaraswamy, A New Approach to the Vedas, 8, 60-61, 92, note 71. [Emphasis added.]

[238] Perry, Lord of the Four Quarters, 122. [Emphasis added.]

Occupying the same resting place is the supreme god Vishnu “who takes a firm stand in that resting place in the sky.”241 The location is the celestial pole, called “the exalted seat of Vishnu, round which the starry spheres forever wander.”242 Vishnu is the polar sun or central fire: “fiery indeed is the name of this steadfast god,” states one Vedic text.243

A fascinating and archaic form of the Hindu great god is Aja Ekapad, originally conceived as a one-legged goat, the support and mover of the universe. Observes Agrawala: “The question arises as to the meaning of ekapad. It [Aja] is called ekapad or one-footed for the reason that ekapad or one-footed denotes the absence of motion.”244 Agrawala calls this supreme being or principle that of “Absolute Static Rest.”245 “The principle of Rest,” writes the same author, “is inexhaustible and the source of all motion.”246

The sacred ground occupied by the Hindu great god is the “middle place,” “the steadfast region,” or “the motionless heaven.”247 In the Brahmanist tradition it is Nirvana, “the Supreme Resting Place” at the centre and summit.

To the Buddhists this is the nave of the cosmic wheel, the throne of the Buddha himself. It is acalatthana, the “unmoving site,” or the “unconquerable seat of firm seance.”248 The Buddha throne crowned the world axis, states Coomaraswamy.

China

The ancient Emperor on High, according to a universal Chinese tradition, stood at the celestial pole. Chinese astrologers, according to Schlegel, regard the polar god as “the Arch-Premier . . . The most venerated of all the celestial divinities. In fact the Pole star, around which the entire firmament appears to turn, should be considered as the Sovereign of the Sky.”249 The supreme polar god was Shang-ti, the first king. His seat was “the Pivot” and all the heavens turned upon his exclusive power.

Raised to a first principle, the polar god became the mystic Tao, the motor of the Cosmos. The essential idea is contained in the very Chinese word for Tao, which combines the sign for “to stand still” with the sign “to go”

---

239 Ibid., 121-22.

240 Whitney, Atharva Veda, XIX, 45.4.

241 Eggeling, Satapatha Brahmana, III, 6.3.15. [Emphasis added.]

242 Quoted in de Santillana and von Dechend, Hamlet’s Mill, 138.

243 Velanker, op. cit., 219. [Emphasis added.]

244 Op. cit., 40, citing Rig Veda X.82.6.

245 Ibid., 70.

246 The Thousand Syllabled Speech, Vol. I, 112.

247 Eggeling, Satapatha Brahmana II.5.1.14; see also note 4, p. 36; Coomaraswamy, A New Approach, 68.

248 Coomaraswamy, Elements of Buddhist Iconography, 42-43. Ibid., 43-45, 52, 55.

Comparable to the firmly seated position of the Egyptian great god is the position of the “resting” or “meditating” Buddha. The Buddha “sat himself down cross-legged in an unconquerable position, from which not even the descent of a hundred thunderbolts at once could have dislodged him.” Quoted in Campbell, Oriental Mythology, 16. [Emphasis added.]

249 Schlegel, op. cit., 507.

and “head.” The Tao is the Unmoved Mover, the god One who goes or “moves” while yet remaining in one place.

Chinese sources proclaim the Tao to be the “light of heaven” and “the heart of heaven”[250] that is, the central sun. “Action is reversed into non-action,” states Jung. “Everything peripheral is subordinated to the command of the centre.”[251] Thus the Tao rules the “golden centre,” which is the “Axis of the World,” according to Erwin Pousselle.[252]

Yet while many writers have observed the polar station of the Chinese supreme power, few indeed have noticed that Chinese astronomers identify this central sun as the planet Saturn. Saturn, according to the astronomical texts, is “the Pivot,” his primeval seat the celestial pole. It is Saturn, states Schlegel, who imparts motion to the universe.[253]

One of the few writers to notice Saturn’s connection with the pole is de Saussure, who tells us that Chinese astronomy places the planet in the Centre, around which all secondary elements and powers revolve: “. . . the Centre represents the Creator, Regulator of the entire Cosmos, the Pole, seat (or throne) of the supreme Divinity.”[254] Saturn, states de Saussure, “is the planet of the centre, corresponding to the emperor on earth, thus to the polar star of Heaven.”[255]

The Americas

In southern Peru the Inca Yupanqui raised a temple at Cuzco to the creator god, the authentic sun, who was superior to the sun we know. Unlike the solar orb he was able to “rest” and “to light the world from one spot.” “It is an extremely important and significant fact,” writes Nuttall, “that the principal doorway of this temple opened to the north.” (Since the north celestial pole is not visible from Cuzco, 14-deg below the equator, Nuttall assumes that this tradition of a polar sun was carried southward.)[256]

In Mexico a form of the central light is Tezcatlipoca, who, though said to “personify the Sun,” yet resides at the pole—as does Quetzalcoatl, the “sun,” first king, and founder of civilization, who Nahuatl priests say inaugurated the era of “the Centre.”[257]

---

[250] Jung, Alchemical Studies, 20. [Emphasis added.]

[251] Ibid., 25.

[252] “Seelische Führung in Lebenden Taoismus,” in Yoga und Meditation im Ostem und im Westen, 193.

[253] Op. cit., 631.

[254] “La Série Septenaire, Cosmologique et Planétaire,” 342.

[255] “Origine Chinoise de la Cosmologie Iranienne,” 305.

[256] Op. cit., 161, emphasis added.

[257] Ibid., 42, 56, 95; Burland, The Gods of Mexico, 94.

Figure 7. Resting Xiuhtecuhtli.

Burland tells us that, among the Mexicans, “the nearest approach to the idea of a true universal god was Xiuhtecuhtli,” recalled as the Old, Old One who enabled the first ancestors to rise from barbarism. Xiuhtecuhtli appears as the Central Fire and “the heart of the Universe.” “Xiuhtecuhtli was a very special deity. He was not only the Lord of Fire which burnt in front of every temple and in the middle of every hut in Mexico, but also Lord of the Pole Star. He was the pivot of the universe and one of the forms of the Supreme Deity.”[258] An obvious counterpart of this central sun is the Mayan creator god Huracan, the “Heart of Heaven” at the celestial pole.

The Pawnee locate the “star chief of the skies” at the pole. He is the “star that stands still.” Of this supreme power they say, “its light is the radiance of the Sun God shining through.”[259]

The American Indians also have a counterpart to the Egyptian Still Place and the Hindu Motionless Heaven. A Zuni account relates that long ago the heart of the great father Kian’astepe rested in a sacred spot called the Middle Place. Here, at the cosmic centre, the holy ancestors “sit perfectly still.”[260] It does not take a great deal of imagination to see that this is, once more, the stationary pivot of the heavens.

From one land to another one encounters the same connection of the great father or primeval sun with the celestial pole. To the traditions cited above, one might add the following:

In the Persian Zend Avesta the sun god Mithra occupies the summit of the world axis, a fixed station “around which the many stars revolve.”[261] The common identification of Mithra with the Zoroastrian Zurvan/Saturn cannot be ignored.

Iranian cosmology, as reported by de Saussure, esteemed the celestial pole as the centre and summit of heaven, where resided “the Great One in the middle of the sky.” who is equated with Kevan, the planet Saturn.[262] Throughout the ancient Near East, states H. P. L’Orange, the “King of the Universe” appears as a central sun, “the Axis and the Pole of the World.”[263]

The Greek sun-god Helios, in an old tradition, resides at the centre of the Cosmos, with the heavenly bodies revolving around him.[264] Upon evaluating the imagery of Helios in Homer’s Odyssey, Butterworth concludes that the mythical sun remained always at the zenith, the celestial pole.[265] What gives meaning to the tradition is the identity of Helios and the planet Saturn, as earlier documented.

---

[258] Op. cit., 77; see also p. 80. [Emphasis added.]

[259] Alexander, op. cit., 95-96. [Emphasis added.]

[260] Stevenson, The Zuni Indians, 46, 80.

[261] Darmesteter, The Zend Avesta, Miher Yast XII, 49-50.

[262] “Le Système Cosmologique,” 292-3.

[263] Studies in The Iconography of Cosmic Kingship, 13.

[264] Bloch, “Le Symbolisme Cosmique et les Monuments Religieux dans l’Italie Ancienne,” 24-25; see also L’Orange, op. cit., 29.

"According to Jewish and Muslim Cosmology," writes A. J. Wensinck, "the divine throne is exactly above the seventh heaven, consequently it is the pole of the Universe."[266] Thus Isaiah locates the throne of El (originally the planet Saturn) in the farthest reaches of the north.[267]

The alchemists regarded the pole as the dwelling place of "the central fire," the motor of the heavens. ". . . The whole machinery of the world is drawn by the infernal fire at the North Pole," notes Jung.[268] An alchemical text proclaims: "At the Pole is the heart of Mercurius, which is the resting place of his Lord."[269] "Most important of all for an interpretation of Mercurius," Jung writes, "is his relation to Saturn. Mercurius senex [the aged Mercurius] is identical with Saturn."[270]

Records of numerous nations around the world stand as a collective witness to a strange, yet consistent idea—an idea which finds no explanation in the heavens we know. Global myths insist that when the first civilizations rose from barbarism a brilliant light occupied the celestial pole. This steadfast light was the ancient sun-god, repeatedly identified as the planet Saturn, the Universal Monarch.

Is it possible to reckon with this extraordinary memory in terms acceptable to the modern age? Mythologists and historians of religion always assume that archaic astral traditions, though filled with imaginative explanations, nevertheless refer to the very celestial order which confronts us today. The entire Saturn myth challenges this long-standing assumption. Could it be that Saturn's image as the polar sun—however strange, however difficult to reconcile with present physical theory—represents true history?

---

[265] Op. cit., 28-29.

[266] "The Ideas of the Western Semites Concerning the Navel of the Earth," 55.

[267] Isaiah 14: 13-14.

[268] Aion, 135.

[269] Jung, Alchemical Studies, 209, note 8. [Emphasis added.]

[270] Ibid., 226.

IV: Saturn’s Cosmos

The ancients preserved more than mythical-historical accounts of Saturn’s rule. From one section of the world to another the planet-god’s worshippers drew pictures of the Saturnian configuration, and these pictures become the universal signs and symbols of antiquity.

In the global lexicon of symbols the three most common images are the enclosed sun ☉, the sun-cross ✦, and the enclosed sun-cross ⊕. It appears that every ancient race revered these signs as images of the preeminent cosmic power. In Mesopotamia and Egypt the signs occur in the earliest period.

Prehistoric pottery and rock carvings from Crete, China, Scandinavia, Africa, Russia, Polynesia, and the Americas suggest that numerous ancient rites centered on these simple forms—which became the most venerated images in the first hieroglyphic alphabets.

But what did these signs signify to the ancients? With scarcely a dissenting voice, scholars routinely tag them as solar symbols. They tell us that such renderings of the sun are perfectly natural (that is, they must be “natural” ways of representing the sun because one sees the signs everywhere!)

Though everyone seems to agree on the solar origins,271 many disagree as to what the signs depict. In the image ☉, does the outer band represent a parhelion (atmospherically caused halo around the sun)? Or does it stand for “the circle of the sky”? Some commentators suggest that the outer circle is itself the sun, leaving open the question of the meaning of the enclosed dot.272

Similarly, in evaluating the sign ⊕, the experts cannot agree whether the four arms of the cross denote rays of the sun or four quarters of the world. It is also said that the four arms depict spokes of an imagined sun wheel rolling across the sky each day.

Is it necessary to point out that these differences of opinion immediately throw into question the common claim that the signs are natural solar emblems? So long as the meaning is uncertain one can hardly state that a symbol is a natural expression of anything. Yet surely those experts who debate the significance of the “sun” symbols must wonder why the ancients, with one accord, inscribed the same images the world over.

Consider the relatively complex sign ⊕. The basic form occurs along with many variants on every continent. Whatever it may signify, it is more than a simple drawing of the sun. If it is a solar image, then one must assume not only that the sun worshippers around the world instinctively adopted the sun to a more complicated abstract form, but that every ancient sun-cult drew upon the same abstraction. Why?

---

271 B.L. Goff, for example, discusses the sign (here) as an “explicit” solar form in Mesopotamia. Why explicit? Because “it is surrounded by rays.” Goff, Symbols of Prehistoric Mesopotamia, 22.

272 This has, in fact, become the popular explanation of the Egyptian Aten.

The enclosed sun-cross ⊕ is not an abstraction. It simply records what the ancients originally saw. It is a literal drawing of the polar sun, passed down from earliest antiquity: the image of Saturn, the Universal Monarch.

Rarely do archaeologists, seeking to interpret the widespread "sun" symbols, consult ancient mythology. Yet the myths explain the symbols, and the symbols illuminate the myths. Largely overlooked by archaeologists are the hundreds upon hundreds of myths and liturgies focusing on the cosmic images ☉, ✦, and ⊕. Ancient sources reveal a world-wide concern with a concrete celestial form—an ideal configuration identified as the great god and his heavenly dwelling. The subject is not the present world order, but the former. The symbols, legends, and sacred hymns attempt to preserve a memory of Saturn and the primeval Cosmos.

The Enclosed Sun

When Saturn appeared alone in the cosmic waters, a brilliant band congealed around the god as his celestial "island." This band was the original Cosmos, often portrayed as a revolving egg, a coil of rope, a belt or a shield enclosing the central sun.

The sacred hymns and creation legends of ancient Egypt say that when the creator arose from the cosmic sea, a vast circle appeared around the god, forming the original Place—"the place of the primeval time," or "the Province of the Beginning."[273] This primeval dwelling was the "island of Hetep [Rest],"[274] a steadfast, revolving enclosure. Egyptian texts of all periods offer vivid images of this enclosure on the waters—called "the golden Pai-land," the "Island of Fire," "the divine emerging primeval island," or "the island emerging in Nun [the cosmic waters]."[275]

Diverse sources agree that the island of creation stood at the cosmic centre and that it was the residence of the creator himself, the central sun. Thus, while Osiris is the "motionless heart" in the Island of Fire, Atum, the stationary Heart of Heaven, is "the Sole One who is alone . . . , who made his heart in the Island of Fire."[276]

In the following pages I shall attempt to show that Egyptian sources depict the band as something seen—the god's visible dwelling in heaven. Indeed, the Egyptians—and all other ancient races—were so preoccupied with the Saturnian band that they elaborated a vast symbolism presenting the same enclosure under wide-ranging mythical forms.

Yet standard treatments of ancient myth and religion say little or nothing of the enclosure. And even less do writers on the subject seem aware that the pictograph of the enclosure sun ☉ is a straightforward portrait of Saturn and his legendary home.

It is not for want of evidence that the experts have missed this connection. The only obstacle is the a priori world view of the researchers themselves—who presuppose that all references to the primordial light god can only signify the solar orb. In connection with our sun today, the ancient language of the enclosure will appear esoteric or meaningless.

Of Re, the Coffin Texts say, "We honour him in the sacred enclosure."[277] Re is the "sender forth of light into his Circle."[278] "I am the One who is in his Circle," he announces.[279] What could this terminology signify in relationship to the solar orb? Since our sun possesses no perceptible relationship to an enclosure or circle, the translators will likely ignore the terms or contrive a complicated metaphysical concept to explain them.

---

[273] Reymond, The Mythical Origin of the Egyptian Temple, 12-13, 65-67, 86.

[274] Ibid., 12-13.

[275] Ibid., 185; Frankfort, Kingship and the Gods, 38, note 21.

[276] Faulkner, The Coffin Texts, 100.

[277] Lacau, Traduction des Textes des Cercueils du Moyen Empire, 30.

[278] Budge, The Gods of the Egyptians, Vol, I, 340.

Though the Egyptian hieroglyph for Re is , and though this sign, taken literally, immediately illuminates the foregoing references, no one seems inclined to take the sign—or the texts—literally.

To the enclosure round the sun the Egyptians gave the name Aten, a term familiar to every student of Egyptian religion. "Spacious is your seat within the Aten," read the Coffin Texts.[280] One of Re's titles is am aten-f, the "dweller in his Aten." Both Atum and Horus possess the same title. Similarly, the Book of the Dead invokes Osiris: "O great god who livest in thy divine Aten."[281] Since the Egyptian pictograph of the Aten is or , it should be clear that the term refers to a circular enclosure housing the sun-god.

But from the beginning Egyptologists have attempted to explain the Aten as the sun itself, translating the word as "the solar disk." Rather than clarify the Egyptian concept, such a translation only confuses the sun-god with his celestial dwelling. One Egyptologist, for example, states that the Aten was the sun, and that the sun was conceived as "the window in heaven through which the unknown god, 'Lord of the Disk,' shed a portion of his radiance upon the world."[282]

Having identified the Aten with the solar orb, the writer concludes that the god who resides in the Aten is an invisible god. Budge voices a similar opinion when he calls the Aten "the material body of the sun wherein dwelt the god Re"[283] as if Re himself were an invisible power and the solar orb the visible emanation and dwelling of the god.

It is impossible to reconcile such metaphysical interpretations with the concrete imagery of the Aten in Egyptian texts. The Aten is indeed the visible "window in heaven" and the "body of the sun," but this "window" or "body" is surely not the solar orb. It is, as the Aten sign (,) indicates, a band housing the sun. And the primeval "sun" is Saturn.

The same misunderstanding occurs in the case of the Egyptian terms khu and khut. The terms refer to "the circle of glory" or the "brilliant circle," conceived as a fixed place—"the place where the [primeval] sun shines forth." Though the Egyptians regarded this circle as the visible emanation of the creator, standard translations render khu as "Spirit" or "Soul" (implying an unseen power) and khut as "horizon" (suggesting the place of the solar sunrise). Both translations violate the literal sense of the words: literally, the khut (written with the sign) is the "Mount of Glory."

The circle of the khu or khut was the "glory," "halo," "nimbus," or "aureole" of the creator—what the Hebrews called the Shekinah (the encircling "glory" of God) and the Greeks stephanos (circle or crown of "glory"). Indeed, every figure of the creator stands within the luminous ring, always considered as his own emanation. The band is not only the god's "halo," but his dwelling at the cosmic centre.[284] "In diagrams of the Cosmos"

---

[279] Lacau, op. cit., 43.

[280] Faulkner, op. cit., 43.

[281] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 382. Tem is also "the dweller in his disk." Ibid., 94.

[282] Piankoff, The Shrines of Tut-Ankh-Amon, 11. [Emphasis added.]

[283] Gods, Vol. II, 69.

[284] The Hebrew Shekinah was a "cloud of glory," recalled as the visible dwelling of God. Patai, The Hebrew Goddess, 138-40.

observes J. C. Cirlot, “the central space is always reserved for the Creator, so that he appears as if surrounded by a circular or almond-shaped halo.”[285]

Figure 8. Mithraic Saturn, with surrounding halo.

Figure 9. Japanese Buddha, with surrounding halo.

If one accepts the immediate sense of the archaic terminology, the enclosure was no abstraction. It was Saturn’s shining band. The Babylonian Anu—Saturn—was “the High One of the Enclosure of Life,”[286] his dwelling “the brilliant enclosure.” (Here, too, the enclosure becomes the place of the primeval “sunrise.”)[287] The Maori of New Zealand know the planet Saturn as Parearau, whose name conveys the meaning “circlet” or “surrounding band.” From this name of Saturn, Stowell concluded that the natives could see the present Saturnian ring with the naked eye—something all astronomers know to be impossible today.[288]

When the African Dogon draw Saturn they depict it as an orb within a circle—a fact which Robert Temple, in his book The Sirius Mystery, cites as evidence for seemingly inexplicable Dogon astronomical knowledge (which he contends was introduced to the ancients by extra-terrestrial visitors!). But no one asks whether the order of the solar system may have changed, allowing for a once-visible Saturnian band.

---

[285] A Dictionary of Symbols, 40. This is what a Babylonian text recalls as the “veil of gold in the midst of heaven”; the texts compare it to a crown. Sayce, Lectures on the Origin and Growth of Religion, 274. To the Hindus this was the Khvarenah, “the Awful Royal Glory.” Perry, Lord of the Four Quarters, 143.

[286] Brown, Researches into the Origins of the Primitive Constellations, 185.

[287] Lenormant, Les Origines de l’Histoire, Vol. I, 13. The Babylonian sun-god “rises” within the enclosure, but “sets” within it also. Sayce, op. cit., 171, 513. The subject is the central sun.

[288] Best, The Astronomical Knowledge of the Maori, 35-36.

The Lost Island

Figure 10. Classical artists often portrayed the great god's "halo" or "aura" as an arched mantle.

For the primeval enclosure the Egyptians employed a variety of interrelated symbols. The circle of the khu or Aten was nothing other than the Island of Fire, the Province of Beginning. A single spell of the Coffin Texts thus identifies Re as "the noble one who is at the land of the Island of Fire," but also calls Re the god "who is in his Aten."[289] The subject is not two different enclosures but one enclosure under two different titles.

And this identification of the central sun as an enclosed or encircled god appears to throw light on the endlessly repeated myth of the lost island. What the Greeks called Ogygia (the island of Kronos/Saturn in the farthest north) occurs under many different names the world over. The white island, the floating island, the revolving island—may not these primeval dwellings simply echo the Saturnian enclosure? One recalls the words of Dionysius of Halicarnassus:

Haste to the realms [rings] of Saturn shape your course,

Where Cotyle's famed island wandering floats

On the broad surface of a sacred lake [the Abyss].[290]

Not of our earth, the lost isle floated in the sea of heaven. Japanese legends recall the ancient cradle of life as Onogora, a floating island ("the drifting land") which congealed on the waters. This was the isle of the Congealed Drop. Its location, states a native commentator, was originally the North Pole, from which it eventually moved to its present position.[291] O'Neill properly relates the Japanese isle to the floating island of Delos raised from the sea by Poseidon. Another name for this island was Ortygia, which O'Neill connects with the Latin verto, Sanskrit vart, "to turn."[292] Answering to the same tradition are the Floating Islands of the Argonautica, called the Strophades, or "Islands of Turning."

In the voyages of the Celtic divine hero Maelduin the adventurer encounters a fabulous isle in the midst of the sea: "Around the island was a fiery rampart, and it was ever wont to turn around and about it."[293]

Examples are too numerous to receive elaborate treatment here: the primeval, revolving islands of Rhodes and Corcyra, spun on the cosmic spindle; the primeval isle of the Cyclos, "wheel," which gave its name to the Cyclades; the "white island" of Zeus "in the midst of the sea"; the floating Hindu white island (Shweta-dwipa) at the polar centre; the lost Toltec "white island" of Tula, the centre of the world.[294]

Without exception, the shining, floating, revolving islands are esteemed as the place where history began and seem to answer to the same archaic tradition as the Egyptian Province of the Beginning, the revolving enclosure around the central sun. Is it possible that the ancients saw the mythical island—that the isle was not a geographical location, but a visible band enclosing Saturn? One must consider several closely related images, which also imply a visible band around the ancient sun-planet.

---

[289] Faulkner, op. cit., 102.

[290] Ant. Rom. lib. i cap. 23 quoted in Faber, A Dissertation on the Cabiri, 66. [Emphasis added.]

[291] O'Neill, The Night of the Gods, 32.

[292] Ibid., 32.

[293] Massey, Ancient Egypt, 373.

[294] See O'Neill, op. cit., 32-35, 615*ff.* Guenon, Formes Traditionelles et Cycles Cosmiques, 38; Le Roi du Monde.

The Egg

A hymn from the Egyptian Coffin Texts reads:

I was he who came into existence as circle,

he who was the dweller in his egg.

I was the one who began everything, the dweller in the primeval waters.[295]

Here the reference is to Atum as the creator of the egg, but other traditions say of the great god Ptah that he "created the egg which proceeded from Nun [the cosmic waters]."[296]

In the Book of the Dead the light god shines as "the mighty one within the egg."[297] "Homage to thee, O thou holy god who dwellest in thine egg."[298]

As the stationary light god "turns round about" his egg revolves around him. "I am the god who keepeth opposition in equipoise as his Egg circleth round."[299] "O thou who circlest round, within thine Egg."[300] Atum, as governor of the revolving egg, is the lord of Time, for "time is regulated by the motion around the egg," Clark tells us.[301]

Similar to the egg of Atum is the revolving sphere produced by the Orphic Chronos (Time, who is Kronos, Saturn):

The great Chronos fashioned in the divine

Aether [the fiery sea] a silver egg.

And it moved without slackening in a vast circle.[302]

To this revolving egg compares that of the Society Islands' creator Ta'oroa, "the ancestor of all the gods," who sat "in his shell in an egg revolving in endless space."[303]

---

[295] Clark, Myth and Symbol in Ancient Egypt, 74.

[296] Major Sandman Holmberg, The God Ptah, 119.

[297] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 577.

[298] Ibid., 493.

[299] Renouf, Egyptian Book of the Dead, 108.

[300] Ibid., 133.

[301] Op. cit., 56.

[302] Guthrie, Orpheus and Greek Religion, 137, citing Orphic Hymn 71.

[303] Eliade, Patterns in Comparative Religion, 413.

Figure 11. Ptah, fashioning the World Egg upon a potters wheel.

The same egg appears in Hindu myth, set in motion by the central sun Prajapati.[304] Mircea Eliade finds recollections of the cosmic egg in Indonesia, Iran, Phoenicia, Latvia, Estonia, West Africa, Central America, and the west coast of South America as well.[305]

Certainly, none of the later traditions improve upon the Egyptian texts which describe the egg as the enclosure round Atum-Re. But one can hardly fail to be impressed by the consistency of the tradition. And even the alchemists, much of whose teachings descended from Egypt, remember the connection of the egg with Saturn. They recall the egg as a fiery enclosure on the primordial sea—a circle with a "sun-point" in the centre (i.e., ☉). This "world-egg is the ancient Saturn," they say.[306]

Is not this cosmic egg the band which the Egyptians called Aten*?* "O thou who art in thine egg, who shinest from thy Aten," reads the Book of the Dead.[307] Just as the Egyptian god-king is "the ruler of all that the Aten encircles," so also is he "powerful in the egg" or "ruling in the egg."[308]

In celebrating the primeval egg, the priests commemorated the island of beginnings. Budge summarizes the Egyptian tradition: "The first act of creation began with the formation out of the primeval watery mass of an egg, wherefrom issued the light of the day, i.e., Re."[309] Concerning the identity of this egg and the island or "Province of the Beginning," the texts from the temple of Edfu remove all doubt: another name for the Province of the Beginning was "the Island of the Egg."[310] Egyptian sources thus suggest this equation:

Aten (enclosure of the central sun)=Cosmic Egg=Primeval Island.

The Bond. To reside within the Aten is to reside "in the coil" or "in the cord." The Hieroglyphs depict the Aten as a cosmic bond or knot, indicated by an enclosure of rope with the ends tied together (shen 𓍶). (Thus shen, "coil," "bond," may be written with the determinative ☉, the Aten sign.) The bond signifies both a boundary—distinguishing the unified domain of the Universal Monarch from the rest of space—and order, marked by ceaseless, stable revolution round the central sun. It is the “bond of regularity” (shes maat), protecting the god-king from the surrounding waters of Chaos. Accordingly, the Egyptian king, considered as the incarnation of the Universal Monarch, takes up symbolic residence within the celestial cord, acquiring the great god’s power as “ruler of all that the Aten encircles.” The priests indicated this power of the terrestrial ruler by placing his hieroglyphic name within the shen-coil . And in order to accommodate longer names they eventually expanded the coil to an ovoid form, which yielded the familiar royal cartouche in which the names of all later kings were inscribed.

---

[304] Agrawala, Sparks from the Vedic Fire, 23*ff.*

[305] Op. cit., 413-415.

[306] Jung, Mysterium Coniunctionis, 46-47; Alchemical Studies, 82.

[307] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 104.

[308] Frankfort, op. cit., 44.

[309] Gods, Vol. I, 291, summarizing the research of Brugsch.

[310] Reymond, op. cit., 66.

Of this cosmic bond or knot the hieroglyphics offer many signs (among them). But each possesses the same root meaning as a protective boundary defining the original dwelling of the creator in heaven. The symbols convey the sense “to circumscribe,” “to set the bounds.” The creator, as the Measurer, prescribes the limits and measures out the sacred enclosure by “stretching the cord” round about, producing a unified dwelling (the primeval island), protected from the evils of Chaos and darkness.[311]

That the ancient mythmakers conceived Saturn’s enclosure as a cord binding together the god’s dwelling will explain why the Babylonian Ninurta, Saturn, holds the markasu or “bond” of the Cosmos. Langdon writes: “The word markasu, ‘band,’ ‘rope,’ is employed in Babylonian philosophy for the cosmic principle which unites all things, and is used also in the sense of ‘support,’ the divine power and law which hold the universe together.”[312] The Orphic poet thus celebrates Saturn (Kronos) as “Father of the blessed gods as well as of man . . . you who hold the indestructible bond . . .”[313]

It is easy for contemporary writers to speak of Saturn’s bond as an invisible principle holding “the universe together,” but in the original symbolism one sees the bond as the shining boundary of Saturn’s dwelling (the true Cosmos). It was not in Egypt alone that the cord signified the “edge” or “border.” What the Greeks called peirata, “rope” or “bond,” possesses the additional meaning “boundary.” The Latin ora, “cord,” means also “edge.”[314] A similar meaning attaches to the “noose” of the Hindu Varuna and Yama. The bond delimited and protected the sacred space occupied by the Universal Monarch, and its connection with the sign links it directly with Saturn’s island-egg.

The Garment. Mythmaking imagination also appears to have conceived the Saturnian band as the god’s girdle, collar, or belt. “I am the girdle of the garment of Nu, shining, shedding light,” states a hymn from the Egyptian Book of the Dead.[315] The great god is “the Girdled and the Mighty one, coming forth triumphantly.”[316] A common hieroglyphic determinative of the “girdle” or “collar” is the cord sign .

The Shield. All creation legends involve a struggle between the light god and the destructive powers of the Abyss (Chaos). The mythic enclosure provides the god’s defense against the turbulent waters which originally prevailed. The Egyptian enclosure, states Reymond, “had the function of protecting the sacred area from the evil coming from outside.”[317] Aten was one of the numerous Egyptian names for this defensive rampart in heaven: “The Aten makes thy protection,” states the *Litany of Re.*318 The cosmic egg serves as the same fortress: “I am Horus . . . , whose protection was made within the egg; the fiery blast of your mouths [the fiery water of Chaos] does not attack me.”319

---

[311] On the rite of “stretching the cord” see ibid., 239, 308*ff.*

[312] Semitic Mythology, 109.

[313] De Santillana and von Dechend, Hamlet’s Mill, 132-133, citing Orphic Hymn 13. [Emphasis added.]

[314] Onians, The Origins of European Thought, 317.

[315] Budge, The Papyrus of Ani, 182.

[316] Renouf, op. cit., 203.

[317] Op. cit., 239.

The band of the Aten ⊙, as the protective boundary, was the great god’s “shield,” fending off what the texts call “the fiends” of disorder. It is this mythic history of the band which explains why, in the hieroglyphs, the shield sign ⧖ signified sacred space in general. All who resided within the shield’s enclosure occupied the safe and stable ground.

Figure 12. Mexican divinity holding a revolving cord-shield.

Cord, belt, and shield converge. The great father wears the cord as a girdle: it protects him as a shield—not merely in Egyptian symbolism, but in the international language of symbols. Why, for example, did divine figures from Babylonia to Greece to Mexico wear a sacred belt of rope, and why was the belt conceived as an impenetrable defense? Mexican illustrations of the divine shield show it to be nothing more than a circle of rope. It was certainly not practical experience which suggested the magical powers of a shield so conceived!

But the mythical imagery of the enclosed sun ⊙ is quite sufficient to explain such anomalies: the great god’s shield and the celestial cord signified one and the same protective enclosure.

If the ancients actually saw a band around Saturn, it is clear that the enclosure fostered diverse but interrelated mythical interpretations. A literal reading of Egyptian and other texts will confirm an extraordinary equation:

Enclosure of the central sun=primeval island=cosmic egg=cord (bond)=girdle (belt, collar)=shield.

Concerning the overlapping images much more needs to be said. The signs and the myths become comprehensible only when one relates them to the heavens of ancient times. Celestial island, egg, cord, girdle, and shield mean nothing more than a shining, revolving enclosure around the great god. Was this band real or imaginary? The question can be answered by exploring certain other aspects of the enclosure.

The Cosmos And The Divine Assembly

The sign of the enclosed sun ⊙ portrays a circle of secondary lights revolving about the stationary god and forming Saturn’s Cosmos. The mystic traditions of the great father present an apparent paradox: he is the god One, the solitary god in the cosmic sea; yet he is the All, embracing a company of lesser gods.

---

318 Piankoff, The Litany of Re, 52.

319 Faulkner, op. cit., 126.

This is not a contradiction. In the first phase of creation the god brought forth a circle of secondary lights: these issued directly from the god to become his visible limbs. It is the fundamental character of the god One—the Heaven Man—to unite in a single "body" all the secondary powers of the Cosmos.

In Pythagorean, Neoplatonist, and Gnostic systems the primal figure is "the One, the All," whose symbol is the enclosed sun ⊙. Hindu mysticism offers the latter sign as the image of the primordial unity, and the same interpretation is repeated by the alchemists.

Today one naturally thinks of "the All" as boundless space. The terms which translators render as Cosmos, heaven, firmament, sky, or universe suggest to the modern mind a limitless arena of the sun, moon, planets, and constellations. But the original meaning of the All is bounded space—a place (the place, or place par excellence). The Cosmos simply means the province of the god One, who, as Lord of the All, governs and is the "whole and its parts." Having overlooked this restricted sense of the terminology the translators replace concrete meanings with ambiguity (in the guise of modern-sounding metaphysics). The once-visible dwelling of the central sun thus becomes, in the translations, "all existence."

Almost without exception the translators fail to notice 1) that the creator was Saturn, recalled as the central sun; and 2) that the sign of the central sun and the sign of the All were the same image ⊙. The true Cosmos was Saturn's enclosure. And nothing else is necessary in order for one to understand the ancient characterization of Saturn as the Heaven Man whose "body" encompassed the Cosmos. When Hildegard Lewy reports that the Sumero-Babylonian priests of Saturn regarded the planet-god as "the embodiment of the whole universe" the modern mind boggles: could the ancients have been so frivolous as to identify Saturn—the present, barely discernible point of light—with "the whole universe"? The answer is that Saturn was not a mere speck of light, but a gigantic globe at the polar centre; and the "universe" did not mean the open heavens but Saturn's dwelling, the an-ki or band of the Cosmos. Saturn's towering form "filled the an-ki."

Zoroastrian texts describe the original Cosmos as the body of Zurvan (Time, Saturn), a revolving wheel called the Spihr, which remained ever in the same position. The fall of the stationary wheel coincided with the collapse of the primordial era.[320] The image suggests, not unlimited "space," but the tangible configuration of the enclosed sun ⊙.

Accordingly, the later mystic traditions, as reviewed by Jung, describe the image ⊙ as the cosmic form of Adam, the Anthropos, the Original Man or Man on High—identified as Saturn.[321] Always the "body" of this primal man means "Cosmos."

The interrelated myths and symbols of Saturn's Cosmos receive remarkable clarification in the creation accounts and the liturgies of ancient Egypt. Though I briefly touched on the Egyptian texts in earlier discussions of the Heaven Man, amplification is necessary.

The Circle Of The Gods

Whether called Atum, Re, Osiris, Horus, Khepera, or Ptah, the Egyptian great god sits enthroned within a circle of secondary deities, satellites of the central sun. The gods are the Glorious Ones, Never-Resting Ones, or Living Ones; the Circle of Fire, Divine Chiefs, Apes of Dawn, Holy Ancestors, or Revolving Ones; the Followers of Horus, the Followers of Re, or the Followers of Osiris.

While the divine assembly possessed many names, its singular character stands out in the texts of all regions. There is no Egyptian company of the gods other than that which revolves round the central sun—a fact uniformly ignored by writers on Egyptian religion.

---

[320] Zaehner, Zurvan: A Zoroastrian Dilemma, 111*ff.*

[321] Jung, Mysterium Coniunctionis, 11, 12, 44*ff.*

The texts repeatedly confirm the same relationship of the assembly to the great god:

This is the Circle of gods about Re and about Osiris.[322]

The satellites of Re make their round.[323]

Thy followers circle about.[324]

Re maketh his appearance . . . with the cycle of gods about him.[325]

His Ennead [circle of gods] is around about his seat.[326]

I am Re amidst his Ennead.[327]

Go ye round about me, O ye gods.[328]

Hail to you, Tribunal . . . O you who surround me . . .[329]

Divine is your name in the middle of the gods.[330]

These gods shall revolve round about him.[331]

Glorious is your sah [brilliant form] in the midst of the living Ones.[332]

These are the "stars who surround Re."[333]

When it is light all faces adore him, the Brilliant One, he who arises [shines] in the midst of his Ennead.[334]

The dilemma for solar mythology is obvious: seeing the references to the great god in the above lines, no one would think of denying that the subject is a visible power (which all presume to be our sun). But the descriptions of the god's revolving companions are equally explicit. To what visible powers do they answer? No circle of lights appears to revolve about the body we call sun today.

Egyptian descriptions of the celestial assembly take us back to the remote age, separated from the present by a wide chasm. Every Egyptian cult possessed mythical accounts relating to the birth of the divine assembly in remote times. Despite numerous versions of the legend, it is impossible to ignore the coherent pattern. From a study of the numerous fragments, I offer the following reconstruction and interpretation of the myth.

---

[322] Renouf, op. cit., 51.

[323] Ibid., 258.

[324] Piankoff, The Wandering of the Soul, 12.

[325] Renouf, op. cit., 264.

[326] Piankoff, The Wandering of the Soul, 27.

[327] Piankoff, Shrines of Tut-Ankh-Amon, 34.

[328] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 189.

[329] Faulkner, op. cit., 4.

[330] Hassan, Hymnes Religieux du Moyen Empire, 100.

[331] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 644.

[332] Hassan, op. cit., 54.

[333] Pyramid Text 732.

[334] Piankoff, Mythological Papyri, 14.

In the primordial epoch the creator first appeared in the Abyss, alone, wandering, without a resting place. “I found no place to stand—I was alone,” states the god.[335]

After his appearance the god “uttered words” and these utterances possessed a visible form as the kheperu, the first things created. The kheperu “came forth from my mouth.”[336] These visible “words” flowed from the creator as the waters of Chaos, the sea in heaven upon which the creator floated or wandered. To reckon with the tradition in its own terms one must think of the primordial sea as a fiery “ocean of words” in heaven, emitted by the god in a prolonged and resounding explosion.

An Egyptian term virtually identical to kheperu is pautti, often translated as “primeval matter.” The pautti issued directly from the creator in the form of radiant speech, forming a fiery, watery mass. The creator brought forth this primeval matter and, paradoxically, “produced himself” in it (“I produced myself from the primeval matter which I made”).[337]

For a time the creator wandered in the luminous sea but eventually came to rest at a point of stability, the cosmic centre. Two events followed: an island congealed around the god as his “place of rest,” and the circle of the gods came into being, embracing the creator. The two events are synonymous.

From the unorganized sea of words—the kheperu or pautti—the creator brought forth an organized dwelling. He “gathered” the enclosure together as a barrier against the watery Chaos which he himself had created. The fiery particles of the newly formed enclosure composed the circle of the gods. That is, the gods stood on the enclosure’s “edge” or “border”—the “shore” of the celestial isle ⊙. In one text these are “the gods who belong to the Shore. They give an island to the Osiris NN.”[338] This was the Cosmos, formed by the “Council of the gods who surround the Island of Fire.”[339]

Vital to this interpretation of the myth is the identity of the divine assembly with the kheperu or pautti “uttered” by the creator. The secondary gods are themselves the shining “words” or “names” spoken by the creator and organized into a revolving circle. Kheperu thus means “the revolving ones,” while pautti signifies “the primeval ones,” who inhabit and give form to the Island of Fire.[340]

What, then, do the texts mean when they say that the kheperu or pautti, though erupting from the creator, “produced” the great god? The answer is clear-cut: the circle into which the constituent particles (visible words) congealed was the creator’s “body.” The god One “collected” or “gathered together” his own limbs (“I united my members”). He “produced himself.”[341]

The Coffin Texts depict the creator alone in the primeval sea:

> [I was] he who had no companion when [or until] my name came into existence . . .
>
> I created my limbs in my “glory”
>
> I was the maker of myself . . .[342]

---

[335] Budge, Gods, Vol. I, 309.

[336] Ibid., 308.

[337] Ibid., 314.

[338] Piankoff, Wandering of the Soul, 87.

[339] Piankoff, The Tomb of Ramesses VI, 192.

[340] Reymond, op. cit., 119.

[341] Thus, the Litany of Re invokes the god as “the One Joined Together.”

[342] Clark, op. cit., 74.

Literally, the limbs which the god produced are "my limbs of my khu." The phrase is of sweeping significance.

An Egyptian sign of the khu was the hieroglyph . The term, in explicit reference to the creator's "circle of glory" (halo, aura, Aten), means at once "words of power" and "brilliant lights." Depicted by the hieroglyph is the island of creation, around which are ranged the secondary deities (khu) produced through the creator's "speech." In bringing forth this divine assembly the creator became the maker of his own body. "O Khepera . . . whose body is the cycle of the gods forever," proclaims the Book of the Dead.[343] The same texts speak of "the souls of the gods who have come into being in [or as] the members of Osiris."[344]

The entire symbolism focuses on the celestial form of the enclosed sun . Individually, the fiery lights which compose the enclosure (island of the Cosmos) are the creator's "limbs" (plural), but as a unified circle, the assembly forms his "body" (singular). Correspondingly, the respective lights are the creator's multiple "names" or "words" ("the names of his limbs"), while as an organic whole (the All) the circle is the god's singular "Name." When the hymn cited above states that the god was alone "until my name came into existence," the meaning is concrete, not abstract. The creator remained alone until he brought forth the circle of the khu, his visible Name in heaven.

That the god's Name was his tangible dwelling—his circle of glory—is a fact absolutely essential to a comprehension of the enigmatic symbolism. "I have made firm my name, and have preserved it that I may have life through it."[345] The reference is to the enclosure of life, the Island of Fire "made firm" at the stationary cosmic centre, when the creator ceased to wander in the Abyss. Thus the hieroglyphic determinative of "name" (ren) is the shen sign , the sign of the celestial enclosure or circle of the Aten. To possess a "name" is to reside within the Aten . A single hymn from the Book of the Dead provides a remarkable summary of the related symbols:

I am the great god who came into existence by himself.

This is Nu who created his names paut neteru as god.

Who, then is this?

It is Re, who created the names of his limbs.

There came into existence in the form of the gods who are in the following of Re . . .

Who, then, is this?

It is Tem [Atum] in his Aten.[346]

The self-generated god in the above lines is Nu, whose hieroglyph identifies him as both the source and the substance of the cosmic waters. The text says not only that the great god "created his names" but that these "names" are the paut neteru—the circle of the gods.

But why is the assembly called the paut, or primeval matter? It is because the revolving gods erupted directly from the creator, eventually forming the organized enclosure. The secondary gods, as words or names spoken by the creator, composed the god's own "limbs," so that the text can say the god "created the names of his limbs.” That these “came into existence in the form of the gods who are in the following of Re” means simply that they formed the revolving assembly.

---

[343] Renouf, op. cit., 39.

[344] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 561.

[345] Renouf, op. cit., 116. [Emphasis added.]

[346] Budge, The Papyrus of Ani, 29.

Who, then, is this god who shines within the circle of his own limbs? “It is Atum in his Aten.” The priests could not have stated more emphatically the equation of the celestial assembly and enclosure of the primeval sun . Here is the formula set forth by the Egyptian texts:

Cosmos (enclosure of the central sun)=primeval matter (sea of words) in its organized form=circle of the gods=limbs or body of creator=creator’s visible Name.

That the circle formed by the divine assembly is the cosmic dwelling of the creator is a truth affirmed not by one local cult alone, but by all streams of Egyptian ritual. Below I list a few of the Egyptian words that connect the assembly with the enclosure of the central sun:

Khu. In the creation, as noted above, the khu erupt from the creator as “words of power” or “brilliant lights.” This “circle of glory” the body of Osiris or Re composes the god’s celestial home, the Aten . Thus khus means “to fashion a dwelling.”

Figure 13. The body of Osiris forming the circle of the Tuat, the Cosmos.

Tuat. The term refers to the “resting place” of the creator at the summit. The hieroglyphic symbol of the Tuat shows the light god within a celestial band which the texts equate with the circle of the Aten, “The Mysterious Soul, which rests in its Aten, rests in the Tuat of Re.”[347] In the hymns and in art, the Egyptians depicted the Tuat as the body of Osiris or Re. But Tuat means also “the circle of the gods”; the enclosure, the “body” of the sun-god and the divine assembly are synonymous.

Shen, shenit, sheniu, shenbet. The shen signs and portray the central sun’s enclosure as a cord of rope—the bond of the Cosmos. Shen means “to revolve,” in reference to the revolving band of the Aten. (The shen sign and the Aten sign function as interchangeable glyphs.) Hence, the sheniu is the great god’s cosmic “chamber” while the shenit are the “chiefs” or “nobles” on high who travel the circuit round the shen. Shenbet, meaning “body,” is the bet or “place” marked out by the shen. Again, enclosure, “body,” and assembly converge.

Tchatchat. The tchatchat are the “chiefs” or “heads”—the council of gods revolving around the stationary sun. But tchatchat also signifies “boundary,” “enclosure,” or “holy domain.” The circuit traversed by the chiefs is the boundary of the celestial enclosure .

---

[347] Piankoff, The Tomb of Ramesses VI, 29; see also Piankoff, The Litany of Re, 29.

Rer, reri, rert. While rer means “to revolve or encircle,” rert means “men”—the inhabitants of the primordial domain. The reri are “the revolving ones” (comparable to the kheperu), who collectively enclose the sacred space. Accordingly, rer possesses the additional meaning “the enclosed domain.”

Paut, pat. The secondary gods are the pautti, the “primeval matter” which (as stated above) congealed into the creator’s revolving dwelling. Paut thus signifies the creator’s “body.” Obviously related are the pat, the primeval gods whose name conveys the sense “to go round like a wheel or in a circle.” It is no coincidence that the hieroglyphic determinative of the pat is an egg : the circle around which the pat revolve is the egg of the Cosmos, and this egg is the “body” of the god Seb.

Tchet, tchetu. While tchet means “to speak,” tchetu signifies “words,” “things spoken.” In the creation the great god uttered visible “words” in the form of the lesser gods. That the creator’s words became his dwelling is reflected in the term tchet, the “house” or “chamber” of the great god. Tchet also means “body.”

Shes, shesi. An Egyptian name of the cosmic bond is shes, written with the hieroglyph . The Tuat (, dwelling of Re or Osiris) is the shes maat, the “bond of regularity” (or of stable, ceaseless revolution). The texts also speak of celestial shesi, divine “warriors” who protect the great god. They “protect” the god because, collectively, they form the defensive rampart, the cosmic shield.

The language and symbolism of the celestial assembly reveal an underlying idea connecting the separate traditions. The secondary gods are not merely ill-defined “companions,” or “assistants” (as so many Egyptologists seem to assume); rather, they possess concrete form as the enclosure of life, the very enclosure which the priests celebrate as the island of beginnings, the revolving bond, or the cosmic egg (all figures of the Cosmos).

The Cosmos, in other words, has nothing to do with “all existence.” The concept relates to an organized domain—“the whole and its parts”—fashioned by the creator out of previously unorganized cosmic debris (primeval matter). An Egyptian word for the unified domain is temt, which means “all” or “complete” and also “to collect,” “to gather together.” Clearly related is the word Temtiu, one of the names of the secondary gods. It is the secondary gods themselves that the creator “collects” or “gathers together” to form the cosmic island.

Pertaining to the same root concept are the terms tema, “to unify, join together”; temi, “shore,” “bank,” or “border”; and temen, “all,” “totality.” The unified All (Cosmos) is contained within the border of the enclosure, and the border is the shore of the cosmic island .

The Saturnian band is thus the pathway traversed by the secondary gods. The gods revolve around the shore, or around the bond, or around the egg. “Every god who is on the border of your enclosure is on the path . . . ,” states a Coffin Text.348

The testimony could not be more explicit. The road traveled by the secondary gods is the uat, the “way” or “path,” denoted by the glyph . But the same glyph signifies the tcher, “boundary.” The path of the gods and the boundary of the unified Cosmos (the All) are synonymous. Thus the phrase er tcher (“to the tcher” or “to the boundary”) means “all,” “the whole.” The great god, as Neb-er-tcher—“he who rules to the boundary”—is the ruler of the whole, lord of the revolving Cosmos. It is the same thing to say that he governs “all that the Aten [ ] encircles.” The whole range of images challenges orthodox interpretations.

But the symbolism of the Cosmos and divine assembly reaches far beyond Egypt. Do not all supreme gods sit enthroned within the circle of secondary divinities? Ninurta, Kronos, El, Yama, Huang-ti and every other Saturnian figure has his “sons,” “councilors,” “spies,” “followers,” “assistants,” or “warriors” seated round about him. The Mesopotamian sign is a self-evident image of the celestial assembly. It is this Cosmos—

---

348 Lacau, op. cit., 33.

not boundless space—which Saturn's "body" encompassed. What the mystics knew as "the universe" organized within Saturn's "bond" or "cord" (Babylonian markasu) becomes meaningful only as the visible Saturnian band, or circle of the gods.[349]

The Great Mother

The sign of the enclosed sun ☉ also portrays Saturn, the generative Seed, within the womb of the mother goddess. As the female personification of the Cosmos, the great mother is inseparable from Saturn's "body."

The mysteries of the mother goddess give rise to an endless debate. What is the fact in nature which will explain the cosmic union of Isis and Osiris, Tammuz and Ishtar or Kronos and Gaea? One scholar after another puzzles over the goddess' varied forms, finding her everywhere and nowhere. If to one writer she is the fertile earth around us, to another she is the moon and to another "the universe," the "sky," or the morning star. The diverse interpretations seem to suggest that there were many goddesses with a singular figure—the heavenly consort of the great father. Here, for example, is one statement, offered as the words of the Egyptian goddess Isis to Apuleius:

> . . . My name, my divinity is adored throughout the world, in divers manners, in variable customs, and by many names. For the Phrygians that are the first of all men call me the Mother of the gods of Pessinus; the Athenians, which are sprung from their own soil, Cecropian Minerva; the Cyprians, which are girt about by the sea, Paphian Venus; the Cretans, which bear arrows, Dictynian Diana; the Sicilians, which speak three tongues, infernal Prosperpine; the Elusinians, their ancient goddess Ceres; some Juno, others Bellona, others Hecate, others Ramnusie . . . ; and the Egyptians, which are excellent in all kind of ancient doctrine, and by their proper ceremonies accustomed to worship me, do call me by my true name, Queen Isis.[350]

In their cosmic rites the Egyptians seemed unwilling to distinguish Isis from such local figures of the great mother as Nut, Hathor, Mut, or Neith. Each local goddess bore identical or similar epithets ("the Eye of Re," "the mother of Re," "the Lady of the Holy Land," etc.).

But if the ancients acknowledged a common personality of the goddess, what was that personality's underlying trait? There is one universal attribute: the great goddess possesses the form of an enclosure—a circle or womb—housing and "giving birth to" the great father. Neumann perceived this trait when he described the goddess' "elementary character" as "the Great Round" or "the world-containing and world-creating uterus."[351] From his exhaustive study of the great mother G. S. Faber concluded that every goddess appears as a protective enclosure sheltering the great father. Of this truth there is no shortage of evidence.[352]

The god Tammuz sits within the womb of Tiamat, "the mother of the hollow." "Mother-womb" is the epithet of the Sumerian goddess Gula, while Ishtar's name means "womb."[353] Hindu sources describe the great mother as the yoni or "womb" and the great father as "he enveloped in his Mother's Womb."[354] Agni is the male god "shining in the Mother's eternal womb."[355]

---

[349] It can hardly be doubted that the assembly in heaven served as the prototype of all sacred assemblies on earth: just as the king represented the Universal Monarch, his councilors or assistants answered to the circle of secondary divinities around the central sun. Among the Greeks, notes Onians, "a circle appears to have been the ritually desirable form for a gathering." Op. cit., 444. Similarly, the Sumerian GIN, "to assemble," possesses the sense "to circle, turn, enclose." Langdon, A Sumerian Grammar, 216. This aspect of the sanctified assembly is, of course, universal. (Even today we speak of a circle or band of assistants, followers, or companions without really knowing why.)

[350] Campbell, Occidental Mythology, 43.

[351] The Great Mother, 227.

[352] The Origins of Pagan Idolatry.

[353] Allegro, The Sacred Mushroom and the Cross, 92.

Similarly, the Norse Odin is "the dweller in Frigg's bosom."[356] In Orphic doctrine the receptacle housing the great father is the goddess Vesta. The Gnostics remembered the old god as the "Ancient of Days who dwelt as a babe within the womb."[357] Among the Maori the great mother is the "Shelter Maid" or "Haven Maid."[358]

Descriptions of the primeval womb show that the ancients recall the goddess as a visible band—what Hindu texts call the "golden womb,"[359] and Babylonian "the jeweled circlet" (a title of Ishtar).[360] The imagery pertains directly to the enclosed sun ☉. In Hinduism the latter sign depicts "the male seed-point or bindu in the cosmic womb," states Alan Watts.[361] "The Father is like the centre (Nabhi) of the circle and the Mother the circumference (Paramanta)," notes Agrawala.[362] The same male-female symbolism of the enclosed sun ☉ occurs in European stone carvings discussed by V. C. C. Collum.[363] That the Hebrews regarded the Shekinah (the creator's encircling "aura," "anima," or "glory") as "the Mother"[364] leads to the same conclusion: the great god's halo was his own spouse. Accordingly, the Tibetan ritual invokes the great god as "the centre of the Circle, enhaloed in radiance, embraced by the (divine) Mother."[365]

This conception of the great mother receives compelling support from ancient Egyptian sources. The Egyptian sun-god has his home within the womb of his mother and consort, the "Great Protectress."[366] Of Re, the Book of the Dead proclaims, "Thou shinest, thou makest light in thy mother."[367] Elsewhere Re appears as the sun "in the womb of Hathor."[368]

Osiris shines forth from the enclosure of his mother Nut: "Homage to thee, King of kings, Lord of lords, Prince of princes, who from the womb of Nut hath ruled all the world."[369] The abode of Horus is his mother Hathor, whose name means “the House of Horus.” And the goddess Nekhebet is said to personify the primeval abode of the sun.[370]

---

[354] Agrawala, The Thousand Syllabled Speech, 115.

[355] Coomaraswamy, Elements of Buddhist Iconography, 23.

[356] MacCulloch, Eddic Mythology, 174.

[357] Jung, Mysterium Coniunctionis, 281.

[358] Best, op. cit.,

[359] Eggeling, The Satapatha Brahmana, Part II, 394.

[360] Brown, op. cit., Vol. I, 268.

[361] Preface to Perry, op. cit.

[362] Thousand Syllabled Speech, 127.

[363] "Die Schöpterische Mutter Göttin," 221-324.

[364] Patai, op. cit., 239.

[365] Evans-Wentz, The Tibetan Book of the Dead, 127.

[366] Pyramid Text 838.

[367] Budge, Egyptian Book of the Dead, 4.

[368] Bleeker, Hathor and Thoth, 48.

[369] Budge, From Fetish to God, 30; see also Pyramid Text 1607. [Emphasis added.]

As earlier noted, the Egyptians portrayed the celestial dwelling as the shen bond . But this enclosure was really the womb of Nut, states Piankoff.[371] (Thus the goddess Shentit takes her name from the shen bond.)

The mother goddess was not our earth, not the open sky, not the moon, but the dwelling of the central sun, the enclosure of the Aten : “My Aten has given me birth,” states the god-king.[372] This direct connection of the mother goddess with the sun’s enclosure will explain why the Aten sign , though serving as the glyph of Re, also denotes “mistress,” in reference to the god’s celestial consort.[373] The god’s mistress was his own emanation, his halo of “glory” or “splendour.” The priests who invoked the great god’s khut or “circle of glory” also celebrated the goddess Khut, who was the same circle.

Residing within the enclosure, the central sun is the shining seed impregnating the great mother. “I am indeed the Great Seed,” declares Re.[374] “O Re, make the womb of Nut pregnant with the seed of the spirit which is in her,” reads a hymn of the Pyramid Texts.[375] The same texts celebrate “the womb of the sky with the power of the seed of the god which is in it.”[376] And again, “Pressure is in your womb, O Nut, through the seed of the god which is in you.”[377]

In his coming forth within the cosmic womb the sun “copulates with” or “impregnates” the mother goddess, and this relationship expresses itself in the language. The Egyptian nehep means “to copulate” while nehepu means “to shine.” Though beka denotes “the coming forth” of the sun, the same word means “pregnant.” Thus the union of the primal pair is renewed daily (or with each “dawn” of the central sun).

But the same coming forth receives mythical interpretation as the birth of the light god. Nut is at once Re’s spouse and his mother, who “bears Re daily”:[378]

> I am exalted like that venerable god, the Lord of the Great House, and the gods rejoice at seeing his beautiful comings forth from the womb of Nut.[379]
>
> His birth is wonderful, raising up his beautiful form in the womb of Nut.[380]
>
> Hail, Prince, who comest forth from the womb.[381]

---

[370] Brugsch, Religion, 324.

[371] Mythological Papyri, 6.

[372] Piankoff, The Tomb of Ramesses VI, 92.

[373] See, for example, the use of the sign (here) in Budge, Papyrus of Ani, 71.

[374] Faulkner, op. cit., 258.

[375] Pyramid Text 990.

[376] Pyramid Text 532.

[377] Pyramid Text 1416.

[378] Pyramid Text 1688.

[379] Renouf, op. cit., 148.

[380] Budge, From Fetish to God, 416.

[381] Budge, Gods, Vol. II, 260.

Conception and birth are thus confused. The impregnating Seed (father) is also the Child. It is this equation which yields Re's title as "Man-Child."[382] He is the prototype of "the son who impregnates his mother," or the "father who gives birth to himself."

But the confusion does not end here, for the mother goddess, as the great father's encircling aura, is herself the emanation of the masculine power. The solitary god brings forth the womb of heaven unassisted. In this sense the goddess is the great father's "daughter," so that if one considers the entire range of possibilities, three relationships to the goddess—father, husband, and son—are united in one figure.

Imagery of this sort runs through all of the religious texts of ancient Egypt. Amon-Re is "he who begets his father."[383] The goddess Hathor becomes "the mother of her father and the daughter of her son."[384] Atum-Kheprer "brought himself into being upon the thigh of his divine mother."[385] In the ritual of the Karnak temple Re's "daughter" Mut encircled "her father Re and gave birth to him as Khonsu."[386] The same goddess is "the daughter and mother who made her sire."[387]

Equation of father and son is explicit in the case of Osiris and his "son" Horus. The Pyramid Texts describe Osiris shining "in the sky as Horus from the womb of the sky."[388] "The king is your seed, O Osiris, you being potent in your name of Horus who is in the sea."[389] The gods, in the Book of the Dead, recall the ancient time of Horus "when he existed in the form of his own child."[390]

Because the terrestrial king symbolically acquires the attributes of the Universal Monarch, the rites show the local ruler uniting with the mother goddess and reproducing himself within the cosmic womb. He announces that he has been "fashioned in the womb" of the great mother,[391] and after invoking "the womb of the sky with the power of the seed of the spirit which is in it," then proclaims: "Behold me, I am the seed of the spirit which is in her."[392] "O Nut . . . it is I who am the seed of the god which is in you."[393]

Frankfort deals with the subject at length, showing that the king's impregnation of the mother goddess and simultaneous birth in the womb was central to Egyptian ritual. The king "enters her, impregnates her, and thus is borne again by her"[394] exactly as the great god himself.

If the king receives his authority on earth through personification of the Universal Monarch, it is through the same identification that he attains the heavenly abode of the goddess upon death, taking up his residence within the sheltering womb as an Imperishable One. In a hymn to Nut, King Pepi beseeches the goddess, "Mayest thou put this Pepi into thyself as an imperishable star."[395] "Mayest thou transfigure this Pepi within thee that he may not die."[396]

---

[382] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 180.

[383] Frankfort, op. cit., 177.

[384] Budge, Gods, Vol. I, 431.

[385] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 134.

[386] Frankfort, op. cit., 180.

[387] Ibid., 177.

[388] Budge, Osiris: the Egyptian Religion of Resurrection, 68.

[389] Pyramid Text 1505.

[390] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 337.

[391] Frankfort, op. cit., 42.

[392] Pyramid Text 532.

[393] Pyramid Text 1416-17.

[394] Frankfort, op. cit., 177.

Frankfort comments: ". . . the notion of a god who begets himself on his own mother became in Egypt a theological figure of thought expressing immortality. The god who is immortal because he can re-create himself is called Kamutef, 'bull of his mother.'"[397] The king aspires to duplicate the feat of the Universal Monarch, giving birth to himself in the womb of Nut. Though the divine marriage and its imitation in kingship ritual involve many complexities and enigmas, the underlying theme remains clearly defined. Symbolically, the king has his home in the cosmic womb; he simultaneously impregnates the goddess and is "born" by her. The source of the ritual is celestial, for it reenacts the First Occasion when the great father, the fiery Seed, took to wife the band of "glory" which congealed around him. The sign of the primordial union is everywhere before us but rarely recognized. It is the sign of the enclosed sun ☉.

Womb And Thigh

In connection with the symbolism of the mother goddess one notes that the "womb" is generally synonymous with the "thigh" or "lap." When ancient reliefs depict the god or king on the lap of the great mother, they refer to the primeval union, in which the father of the gods resides within the goddess' protective enclosure.

An Assyrian tribute to Assurbanipal reads: "A meek babe art thou, Assurbanipal, whose seat is on the lap of the Queen of Ninevah [Ishtar]."[398] Thus the Sanskrit yoni, the female enclosure and dwelling of the great father, may be translated either "lap" or "womb." The Latin word for "thigh"—femen, feminis—means "that which engenders."[399] A similar connection occurs in Egypt, where Khepesh, "thigh," means the womb of Nut housing Osiris or Re.

Many gods—in Hindu, Greek, and European myth—are thus "born from the thigh," like the Egyptian Khepren who "brought himself into being upon the thigh of the divine mother."[400]

This overlapping symbolism of womb, lap, and thigh will be met more than once in the following sections.

Womb And Cosmos

To identify the mother goddess as the band of the enclosed sun ☉ is to equate the goddess with Saturn's Cosmos, the revolving company of the gods. The goddess Nut is "the representation of the cosmos," states Piankoff.[401] Thus while the Egyptian khut signifies the "circle of glory" formed by the secondary gods, Khut also means the mother goddess. And though the shenit are the "princes" in the divine circle, the goddess is Shentit; both words derive from the shen, the bond of the Cosmos.

---

[395] Ibid., 177; see Pyramid Text 782.

[396] Ibid., 177.

[397] Ibid., 180.

[398] Ward, The Cylinder Seals of Western Asia, 154.

[399] Onians, 182.

[400] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 134.

[401] Piankoff, Mythological Papyri, 6.

Figure 14. The Man-Child on the lap of the mother goddess. (a) Cyprus;

Figure 14. (b) Egypt;

Figure 14. (c) India;

Figure 14. (d);

Figure 14. (e) British goddess Gwen.

The religious texts confirm the equation. “He is the one who cometh forth this day from the primeval womb of them [the secondary gods] who were before Re,” reads the Book of the Dead.[402] “I have come forth between the thighs of the company of the gods.”[403] What the Book of the Dead calls “divine beings of the Thigh”[404] means the celestial assembly, the secondary gods who collectively form the womb of cosmic genesis.

But the interrelated symbolism does not stop here. Every Egyptian priest knew that the mother goddess was the revolving egg housing the central sun. Indeed, the hieroglyphic image of an egg at the end of the divine name means “goddess.” Of Osiris the goddess Isis declares: “His seed is within my womb, I have molded the shape of the god within the egg as my son who is at the head of the Ennead.”[405] The god within the womb is the god within the egg, who is the god ruling the Ennead (circle of gods).

By the same equation the womb becomes the garment or belt girdling the sun: the deceased king prays that he may be girt by the goddess Tait,[406] or announces that “My kilt which is on me is Hathor.”[407] In the case of the goddess Neith the womb becomes the shield. (The shield is the hieroglyph for Neith.)[408] Though the symbols of the primeval enclosure differ, each is presented as a form of the great mother, whose entire character answers to the visible Saturnian band ☉.

---

[402] Renouf, op. cit., 265.

[403] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 594.

[404] Ibid., 392.

[405] Faulkner, op. cit., 125.

[406] Renouf, op. cit., 205.

[407] Pyramid Text 108.

The Hermaphrodite

In the Great Magical Papyrus of Paris, dated around the first half of the fourth century A.D., appears the Oracle of Kronos. The recommended prayer invokes Kronos as “Lord of the World, First Father,” but also bestows on the god the peculiar title “Man-Woman.”[409] Kronos is Saturn, the primeval sun. To what aspect of the god did this title refer?

In Saturn the primal male and female principles unite, yielding the hermaphrodite, or androgyne. Few of the preeminent deities of antiquity are free of this duality. The Sumerian Anu, Ninurta, Tammuz, and Enki; the Hebrew El; the Hindu Vishnu, Brahma, and Shiva; the Iranian Zurvan; the Mexican Quetzalcoatl—all reveal a female dimension. Their spouse is never wholly separated from their own body.

The Egyptians esteemed Atum as “that great He-She,”[410] while celebrating Amen as the “Glorious Mother of gods and men.”[411] The Egyptian word for this primeval unity is Mut-tef, or “Mother-Father.” From what has been established in the previous pages concerning the symbolism of the enclosed sun ☉ there can be little doubt as to the concrete meaning of the Mut-tef. The word signified the organized Cosmos,[412] the central sun and its enclosure, considered as the male and female parents united in a single personality: the great father’s body was also the god’s spouse, the womb of heaven.

This duality finds expression in the Egyptian term khat, which may be translated either “body” or “womb.” The man-child Horus, who dwells in the womb of Hathor, is Khenti-Khati, at once “the dweller in the body” and “the dweller in the womb.” The Litany of Re proclaims that “the khat [body] of Re is the great Nut,” the mother goddess.[413]

Egyptian artists showed the body of Osiris forming the circle of the Tuat, the abode of Osiris or Re.[414] But every student of Egyptian religion knows that the Tuat, house of rest, was the womb of Nut.

The hermaphrodite, then, personifies the original Cosmos, which means Saturn and his visible dwelling ☉. G. S. Faber, in his comprehensive study of ancient ritual, notes that the great father (“the Intelligent Being”) “was sometimes esteemed the animating Soul and sometimes the husband of the Universe, while the Universe was sometimes reckoned the body and sometimes the wife of the Intelligent Being: and, as the one theory supposed a union as perfect as that of the soul and body in one man, so the other produced a similar union by blending together the husband and wife into one hermaphrodite.”[415]

---

[408] Budge, Gods, Vol. I, 451.

[409] De Santillana and von Dechend, op. cit., 147.

[410] Clark, op. cit., 41.

[411] Énel, Les Origines de las Genese et l’Enseignement des Temples de l’Ancienne Egypte, 13, note 4.

[412] Ibid., 11*ff.*

[413] Piankoff, The Litany of Re, 54.

[414] Schafer, “Altägyptische Bilder der Auf- und Untergehenden Sonne,” 20.

[415] Origins, 165. [Emphasis added.]

With Faber’s assessment it is impossible to disagree, so long as one remembers that to the ancients, the “universe” (Cosmos) meant Saturn’s home, not a boundless expanse. That Saturn’s Cosmos acquired a dual character as the god’s “body” and as his “spouse” is sufficient to explain the primordial Father-Mother.

The hermaphrodite or androgyne, Eliade tells us, is “the distinguishing sign of the original totality [i.e., the All].” Its customary form is “spherical,” he notes.[416] We thus arrive at the following equation:

Band of the enclosed sun=Cosmos (island, egg, cord, girdle, shield, circle of the gods)=body of the great father=womb of the great mother.

---

[416] Patterns, 423. See also Eliade, Myth of the Eternal Return.

V: The Holy Land

Ancient ritual the world over conceived the terrestrial ruler as the incarnation of the Universal Monarch. By the same principle each local city or kingdom became a transcript of the god-king's primeval domain. The sanctified territory on earth was laid out according to a cosmic plan, revealed in remote times.

On this priority of the cosmic dwelling all major traditions concur. A celestial Sumer and Akkad preceded the organization of the actual Mesopotamian kingdoms. And such settlements as Eridu, Erech, Babylon, and Lagash took their names from a heavenly city occupied by the central sun.

Every Egyptian town—Heliopolis, Herakleopolis, Memphis, Abydos, Thebes, Hermopolis—mirrored a prototype, a "city in which the sun shone forth in the beginning." So did Egypt as a whole, according to the ritual, reproduce the dwelling gathered together and unified by the creator.

Hebrew tradition knew a heavenly Jerusalem which gave its name to the terrestrial city; and what the Hebrews claimed of their city, the Muslims claimed of Mecca. The Chinese declared their kingdom to be a copy of the celestial empire, and each capital city imitated the same plan.

In unison, diverse traditions of the Near East, Europe, Asia, and the Americas recall a Holy Land par excellence, founded and ruled by the creator himself. From this Saturnian kingdom every nation took instruction in the ideals of kingship and in the proper organization of the sacred domain.

The Mother Land

In the creation myth the great god raised a circular plot of "earth" from the cosmic waters. The enclosure was Saturn's paradise—the kingdom of heaven—appearing as a vast wheel or throne turning about the stationary god.

Saturn's Earth[417]

In seeming reference to the fertile soil around us, the Latin poet Virgil celebrates the "mother of harvests" and "the mighty mother of men." But he gives the great goddess of fertility an intriguing title: "Saturn's Earth."

Why Saturn's Earth? The curiosity increases when one notices that the Sumerian An, Enki, and Ninurta—all identified as Saturn—rule "in the Ekur." The translators render Ekur as "earth."[418] So also did Chinese astronomy deem Saturn the planet of the "earth,"[419] while the Phoenician Saturn is said to have dwelt "in the centre of the earth."

The Egyptian "earth god" is Seb (or Geb). That is, writes Budge, "the earth formed his body and was called the 'house of Seb.'"[420] But if Seb's body was the earth, why did the Greek historian Plutarch translate Seb as Kronos (Saturn)?[421] [417] Virgil, Georgics, ii. 173*ff*.

---

[418] Jensen, Die Kosmologie der Babylonier, 189*ff*.; Langdon, Semitic Mythology, 99.

[419] De Saussure, "Le Systeme Cosmologique Sino-Iranienne."

[420] The Gods of the Egyptians, Vol. II, 94.

What connection of the planet Saturn and the “earth” might have justified this identity? Of course the common English translation, “earth,” naturally suggests to the modern mind our planet suspended in space. But to the ancients no such detached view was possible. They knew only a terrestrial region, however large or small. In archaic ritual, the terms which experts translate as “earth” mean literally “land,” “place,” “province”; and the only region which the ancients considered worthy of sanctification as the “land” was their own unified state or nation—all else belonging to the “barbarians.”

But every sacred “land” organized around a religious-political centre proclaimed itself a copy of the primeval dwelling in heaven. Thus the Egyptian ta, often rendered as “earth,” refers first and foremost to the heavenly province of the creator—the ta ab (“pure land”), ta nefer (“beautiful land”), ta sheta (“mysterious land”), ta ankhtet (“land of life”), or ta ur (“great land”). Such terms are synonymous with ta Tuat, the “land of the Tuat,” the cosmic dwelling of Osiris or Re. In naming terrestrial Egypt ta, the Egyptians gave their homeland the name of the cosmic “place” par excellence.

Ta signifies the cosmic dwelling “gathered together” by the creator. That the Egyptians conceived the ta as the “body of Seb” corresponds with everything we have learned of the primeval enclosure. Of equal significance is Seb’s hieroglyphic symbol, the egg . The myths say that the egg of Seb is that from which the sun first shone forth (i.e., it is the same as the revolving egg of Atum, the egg of the Cosmos). This so-called “world egg” has no connection with our planet.

Nor did the Sumerian Ekur, “earth,” denote our planet. As observed by Jensen, Langdon, and others, the Ekur appears as the celestial home of the creator.[422] Åke Sjöberg and E. Bergmann state the identity bluntly.[423] The Sumerians knew this celestial domain as the ki—“the place” or “the land”—invoked as ki-sikil-la, the “pure land” or “pure place,” and ki-gal, “great land.”[424]

The Sumerian ki was the Assyrian Esara, the supreme “place.” Rather than familiar geography, the term refers to the created land of cosmic beginnings. Thus Esara, according to Jensen, was used with special reference to “the earth as it appeared at the creation.”[425] Equivalent is the “celestial land” of Hindu myth,[426] or the “pure land” of the Buddhists.[427] No greater mistake could be made than to seek a geographical location of this lost land.

Ancient cosmology locates the primordial “place,” not “down here,” but at the celestial pole, the centre and summit. In Egyptian thought, states Clark, the celestial pole is “that place” or “the great city.” Here dwells the “Master of the Primeval Place.”[428] When the god in the Coffin Texts proclaims, “I am the creator who sits in the supreme place,” the reference is to the polar abode, Clark tells us.[429] Iranian astronomy drew on the same tradition when it designated the celestial pole as Gah, which means simply “the place,” the dwelling of “the Great One in the Middle of the Sky.”[430]

---

[421] Plutarch, De Iside et Osiride, XII.

[422] Jensen, op. cit., 188*ff.*; Langdon, op. cit., 102.

[423] The Collection of the Sumerian Temple Hymns, 136.

[424] Van Dijk, “Le Motif Cosmique dans la Pensée Sumérienne,” 49.

[425] Op. cit., 199. [Emphasis added.]

[426] Lenormant, Les Origines de l’Histoire, Vol. II, 21.

[427] Guenon, Le Roi du Monde, 95.

[428] Clark, Myth and Symbol in Ancient Egypt, 58-59, 222.

[429] Ibid., 58-59.

[430] De Saussure, “Origines Chinoise de las Cosmologie Iranienne,” 303.

In Iranian cosmology it is Saturn who occupies the polar Gah, “place”—just as it is Saturn who, in the form of the polar An, rules the Sumerian “pure place.” Hence, one could properly call this domain “Saturn’s Land,” or “Saturn’s Province.” And this simple relationship enables us to understand why the ancients, who regarded their own sacred territory as a duplication of the celestial dwelling, extolled the fertile soil as “Saturn’s Earth.”

The Egyptian Paradise

A clarification of the Egyptian concept will help to illuminate the general tradition. One of the features of the Egyptian ta, “land,” which has encouraged its identification with our earth is its mythical character as a garden or field of abundance. To reside in the ta is to live in the Garden of Hetep. Many descriptions of this primeval domain do indeed sound very much like a terrestrial paradise. The land is filled with wheat or barley, and the inhabitants drink of beer and cool waters. In the Book of the Dead, the deceased king announces, “I know the names of the domains, the districts and the streams within the Garden of Hetep . . . there is given to me the abundance . . .”[431] The Pyramid Texts depict the deceased king drinking oil and wine and living off “the bread of eternity” and “the beer of everlastingness.”[432]

The Egyptians deemed the meadow of peace and plenty at once the ancestral land and the future home of those yet to pass beyond. Many writers, of course, recognize the Garden of Hetep as an early—perhaps the earliest—mythical expression of the lost paradise. Its underlying nature, however, has yet to be penetrated by the conventional schools.

To anyone willing to consider the entire context of Egyptian evidence, it should be clear that the primeval land produced by the creator and imbued with overflowing abundance was celestial. Those who attain the Garden of Hetep reach the heaven of the creator. The deceased king in the Pyramid Texts goes “to see his father Osiris.” He announces: “I have gone to the great island in the midst of the Sekhtet Hetepet [Garden of Hetepet] on which the swallow-gods alight; the swallows are the Imperishable Stars . . . I will eat of what you eat. I will drink of what you drink, and you will give satiety to me at the pole . . . You shall set me to be a magistrate among the Khu, the Imperishable Stars in the north of the sky, who rule over offerings and protect the reaped corn, who cause this to go down to the chiefest of the food-spirits who are in the sky.”[433]

Let us analyze this important text, which combines several Egyptian interpretations of the celestial garden. As used above, the term Hetepet signifies “abundance” or “food offerings.” so that the Garden of Hetepet is the Garden of Abundance or Garden of Food Offerings in heaven. Hetepet possesses a root sense of “gathering together” or “uniting” (much like temt, “collecting,” “gathering together”), a meaning which is vital to the symbolism as a whole.

Hetepet is, of course, inseparable from hetep, “rest,” “standing in one place.” The Garden of Hetepet is the Garden of Hetep. One can reasonably speak of the Garden as the dwelling of rest and abundance (i.e., “peace and plenty”), gathered together by the creator. The symbolism is, as I shall attempt to show, much deeper than standard interpretations would suggest.

In the midst of the celestial garden is the “great island,” whose inhabitants—the swallow-gods—are the Akhemu-Seku (“never-corrupting” ones), here translated as “the Imperishable Stars.” The Egyptians also called these divinities Akhemu-Urtu (“never-resting” ones), conventionally identified as circumpolar stars who, revolving around the polar axis, never sink beneath the horizon. But the foregoing text identifies these gods as more than “stars” (in the modern sense of the word). They are the Khu (“words of power” or “light spirits”), which erupted directly from the creator. There is a vast body of evidence to show that these secondary light gods were themselves the abundant “food” or “offerings” of the celestial garden and that this is what the above hymn means when it speaks of the “food-spirits.”

---

[431] Renouf, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 193-94.

[432] Budge, op. cit., Vol. II, 119.

[433] Pyramid Text 1215-20.

The flowing beer (or wine) and the field of grain (wheat, barley, corn) are, in fact, indistinguishable from the primeval sea of words (secondary gods) which sprang from the creator and which the great god gathered together to form the enclosure of the primeval island—his own "body." On the "great island in the midst of the Garden of Hetepet" the fiery particles (Khu, Akhemu-Urtu) "alighted," collectively forming the enclosure. If, in one myth, the god's shining "words" congealed into the island, in another, the isle was produced from the luminous "grain of heaven." The "words of power," the "grain," and the "company of the gods" represented interrelated mythical interpretations of the primeval matter ejected by the creator. In the imagination of the Egyptians the creator collected the grain from the celestial field (sometimes called the Sekhet-Sasa or "Field of Fire"), and produced the enclosure as the "granary of the gods"—the house of abundance which every king hoped to attain upon death. The grain served as the "dough" from which the creator fashioned his dwelling; and it is this crucial relationship which explains the interconnected meanings of the Egyptian term paut or pautti—signifying at once the "primeval matter" (company of gods) and "dough" or "bread." The creator organized the company of gods (the grain) into the revolving Cosmos, conceived as a celestial land of abundance.

Primeval matter=creative "words"=secondary gods=grain of heaven (dough, bread).

In their ceremonies the Egyptians reenacted the creation on a microcosmic scale by fashioning ritual dough cakes used in offerings to the dead. These cakes of paut symbolized the created "land" or "earth," produced from the overflowing grain of heaven. Thus, while the Egyptian ta means "land," ta also means "bread" or "cakes." Such interrelated terminology pervades the Egyptian language. A review of this usage reveals two consistent principles:

1. The lesser gods (children, servants, assistants) coincide with the "dough"—the beer and grain which erupted from the creator. (Prior to unification as the "land," or Cosmos, the fiery particles compose the sea of Chaos and thus may be termed "fiends" or "demons" of darkness.)

2. The organized dwelling ("land," "city," "place," "domain") coincides with the "granary" and the molded "cake" or "bread" of heaven.

Here are a few of the many examples:

The "children" of the great god are the pert, "things which appear"; but pert also means "grain." The texts describe the beer and grain (the children) as pert er kheru, "appearing at [or as] the words" of the creator. Thus, while akhib means "to speak," akhabu signifies "grain," and the inhabitants of the heavenly dwelling are the Akhabiu.

Similarly, seru means at once "grain" and "princes" or "chiefs"; both uses are inseparable from ser, "to command," and serui, "flame." Properly understood the "grain" and the "princes" refer to the same fiery material mythically perceived as the creator's flaming "commands."

Though heq signifies the "ale" or "beer" spit out by the creator, it also means "to command."

If aut is "radiance" or "glory" (compare khu), the same word signifies "abundance." But aut derives from au, "children." The abundant wheat and barley—i.e., the light spirits who glorify the creator—are brought forth as the god's own offspring.

Henu means the "servants" of the great god, who "go round about" (hennui); but henu also denotes "abundance." The lush growth of the celestial abode is the hen, but the same word signifies the "glory" or "majesty" of the ruling divinity. From the notion that the celestial lights "glorify" the creator, it is a very short step to the idea that they "praise" him or "sing prayers" to him. Thus hen means also "to praise."

Accordingly, the word tebhu means "abundance" but also "prayers." (One should not attempt to distinguish the "prayers" from the praying gods; those who glorify the great god are the glory.)

So also does senem mean, at once, "abundance" and "to pray," "adore."

While "grain" is shert, the related term sherriu signifies the "little gods."

Fenkhu means "abundance," but the same word denotes the inhabitants of the celestial land.

Ahau means "food" but also the dwellers in the "land."

Hetepet means "abundance," while the hetepetiu are the secondary gods. Khefa is "food," but the Kheftiu are the "fiends" of Chaos (eventually organized into the unified dwelling).

Betu means the "grain" or "barley" of heaven, but also the "demons."

Just as the secondary gods compose the "limbs" or "members" of the central sun, so does the grain. An Egyptian term for "grain" is atpet, manifestly derived from at, "limb," and pet, "heaven." The grain becomes the "limbs of heaven" (or of the Heaven Man).

Thus nepu signifies "limb" or "flesh," while neper means "grain." The primeval abode is Nepert, i.e., the land formed from the grain.

Gathered together by the creator, the grain becomes the enclosure of the primeval land—the "granary" or the "bread" of the gods (symbolized by the dough cakes employed in the rites of the dead). Thus, while shen (,) denotes the "bond" or "cord" in which the great god dwells, shena means at once "granary" and "body" (the god's body encompasses the grain). Shenti also means "granary," but the same word signifies "garment." (The garment—belt, girdle, collar—is the organized band of grain.) Symbolizing this celestial enclosure are the shens, or sacrificial cakes.

Peq is a name of the celestial land; and the great god's garment (=land) is peqt. But peqt also means the "cake" of the gods.

Similarly, sesher is the god's garment, while seshert denotes the cake or bread of heaven.

Qefenu is a name of the god's dwelling, while qefen signifies the sacred "cake."

Nes means both "grain" and "fire." (The field of grain is the field of fire.) In the rites the grain is fashioned into the nest or sacrificial cake. But nest also denotes the "throne" of the creator. (Creator's throne=primeval land.)

The benet are light-spirits who accompany the creator. Helping to explain the term is the related word bennut, signifying the "matter" or "fluid" which erupted from the solitary god. This primeval matter forms the sacred cake, for "cake" or "bread" is bennu. Bener, a name of the created land, derives from the same root.

The "food-spirits" gathered together to form the primeval enclosure are the "builders" of the god's home. Thus, the "beer" which flows from the creator is aqet, but aqet also denotes a "builder" or "mason"—i.e., one of the aqetu who fashion the celestial dwelling.

The language repeats the same connections again and again:

1. Secondary light gods=celestial abundance (grain, beer, etc.)

2. Unified dwelling of god=celestial abundance (grain, land, body, garment, beer, etc.) gathered into organized form, i.e., as "cake" or "bread."

It is clear that, in Egyptian ritual, the sacred cakes meant much more than mere "bread." The cakes were symbols of the great god and his creation—the Garden of Abundance. The celestial prototype of the cake was the island of beginnings, which the creator organized from a previously chaotic sea of "beer and grain." That the Egyptians conceived the unified "land" or celestial "bread" as the body of the creator is crucial to the symbolism; in eating the cake, or in drinking the sanctified beer, the initiates symbolically enjoyed the abundance of the primeval age, or, what is the same thing, they consumed the body of the creator. (I shall not distract from the present discussion by elaborating parallels in later religious symbolism.)

The interrelated terminology identifies the primeval ta, "land," with the enclosure of the central sun . The Egyptians knew that the primeval garden lay within the circle of the Aten. ("Thou makest thy creations in thy great Aten," reads the Litany of Re.)434 Thus the Egyptians denoted the garden of Re by combining the Aten glyph with the glyph for "garden": .

The significance of such imagery seems to have escaped mythologists: the lost "homeland" of global lore was the original dwelling of the sun-god. Of the Egyptian han or "homeland," Reymond writes: "The Sun-God was believed to operate from his birthplace . . . In its essential nature the primeval sacred domain was the very place from which the Radiance issued first."435 This "sacred domain" was the island of ta, the celestial earth.

Egyptian sources term the created domain Neter-ta—the "Holy Land" or "God's Earth." Here occurred the primordial dawn. That is, it was from Neter-ta that the stationary sun shone forth. A hymn to Amen-Re, for example, invokes the sun-god as the "Beautiful Face, who comest [shines] from Neter-ta."436 No wonder that Egyptologists confuse this Holy Land with the terrestrial east—the place of the solar sunrise!

The exact counterpart of the Egyptian Neter-ta is the Sumerian Dilmun, the "clear and radiant" dwelling of the gods, ruled by the Universal Monarch Enki. Dilmun, according to Sumerian hymns, is "the place where the sun rises."437 And many thousands of miles from Mesopotamia the natives of Hawaii recall an ancestral land, Tahiti Na, "our peaceful motherland: the tranquil land of Dawn."438 So also did the Hindus, Persians, Chinese, and many American Indian tribes conceive the lost paradise as the place of the "sunrise."439

The World Wheel

That Saturn, the primeval sun, first shed its light from the circle of the created "earth" will explain why the celestial land often appears as a great wheel revolving around the stationary sun. It may be called alternately the "world wheel," "world mill," or "chariot." And this turning wheel of the Holy Land is consistently represented by the signs ☉ and ⊕.

Hindu descriptions of the cosmic wheel affirm that the ancient sun stands at the centre, as the Chakravartin or "wheel-turner." From the stationary pivot of the wheel, the Universal Monarch "directs the movement without participating in it himself," states Guenon.440

On the Buddhist iconography of the world wheel, Coomaraswamy writes: "He whose seat is on the lotiform nave or navel of the wheel, and himself unmoving sets and keeps it spinning, is the ruler of the world, of all that is natured and extended in the middle region, between the essential nave and the natural felly."441 The organized "world" lies within the ever-turning rim ☉. The Buddhists regard this sacred domain as both an ancestral paradise and "the situation of the Goal,"442 the heaven reached by the deceased.

---

434 Budge, op. cit., Vol. I, 340.

435 Reymond, The Mythical Origin of the Egyptian Temple, 84.

436 Budge, Gods, Vol. II, 7. But one of the Egyptian phrases for the sacred land is Neter-ta-Mehti, rendered by Brugsch as "das nordliche Gottesland"—"the northern land of the gods." This, states Massey, was "the polar paradise in heaven, not an elevated part of our earth." See Massey, Ancient Egypt, 378.

437 Gaster, Myth, Legend and Custom in the Old Testament, 24.

438 Melville, Children of the Rainbow, 10.

439 See for example the review by Gaster, op. cit., 24*ff.*

440 Op. cit., 18.

441 Coomaraswamy, Elements of Buddhist Iconography, 27.

442 Ibid., 42.

Buddhist myths say that a plot of “land” congealed out of the cosmic waters to form a band around the great father, becoming the “golden wheel”: “The surface of these waters, just as in the Brahmanical cosmology and in Genesis, is stirred by the dawn wind of creation. The foam of the waters solidifies to form the golden circle (Kancana-mandala) or ‘Land of Gold’ (Kancana-bhumi), the same as Hsuan-tsang’s ‘golden wheel’ and representing ‘the foundations of the earth’ . . . The surface of the Land of Gold is the Round of the World.”[443]

That the world wheel stood at the stationary pole is confirmed by the Buddhist account of the primeval “wheel king”—owner of a “wheel whose steadfastness was the measure of his fitness to rule.” He was “a universal king,” “a righteous king ruling in righteousness, lord of the four quarters of the earth.” (The four quarters were the four divisions of the wheel ⊕.) The myth states not only that the revolving wheel remained in a stationary position, but that a fall from its fixed place would mean the death of the ruler. “If the Celestial Wheel of a Wheel-turning king shall sink down, shall slip down from its place, that king has not much time to live . . .”[444] That is, of course, exactly what happened: the wheel fell, the Universal Monarch died, and the world was thrown into confusion.

One is reminded of the Zoroastrian world wheel called the Spihr. This ever-turning wheel was the “body” of Zurvan, or Time, the planet Saturn. Throughout the primordial epoch, the wheel of the Spihr remained in one spot; and its fall coincided with the collapse of the prosperous age.[445]

In many myths Saturn’s earth-wheel acquires the poetic form of an enormous mill churning out abundance. An old Icelandic tradition, for example, knew the mill as the fabulous possession of Amlodhior Frodhi under whose rule mankind enjoyed peace and prosperity. Recruited by Frodhi to work the mill were two giant maidens, who day and night turned the massive wheel, grinding out gold and happiness. But like all fabled wheels, Frodhi’s mill eventually broke down, causing the death of the great monarch.

As shown by de Santillana and von Dechend, Frodhi was the planet Saturn.[446] The authors (whose work is titled Hamlet’s Mill) review widespread traditions of the cosmic mill—from Iceland to Finland to India to Greece—finding many unexpected connections with the same remote planet. (Not once, however, do the two writers wonder whether the tradition of the Saturnian wheel may have originated in the actual observation of a band around the planet.)

As the possession of the Universal Monarch, the mill lies in the farthest north and is regularly identified with the “pole” or “axis” of the world. The Finnish Kalevala locates the mill (here called the Sampo) on a great rock in “North Farm,” the polar garden of plenty. The hero Ilmarinen:

> . . . forged the Sampo skillfully: on one side a grain mill, on the second side a salt mill, in the third a money [i.e., gold] mill.
>
> Then the Sampo ground away, the lid of many colours went round and round.[447]

This cosmic mill, too, broke down, bringing wholesale disorder. And if the Finnish Sampo is a late and fanciful version of the mill, the linguists now recognize the Sampo’s connection with the older skambha of Hindu ritual.[448] In the Atharva Veda the Skambha (meaning “pole”) appears as the “golden embryo” and the “frame of creation," a mill-like edifice "which poured forth the gold within the world." The Vedic hymn equates the mill (Skambha) with the whole creation. The body of the Skambha houses the life elements and the gods; it is the "ancient one" or "great monster," whose veins are the four quarters of the world (i.e., ⊕). That the cosmic mill is at once the Universal Monarch's body and the created paradise will immediately explain why, in the general tradition, the collapse of the great wheel coincides with the death of the god-king and the sinking of the lost land into the waters of the Abyss.

---

[443] Ibid., 52.

[444] Perry, Lord of the Four Quarters, 131.

[445] Zaehner, Zurvan: A Zoroastrian Dilemma, 111-13, 136, 222.

[446] De Santillana and von Dechend, Hamlet’s Mill, 86*ff.* As soon as one compares the imagery of Saturn’s revolving wheel with corresponding images of the Saturnian isle, egg, cord, and girdle, one is forced to think beyond coincidence. The varied symbolism hearkens to a singular form. When Snorri Sturluson speaks of Amlodhi’s churning wheel as the “Island Mill,” he preserves (probably unwittingly) an important connection: in the original myth the turning island and the mill wheel were the same thing.

[447] Magoun, The Kalevala, 55-61.

[448] De Santillana and von Dechend, op. cit., 111.

Nothing so confuses the underlying theme as the habit, begun long ago, of conceiving the primordial wheel, or island of "earth," in terrestrial terms. Could the landscape familiar to the ancients have produced the many interrelated images of the turning wheel?

The One-Wheeled Chariot

The great god sits enthroned within the celestial earth as in a one-wheeled chariot. Thus, in Scandinavian rock carvings the symbol ⊙—the universal sign of the world wheel—may either appear alone or as the wheel of a celestial wagon. All ancient sun-gods seem to own such a wheel or chariot. The one-wheeled chariot of the Hindu Surya clearly answers to the same cosmic form as "the high-wheeled chariot" of the Iranian Mithra.[449] An early form was the famous sun wheel of the Babylonian Shamash.

Figure 15. The wheel of Shamash, held in place by a cord.

Figure 16. Triptolemus riding on a single wheel.

---

[449] Keith, Indian Mythology, 138.

Figure 17. The wheel of Ixion.

Figure 18. Hebrew Yahweh on a single wheel.

Greek art depicts the great father Dionysus seated upon a one-wheeled chariot, much like that of the old god Triptolemos. In the Astronomica of Hyginus one finds Triptolemos remembered as “the first of all to use a single wheel.”[450] Argive tradition held that the father of Triptolemos was Trochilos, “he of the wheel,” whom some identified as the inventor of the first chariot. The Greeks of Chios knew the primeval god Gyrapsios, “he of the round wheel.”[451] Obviously, none of these wheels or wheel gods can be separated from the famous wheel of Ixion, set loose in a celestial conflagration. The Hebrew Yahweh similarly sits upon a single wheel.

While modern commentators offer competing interpretations of the cosmic wheel—the chariot of the gods—few stop to notice the link with Saturn. Cook, for example, after a prolonged study of ancient wheel symbolism, acknowledges Kronos (Saturn) as the old wheel or “disk” bearer, but is not inclined to draw any conclusions from this.[452] The “inventor” of the wheel, or “chariot,” was the now-distant planet. This is what the Chinese tell us when they report that the god-king Huang-ti, who is identified with the planet Saturn, was the first to use the wheeled chariot. In more than one of the illustrations presented here the cosmic wheel serves as the throne of the ruling god. L’Orange calls this “the throne chariot,” noting many examples in the ancient Near East.[453] One of the divinities to sit upon such a chariot (or wheel-throne) is the Hebrew Yahweh, whose seat is “the wheel of the throne of his glory.”454 (The god’s revolving throne is the circle of “glory”—that is, his own “halo.”)

---

[450] Cook, Zeus: A Study in Ancient Religion, Vol. I, 215, 225.

[451] Ibid., 290.

[452] Ibid., 298.

[453] L’Orange, Studies in the Iconography of Cosmic Kingship, 48*ff.*

If later art showed the god on the wheeled seat, the original motif has the god in it, for the throne revolves around the god. Here, for example, is a verse from the Egyptian Book of the Dead, revealing a little-noticed aspect of the cosmic throne: “O my Seat, O my Throne, come ye to me, and go ye round about me, O ye gods. I am a sah [luminous body], therefore let me rise up [shine] among those who follow [go around] the great god.”455 When the deceased king attains the celestial throne he stands within the revolving circle of the gods, the “followers” of the central sun. The Edfu texts call this the “throne-of-gods,” for *the divine assembly itself forms the wheel of the throne.*456

Figure 19. The Celtic god of the wheel.

Figure 20. Anglo-Saxon Seater, with wheel.

Denoted by the throne or wheel-throne is the plot of ta, “land,” which first emerged from the cosmic sea. The creator brought forth the revolving circle of earth as his “primeval seat.” Reymond writes: “The Earth was caused to emerge from Nun by virtue of the radiance of the Sun-God who was believed to dry up the water

---

454 Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism, Merkabah Mysticism and Talmudic Tradition, 26.

455 Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 189.

456 Reymond, op. cit., 5, note 23. The Throne, as observed by Énel, is not merely the seat of the god, but an enclosure. The primeval sun “dwells” in his throne. Les Origines de la Genèse, et l’Enseignement des Temples de l’Ancienne Egypte, 221. The most common Egyptian word for “throne” is ast, often written with the determinative (here) which means “chamber,” “abode.” Ast signifies the god’s “place”—not just any place, but the place—the ast ab (“place of the heart”), ast urt (“great place”), ast hetep (“place of rest”), or ast maat, (“place of regularity”).

around his primeval seat."[457] This plot of created "earth" was the han or "homeland," which the texts call neset, the "throne."[458]

The implications reach far beyond Egypt and bear directly on the wide-ranging myths of cosmic chariots and primeval mills noted above. What one usually regards as two separate themes—the "chariot of the sun" and the "world wheel"—converge in a single image: the wheel of Saturn, the primeval sun. That the ancients denoted the "sun wheel" and the created "earth" by one and the same sign was no coincidence.

The City Of Heaven

The Saturn myth tells us not only that the planet-god ruled the Holy Land as the first king but that he founded the first city. Saturn's "city" means "Saturn's Earth."

The great god lives

fixed in the middle of the sky . . .

dweller in the city.[459]

This is the pronouncement of the Egyptian Coffin Texts. The cosmic city is the Primeval Place: "I have come to this city, the region of the 'First Time' to be . . . a dweller in 'this land.'"[460] Thus the Egyptians invoke a celestial Memphis, "the divine emerging primeval island"; a celestial Thebes, "the island emerging in Nun which first came into being"; a celestial Hermonthes, "the high ground which grew out of Nun," or "the egg which originated in the beginning";[461] a celestial Elephantine, the "city in the midst of the waters," or the "throne of Re";[462] and a celestial Abydos, the ta-ur or "Great (Primeval) Land."[463]

The integrated symbolism—though at times complex—never departs from the underlying idea of an enclosure around the central sun. The imagery concerns "the original state of the world," rather than a terrestrial city, states Clark.[464] Depicted is the city of the "dawn" or of the "sun's coming forth." The tradition is universal. Mention Erech and historians naturally think of the ancient city in southern Mesopotamia. But the Erech invoked in the ritual is no terrestrial habitation. It is:

Erech, the handiwork of the gods,

The great wall touching the sky,

The lofty dwelling place established by Anu.[465]

The creator An (Anu)—who is the planet Saturn—dwelt in the uru-ul-la, "the city of former times"—not a city on earth but the embryo of the Cosmos, according to Van Dijk.[466] Ruling from the "midst of heaven," An shines as “the hero of the sacred city on high.”[467] This is the “city founded by An . . . Place where the great gods dine, filled with radiance and awe . . .”[468] The hymns call it “the great city,” and “the place where the sun rises.”[469]

---

[457] Op. cit., 83.

[458] Ibid., 84.

[459] Clark, op. cit., 59.

[460] Ibid., 177.

[461] Frankfort, Kingship and the Gods, 380, note 21.

[462] Pritchard, Ancient Near Eastern Texts Relating to the Old Testament.

[463] Budge, From Fetish to God in Ancient Egypt, 273. The name of the celestial city of Pe means simply "seat" or "throne."

[464] Op. cit., 53.

[465] Pritchard, Ancient Near Eastern Texts, 47.

[466] Op. cit., 13, 20.

All Mesopotamian traditions describe the celestial city as the original garden of abundance—“the dais of plenty . . . the pure place . . . Its heart like a distant shrine . . . Its feasts flow with fat and milk, are rich with abundance.”[470]

Thus did the Sumerians recall the lost land of Dilmun as “the primeval city”:

Dilmun, the city thou hast founded . . .

Lo, thy city drinks water in abundance.

Lo, Dilmun drinks water in abundance.[471]

Egyptian and Mesopotamian descriptions of the cosmic city make clear that this habitation was the same enclosure as the lost paradise, and the identity persists in Hebrew and Muslim thought, which continually associates Adam’s paradise with a cosmic Jerusalem. The light of the Jerusalem above was provided by God himself. “And the building of the wall of it was of jasper: and the city was pure gold, like unto glass.”[472] One of the Psalms glorifies the celestial Jerusalem as “Sublime in elevation in the uttermost north . . . the City of the King.”[473] The heavenly city lay at the cosmic centre; it was the first thing created by God; and it was surrounded by the primeval sea. The image, observes Faber, is “plainly borrowed from the garden of Eden.”

The Hebrews also preserved the tradition of a primordial city of Tyre, similarly identified with Eden.[474] In Ezekiel we read:

“O Tyre, you have said,

‘I am perfect in beauty.’

Your borders are in the heart of the seas . . .

You were in Eden, the garden of God;

every precious stone was your covering.”[475]

This equation of the cosmic city and the original paradise finds numerous parallels in other traditions. The Persian vara fashioned by Ahura Mazda is at once the first city and the lost paradise.[476] The “all-containing city of Brahma” at the pole merges into the paradisal plain of Ila;477 the Imperial City of the Chinese Shang-ti coincides with the mythical paradise of Kwen-lun;478 while the Mexican lost city of Aztlan (“surrounded by waters”) and the Mayan lost city of Tula (the “enclosure” in the sea) both appear as gardens of abundance.479

---

[467] Langdon, Sumerian Liturgies and Psalms, 297.

[468] Sjöberg and Bergmann, op. cit., 2.

[469] Ibid., 89. [Emphasis added.]

[470] Kramer, From the Tablets of Sumer, 87.

[471] Langdon, Semitic Mythology, 195. The same can be said of the celestial city of Eridu, which like Dilmun served as the primeval home of Enki. Eridu, “teeming with fertility,” floated on the cosmic sea Apsu, and more than one writer has asserted, with Pinches, that Enki’s city was “as a garden of Eden.” Sayce, Gifford Lectures, 386; Albright, “The Mouth of the Rivers.” Pinches’ comment is quoted in Thompson, The Devils and Evil Spirits of Babylonia, lvi.

[472] Revelation 21:11.

[473] Psalm 48:2.

[474] The Origins of Pagan Idolatry, 350-51.

[475] Ezekiel 27: 3-4; 28: 13 (RSV).

[476] Darmesteter, The Zend Avesta, I, 16-19.

A coherent pattern unifies what are often assumed to be unrelated myths and symbols: the created “earth,” the lost paradise, the wheel of the sun, the revolving throne, and the cosmic city. While the mythical formulations vary, all point to the same band housing the central sun.

Surely it is of significance that, while these images are often dissociated in later myths, they constantly overlap in the earliest versions. The Aztecs may have forgotten that the lost city was the throne of the creator; and perhaps many Greek cults no longer remembered that the Island of the Blessed was the turning wheel of the sun, but such connections are central to the world’s oldest cosmologies.

The interrelationships are clearly evident in the image of the mother goddess, who unites in a single personality the varied aspects of the celestial earth: paradise, wheel, throne, and city.

The Egyptian great mother—whether called Isis, Nut, Hathor, Mut, or Neith—is nebt en neter ta, “the Lady of the Holy Land” or “the Lady of God’s Earth.” The “island of earth,” according to the Pyramid Texts, lies “between the thighs of Nut.”480 If one permits the Egyptian concept to illuminate later symbolism of the “mother earth” one sees that the supposed distinction between earth goddesses and sky goddesses lacks foundation. “God’s Earth” means Saturn’s Earth, and this mother land, circumscribed by the womb of the goddess, is the enclosure of the central sun ☉.

Nor can one fail to notice that the hieroglyph for the goddess Nut ⊗—“the holy abode”—is the form of a wheel and an obvious prototype of the “world wheels” so common to Eastern symbolism. Isis, in the classical age, was also symbolized by a wheel.481

Mesopotamian cults represented the goddess Ishtar, “the womb,” by a wheel. The Hindu goddess Rta is the “wheel of law” controlling the cosmic cycle, while the goddess Ila personifies the chakra or world wheel. The name of the Celtic goddess Arianrhod means “silver wheel.” One is reminded also of the iynx wheel of Aphrodite and the wheels of Tyche, Nemesis, and Fortuna, all of which appear to reflect a common idea. As the stable, ever-turning circle of the Cosmos, the goddess eventually became the abstract “wheel of Mother Nature.”482

And when one realizes that the wheel served as the great father’s revolving throne it can come as no surprise to discover that, in the archaic terminology, “throne” and “goddess” are synonymous. “The seated great mother,” states Neumann, “is the original form of the ‘enthroned goddess,’ and also of the throne itself. As mother and earth woman the Great Mother is the ‘throne’ pure and simple . . . The king comes to power by ‘mounting the throne’ and so takes his place on the lap of the Great Goddess, the earth—he becomes her son.”483

---

477 Faber, op. cit., 326, 341.

478 See the discussion of the Chinese polar mount Kwen-lun.

479 Alexander, Latin American Mythology, 114, 178.

480 Pyramid Text 188.

481 Cook, op. cit., Vol. I, 271. Cook’s entire discussion (Vol. I, 253-83) assumes the wheel to be synonymous with the solar orb.

482 Nuemann, The Great Mother, 238.

483 Ibid., 98.

Figure 21. The goddess Nemesis, with wheel of fate.

In the Hindu kingship rites reviewed by Hocart, “the king is made to sit on a throne which represents the womb.”484 But the identity of the throne and womb is as old as human language: the Egyptian hieroglyph for Isis, the womb of heaven, is a simple throne .

But the same mother goddess encloses the cosmic city. The determinative of “city” in the Egyptian hieroglyphs is simply the sign of the “holy abode” , the goddess Nut. The Pyramid Texts invoke the goddess, “in this your name of ‘settlements,’ . . . in this your name of ‘City.’”485 while the Book of the Dead extols the great mother as “Lady of terrors, lofty of walls.”486

The Egyptian city-goddess finds a close parallel in the Babylonian goddess Ura-azaga, whose name means “brilliant town.”487 Tyro, the mother goddess of the Tyrians, gave the Greeks their word tyrsis, “walled city.”488 To enter the celestial city is to find shelter in the primeval womb. Thus the refuge of Delphi is “the womb” and Jerusalem “the city of the heavenly womb.”489

In the New Testament (Book of Revelation) one finds a fascinating equation of primeval goddess and primeval city. In his vision, John beholds “the great whore that sitteth upon many waters: With whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication . . . and upon her forehead was a name written, ‘MYSTERY, BABYLON THE GREAT, THE MOTHER OF HARLOTS AND ABOMINATIONS OF THE EARTH.” Who was this “mother of harlots”? The angel explains: “And the woman which thou sawest is that great city, which reigneth over the kings of the earth.”490 The language points to the ancient rites of kingship, in which every local ruler took as his consort the city (womb) on the cosmic waters.

---

484 Hocart, Kingship, 80. The significance is too often missed: after informing us that the throne was the glyph of Isis, Budge continues, “but we have no means of connecting it with the attributes of the goddess in such a way as to give a rational explanation of her name, and all derivations hitherto proposed must be regarded as mere guesses.” Budge, Gods, Vol. II, 202. But is it a “mere guess” to connect the Isis-throne with the enclosure of the primeval womb? (The Egyptian ast, “throne,” means “enclosure,” as we have seen.)

485 Pyramid Texts 178, 1605.

486 Accordingly, the sun in the cosmic womb appears as the “boy in the city.” Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 274.

487 Jastrow, The Religion of Babylonia and Assyria, 59.

488 Graves, The Greek Myths, 223.

489 Allegro, The Sacred Mushroom and the Cross, 133.

490 Revelation 17: 1-2, 5, 18.

In ranging over the myths and symbols of the created earth, paradise, wheel, throne, and city, one thus remains in the shadow of a single mother goddess, who contains within her womb the first organized domain in heaven, the island of Saturn's Cosmos ☉.

The Enclosure As Prototype

In dealing with the myths and symbols of the Holy Land one must reckon with the distinction—not always spelled out in ancient literature—between the celestial prototype and the terrestrial copy. Every sacred kingdom or city derives its character from the primeval dwelling, so that whatever was said of the enclosure above was also said of the imitative form constructed by men.

"From the concordant testimony of all the traditions," writes Guenon, "a conclusion emerges very clearly: the affirmation that there exists a 'Holy Land' par excellence, prototype of all other 'Holy Lands,' the spiritual centre to which all other centres are subordinated."[491]

Through identification, the sacred history of the race or nation merges with the history of the gods, for each organized community viewed itself as a duplication of the celestial "race." Each line of historical kings leads back to a first king who is not a man, but Saturn, the supreme power of heaven; in the same way, the race as a whole traces its ancestry to a generation of gods or semi-divine beings who inhabited the "earth" raised in the creation. By this universal tendency, Saturn's paradise becomes the ancestral land, the place where history began. Does not every nation claim that its ancestors descended from a race of gods, who occupied a happy garden at the centre and summit?

It was with the utmost seriousness that the ancients laid out their first political settlements, taking the cosmic habitation as the prescribed plan. The purpose was to establish Saturn's kingdom on earth, repeating the creator's defeat of Chaos and founding a central authority whose power extended to a protective "border" separating the kingdom of light from the powers of darkness and disorganization (the "barbarians").

Accordingly, the first sacred cities were organized as circular enclosures around the ruling lord. Ritual requirements superseded practical considerations, and even when geography and growth prevented or distorted the purely circular form, the sacred city was still conceived as a revolving enclosure. Symbolically, every Egyptian city lay within the shield or protective border of Nut (the "Great Protectoress"). The Babylonian map shows the land as a circle around a centre. "Here," concludes Eliade, "the earthly abode is the counterpart (mehret) of the heavenly abode."[492]

Hebrew thought repeatedly insists that the terrestrial Jerusalem was but a likeness of the city first constructed by God. "A celestial Jerusalem was created by God before the city was built by the hand of man . . . The heavenly Jerusalem kindled the inspiration of all the Hebrew prophets," observes Eliade.[493] The distinction between the local and the primordial city receives emphatic statement in the Syriac Apocalypse of Baruch, when God asks, "Dost thou think that this is that city of which I said: 'On the palms of my hands have I graven thee'? This building now built in your midst is not that which is revealed with me, that which was prepared beforehand here from the time when I took counsel to make Paradise . . ."[494] (Again, note the equation of the city—Jerusalem and paradise.)

Equally clear is the primacy of the archetypal city in Hinduism, according to Eliade. "All the Indian royal cities, even the modern ones, are built after the mythical model of the celestial city, where, in the age of gold

---

[491] Op. cit., 95.

[492] Patterns in Comparative Religion, 19-20.

[493] The Myth of the Eternal Return, 8-9.

[494] II Baruch IV: 2-4.

(in illo tempore), the Universal Sovereign dwelt . . . Thus, for example, the palace fortress of Sigiriya, in Ceylon, is built after the model of the celestial city Alakamanda and is 'hard of ascent for human beings'"[495]

Symbolically, each Hindu settlement stood within the mandala or "circle," delineating a consecrated space magically protected from the invading forces of disintegration.[496] The sanctified area, observes Tucci, "by the line of defense which circumscribes it, represents protection from the mysterious forces that menace the sacred purity of the spot . . ." This protective circle is "above all, a map of the cosmos."[497]

As documented by L'Orange, the circle around a centre was the ideal form of sacred cities in the Near East, as typified by the residential cities of Darabjird and Firuzabad, whose circular form served as a precedent for the "Round City" of Baghdad. The ideal pattern derived from the ancient conception of the Cosmos, states L'Orange.[498]

The same symbolism attaches to the Roman *mundus*a trench dug around the spot on which a new city was to be built. The enclosure served as a protective bond, ordaining the city as a renewal of the primeval homeland.[499] In the old documents the Roman cities were the urbes, from orbis, "round."[500]

The consistent pattern of the sacred territory shows the influence of a universal prototype. Yet few researchers take the prototype seriously. When the creation myths speak of a primordial Heliopolis, Erech, or Jerusalem, the analysts think only of the terrestrial city. One can, with far greater assurance, insist that the local habitation never produces, on its own, a cosmic myth of any kind.

In Egypt, it is the primeval sun who rules the original Heliopolis, Memphis, Thebes, Herakleopolis, just as it is the primeval sun who governs as the first king of Egypt as a whole. The city and kingdom repeat, on different scales, the same history and this fact alone is sufficient to show that the "history" is not local but universal. If the myths say that Egypt was "gathered together" from the primeval matter, forming an island around the sun, they say the same of the sacred city, whatever its name.[501]

That the ancients often forgot the distinction between their own city or kingdom and the celestial prototype was a natural result of the inseparable bond between the two. The local habitation inherited the mythical character of the celestial, so that the divergent actual histories of ancient nations lead back to one universal history.

It is in this sense that one must understand the legends of the first kings and primeval generations. Many Egyptian texts, for example, refer to a remote time in which the land was ruled by the "followers of Horus." An inscription of a King Ranofer (just prior to the Middle Kingdom) recalls "the time of your (fore)fathers, the kings, Followers of Horus." A text of Thutmose I speaks of great fame the like of which was not "seen in the annals of the ancestors since the Followers of Horus." The Turin Papyrus places this primeval generation prior to the first historical king, Menes.[502]

---

[495] Patterns in Comparative Religion, 9.

[496] Tucci, The Theory and Practice of the Mandala, 23.

[497] Ibid., 23.

[498] Op. cit., 9*ff*.

[499] Eliade, Patterns in Comparative Religion, 15-16.

[500] Jung and Kerenyi, Essays on a Science of Mythology, 12.

[501] Many Egyptologists, however, make no distinction between the cosmic and the local cities. Thus Budge, speaking of the actual Egyptian city of Henen-su (Herakleopolis), tells us that this habitation "is often referred to in the Book of the Dead, and a number of important mythological events are said to have taken place there. Thus it was here that Re rose for the first time when the heavens and the earth were created, and it was this rising which formed the first great act of creation . . . Osiris was here crowned lord of the universe . . . In this place the souls of the beatified found a place of rest in the realm of Osiris . . . " Budge, Gods, Vol. II, 58-59. That these were cosmic, not geographical places and events, should be obvious.

[502] Frankfort, op. cit., 90.

Did these mythical "ancestors" actually rule terrestrial Egypt? In truth the "Followers of Horus" means, not a generation of mortals, but the assembly of the gods. The "ancestors" were the light-spirits of the celestial city, encircling and protecting the central sun. Just as the myths translate the Universal Monarch into the first king of Egypt, so also do they express the god-king's companions as a primeval race from which all Egyptian nobility might claim descent. Every Holy Land on our earth was assimilated to the same celestial kingdom and every race to the same generation of gods.

The World Navel

Through identification with Saturn's dwelling, each terrestrial kingdom or city of antiquity distinguished itself as the Middle Place, the centre from which history took its start. Symbolically each local Holy Land became the omphalos or "navel of the world."

Thus, the mythic navel constitutes a global motif of archaic symbolism. As documented in the separate studies of Roscher and Muller,[503] the ancient cities of Babylon and Nineveh (as well as Baghdad), Jerusalem, Hebron Bethel, Shechem, and the entire land of Palestine; numerous Greek cities (including Athens); the Muslim city of Mecca; and countless other cities of Asia and Europe were styled "the navel" or "the centre of the earth."

Just as the Egyptians conceived their land as the "middle-earth" (Aguipte), the Chinese proclaimed their empire to be the "Kingdom of the Middle."[504] Early Japanese sources call Japan the centre of the earth—or the "middle kingdom of the reed plain," while the Mongolians regard their home as "the Middle Place."[505] Peoples of northern Siberia know the Yenisei as "the centre of the world,"[506] Ireland was once the kingdom of the Mide or "Middle."[507]

In faraway Easter Island the natives speak of their land as the "navel."[508] And in the Americas, the Zuni call (or once called) their town "the Middle Place"; the Inca city of Cuzco signified "the navel of the earth";[509] so also did the Chickasaw of Mississippi regard their territory as "the centre of the earth."[510]

The reader may respond: isn't it perfectly natural that a people, seeing other lands and nations distributed around them, would come to regard their own as the "centre"? This is, of course, a common explanation of the universal habit. On closer examination, however, it becomes clear that the concept of the world navel reflects something more than narrow vision or tribal arrogance.

The acknowledged religious centre of the Greeks was Delphi, on the steep slopes of Mount Parnassus. Here was located the omphalos ("navel"), revered as the Seat of Apollo and "the centre of the earth." But among the Greeks, Delphi was not alone in claiming distinction as the omphalos. Similar claims were made for world navels in the Peloponnesus, at Elis, at Thessaly, and at Crete. Both the Aetolians and Epirotes were called omphalians or "people of the navel."[511]

---

[503] Roscher, Omphalos; Neue Omphalosstudien; Der Omphalosgedanke bei Verschiedenen Völkern; Muller, Die Heilige Stadt.

[504] Brown, Eradinus: River and Constellation; de Saussure, "Origins Chinoise de la Cosmologie Iranienne."

[505] W.T. Warren, Paradise Found, 141, note 3; O'Neill, The Night of the Gods, 359.

[506] Uno Holmberg, Siberian Mythology, 308.

[507] Guenon, op. cit., 79.

[508] Makemson, The Morning Star Rises, 10; Heyerdahl, Kon-Tiki, 141.

[509] Nuttall, Fundamental Principles of Old and New World Civilization, 133.

[510] W.T. Warren, op. cit., 248, note 1.

[511] Faber, op. cit., Vol. III, 83.

Many competing seats of Apollo appear as the omphalos, according to Roscher.[512] Rather than suggest narrow-mindedness, such repeated claims confirm a consistent memory: from high antiquity the idea must have been passed down that Apollo's throne occupied the "centre." All local shrines certainly shared this tradition. But one must not mistake the imitation for the original. Just as one might say of Apollo's statue, "This is the god Apollo," without intending a literal identification, so could the cult worshippers say of the local shrine, "This is the throne of Apollo at the earth navel." That the statement comes from more than one locality only reinforces the general tradition. The truth was observed by W. T. Warren long ago when he declared Delphi to be "a memorial shrine, an attempted copy of the great original."[513]

Clearly, the "great original"—the god's primeval home—was not of our earth. Apollo, the polar sun, was not the only god to occupy this centre. In Mexico, a Nahuatl hymn extols the god Ometeotl as:

Mother of the Gods, Father of the Gods,

the old God

distended in the navel of the earth, engaged in the enclosure of turquoise

He who dwells in waters the colour of the bluebird.[514]

A Babylonian hymn located the god Ea at the "centre of the earth":

The path of Ea was in Eridu, teeming with fertility.

His seat (there) is the centre of the earth;

his couch is the bed of the primeval

mother.[515]

Similarly, the Egyptian Osiris "sits in judgement on the Primeval Mound, which is in the middle of the world," states Clark.[516] In the ancient account of Sanchuniathon, the great god El (Kronos/Saturn) acquires supremacy "in a certain place in the center of the earth."[517]

The earth navel, in the original tradition, is the inaccessible dwelling at the cosmic summit which is why the Hindus could say of the fire god Agni,[518] "He is the head and summit of the sky, the centre [Nabhi, navel] of the earth." Hebrew and Muslim thought constantly identifies the throne of Yahweh and Allah with the "navel of the earth," but this navel is above, for the Muslim text states of the Ka'ba, or earth navel: "Know that the centre of the earth, according to a tradition on the authority of the Prophet, is the Ka'ba: it has the significance of the navel of the earth, because of its rising above the level of the earth."[519]

Another source relates, "Tradition says: the polestar proves the Ka'ba is the highest situated territory; for it lies over against the centre of heaven."[520] Both Jerusalem and Mecca, as earth navels, lie at the cosmic summit.

---

[512] Roscher, Omphalos, 20*ff.*

[513] Op. cit., 235.

[514] Léon-Portilla, Pre-Columbian Literatures of Mexico, 63.

[515] Sayce, Gifford Lectures, 386.

[516] Op. cit., 178.

[517] Faber, A Dissertation on the Cabire, Vol. I, 73. [Emphasis added.]

[518] Muir, Original Sanskrit Texts V, 214*ff.*

[519] Wensinck, "The Ideas of the Western Semites Concerning the Navel of the Earth," 36. [Emphasis added.]

[520] Ibid., 15. [Emphasis added.]

“The centre of the earth and the pole of heaven, both are intimately connected with the throne,” observes Wensinck.[521]

Similarly, Gnostic traditions surveyed by Jung consider the polar region both “the seat of the highest gods” and “the navel of the world.”[522] That the Greek omphalos received the appellation “axis” indicates an obvious connection with the pole.[523]

In all of these traditions, of course, one has to contend with the confusion between the celestial earth and what we call “earth” today. It can hardly be doubted that ancient races eventually came to use the phrase “world navel” in connection with the terrestrial landscape. The original concept of the navel, however, is not complicated by ambiguous meanings of the “earth.” In the original tradition, the created earth is the navel, pure and simple; Saturn’s Cosmos appeared as a central enclosure or “navel” of dry ground rising from the primordial waters. So it is not surprising to find that the symbol of the navel was the enclosed sun ☉, the sign of the world wheel. “The concentric circles or the dot-in-circle denoted, in the Mediterranean area, the omphalos, the navel of the earth,” states Butterworth.[524] (Thus, in organizing their sacred cities in the form of a wheel the ancients expressed the cities’ character as “navel.”)

The enclosed sun ☉, according to Neumann, served as “the life symbol of the womb-navel-centre.”[525] It would be difficult to improve upon this definition. To reside within the life-containing navel is to dwell in the womb of the mother goddess, for the omphalos, as discerned by Uno Holmberg, is “the representative of the Great Mother” not only in classical symbolism but in Hindu and Altaic ritual also.[526]

Hence Delphi, the Greek omphalos, signifies “the womb.”[527] The spouse of Hercules is Omphale, the female personification of the omphalos.[528] In the same way, Hindu ritual constantly identifies the mystic yoni or “womb” with the navel: Agni is “born from the yoni or navel of the earth,”[529] while Brahma is the “navel-born.”[530]

Such symbolism connects the famous navel with the primeval enclosure. Saturn’s band, marking out the stable, revolving island which appeared in the cosmic waters, came to be remembered as the cosmic centre—where mythical history began.

The Ocean

Many ancient traditions describe a circular ocean or river girdling the “earth.”

---

[521] Ibid., 55.

[522] Jung, Aion, 125.

[523] Roscher, Omphalos, 43.

[524] The Tree at the Navel of the Earth, 39.

[525] Op. cit., 127.

[526] Der Baum des Lebens, 95.

[527] Faber, Origins of Pagan Idolatry, Vol. III, 90.

[528] Ibid., 92.

[529] Coomaraswamy, Elements of Buddhist Iconography, 19.

[530] Ibid., 18.

The gods, according to the Norse creation legend, “made the vast ocean, in the midst of which they fixed the earth, the ocean encircling it as a ring.”[531] By the Greek Okeanos, “the whole earth is bound.”[532] The Babylonians said of the nether river, “all earth it encloses.”[533] Hebrew and Arabic cosmologies, according to Wensinck, hold that “the whole of the earth is round and the ocean surrounds it like a collar.”[534]

In spite of the widespread belief, certain classical writers grew skeptical. Of the famous ocean-stream the historian Herodotus announced: “For my part, I cannot but laugh when I see numbers of persons drawing maps of the world without reason to guide them; making, as they do, the Ocean-stream to run all round the earth.”[535]

Or again: “The boundaries of Europe are quite unknown, and there is not a man who can say whether any sea girds it round either on the north or on the east.”[536] Such was the inevitable conclusion of historians and philosophers, once the “world” or “earth” lost its original cosmic meaning and passed into a figure of geography. Even today conventional treatments of the mythical ocean perpetuate the misunderstanding.

The cynics overlooked a most significant point: originally, the ocean encircled the creator as a girdle: Okeanos was no terrestrial river, but the “belt” around the cosmic deity.[537] The “land” which the ocean enclosed was the dwelling of the gods. Hesiod, for example, in his description of the shield of Hercules (an acknowledged figure of the Cosmos) identifies the ocean as the rim of the shield, enclosing a celestial paradise.

The shield was a wonder to see, “for its whole orb was a-shimmer with enamel and white ivory and electrum, and it glowed with shining gold.” Within the shield’s protective enclosure dwelt the great god and the lesser divinities: “There also was the abode of the gods, pure Olympus, and their assembly, and infinite riches were spread around in the gathering of the deathless gods.” The inhabitants of this circular land above celebrated a continual festival, for here grew grapes and corn in abundance. “And around the rim,” writes Hesiod, “Ocean was flowing, with a full stream as it seemed, and enclosed all the cunning work of the shield.”[538]

As in the case of the world navel, the imagery makes sense only when one understands the created “earth” as the dwelling of the great god himself.

Egyptian sources remove all possible doubt as to the celestial character of the encircling stream. The Coffin Texts say of the Father of the Gods: “the river around him is ablaze with light.”[539] The same circular river is called a lake of fire. Re appears as ami-mer-nesert, “he who is in his fiery lake”; while the throne of Horus is the “Lake of Double Fire.”[540]

Actually, the Egyptian ocean or lake is simply the Tuat, the dwelling of Osiris or Re:[541] “This is the lake which is in the Tuat . . . This lake is filled with barley [i.e., grain, abundance]. The water of the lake is fire.”[542]

---

[531] Perry, Lord of the Four Quarters, 184.

[532] Onians, The Origins of European Thought, 316.

[533] Sayce, Lectures on the Origin and Growth of Religion, 478.

[534] Wensinck, “The Ocean in the Literature of the Western Semites,” 25.

[535] Herodotus iv, 36.

[536] Herodotus iv, 45.

[537] In the Orphic description of the primeval Nous or Mind, “the circling ocean was his belt.” See our chapter II.

[538] Evelyn-White, Hesiod, 229*ff.*

[539] Clark, Myth and Symbol, 86.

[540] Budge, The Papyrus of Ani, 187.

[541] See Pyramid Texts 77 and 512.

Containing the fiery waters of the Abyss, the celestial river or lake encircled the "world." The Pyramid Texts invoke:

The Great Circle, in your name of "Great Surround," an enveloping ring, in the "Ring that encircles the Outermost Lands",
A Great Circle in the Great Round of the Surrounding Ocean.[543]

In the Egyptian symbolism this watery circle is the band of the enclosed sun , the band which circumscribed the outermost limit of the cosmic dwelling. The "ocean" in the above text is the Shen-ur, or "the great Shen." In the Egyptian language the shen bond or cord (,) signifies at once the band of the Aten and "ocean" or "river." One can properly term this circle of water "the river of the cosmic bond" or "the ocean of the cord."

Pointing to the same interrelationships is the Egyptian word nut. Nut, the goddess, is the female personification of the Cosmos or shen bond; but nut also denotes "stream," "river," "sea." The encircling river, as the border of the "Holy abode" (nut), thus gives rise to the phrase "the ocean, the border of Nut."[544] That nut further means "cord" and "city" only confirms the integrated symbolism.

In none of this symbolism is there any suggestion of a terrestrial ocean. As detailed by Reymond, the primeval waters form an enclosure around the resting place of the great god "perhaps resembling the channel which was made around sacred places later on."[545] Encircled by the celestial river, the province of beginning becomes the "island in the stream,"[546] or the "pool." (See, for example, the "pool of Hermopolis"; the celestial Abydos was the "pool of Maati.")[547]

The mythical "waters" are inseparable from the primeval matter or company of gods which exploded from the creator, subsequently to be gathered into the circle of glory (khut). The radiant gods—or "Primeval Ones"—revolved around the border of the cosmic ocean or lake, for the Egyptians, according to Reymond, "imagined that, after the phases of the primary creation were completed, these Primeval Ones lived in the vicinity of the pool . . . Their resting place, however, is portrayed as of the most primitive appearance: the bare edges of the pool."[548] The gods occupy the border and revolve around it, as confirmed by the Book of the Dead: "'Hail,' say these gods who dwell in their companies and who go round about the Turquoise Pool."[549]

Nor in Egypt alone does the cosmic ocean form the band of the enclosed sun . Here is a Sumerian description of the Engur or "river" around the motionless lord Enki:

---

[542] Piankoff, The Tomb of Ramesses VI, 152.

[543] Clark, op. cit., 117.

[544] Maj Sandman Holmberg, The God Ptah, 106.

[545] Op. cit., 142.

[546] Kees, "Kulttopographische und Mythologische Beträge," 151.

[547] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 97; Reymond, op. cit., 152.

[548] Op. cit., 80. [Emphasis added.]

[549] Budge, Egyptian Book of the Dead, 170.

Thou River, creatress of all things,
When the great gods dug thee, on thy bank they placed mercy.
Within thee Ea, King of the Apsu, built his abode.
They gave thee the Flood, the unequalled.
Fire, rage, splendour, and terror . . .
O great River, far-famed River . . .[550]

These are the waters of the cosmic sea Apsu—"the waters which are forever collected together in the deep,"[551] corresponding to the Egyptian dwelling gathered together by the creator. The oldest image of this encircling river or ocean is the ancient Sumerian sign for Kis (the all, the complete land, the Cosmos): . The band in this sign, according to Jeremias, represents the encircling ocean, the same river that is depicted encircling the "earth" (Cosmos) in the Babylonian world map.[552] Like the Egyptian ocean the revolving stream forms the border of the celestial land.

As the womb of primeval birth, the Sumerian Engur, "River," provides a close parallel to the Egyptian goddess Nut. Indeed, like Nut, the Sumero-Babylonian river goddess was conceived as the unifying cord. The waters of Engur (Apsu) compose the tarkullu, "rope," or the markasu, "band," bond," holding together the created Cosmos.[553] Like the Egyptians, the Sumero-Babylonians recalled the enclosure of the cosmic ocean as that which gave birth to the primeval sun. The god who "illuminates the interior of the Apsu" is Ninurta, the planet Saturn.[554]

---

[550] Langdon, Semitic Mythology, 105.

[551] Sayce, Lectures on the Origin and Growth of Religion, 487. [Emphasis added.]

[552] Jeremias, Handbuch der Altorientalischen Geisteskultur, 31.

[553] Langdon, Semitic Mythology, 309.

[554] Jensen, op. cit., 248-467.

VI. The Enclosed Sun-Cross

The Four Rivers Of Paradise

“And a river went out of Eden to water the garden; and from thence it was parted, and became into four heads.”[555] So reads the Book of Genesis. The four rivers of Adam’s paradise, according to many Hebrew and early Christian accounts, flowed in opposite directions, spreading to the four corners of the world.[556]

The tradition is apparently universal. The Navaho Indian narration of the “Age of Beginnings” speaks of an ancestral land from which the inhabitants were driven by a great catastrophe. Among the occupants of this remote home, some say, were “First Man” and “First Woman.” Most interesting is the means by which the land was watered: “In its centre was a spring from which four streams flowed, one to each of the cardinal points . . .”[557]

The Chinese paradise of Kwen-lun, adorned with pearls, jade, and precious stones, lay at the centre and zenith of the world.[558] In this happy abode stood a central fountain from which flowed “in opposite directions the four great rivers of the world.”[559]

Four rivers appear also in the Hindu Rig Veda: “the noblest, the most wonderful work of this magnificent one [Indra], is that of having filled the bed of the four rivers with water as sweet as honey.”[560] The Vishnu Purana identifies the four streams with the paradise of Brahma at the world summit. They, too, flow in four directions.[561]

Iranian myth recalls four streams issuing from the central fount Ardvi Sura and radiating in the four directions. Similarly, the Kalmucks of Siberia describe a primordial sea of life and fertility, with four rivers flowing “toward the four different points of the compass.”[562]

The tradition is repeated by many other nations. The Mandaeans of Iraq enumerate four great rivers flowing from the north.[563] Just as the Babylonians recalled “the land of the four rivers,”[564] the Egyptians knew “Four

---

[555] Genesis 2:10.

[556] Gaster, Myth, Legend and Custom in the Old Testament, 27-28; Wensinck, “The Ocean in the Literature of the Western Semites,” 59-60; see also our section on “The Foundation Stone”.

[557] Alexander, North American Mythology, 159.

[558] W.T. Warren, Paradise Found, 129; O’Neill, The Night of the Gods, 909.

[559] Lenormant, Les Origines de l’Histoire, 26.

[560] Ibid., 19-21.

[561] Ibid., 27-29.

[562] Uno Holmberg, Die Religiösen Vorstellungen der Altaischen Völker, 86-87; Der Baum des Lebens, 71*ff.*

[563] Albright, “The Mouth of the Rivers,” 189.

[564] Brown, Eradinus: River and constellation, 46.

Niles," flowing to the four quarters.[565] The home of the Greek goddess Calypso, in the "navel of the sea," possessed a central fountain sending forth "four streams, flowing each in opposite directions."[566]

In the Scandinavian Edda, the world's waters originate in the four streams flowing from the spring Hvergelmir in the land of the gods,[567] while Slavic tradition recalls four streams issuing from under the magic stone Alatuir in the island paradise of Bonyan.[568] Brinton finds the four mystic rivers among the Sioux, Aztecs, and Maya, just as Fornander discovers them in Polynesian myth.[569]

The lost land of the four rivers presents a particularly enigmatic theme for conventional mythology because few, if any, of the nations possessing the memory can point to any convincing geographical source of the imagery. When the Babylonians invoke Ishtar as "Lady, Queen of the land of the Four Rivers of Erech,"[570] or when an Egyptian text at Dendera celebrates the Four Niles at Elephantine, one might expect the familiar landscape to explain the usage. But wherever the mythical four rivers appear, they possess the character of an "ideal" land, in contrast to actual geography.

The reason for this disparity between the mythical and terrestrial landscapes is that the four rivers flowed, not on our earth, but through the four quarters of the polar "homeland." To what aspect of Saturn's kingdom might the mythical rivers refer?

For every dominant mythical theme there are corresponding signs (though this truth is still to be acknowledged by most authorities). The signs of the four rivers are the sun-cross and the enclosed sun-cross , the latter sign illuminating the former by showing that the four streams belong to the primeval enclosure. Issuing from the polar centre (i.e., the central sun), the four rivers flow to the four corners of Saturn's Earth.

The sign of the enclosed sun-cross , observes Cirlot, "expresses the original Oneness (symbolized by the centre)," and "the four radii . . . are the same as the four rivers which well up from the fons vitae . . ."[571]

But if one myth identifies the arms of the sun-cross as four paradisal rivers, there are other interpretations of the cross as well, for this primal image produced a wide-ranging and coherent symbolism, as I shall now attempt to show.

The Crossroads

From Saturn, the central sun, flowed four primary paths of light. In the myths these appear as four rivers, four winds, four streams of arrows, or four children, assistants, or light-spirits bearing the Saturnian seed (the life elements) through the four quarters of the celestial kingdom.

---

[565] Budge, From Fetish to God in Ancient Egypt, 173.

[566] Albright, "The Goddess of Life and Wisdom" 261.

[567] Gaster, op. cit., 27.

[568] Encyclopedia of Religion and Ethics, Vol. II, 706.

[569] Gaster, op. cit., 27.

[570] Brown, op. cit., 46.

[571] A Dictionary of Symbols, 127. [Emphasis added.] The mystic idea "is confirmed and reinforced when it is portrayed in architectural plans: whether in the cloister, the garden or the patio, the fountain occupies the centre position, at least in the majority of architectural works built during periods within the symbolist tradition, as in Romanesque or Gothic edifices. Furthermore, the four rivers of Paradise are denoted by four paths which radiate out from the region of the cloister towards a clear space, circular or octagonal in shape, which forms the basin of the fountain." Ibid., 113.

The sun-cross and enclosed sun-cross , depicting the four life-bearing streams, thus serve as universal signs of the Holy Land.

The modern world is accustomed to think of “the four quarters” in terrestrial terms. Today we conceive north, east, west, and south only in relationship to our own position or to a fixed geographical reference point. Chicago is “west” of New York and “east” of Omaha, and to the modern mind the “four corners of the world” only serves as a vague metaphor for “the entire globe.”

To the ancients, however, “the Four Corners of the World” possessed explicit meaning; originally, the phrase referred not to geography but to cosmography, the “map” of the celestial kingdom, laid out in the polar heaven. One of the few scholars to recognize this quality of the mythical “four corners” was O’Neill: “It results from any full study of the myths, symbolism, and nomenclature of the Four Quarters that these directions were viewed in the strict orthodoxy of heavens-mythology, not as the NSEW of every spot whatever, but four heavens-divisions spread out around the pole.”[572]

The sun-cross , as the symbol of the four quarters, belongs to the central sun. In sacred cosmography the central position of the sun-god becomes the “fifth” direction. To understand such language, it is convenient to think of the mythical “directions” (or arms of the cross) as motions or flows of energy. From the great god the elements of life flow in four directions. The god himself, who embodies all the elements, is “firm,” “steadfast,” or “resting”; his fifth motion is that of rotation while standing in one place.

The directions can also be conceived as regions: the central (fifth) region and the four quarters spaced around it.

This is why the Pythagoreans regarded the number five as a representative of the fixed world axis.[573] The Pythagorean idea clearly corresponds with the older Hindu symbolism of the directions. In addition to the standard four directions, Hindu doctrine knows a fifth, called the “fixed direction,” the polar centre.[574]

In China, too, the pole is the immovable fifth direction, the “central palace” around which the cardinal points are spaced.[575] And in Mexico, Nahuatl symbolism asserts that “five is the number of the centre.”[576]

In the “ideal” kingdom of heaven the Universal Monarch stands at the centre, and all the elements of life—fire, water, air, and seed—flow from the god-king in four brilliant streams. Often interpreted as four sons of the creator, the streams mark out the four quarters of the cosmic isle, or “earth.”

Let us consider first the Egyptian symbolism of the directional streams. According to the Egyptian creation texts, the great god, standing alone, brought forth as his own “speech” the primeval matter—or sea of “words”—which congealed into an enclosure. The Egyptians associate this pouring out of the seed or life elements with four luminous streams flowing from the central sun. The four emanations are the four “sons” of Atum or the Four Sons of Horus, each identified with a quarter of the heavenly kingdom.[577] Importantly, the Egyptians term these paths of light the “Four Khu”: they are the “words of power”—streams of creative “speech” coursing through the four divisions of organized space.

---

[572] O’Neill, op. cit., 184.

[573] Delatte, Etudes sur la Litterature Pythagoricienne, 153-54.

[574] Rig Veda, IX. 74.6; IX. 113.8.

[575] De Saussure, Les Origines de l’Astronomie Chinoise, 159-60, 230.

[576] Dejourne, Burning Water, 72.

[577] Budge, op. cit., 226; W.M. Muller, Egyptian Mythology, 46, 95, 112.

The Pyramid Texts call these “the four blustering winds which are about you.”[578] The Four Sons of Horus “send the four winds.” In one source the four winds issue from the mouth of Amen.[579] In the Book of the Dead they are “the four blazing flames which are made for [or as] the Khu [words of power],”[580] while the Coffin Texts invoke them as the “four gods who are powerful and strong, who bring the water.”[581]

The Egyptians also interpreted the four paths of light as “arrows” launched by the creator toward the four quarters. (In hieroglyphs, the arrow means “shaft of light.”) It was an ancient practice of the Egyptian king, on assuming the throne, to release an arrow, in each of the four directions,[582] thus reenacting the creation, or organization of the celestial kingdom. The arrow is sat, which means “to shoot,” but also “to pour out”; for the four arrows launched by the king signified the waters of life originally “poured out” by the creator, whom the king personified. Sat also means “to sow” or “to scatter seed abroad”; which is to say, the four streams carried to the four corners the creative seed of abundance.[583] By launching the four arrows the local king proclaimed himself the Universal Monarch and sanctified his kingdom as a duplication of the primeval abode.

In Egypt the cross—as the symbol of the four directional streams—possesses two important meanings. The form , un, signifies “coming to life,” for the directional streams shone forth with the daily birth of the central sun (i.e., with the setting of the solar orb). In the form (or), ami, the cross means “to be in” or “to be enclosed by”—in reference to the unified space enclosed within the womb of the mother goddess .

When certain Egyptologists first encountered the symbol of the goddess Nut , they saw in it “a pictorial symbol of primitive Eden divided by the four-fold river.”[584] That conclusion would gain little credence among modern Egyptologists, yet it is much closer to the truth than the bland explanations currently in fashion. The four streams of life, emanating from the creator, coursed through the womb of Nut, the Holy Land. Thus the deceased implores the goddess, “Give me the water and the wind which are in thee.”[585]

Another symbol of the “holy abode” is the sign [586] showing a cross of arrows superimposed upon a shield. The glyph is precisely equivalent to the symbol of Nut , for Nut, the Great Protectoress, was the cosmic shield, and the four streams of life, enclosed within the womb of Nut, were the same as the shafts or arrows of light launched toward the four corners.

---

[578] Pyramid Text 497.

[579] Gaster, op. cit., 5.

[580] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 414.

[581] Faulkner, The Coffin Texts, 1. Often the Egyptians represented the four streams by four vases or “four crocodiles.” (The crocodile is an Egyptian symbol of flowing water.) Renouf, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 78. The four crocodiles “live by the Words of Power”—that is, they come to life through, or as, the outward-flowing speech of the creator. On attaining the heavenly kingdom, the deceased king beseeches the crocodiles (rivers): “Let not thy fiery water be inflicted upon me.” Ibid., 79. As figures of the four life-bearing streams the crocodiles were identified with the four quarters of the Cosmos. Ibid., 97.

[582] Campbell, Oriental Mythology, 78.

[583] Budge, The Gods of the Egyptians, Vol. II, 55.

[584] W.T. Warren, op. cit., 179.

[585] Renouf, op. cit., 113.

[586] Budge, Gods, Vol. I, 452.

The land of the four rivers was that which the creator gathered together from the sea of words, his own emanation. The hieroglyphic symbol for “to collect, gather together” and for “the unified land” is , depicting the primeval enclosure (shen) divided into quarters by a cross of two flails. That the flail sign , in the Egyptian language, is read Khu, equates the flail-cross with the four streams of life (khu, “words of power”) radiating from the central sun.

There is, in other words, a level of Egyptian symbolism that the specialists have yet to penetrate. Standard treatments of the Egyptian Holy Land say little or nothing of the directional streams, though these powers are vital to the symbolism as a whole. And one can be certain that the paths of light and life have nothing to do with an ill-defined “four quarters” of our earth, where they are conventionally located. The four winds, or four rivers, or four pathways, or four shafts of light (arrows) belonged to the lost land in heaven, and only through symbolic assimilation to this cosmic dwelling did the terrestrial habitation share in the imagery.

A comparison of Egyptian cross symbolism with that of other lands reveals numerous parallels. The oldest Mesopotamian image of divinity was the sun-cross , symbol of the creator An, the planet Saturn. An, like his counterparts around the world, “brought forth and begat the fourfold wind” within the womb of Tiamat, the cosmic sea.[587]

The cult worshippers of Ninurta (Saturn) also represented their god by the cross. Hence, the cuneiform ideograms for the fourfold saru, “wind,” and for mehu, “storm wind”—both of which belong to Saturn—take the form of a cross (figs. 22, 23). The Babylonian Saturn inaugurates the day, “coming forth in splendour,” and this coming forth of Saturn means the coming forth of the four winds (as in Egypt), for the Akkadian umum denotes both “day” and “wind,” just as the Sumerian signs UD and UG, both used for “day,” occur also in the sense of “wind.”[588] (The ancient Hebrew expression “until the day blows” conveys the same identity.)

Figure 22. Babylonian saru, “wind.”

---

[587] Pritchard, Ancient Near Eastern Texts Relating to the Old Testament, 62.

[588] Hildegard and Julius Lewy, “The Origin of the Week and the Oldest West Asiatic Calendar,” 5.

Figure 23. Ideogram for mehu, or “storm wind.”

Saturn’s four winds mark out the quarters or directions of the Cosmos, Saturn’s kingdom. Cosmological texts speak of the “furious wind . . . commanding the directions”:589 the Sumerian im and Akkadian saru, “wind,” also signify “region (or quarter) of heaven.”590

As in Egypt, the Mesopotamian four winds coincide with the four rivers of life. Instead of the simple sign , some images show four streams of water radiating from the central sun (fig. 24).591 The best-known Mesopotamian figure of these streams is the famous “sun wheel” of Shamash (a god also identified as Saturn). Portrayed are four rays of light and four rivers flowing from the central god to the border of the wheel (fig. 15).

Figure 24. (a) Mycenaean four rivers symbol;

---

589 Ibid. [Emphasis added.]

590 Tallquist, “Himmelsgegende und Winde,” 106.

591 Jeremias, Handbuch der Altorientalischen Geisteskultur, 252.

Figure 24. (b) Four rivers symbol, Troy;

Figure 24. (c) Babylonian image presenting the arms of the sun-cross as four rivers.

Hrozny tentatively suggests that Shamash's cross was a sign for "settlement."592 With this suggestion one is compelled to agree, for the first settlements, organized for a ritual purpose, imitated the heavenly abode. Each sacred territory became "the land of the four rivers" and each ruler "the king of the four quarters."

Geographical limitations did not prevent the Assyro-Babylonian priests from assimilating the map of their land to the quartered circle of the primeval kingdom. Thus a text reproduced by Virolleaud locates the land of Akkad, Elam, Subartu, and Amurru within the fourfold enclosure of the sun ⊕.593 "Every land," states Jeremias, "has its 'paradise,' which corresponds with the cosmic paradise."594

The land of the sun-cross ✦ lay within the primeval circle, and this fact will explain why the Babylonian sign of the four kibrati or "world quarters" (i.e., ✦) also denoted "the interior" or "the enclosed space."595

---

592 O'Neill, op. cit., 184.

593 Jeremias, op. cit., 12.

594 Ibid., 13.

595 Jensen, Die Kosmologie der Babylonier, 167-69.

The terminology offers a fascinating parallel to the Egyptian ami (,), "to be in," "to be enclosed by." To dwell in the land of the four rivers is to occupy the Saturnian enclosure.596

The same overlapping interpretations of the four streams occur in Hindu symbolism. Here the cross and the circle, according to one observer, represent "the traditional abode of their primeval ancestors . . . And let us ask what better picture or more significant characters in the complicated alphabet of symbolism could have been selected for the purpose than a circle and a cross—the one to denote a region of absolute purity and perpetual felicity, the other those four perennial streams that divided and watered the several quarters of it."597

The Hindu Holy Land lies within the world wheel, turned by the stationary sun at the centre. The spokes of the wheel, delimiting the four quarters, "have their foundation in the single centre which is Surya [the sun]," notes Agrawala.598

In the ritual of the Satapatha Brahmana the spokes of the wheel become "arrows" launched in the four directions and carrying the life elements to the four corners. The arrows sent in one direction "are fire," those in another "are the waters," those in another "are wind," and those in another "are the herbs."599 The Paippalada or Kashmirian Artharva Veda terms the latter flow of arrows "food." The idea seems to be that of abundance or "plenty" radiating from the heart of the Cosmos (and thus answering to the four Egyptian arrows [sat] transmitting the seed of abundance to the outermost limits of the kingdom). The Hindus symbolized these shafts of light by setting afire the spokes of the sacred wheel.600

Figure 25. Hindu cross.

A pictorial image of the four streams occurs on ancient Hindu coins depicting the arms of the sun-cross as arrows directed toward the four corners (fig. 25).

Every ancient Indian settlement reflected the primeval map of the Cosmos, its unified domain lying within the sacred circle and its four primary streets answering to the celestial crossroads. The settlement's organization

---

596 Ibid., 472. Saturn's streams of light illuminate "the interior of the Apsu (cosmic sea)." As in Egypt, the explosive shafts of light were interpreted as four streams of "speech" radiating to the four corners. The "four winds" and "four world directions," according to Jeremias, correspond to the creator. Op. cit., 148.

597 Quoted in W.T. Warren, op. cit., 179-80.

598 The Thousand Syllabled Speech, Vol. I, 158.

599 Whitney, Atharva Veda, III.iii.

600 Eggeling, Satapatha Brahmana, III, 5.3.14-16.

reenacted the creation. As noted by W. Muller, the Hindu sacred city "duplicates the Cosmos in wood, brick and stone: its axes [north-south; east-west] demarcate the four quarters of the universe."[601]

Muller finds the same concept of the quartered kingdom in Ceylon, Burma, Cambodia, Thailand, and Vietnam. Each sacred habitation appears as "the celestial city of the king" and each ruler as the wheel-king. "State and nation represent a quartered universe [Cosmos]," writes Muller. Every image of the sacred "settlement" reflects the image of the "world"—the circle and cross.[602]

In China, the emperor stands symbolically at the pole, while ranged around him are the powers of the cardinal points.[603] The cosmic centre is ch'ien, from which, to use Jung's phraseology, "the four emanations go forth, like the heavenly forces extending through space."[604] At the ch'ien, the centre, the four she or world quarters converge.[605]

The ideal celestial organization finds expression in the ancient Chinese hieroglyph . The sign, according to C. Hentze, denotes the contree suburbaine or settlement around a centre.[606] Is this not once more the primeval "place" sustained by the outward flow of "life" (or "arrows") from the central god?

L'Orange, in his studies of cosmic symbolism in the Near East, notes that the great residential cities of Ekbatana, Darabjird, and Firuzabad were patterned after the wheel of the Cosmos, with the king appearing at the intersection of the crossroads. "Wall and fosse are traced mathematically with the compass, as an image of the heavens, a projection of the upper hemisphere on earth. The two axis streets, one running north-south and the other east-west, divide the city into four quadrants which reflect the four quarters of the world. At the very point of intersection, in the very axis of the world wheel, the palace is situated, here sits the king, 'The Axis and Pole of the World,' 'The King of the four Quadrants of the World' . . ."[607]

To this city of the wheel also corresponds the imagery of Jerusalem and Palestine. The terrestrial city and Holy Land, in more than one medieval map, appear in the ideal form of a quartered circle , for such was the image of the Eden paradise, with its four directional streams. And this is why Solomon and Hezekiah, in constructing works for the distribution of Jerusalem's waters, sought to imitate the four rivers of paradise—even to the point of naming one stream Gihon (a river of Eden) and declaring that from beneath the temple these streams flowed out over the whole world.[608]

The ancient Etruscans, followed by the Romans, looked to the same image of the fourfold Cosmos in laying out the plan of the sacred city. The surveyors, according to W. Muller, sought to map out the "terrestrial image of a celestial prototype," and their division of the land into four regions—the Roma quadrata—"reflects a powerful cosmological model: the quartered earth of the Roman world image."[609]

---

[601] Die Heilige Stadt, 124.

[602] Ibid., 145*ff.*

[603] De Saussure, op. cit., 160, 230.

[604] Jung, Mandala Symbolism, 74.

[605] Schlegel, L'Uranographie Chinoise, 146.

[606] "Cosmogonie du Monde Dresse Debout et du Monde Renversé," 109.

[607] L'Orange, Studies in the Iconography of Cosmic Kingship, 13; see also W. Muller, op. cit., 130*ff.*

[608] W.T. Warren, op. cit., 233.

[609] W. Muller, Die Heilige Stadt, 21.

It is surely significant that all of the key features of the sun-cross ✦ and the enclosed sun-cross ⊕ reviewed above occur also in the Americas. Often the parallels are stunning. The Omaha Indians, for example, invoke the "Aged One":

> . . . seated with assured permanency and endurance,
>
> In the centre where converged the paths,
>
> There, exposed to the violence of the four winds,
>
> you sat,
>
> Possessed with power to receive supplications,
>
> Aged One . . .[610]

To reside at the intersection of the celestial crossroads ✦ is to "sit" (rest) at the cosmic centre, the abode of "permanency" and "endurance." This "centre" is also the place where the "four winds" meet, for the four winds and heavenly pathways are synonymous.

Burland relates that the symbol of the Mexican god Xiuhtechuhtli—the "Old, Old One," the lord of the central fire at the pole—was "a white cross of the Four Directions in the black background of the night."[611]

The Inca Yupanqui, writes Nuttall, "raised a temple in Cuzco to the Creator who, superior to the sun [solar orb], could rest and light the world from one spot." This central sun was represented by a cross.[612]

Indeed, the sun-cross is a symbol of the primeval god throughout the Americas—from the Inca of Peru to the Eskimos of Alaska. Wherever the New World symbolism can be examined in sufficient detail, one finds that the cross possessed the same significance as in the Old World.

The best authorities tell us the native American sun-cross depicts the "four winds"—conceived as visible, even violent flows of life and energy from a central or stationary god. (That is, the winds are just the opposite of the incongruous abstractions to which they have been reduced by so many mythologists.) The four winds are the "breath" of the sun-god (as in ancient Egypt), bearing the seed of life from the centre to the four corners. Thus the Mayan Ik means at once "wind," "breath," and "life." Like the Egyptian streams of sat it is "the causer of germination."[613]

In Mexico, Quetzalcoatl, "god of the Four Motions," was represented by the sun-cross, and this symbol explains his title, "Lord of the four winds." According to Nuttall, the cross "had a deeper meaning than has been realized, for it represents life-giving breath carrying with it the seeds of the four vital elements, emanating from the central lord of life, [and] spreading to the four quarters . . ."[614]

Also noted by Nuttall is the use of the cross in Copan, where it "is associated with a figure in repose, occupying the Middle, and four puffs of breath or air, laden with life-seeds, emanating from this."[615]

Just as the Egyptians personified the four emanations as four "sons" of the central god, so did the Mexicans. From the supreme god Ometeotl issued the four Tezcatlipocas, "the primordial forces which were to generate the history of the world." The four sons corresponded to the four quarters of the world.[616]

---

[610] Alexander, op. cit., 19. [Emphasis added.]

[611] Burland, The Gods of Mexico, 131.

[612] Nuttall, Fundamental Principles of Old and New World Civilization, 160-161.

[613] J. Eric and S. Thompson, Maya History and Religion, 257.

[614] Op. cit., 223.

[615] Ibid., 280. [Emphasis added.]

Figure 26. Variations of the enclosed sun-cross in the Mississippi Valley.

Figure 27. Arapaho sign of the four winds.

The same powers—central god and four emissions—were represented by the five Tlalocs, who, like the Mayan Bacabs and Chacs, "were set at four cardinal points and at the centre of the heavens."[617] From his dwelling at the world summit Tlaloc sent forth the waters of the four quarters, often symbolized (as in Egypt and India) by four vases. The gods who transmitted the waters to the four corners were the same as the gods of the four winds.[618]

But there is an even more striking parallel with Old World symbolism: the four streams of light and life were interpreted as arrows coursing in the four directions. In the Nahuatl language the word tonamitl means at once a "ray or shaft of light" and "the shining arrow." According to the chronicler Ixtlilxochitl, it was a native custom, on consecrating a new territory, "to shoot with utmost force four arrows in the direction of the four regions of the world."[619] Thus did the priests sanctify the land as a renewal of the primeval kingdom, in exact accord with the ancient Egyptian practice!

Consistent with the global iconography of the central sun, the American Indians revered the sun-cross and enclosed sun-cross as emblems of the unified domain, the Holy Land. Among the Mexicans "the cross and the circle" are a "native symbol for 'an integral state,'" writes Nuttall. Illustrating this symbolism is the famous Mexican Calendar Wheel, displaying four principal and four secondary rays (or "arrows"), signifying the four quarters and their four subdivisions. This wheel of Time, states Nuttall,[620] portrays the ideal habitation, and the prototype lay in heaven, not on earth. The wheel is "as clearly an image of the nocturnal heaven as it is of a

---

[616] Léon-Portilla, "Mythology of Ancient Mexico," in Kramer, Mythologies of the Ancient World, 449-50.

[617] Roys, The Book of the Chilam Balam, 67.

[618] See, for example, J. Eric and S. Thompson, op. cit., 270-71.

[619] Nuttall, op. cit., 255.

[620] Ibid., 198.

vast territorial state which once existed in the valley of Mexico, and had been established as a reproduction upon earth of the harmonious order and fixed laws which apparently governed the heavens."621

From the center of the ancient Inca city of Cuzco, four roads radiated in the four directions. At the intersection of the crossroads rested a golden vase from which a fountain flowed. Thus did the four roads imitate the four paths or streams transporting the waters of life to the four quarters.

The Mayan Book of Chilam Balam offers the following map of northern Yucatan:622

Campech
Calkini
Mani
Tihoo
Cumkal
Zaci
Itzmal

Figure 28. Cosmological map of northern Yucatan.

Roys reports that this map—adapting actual geography to the primordial ideal—"is fairly typical in Maya documents."623 Here again is the Roma quadrata, the celestial Jerusalem, or Egyptian Neter ta, the Holy Land.

The Delaware sacred text called the Walum Olum records the primeval dwelling of the Great Spirit by the image . This was the nation's ancestral homeland, they say.624

A group of anthropologists, on examining the Walum Olum, reported that the four points on the circle "indicate the four quarters of the earth." By "earth" they obviously meant the terrestrial landscape. But if the quartered circle refers to our earth,625 then the dot inside certainly is not the sun, in spite of the steadfast opinion of solar mythologists.

In this case, the experts possessed the answer without recognizing it. The text itself identifies the sign with "the place where the Great Spirit stayed." To this statement the commentators add: "Concentric circles or a circle with a dot in the centre means divine or hallowed."626 Combining the two statements one obtains a clear-cut definition of the sign as "the divine or hallowed place where the Great Spirit stayed." Denoted is the quartered, primeval land, of which the terrestrial Holy Land was but a symbol.

As a final example, I note that the sun-cross and the life-giving streams are recalled even in Hawaiian myth. Here the creator Teave is the "Father-Mother" from whom "life coursed to the four directions of the

---

621 Ibid., 274.

622 Roy, op. cit., 125.

623 Ibid., 125.

624 Indianapolis, Indiana Historical Society, Walum Olum, 11.

625 Ibid., 11.

626 Ibid.

world.”[627] From the cosmic centre and zenith, Teave organized the celestial “kingdom” with his “flaming cross of shining white light,” “the first and foremost Cross of God.”[628] The “Primordial Lord of the Sun” (Teave) transmitted the life elements to the four corners through the agency of four assistant gods: “. . . The blood of life pulsated from the infinite and coursed to the north, east, south, west, via the Four Sacred Hearts of God, the deities Tane, Tanaoroa, Tu, Rono.”[629]

The widespread traditions of the primordial kingdom and the four life-streams reflect a consistent memory. On every continent one finds a compulsion to organize the native land after a cosmic original, defined by the enclosed sun-cross ⊕. The focus is the primeval ground occupied by the great father—whose home is the “earth” brought forth in the creation legend. By superimposing the map of Saturn’s Earth onto the local landscape, the ancients consecrated their native territory as a likeness, or a renewal, of the celestial abode.

The Four-Eyed Or Four-Faced God

In the ancient Egyptian Heb-Sed festival, the king ascends to the throne of Osiris, where he is deified as the great god’s successor. To certify his authority as Universal Monarch, he launches four arrows toward the four corners, then assumes his throne, turning to the four cardinal points in succession.[630]

By facing the four directions the king repeats the feat of the great god; for the Universal Monarch, occupying the steadfast centre (or fifth region), ceaselessly turned round about, sending his rays of life through the four divisions of unified space.

The classical historian Diodorus tells us that when the name Osiris is translated into Greek it means “many-eyed”—“and properly so; for in shedding his rays in every direction he surveys with many eyes, as it were, all land and sea.” To Osiris, Herodotus compares the Greek Dionysus—a god who, in the Bacchic Hymn, shines “like a star, with a fiery eye in every ray.”[631]

By facing the four directions and by sending forth the four directional streams, the Universal Monarch becomes the god of four faces or four eyes. “Homage to thee, O thou who hast four faces,” reads a line of the Pyramid Texts.[632] Osiris, as the Ram of Mendes, is the god of “four faces on one neck.”[633]

The Hindu Atharva Veda speaks of the “four heavenly directions, having the wind as lord, upon which the sun looks out.”[634] This, of course, can only be the central sun, who is Brahma, a god of four faces. The myths also attribute four faces to Shiva.[635] The central sun Prajapati takes the form of the four-eyed, four-faced, and four-armed Vivvakarman, the “all maker.”[636] Agni, too, faces “in all directions,”[637] as does Krishna.[638]

---

[627] Melville, Children of the Rainbow, 18.

[628] Ibid., 18.

[629] Ibid., 40, 126, 140.

[630] Campbell, op. cit., 78; Jung, Aion, 198.

[631] Herodotus, I.11.2-3.

[632] Quoted in Budge, Gods, Vol. I, 85.

[633] Ibid., Vol. II, 65.

[634] Whitney, Atharva Veda, 52.

[635] Keith, Indian Mythology, 110.

[636] Ibid., 52.

[637] Ibid., 41.

Chinese myths recall a four-eyed sage named Ts'ang Chieh, a legendary inventor of writing (i.e., the Universal Monarch).639 The old Greek god Argos, in the Aigimios of Hesiod, looks "this way and that with four eyes."640 Macrobius tells us the great god Janus was sometimes represented with four faces, in allusion to the four quarters of the Cosmos.641

Among the Tarahumara in North America, the cross represented the god Hikuli, "the four-faced god who sees all things."642 The "Central Lord" of Mexican ritual, represented by the cross, is "He who looks in four directions."643

There can no longer be any doubt that the four-eyed or four-faced god is Saturn, for the sun-planet appears in Babylonian myth as Ea (Sumerian Enki)—a god of four eyes that "behold all things."644 The Phoenician El—Saturn—has four eyes, as does the Orphic Kronos (Saturn). The Chinese Yellow Emperor Huang-ti—identified as Saturn—is also four-eyed.645 The four-eyes, or four faces, become intelligible only in connection with the five regions—the polar centre and the four divisions ranged around it.

The Foundation Stone

Residing at the immovable centre of the Cosmos, Saturn was the stone or rock of foundation, the prototype of the cornerstone (situated where the four corners meet— ). The four beams of light which radiated from the Saturnian stone appeared to sustain the world wheel at its "four corners" , so that, in many myths, the life-bearing streams are synonymous with the "four pillars of the world."

In the mystic traditions reviewed by Manly P. Hall (Masonic, Hermetic, Qabalistic, Rosicrucian, etc.), the planet Saturn looms as the elementary power of creation. The planet-god "was always worshipped under the symbol of the base or footing, inasmuch as he was considered to be the substructure upholding creation," states Hall.646

The writer is, of course, thinking in metaphysical terms, and when he speaks of "creation" he doubtless means something much different from the "creation" discussed in the foregoing sections. Yet his summary, when stripped of metaphysics and solar terminology, accurately conveys an age-old idea: "The solar system [read: Cosmos] was organized by forces operating inward from the great ring of the Saturnian sphere; and since the beginning of all things was under the control of Saturn, the most reasonable inference is that the first forms of worship were dedicated to him in his peculiar symbol—the stone. Thus the intrinsic nature of Saturn is synonymous with that spiritual rock which is the enduring foundation of the Solar temple [read: dwelling of the central sun]."647

---

638 Suhr, The Mask, the Unicorn and the Messiah, 89.

639 Ferguson, Chinese Mythology, 31.

640 Cook, Zeus: A Study in Ancient Religion, Vol. II, 379.

641 Cited in Faber, The Origins of Pagan Idolatry, Vol I, 166.

642 Alexander, op. cit., 176-77.

643 Perry, Lord of the Four Quarters, 200.

644 Langdon, Semitic Mythology, 69. The reference is to Marduk, who has four eyes which "behold all things even as he (Ea)."

645 Derk Bodde, "Myths of Ancient China," in Kramer, Mythologies, 374.

646 An Encyclopedic Outline of Masonic, Hermetic, Qabalistic and Rosicrucian Symbolic Philosophy, cviii.

647 Ibid., ccviii. [Emphasis added.]

In the earlier symbolism of the Foundation Stone, there is no hint of solar associations, and the stone is not a "spiritual [invisible] rock," but the shining center around which the created earth, or Cosmos, congealed.

The Egyptians knew the Foundation Stone as the Benben. Frankfort writes that the "first piece of solid matter actually created by Atum in the primeval ocean . . . was a stone, the Benben; and it had originated from a drop of the seed of Atum which fell into the primeval ocean."[648] More precisely, one should say that Atum was the seed and the seed was the Benben stone—the first thing to stabilize at the cosmic centre. "Thou [Atum] didst shine forth as Benben," recalls a Pyramid Text, in connection with the first phases of creation.[649]

Atum, or Re, is the "Great Seed," and this aspect of the god is conveyed by the term ben (from which the word Benben was produced): ben signifies "to beget." But the same word means "to go round": the Benben is the steadfast seed-stone, which, turning round about, moved the wheel of the Cosmos.

From Atum, the Benben, flowed the four streams of life, demarcating the four quarters or corners of the cosmic dwelling. It is thus vital that ben signifies "corner," while the hieroglyphic sign for "corner" is .[650] Since the stone of foundation lay at the center, the "corner" of the ben cannot have originally meant the corner of a square or rectangular edifice—even if later generations came to conceive it as such. Denoted is one of the four "quarters" converging on the central stone . This meaning is suggested by another sign— , apt, signifying "division of the holy abode." The sacred edifice is divided into four quarters or corners defined by the angles of the ben . Also relevant here are the sign ses— , "to divide," and the common sign of "the holy abode"— , nut. The "four corners" meet at the Benben (Atum), the Foundation Stone.

"Go to the streamings of the Nile [that is, the heavenly waters] and there you will find a stone that has a spirit," stated an old alchemical source.[651] Clearly, the tradition refers to the Foundation Stone, the central source of the four streams radiating life to the inhabitants of the celestial kingdom.

This quality of the central sun persists in Hebrew and Muslim imagery of Adam, the Heaven Man. The Nassenes esteemed Adam as the "rock" and "cornerstone."[652] Writes Jung: "The stone is indeed of supreme importance, because it fulfills the function of Adam Kadmon as the 'capital stone,' from which all the upper and lower hosts in the work of creation are brought into being."[653]

The theosophic Zohar declares, "The world did not come into being until God took a certain stone, which is called the foundation stone, and cast it into the abyss so that it held fast there, and from it the world was planted. This is the central point of the universe, and on this point stands the Holy of Holies."[654]

Patai summarized the tradition: "In the middle of the Temple and constituting the floor of the Holy of Holies, was a huge native rock which was adorned by Jewish legends with all the peculiar features of an Omphalos, A Navel of the Earth. This rock, called in Hebrew Ebhen Shetiyyah, the Stone of Foundation, was the first solid [i.e., stable, stationary] thing created, and was placed by God amidst the as yet boundless fluid of the primeval waters. Legend has it that just as the body of an embryo is built up in its mother's womb from the navel, so God built up the earth concentrically around this Stone."[655]

---

[648] Kingship and the Gods, 153.

[649] Ibid.

[650] Énel, Les Origines de la Genèse et l'Enseignement des Temples de l'Ancienne Égypte, 30.

[651] Cited in Jung, Alchemical Studies.

[652] Jung, Mysterium Coniunctionis, 437.

[653] Ibid., 446-47, citing Kabbala denudata I, Part 1, 16.

[654] Ibid., 447n, citing Zohar I, 231a.

Is this not the same account as that recorded by the Egyptians, who say that Atum, the masculine Foundation Stone, came to rest at the cosmic centre, and that the created "land" or "earth"—the womb of the mother goddess—congealed around the central god?

Hebrew and Muslim traditions locate the Foundation Stone in the paradise of Eden. The Arabic term for the stone is es-Sakra—"the Rock." Thus the Mosque of Omar—known as Kubbat es-Sakra, "Dome of the Rock"—bears on its western facade the inscription: "The Rock of the Temple—from the Garden of Eden."[656] The legends relate that the Foundation Stone conceals beneath it all the world's waters and winds: "All sweet water comes from under the Holy Rock," notes Wensinck; "thereafter it spreads over the earth." A Muslim text states that "all rivers and clouds and vapours and winds come from under the Holy Rock in Jerusalem."[657] This can only mean that the four rivers of Eden, which water "the whole earth," have their origin in, or under, the Foundation Stone.

Though the stone belongs to the centre, it is, like the Egyptian Benben, a cornerstone, for one reads in Isaiah, "Therefore thus saith the Lord God, Behold I lay in Zion [i.e., Jerusalem] for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner stone, a sure foundation."[658] The center is the intersection of the four corners .

That the Foundation Stone stood at the source of the four directional paths is the consistent theme in all of the ancient architectural plans reviewed by W. Muller—from Europe to Southeast Asia. When the Roman augur marked out the four directions of the sacred city he sat upon a stone—which denoted the center, the intersection of the north-south and east-west axes.[659] (One naturally thinks also of the lapis niger or black stone of the Roman Forum, signifying the centre of the world.)

The map of ancient Ireland shows four provinces—Connaught, Ulster, Leinster, and Munster—surrounding the central province of Mide ("the Middle"), where was situated the Aill na-Mircann, the "Stone of the Divisions."[660] This basic pattern occurs also in the original plan of Nimwegen in the Netherlands: at the intersection of the "four streets of the world" stood a great blue stone.[661] A similar stone stood at the symbolic centre of Leiden, from which four main streets radiated in four directions.[662]

At the center of the sacred Hindu dwelling, where the directional paths meet, stood the Foundation Stone, considered as the fixed point from which creation began.[663] In Thailand the Foundation Stone of the royal palace, lying at the intersection of the crossroads, was the "corner-stone of the land."[664]

---

[655] Patai, Man and Temple, 85.

[656] Vilnay, Legends of Jerusalem, 17.

[657] Wensinck, The Ideas of the Western Semites Concerning the Navel of the Earth, 34.

[658] Isaiah 28: 16. [Emphasis added.]

[659] W. Muller, Die Heilige Stadt, 38*ff.*

[660] Ibid., 94.

[661] Ibid., 198.

[662] Ibid., 198-99.

[663] Ibid., 198-99.

[664] Ibid., 145. Such traditions illuminate the image of Oedipus sitting on a stone where the ways part into many roads. O'Neill, op. cit., 393.

Nor can one ignore the identity of the Foundation Stone and the planet Saturn. Arabic thought often identifies the Foundation Stone of Eden/Jerusalem with the sacred stone of the Ka'ba in Mecca.665 (Tradition says that Adam himself sat upon the Ka'ba stone, and that "forty years before Allah created the heavens and earth the Ka'ba was a dry spot floating on the water and from it the world has been spread out."666 It is reported that in the pre-Islamic period the statue of a god Hubal stood inside the Ka'ba above the opening of a well. The well symbolized the central source of the world's waters, and Hubal was the planet Saturn.

In the tradition reconstructed by Hildegard Lewy, the statue of Hubal filled the same purpose as the stone. When the stone was removed "a statue of the planet Saturn [Hubal] had served in its place as the visible symbol of the planetary god to whom the Ka'ba was dedicated."667

But the Meccan stone, as affirmed by numerous accounts, symbolized the very rock which the Hebrews called Ebhen Shetiyyah—the Foundation Stone.668 The Mohammedans, writes Lewy, "were fully aware of the functions of the sacred stone of Mecca and Jerusalem. The sacred stone of Jerusalem represented the same god [Saturn] as the Black Stone of Mecca."669

The Foundation Stone is thus an indispensable ingredient in the symbolism of the four life-bearing streams. The stone denotes Saturn in his character as the steadfast support of the turning Cosmos and the source of the radiating life elements.

The Four Pillars Of Heaven

There is an aspect of the four streams which seems to defy nature and reason: they are called "pillars."

The Egyptian Four Sons of Horus appear as four supports holding aloft the womb of heaven (Nut). But the standard analysis of the four pillar-gods, by dispersing them to an indefinable "four corners" of our earth, deprives them of their concrete aspect as life-streams flowing from the central sun. When the great god identifies the Four Sons of Horus as the spirits who "have sprung from my body and who shall be with me in the form of everlasting judges . . . ," it is clear that the four powers occupy a *particular place.*670 Thus the 665 "At resurrection day, the Ka'ba Stone, which is in holy Mecca, will go to the Foundation Stone in holy Jerusalem, bringing with it the inhabitants of Mecca, and it shall become joined to the foundation Stone." Vilnay, op. cit., 17.

---

666 Wensinck, Ideas of the Western Semites Concerning the Navel of the Earth, 18. As is well known, the stone of the Ka'ba is black ("the black stone"). But it was not always so, for the legends claim that before Adam left Eden, it was a white hyacinth. This is, in fact, a theme which occurs elsewhere: the white stone (or god) loses his radiance, becoming "black." Though I intend to review this theme in a subsequent volume, it is appropriate to note here that, in a widespread myth, Saturn, the primeval sun, passes into a figure of death and darkness, a prototype of Satan. Saturn becomes the "black planet." ("Saturn is frequently called the 'black' or 'dark' planet," observes Hildegard Lewy, Origin and Significance of the Mâgen Dâwîd, 339.)

667 Hildegard Lewy, op. cit., 360.

668 Ibid., 362.

669 Ibid. The myth of the four rivers flowing from the Foundation Stone and defining the four quarters of the world proves to be most tenacious. O'Neill, for example, cites the following from an old magazine, The Post Angel, which published a section called "Answers to Correspondents," in 1971:

"Q.Why does the needle in the sea-compass always turn to the North?"

"A. The most received opinion is that there is under our North Pole a huge black rock, from under which the Ocean issueth in 4 currents answerable to the 4 corners of the Earth or 4 winds: which rock is thought to be all of a loadstone, so that by a kind of affinity it draweth all such like stones or other metals touched by them towards it." O'Neill, op. cit., 129.

Even when the cosmic imagery has become confused with geography, the central features are the same as in the Egyptian version expressed thousands of years earlier.

670 Budge, Gods, Vol. I, 497.

Pyramid Texts locate Atum-Re at “the place of the four pillars,”[671] and this “place” is doubtless the womb of Nut, the Holy Abode ⊗. The four streams are conceived as four pillars radiating from the immovable Foundation Stone to sustain Saturn’s Cosmos at four cardinal points.

The Hindu Satapatha Brahmana, in setting forth the ritual of the world wheel, extols the great god Vishnu with the words: “O Vishnu, with beams of light thou didst hold fast the earth on all sides.”[672] The four primary rays of the Hindu central sun ✦ constitute the pillars of the celestial dwelling ⊕. (The connection is implicit in the English word beam, which means both a ray of light and a fixed support.)

So also do the four winds serve as pillars. The Ethiopic Book of Enoch reads: “I saw the treasures of all the winds: I saw how He had furnished with them the whole creation and the firm foundations of the earth. And I saw the corner stone of the earth: I saw the four winds . . . : these are the pillars of the earth.”[673] In architectural representations of Eden’s four rivers, they too appear as pillars.[674] The Mayan Bacabs, who personify the four directional streams, are the four props of heaven. Similarly, in Hawaiian myth, the life elements radiate to the four corners of heaven by means of the four spirits, Tane, Rono, Tanaoroa and Tu—called “the Four Male Pillars of Creation.”[675]

On our earth no one has ever seen a beam of light, a wind, or a river serving as a pillar, yet this is the extraordinary function of the four paths of light and life flowing from the creator. As spokes of the world wheel ⊕, the streams appeared to “pillar apart” and to steady the revolving enclosure.

Symmetrical Elaborations Of The Sun-Cross

In the course of many centuries the sun-cross often acquired complex and symmetrical associations, as schools of myth and theology combined various interpretations of the four streams in formal systems. These evolved systems often identify each quarter of sacred space with an element, colour, season, or representative animal.

An early example of this tendency is the assignment of a different substance to each of the four paradisal rivers. While Marco Polo journeyed to the court of Kublai Khan he was told the legend of an old ruler called the Sheikh of the Mountain. The sheikh was distinguished for his possession of the world’s most beautiful garden, containing the best fruits of the earth. Through the garden passed four conduits, one flowing with wine, one with milk, one with honey, and one with water. The sheikh proclaimed his garden to be paradise.[676]

Hindu literature describes the four rivers of paradise as flowing respectively with milk, butter, honey, and wine.[677] Similarly, Strabo relates the report of Calamus that the first race of men enjoyed a blissful land in which “corn of all sorts abounded as plentifully as dust does at present; and the fountains poured forth streams, some of water, some of milk, some of honey, some of wine, and some of oil.”[678]

---

[671] Pyramid Text 158. [Emphasis added.]

[672] Eggeling, op. cit., 5.3.14.

[673] Book of Enoch 18: 1-3. [Emphasis added.]

[674] Cirlot, op. cit., 18.

[675] Melville, Children of the Rainbow, 33. [Emphasis added.]

[676] Butterworth, The Tree at the Navel of the Earth, 53.

[677] Faber, op. cit., Vol. II, 16.

[678] Ibid., 15.

In a corresponding manner each river receives a different color. The four rivers of the Chinese polar paradise Kwen-lun possess a remarkable feature: one is blue, another white, another red, and another black.[679] Each of the Hindu four rivers has its special colour.[680] The Kalmucks of Siberia describe a primordial sea from which four rivers flowed "toward the different points of the compass," each issuing from the mouth of a different animal and identified with different colours: "The eastern river contains silver sand, the southern blue jewel sand, the western red jewel sand and the northern gold sand."[681]

In developing the symbolism of the terrestrial kingdom, the ancients borrowed from the imagery of the celestial, assigning a different colour, element, or season to each geographical "cardinal point." Of course the celestial prototype, the sun-cross , does not itself suggest which terrestrial direction should be associated with "fire" and which with "air," or whether one special direction should be linked with "blue" and another with "red." Thus there seems to be no single pattern of the symbolism from one land to another.

But the tendency toward such formalization was universal. Both the Mexicans and the Zuni identified the four directions with respective colours and "elements" (air, water, fire, earth), though the specific relationship differed, as indicated below:[682]

	MEXICO	ZUNI
North	Red, Fire	Yellow, Air
West	Yellow, Earth	Blue, Water
South	Blue, Air	Red, Fire
East	Green, Water	White, Earth
Center	Many colors	All colors

The Maya, on the other hand, connected the east with red, the north with white, the west with black, and the south with yellow. Throughout North America, according to Alexander, the directional gods were associated with respective colours, though there "is no uniformity in the distribution of the colours to the several regions."[683]

Buddhist symbolism shows four rays radiating from the heads of Makasukha to the four corners, each ray associated with a colour,[684] while the Chinese developed the following associations of the directions:

DIRECTION	COLOR	ELEMENT	SEASON
North	black	water	winter
West	white	metal	autumn
South	red	fire	summer
East	green	wood	spring
Center	yellow	earth

Taken alone, these varied connections tell us little, for such developments are largely a matter of local innovation. What is important for our analysis is the unanimity with which the ancients conceived their land as four quarters around a centre, identifying the quarters with the primal life elements which all traditions describe flowing from the central sun in radiant streams.

---

[679] O'Neill, op. cit., 909.

[680] Lenormant, op. cit., Vol. II, 19-21.

[681] Uno Holmberg, Die Religiösen Vorstellungen, 86-87; Siberian Mythology, 358-59.

[682] Nuttall, op. cit., 293.

[683] Alexander, op. cit., 287.

[684] Jung and Kerenyi, Essays on a Science of Mythology, 15.

Moreover, there is one aspect of the elaborated symbolism of the four quarters which deserves closer attention—namely, the connection of the planet Saturn with the centre around which the four “elements” or colors or seasons are ranged. In the specific associations of the Chinese directions indicated above one recognizes no correspondence with a “general tradition.” For example, the Chinese identification of the center with the element “earth” or with the color yellow fails to coincide with any world-wide pattern. Surely it is significant, however, that in China the center, the element “earth,” and the colour yellow all belong uniquely to the planet Saturn—a startling fact which agrees with the equally startling placement of Saturn at the pole, the cosmic centre in Chinese thought.[685] Saturn is Huang-ti, the Yellow Emperor, his residence the Central Palace from which the four directions radiate.

This character of Saturn prevails in the Chinese symbolism of the five visible planets. Saturn is placed at the centre, while Mercury, Venus, Mars, and Jupiter are spaced at the “four corners” around Saturn. Nothing in the present orbits of the planets would suggest Saturn’s location at the centre of this system. In fact, as the outermost visible planet, Saturn would seem the least worthy of such distinction.

But originally, Saturn was the polar sun, the central source of the directional streams, and it was only to be expected that the other four planets, like the four seasons, four colours, or four elements, came to symbolize the powers of the four quarters, their symbolic location possibly being decided by the element with which each planet was identified. As to the “center,” Saturn could be the only choice. The order was:

NORTH
Mercury

WEST CENTER EAST
Venus Saturn Jupiter

SOUTH
Mars

This cosmological system receives extensive treatment by Leopold de Saussure.[686] To the Chinese, he reports, Saturn corresponded to the sacred centre, around which the cardinal points ranged; symbolism of the terrestrial centre mirrored the symbolism of the celestial pole. The other four planets were equated with the four seasons, elements, and colours, the entire system having its origin in the concept of the four divisions of heaven, to which the polar centre, Saturn’s domain, was added as the “fifth.”

What is even more extraordinary, the location of Saturn at the polar centre—with the four quarters dispersed around him—was not unique to China. De Saussure finds the same system in Iran. Iranian cosmology connects the five planets with five regions of space, the centre being fixed at the celestial pole. Placed at the pole was Kevan, the planet Saturn, precisely duplicating the station of the Chinese Saturn. Here is the system:

NORTH
Mars (Vahram)

WEST CENTER EAST
Venus (Anahid) Saturn (Kevan) Mercury (Tir)

SOUTH
Jupiter
(Auharmzd)

---

[685] De Saussure, La Série Septénaire, Cosmologique et Planétaire, 340.

[686] Ibid., 333-70; Le Système Cosmologique Sino-Iranienne, 235-97; Origine Babylonienne de l’Astronomie Chinoise, 5-18.

The reader will note that the directional connections of the four peripheral planets do not correspond to the connections in the Chinese system. What is vital is Saturn's central station as the source of the four emanations. "The planet that the Chinese consider as the symbol of the emperor [i.e., Saturn] is associated, in Iran, with the Great One in the Middle of Heaven, which is to say, with the celestial pole; it bears the name . . . of Kevan and it is precisely identified by the translators with Saturn."687

After reviewing the stunning concordance of the Chinese and Iranian symbolism, de Saussure concluded that the Iranian system must have been borrowed from the Chinese. Later, however, following correspondence with the Iranian scholar Junker, de Saussure changed his opinion; for Junker pointed out that the same idea—the polar centre surrounded by four heavens-divisions—prevailed in the older Babylonian and Hindu systems. Therefore, concluded de Saussure, "the division of the universe into a central region and four peripheral divisions [and] the assimilation of the terrestrial sovereign to the celestial pole . . . occurs not only in Chinese cosmology—which is particularly rational, symmetrical and well preserved—but also in Babylonian, Vedic [Hindu] and Iranian cosmologies."688

Most surprising of all, however, was the discovery by de Saussure and Junker that when the principles of the five regions are applied to the oldest enumeration of the sun, moon, and planets in Babylonia, Saturn acquires the central (polar) station.689 "In the most ancient Babylonian series [of planets] based on the number five," states de Saussure, "the planet Saturn is placed, as in China, in the middle."690 The polar Saturn, presiding over the central region and surrounded by the powers of the four quarters, thus occurs in the earliest formal astronomy.

To summarize: The imagery of the quartered kingdom centers on the sign of the sun-cross , depicting Saturn sending the seed of life in the four directions. Ancient mythmakers interpreted the radiating streams as four beams of light, four winds, four rivers, four paths of arrows, or four pillars of the Cosmos .

But the heaven-dividing streams eventually passed into an expanded symbolism, relating each direction to an element, season, colour, or planet. In such elaborate and symmetrical renderings of the quartered kingdom, one recognizes the arbitrary influence of innovation. But the root idea remains consistent from one land to another, and when such symbolism is subject to scrutiny, Saturn looms at the cosmic centre—the "fifth region," the immovable pole around which the directional elements, seasons, planets, etc. are ranged.

---

687 De Saussure, Le Système Cosmologique Sino-Iranienne, 277.

688 "Origine Babylonienne de l'Astronomie Chinoise, 18.

689 Ibid., 16-17.

690 La Série Septénaire, 358.

VII: Temple, Crown, Vase, Eye, And Circular Serpent

A primary thesis of this book is that the Saturnian configuration provoked many different symbols, whose underlying relationship to a single cosmic form too often goes unnoticed.

When the ancients laid out the sacred city they sought to establish a likeness of the cosmic dwelling, a circle around a fixed centre. And in organizing the first kingdoms, unifying once-separate territories, the founders followed the same celestial plan.

There was only one dwelling of the great god, but this dwelling inspired imitative forms of varying scale and varying ritual functions. At root the creator's home is simply "the place," "the land," "the holy abode," or "the enclosure." Only with the construction of imitative cities does the god's residence become "the cosmic city." And only after the organization of imitative terrestrial kingdoms can one meaningfully term the heavenly abode a "celestial kingdom."

What the smallest city and grandest empire have in common is an identical relationship to the Saturnian enclosure. Distinctions of scale "down here" do not alter the fact that the celestial city and kingdom are absolutely synonymous.

In addition to the images of the Saturnian band reviewed in the foregoing sections, several others require attention.

The Temple

Like the ancient city and kingdom, the terrestrial shrine copies Saturn's dwelling. (Saturn, as we have seen, founded the "first" temple.) Though the local temple acquired its own special functions and attributes, the ritual leaves no doubt that the cosmic "house," "shrine," and "chamber" mean the same thing as the "city of heaven."

Sumerian texts describe the cosmic city of Eridu as:

The house built of silver, adorned with lapis lazuli . . .

The abyss [cosmic ocean],

the shrine of the goodness of Enki, befitting the divine decrees,

Eridu, the pure house having been built.[691]

Conversely, the celestial temple is called "the primeval city" (the very title of many Sumerian cities themselves), and the hymns say of the Kes temple:

Indeed it is a city, indeed it is a city, who know its interior?

The Kes temple is indeed a city, who knows its interior?[692]

Enki, the Sumerian Saturn, erects his temple or "sea house" as the crowning act of creation:

---

[691] Kramer, Sumerian Mythology, 63. [Emphasis added.]

[692] Gragg, The Keš Temple Hymn, 170-71.

After the water of creation has been decreed,
After the name hegal (Abundance), born of heaven,
Like the plant and herb had clothed the land,
The lord of the abyss, the King Enki,
Enki, the lord who decrees the fates,
Built his house of silver and lapis lazuli:
Its silver and lapis lazuli, like sparkling light.
*The father fashioned fittingly in the abyss.*693

This is the "far-famed house built in the bosom [heart, centre] of the Nether sea."694 The cosmic dwelling becomes the "Good temple built on a good place . . . floating in the sky . . . heaven's midst."695 It is said to "float like a cloud in the midst of the sky."696

In constructing the earthbound copy of the temple above, states Jastrow, the Babylonians strove to make both the exterior and interior "resplendent with brilliant colouring—'brilliant as the sun.'"697 The purpose is clear: to imbue the local temple with a lustre matching that of the prototype. Symbolically, the local temple takes on the radiance of the celestial, becoming the "house of light," "house of the brilliant precinct," or "lofty and brilliant wall"; "the house of great splendour," "the beautiful house," "the brilliant house."698

To deal with the Sumero-Babylonian imagery in its own terms one must understand the cosmic temple not only as the god's house—but more. The temple fashioned in the abyss is the created "earth." The Sumerian Ekur, the house of Enlil on the cosmic sea Apsu, means both "temple" and "earth" ("land," "place").699

Gragg confirms the identity of the cosmic temple and the created "earth" when he notes "the cosmic dimensions of the temple. It fills the whole world."700 The Sumerians celebrated the god's shrine as the "pure place, earth of An," (that is, Saturn's Earth).701

Throughout the previous sections I have contended that Saturn's dwelling produced the original myth of the lost paradise. That the great god's house enclosed the cosmic land of fertility and abundance is the straightforward declaration of the Sumerian temple hymns. (Though some of the lines in the following quotes are broken, one cannot fail to discern the consistent theme):

House, Mountain, like herbs and plants beautifully blooming

---

693 Kramer, op. cit., 63.

694 Combe, Histoire du Culte de Sin, 121.

695 Gragg, op. cit., 169.

696 Sjöberg and Bergmann, The Collection of the Sumerian Temple Hymns, 13.

697 The Religion of Babylonia and Assyria, 632.

698 Ibid., 641.

699 The same meaning attaches to the Babylonian Esharra, the dwelling which the creator measured out on the cosmic sea. Jastrow calls Esharra "a poetic designation of the earth." The Religion of Babylonia and Assyria, 431. Jensen relates the term especially to the earth as it appeared at the creation. Die Kosmologie der Babylonier, 188*ff.* The literal meaning is "house of fullness" or "house of fertility."

700 Op. cit., 158.

701 Ibid., 23. [Emphasis added.]

. . . your interior is plentitude.[702]

The temple is built; its abundance is good!

The Kes temple is built; its abundance is good![703]

House with well-formed jars, set up under heaven . . .

(Full of) the abundance of the midst of the sea . . .

Emah, the house of Sara, the faithful man has enlarged for you (Umma) in plenty . . .

(With) good fortune it is expanding, (its)

. . . abundance and well-being . . .[704]

House . . . from your midst (comes) plenty,

Your treasury (is) a mountain of abundance . . .[705]

Your interior is the place where the sun rises*, endowed with abundance, far-reaching . . .*[706]

House with the great me's of Kulaba . . . ,

(its) . . . has made the temple flourish,

Well grown fresh fruit, marvellous, filled with ripeness,

Descending from the midst of heaven . . .[707]

One sees that the temple stands at the cosmic "midst" or centre. From its interior shines the primeval sun, it houses the flourishing celestial garden.

The chamber of the great god, according to Sumerian creation myths, was that in which dwelt the original generation of "men" (i.e., the company of gods to whom all races traced their ancestry and from which each race took its name). The chamber was the prototype of Eden, the ancestral birthplace.

In the Sumerian myth of the primordial hero Tagtug occurs a lively description of the god's chamber as a celestial garden. Occupying the house of abundance are the Anunnaki, the great god's companions. And here came into being the first generation of "Mankind":

The abundance of the goddess of flocks and of the Grain Goddess,

The Anunnaki in "the holy chamber"

Ate and were not filled . . .

The Anunnaki in "the holy chamber"

Drank and were not filled.

In the holy park, for their (the god's) benefit,

---

[702] Sjöberg and Bergmann, op. cit., Temple Hymn 39.

[703] Gragg, op. cit., 174.

[704] Ibid., Temple Hymn 25.

[705] Ibid., Temple Hymn 18.

[706] Ibid., Temple Hymn 15. [Emphasis added.]

[707] Ibid., Temple Hymn 21.

Mankind with the soul of life came into being.
Then Enki said to Enlil:
"Father Enlil, flocks and grain
In "the holy chamber" have been made plentiful.
In "the holy chamber" mightily shall they bring forth."
By the incantation of Enki and Enlil
Flocks and grain in "the holy chamber" brought forth.
Pasture they provided for them abundantly,
For the Grain-goddess they prepared a house . . .[708]

The flowering of the celestial garden is a widespread theme which I touched on briefly in the earlier discussion of the Egyptian creation and which I intend to explore at greater length in a subsequent volume. It is surely worthy of note, however, that the great god's "chamber" is the same as the "holy park" in which "Mankind" was brought forth.

If one reads the above lines in the light of the Egyptian symbolism—which equates the first generation of gods (men) with the "abundance" erupting from the creator—the Sumerian myth takes on greater meaning than might otherwise be evident. Immediately after the statement, "Mankind with the soul of life came into being," Enki declares that "flocks and grain in 'the holy chamber' have been made plentiful." The primeval generation was the same thing as the overflowing abundance, both referring to the luminous debris which erupted from the creator as "speech." Thus the "flocks and grain" of the celestial garden, according to the Sumerian text, are brought forth "by the incantation [i.e., speech] of Enki and Enlil" (two competing figures of the single creator). To my knowledge, such close parallels between the Egyptian and Mesopotamian creation accounts have never received adequate attention by comparative mythologists.

The blossoming chamber of the Sumerian creation also finds a counterpart in a Hawaiian genesis myth, reproduced by Leinani Melville:

Man descended from the Sacred Shrine of
The King who created the heavens.
The Shrine of the King of Heaven who caused that distant realm to bloom and flower:
The Consecrated Realm of Teave, the World of Teave.[709]

Both the Hawaiian and Sumerian sources place the genesis of the race in the great god's shrine or chamber, likened to a flowering garden. Just as the Sumerian chamber or temple corresponds to the "earth," so does the Hawaiian sacred shrine answer to "the World of Teave."

The Egyptian Temple

As in Mesopotamia, Egyptian sources portray the primeval temple as the visible dwelling of the sun-god:

May I shine like Re in his divine splendour in the temple.[710]

Homage to thee [Osiris Nu], O thou who art within the divine shrine, who shinest with rays of light and sendest forth radiance from thyself.[711]

---

[708] Langdon, Semitic Mythology, 190-91.

[709] Melville, Children of the Rainbow, 21.

[710] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 638.

> . . . Every god shall . . . rejoice at the life of Ptah when he maketh his appearance from the great temple of the Aged One which is in Annu.[712]
>
> Thou art the ruler of all the gods and thou hast joy of heart within the shrine.[713]

The great god's shrine, house, or temple is the band of "glory," the Aten ☉: "Your pavilion is enlarged in the interior of the Aten," states a Coffin Text.[714]

When the Egyptians laid the foundation of a temple, they consecrated the enclosed ground as "the primeval territory of the domain of the sun-god."[715] Each temple became a miniature of the cosmic habitation founded in the creation. Thus the Egyptians viewed the Edfu temple as "the veritable descendant of the mythical temple that was created at the dawn of this world . . . ," Reymond tells us.[716] The foundation ground became "the Blessed Territory from the time of the Primeval Ones . . . , the Hinterland of the Primeval Water."[717] This was the Province of the Beginning, "the Blessed Homeland."[718]

In Hebrew cosmology, reports Wensinck, "the sanctuary is the type and representation of Cosmos and Paradise and as such a power diametrically opposed to Chaos."[719]

From the very spot of the Hebrew temple "the first ray of light issued and illuminated the whole world." Indeed, the temple was the "whole world," according to a Midrash: "The temple corresponds to the whole world."[720] Tradition states that the primordial light was "not identical with the light of the sun, moon and stars," but lit up the temple from its centre and radiated out through the windows.[721] The cosmic temple, in other words, was the lost land of the "dawn" or first "sunrise."

Temple And Womb

Nothing is more basic to the imagery of the temple than its identity as the cosmic womb. Neumann observes: "Just as the temple is . . . a symbol of the Great Goddess as house and shelter, so the temple gate is the entrance into the goddess; it is her womb, and the innumerable entrance and threshold rites of mankind are expressions of this numinous feminine place."[722] Throughout the Near East, states Allegro, "the temple was designed with a large measure of uniformity" and this sacred abode is "now recognizable as a microcosm of the womb."[723]

---

[711] Ibid., 404.

[712] Ibid., 51.

[713] Ibid., 17.

[714] Lacau, Traduction des textes ses Cerueils du Moyen Empire, 45.

[715] Reymond, The Mythical Origin of the Egyptian Temple, 311.

[716] Ibid., 311.

[717] Ibid., 311.

[718] Ibid., 305. [Emphasis added.]

[719] "The Ideas of the Western Semites Concerning the Navel of the Earth," 15.

[720] Patai, Man and Temple, 116.

[721] Ibid., 84-85.

[722] The Great Mother, 159.

[723] Allegro, The Sacred Mushroom and the Cross, 25.

Not in one land, but in every segment of the world, the sacred texts confirm this identity of temple and womb. The Egyptian great god resides within the womb of the goddess as in a "house" or "chamber." The goddess Hathor is "the house of Horus."[724] The name of Isis means "chamber," "house," "abode," etc., and the Egyptians claimed she was the house in which Horus came into being.[725] Nut is "the good house,"[726] and Neith the "house of Osiris,"[727] while the name of Nephthys means "Lady of the House."

The identity stands out in this hymn to Re: "I am exalted like the holy god who dwelleth in the Great Temple, and the gods rejoice when they see me in my beautiful coming forth from the body [khat, "womb"] of Nut, when my mother Nut giveth birth to me."[728] To shine as the "sun" within the cosmic temple is to come forth within the womb of Nut, "the good house."

Among the Egyptians, notes Sethe, "house" served as a poetic expression for the womb.[729] Clearly, this "poetic expression" originated as a radical identity in the ritual. Just as the goddess' titles denominate her the "house" or "temple" of the great god, so does the temple receive the character of the goddess. Ptah's temple at Memphis is the "mistress of life,"[730] and an inscription in King Seti I's funerary temple states, "I am thy temple, thy mother, forever and forever."[731] The Holy Chamber from which Re shines forth is, according to Piankoff, "The Holy Chamber of the Netherworld [Tuat], the womb of divine birth."[732]

Throughout Mesopotamia, one discovers the same features of the temple. Here, too, the cosmic "house" appears as the womb of primeval genesis. Urukug is "the shrine which causes the seed to come forth,"[733] while the temple of Aruru is "the procreative womb of Emah"[734] and the temple of Lilzag "the house of exalted seed."[735]

The Mesopotamian temple or chamber thus gives birth to the god. Tammuz, the man-child, is "the offspring of the house"[736] and Marduk the "Child of the holy chamber."[737] In the Babylonian creation epic we read:

In the chamber of fate, the abode of destinies,

A god was engendered, most able and wisest of gods.

In the heart of the Apsu was Marduk created.[738]

---

[724] Bleeker, Hathor and Thoth, 25.

[725] Budge, Osiris: the Egyptian Religion of Resurrection, Vol.II, 272.

[726] Budge, The Gods of the Egyptians, Vol. I, 462.

[727] Levy, Religious Conceptions of the Stone Age, 117.

[728] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 260.

[729] Cited in Bleeker, op. cit., 25.

[730] Pritchard, ed., Ancient Near Eastern Texts, 5.

[731] Frankfort, Kingship and the Gods, 67.

[732] The Litany of Re, 25n.

[733] Sjöberg and Bergmann, op. cit., 32.

[734] Langdon, Sumerian Liturgical Texts, 115.

[735] Ibid., 141.

[736] Langdon, Semitic Mythology, 347.

[737] Ibid., 155.

"You have taken my seed into the womb, have given birth to me in the shrine," declares King Gudea to the goddess Gatumdug.[739] One can compare the Sumerian text: "In the great house he has begotten me."[740] As in Egypt, the gate of a sanctuary is conceived as the entrance to the womb of the goddess.[741] Hence, Sargon styles one of the gates of his palace Belit ilani, "mistress of the gods."[742]

The Crown

Among all ancient races the crown, wreath, or headband signified religious and political authority. Yet this world-wide function of the crown reflects no self-evident fact of human nature or of the external world. What was the source of the crown's numinous powers?

The symbols of kingship have their origin in the Universal Monarch, the ancestor of kings and "founder" of the kingship ritual. Legends of the great god say that, when he established his kingdom, he wore as a crown his "circle of glory" (halo, aura). Before Egyptian rulers ever donned the White Crown, the crown of the great father Osiris shed its light at the cosmic centre: "His crown clove the sky and consorted with the stars."[743] The primordial sun, reports Pliny, "established civilization and first triumphantly crowned heaven with his glowing circle."[744] In the ritual of the Mandaeans it was the "First Man" who wore as a crown the "circle of radiance, light and glory."[745] One could hardly make a greater mistake than to assume, with so many modern scholars, that the crowns worn by gods are simply projections onto the heaven order of the crowns worn by terrestrial kings. Divorced from the crown of the Universal Monarch, the headdress of the local king becomes a meaningless artifact. Whatever powers the crown may possess, they derive from the cosmic prototype.

---

[738] Ancient Near Eastern Texts, 62.

[739] Kramer, The Sacred Marriage Rite, 28.

[740] Langdon, A Sumerian Grammar, 253.

[741] Levy, op. cit., 100.

[742] Jastrow, op. cit., 327. Of the goddess Belit-ekalla, "Belit of the palace," Jastrow writes: "it must be confessed that the precise force of the qualification of 'Belit of the palace' escapes us." Ibid., 227. To one aware of the root meaning of the god's "house" the title can hardly pose a mystery.

The identity of "womb" and "house" occurs in every section of the globe. Simplicus reports that the Syrian goddess Derceto or Atargatis was the habitation of the gods, just as Orphic doctrine styled Vesta the house of the gods. Faber, The Origins of Pagan Idolatry, III, 49. The Hindu Rig Veda states: "They conduct him to the hut of the consecrated; the hut of the consecrated." Keith, Rigveda Brahmanas, 108. The same meaning of the sacred house prevails in China, according to Hentze, Das Haus als Weltort der Seele, 73.

The Mayans knew the goddess Ix Ahau Na, rendered by Roys as "Palace Lady"—an appellation exactly equivalent to the Babylonian "Belit of the Palace" and the Egyptian "Lady of the House" (Nephthys). In the Mayan language Na means both "mother" and "house." See J. Eric and S. Thompson, Maya History and Religion, 245.

With this understanding of the cosmic temple, one can better appreciate the sacred marriage rites so often conducted in sacred chambers. The king or high priest signified the god, while the queen or priestess represented the goddess and thus the temple itself, the cosmic receptacle housing the seed of abundance. Symbolically the temple was the spouse of the king, and the kings union with the temple maiden reenacted the primal marriage.

" . . . It is from the temple," states Patai, "that the blessings of fertility issued forth the whole world . . . The temples of many an ancient people were regarded as the Nuptial Chamber in which the divine powers of fertility, the Father God and Mother Goddess, celebrated their great annual wedding feast for the purpose of ensuring the fruitfulness of the earth and the multiplication of man and beast." Patai, op. cit., 88.

[743] Clark, Myth and Symbol in Ancient Egypt, 103.

[744] Quoted in Brown, Researches into the Origins of the Primitive Constellation, Vol. I, 32.

[745] Drower, The Coronation of the Great Šišlam, 13.

Fundamentally, the crown is an enclosing band. The most important component of the Egyptian crown was the gold headband, while the great god was “Master of the Head-Band.”[746] The Sumerian word for crown, uku, means “great band.”[747] In the classical etymologies reviewed by Onians the “crown” possesses the concrete meaning of a “circle” or “band” enclosing a god or a man.[748]

When the Egyptian priests placed the sacred band on the head of the king, deeming him the regent of the sun-god Re, they were guided by the image of the great god himself, whose hieroglyphic was , showing the sun-god in the circle of the Aten. Thus, in the Theban ritual, the gods Horus and Set say to the new king, “I will give thee a life like unto that of Re, years even as the years of Tem,” and “I will establish the crown upon thy head even like the Aten on the head of Amen-Re.”[749]

The great god not only wears the crown of glory, he dwells in it. He “appears in the White Crown”[750] or “comes forth from the Very Great Crown.”[751] In the Book of the Dead one finds “the divine being who dwelleth in the nemmes crown.”[752]

More specifically, the god’s crown is his spouse—the womb-goddess who emanated from the god, yet gave birth to him.

O Red crown, O Inu [the crown],

O Great One . . .

O Inu, thou hast come forth from me;

And I have come forth from thee.[753]

To wear the crown is to reside within the womb; or conversely, to be born in the womb is to wear the crown.[754] It is in this sense that one must understand the statement of the Coffin Texts that the god is “born” in the crown or that the king is “the son of the white crown.”[755] The same identification of crown and womb explains the statement that Osiris first shone forth “fully crowned from his mothers womb.”[756] Does not the sign depict the “fully crowned” god within the cosmic womb?

“I am he who is girt about with his girdle and who cometh forth from the goddess of the Ureret crown.”[757] This statement from the Book of the Dead concurs with numerous other references in Egyptian texts, equating the crown with the mother goddess. In the Pyramid Texts we read: “I know my mother, I have not forgotten my mother, the white crown."[758] The same texts say of the king: "thy mother is the Great Wild Cow, living in Nekeb, the white crown, the Royal Headdress."[759] Accordingly, the Egyptians esteemed the goddess Isis as "the Crown of Re-Horus"[760] and the goddess Tefnut as the "diadem of Re."[761]

---

[746] Muller, Egyptian Mythology, 129.

[747] Langdon, Sumerian Grammar, 21.

[748] The Origins of European Thought, 445, 450-460.

[749] Budge, Gods, Vol. II, 344. [Emphasis added.]

[750] Piankoff, The Shrines of Tut-Ankh-Amon, 117.

[751] Piankoff, The Wandering of the Soul, 22.

[752] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 253.

[753] Quoted in Frankfort, op. cit., 108.

[754] Lacau, op. cit., 22.

[755] Budge, Egyptian Book of the Dead, 248.

[756] Clark, op. cit., 177.

[757] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 345.

The identity of goddess and crown, has, in fact, been fully acknowledged by Clark and Frankfort, among others.[762] Yet Frankfort's explanation amounts to this: "The goddess is simply the personification of the power of royalty . . . and hence is immanent in the crown."[763] The statement tacitly assumes that the local crown came first (who knows why) and that the great goddess, personifying an abstract "power of royalty," came to be identified with the crown simply because the crown was a symbol of royal power.

But the relationship of the crown and womb amounts to a radical identity; both take their character from the same visible band. Ignored by Frankfort is the explicit equation of both the goddess and the crown with the circle of the Aten.

That the god dwells in the crown means that the crown is the god's house or temple—what the Egyptians called "the temple of the White Crown." Speaking of the headgear of Sumer and Egypt, Levy notes that "in each case it bears a relation to the monuments. It [the crown] may, in fact, be considered as itself a little sanctuary."[764] But what was the source of this unexpected identity? Sumerian temple hymns repeatedly invoke the cosmic temple as the great god's crown. The temple of Eqaduda is the "Crown of the high plain"[765] and Sippar the "Sanctuary of heaven, star of heaven, crown, borne by Ningal."[766] The Kes temple becomes the "Great, true temple, reaching the sky, temple, great crown, reaching the sky . . ."[767]

The same identity prevails elsewhere. Hentze, observing that the Mexican Quetzalcoatl wears his temple as a crown, reports that such symbolism pervades early Chinese bronzes. One notes also the "world house" worn as a crown by the famous Diana of Ephesus. Like the sacred abode of all great gods the latter crown-temple has four doors facing in four directions.[768]

Since the cosmic temple is the same thing as the cosmic city, one should not be surprised to find that the city also appears as the crown. In the Book of the Dead occurs a description of "Re when at the beginning he rose in the city of Suten-henen [Heracleopolis], crowned like a king in his rising."[769] The evidence suggests that the city (or kingdom) in which Re first shone forth was the very circle of glory which he wore as a crown—and this is why, in the symbols and , the Egyptians combined the hetch-crown and tesher-crown with the symbol of the goddess Nut , the "city" or "holy land." In accord with this identity the Babylonian hymn proclaims, "Borsippa [the cosmic city] is thy crown."770

---

[758] Pyramid Text 910.

[759] Pyramid Text 729, quoted in Frankfort, op. cit., 174.

[760] Budge, Gods, Vol. II, 213.

[761] Hassan, Hymnes Religieux du Moyen Empire, 46.

[762] Frankfort, op. cit., 107, 174; Clark, op. cit., 219.

[763] Op. cit., 107.

[764] Op. cit., 176.

[765] Sjöberg and Bergmann, op. cit., 21.

[766] Ibid., 45. [Emphasis added.]

[767] Gragg, op. cit., 169. [Emphasis added.]

[768] Hentze, op. cit., 96.

[769] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 93.

Often the crown takes the form of a city wall. The most famous example, perhaps, is the crown of Tyche of Antioch, which corresponds to the turreted wall of the city.771 Concerning the goddess of the city-crown, Suhr writes: ". . . the whole city wall, in a diminutive version, was placed on her head, beginning with Astarte and continuing with Aphrodite of Greek and Roman times."772 Yet why the crown was assimilated to the city wall remains unexplained by modern researchers—and will continue to remain a puzzle until scholars acknowledge the concrete form of the mother goddess, city, and crown as a single band of light around the great god.

The Vase

Mythmaking imagination also expressed the Saturnian band as a vase or receptacle housing the sun-god and his waters of life: all the waters of the world, according to ancient belief, originated in the solitary god.

As a symbol of the all-containing receptacle above, the round vessel became a popular figure of the mother goddess. ". . . The great goddess as divine water jar is the mistress of the upper waters." observes Neumann.773

G. Elliot Smith notices the close connection of the mother goddess with the vase: "The idea of the Mother Pot is found not only in Babylonia, Egypt, India, and the Eastern Mediterranean, but wherever the influence of these ancient civilizations made itself felt. It is widespread among the Celtic-speaking peoples . . . It became also a witch's cauldron, the magic cup, the Holy Grail, the font in which a child is reborn in the faith, the vessel of water here being interpreted in the earliest sense as the uterus or the organ of birth."774

Figure 29. The goddess Nut as the revolving water container.

The vase, in the Egyptian hieroglyphs, denotes the celestial goddess Nut and the female principle in general.775 An interesting Egyptian illustration depicts Nut, bearing the cosmic vessel on her head, and spinning around with sufficient speed to cause drops of water to fly outward (see fig. 29).

---

770 Sayce, Lectures on the Origin and Growth of Religion, 81.

771 Langdon, Semitic Mythology, 19-23.

772 The Spinning Aphrodite, 146.

773 Op. cit., 127.

774 The Evolution of the Dragon, 181.

775 Neumann, op. cit., 128.

The mother goddess is the revolving water container in heaven. Sumero-Babylonian cylinder seals show the purifying waters of the Apsu descending from a vase, regarded as the mother womb. The vase is in "the heaven of Anu," called "the place of the flowing forth of the waters which open the womb."[776]

The same symbolism of the vase prevails in China, according to Hentze (who relates the symbolism of the feminine container to a global tradition).[777] The Zuni address the sacred pot as "the Mother,"[778] while a Peruvian jar covered with breasts on all sides obviously expresses the identical theme.[779]

Thus does the sun-god dwell in the vase, renewing his birth each "day": "I have come forth from my djenit-jar, and I will appear in the morning," reads an Egyptian Pyramid Text.[780] (I remind the reader that archaic "day" means our "night.") To the same symbolism belongs the Hindu Vasishtha who is "born from the jar"[781] and is obviously akin to the Iranian Fravashi Khumbya, "the son of the jar."[782] Muslim tradition echoes this theme in declaring that the soul of Mohammed preexisted in a vase of light in the world of spirits.[783] The Chinese alchemist Wei Po-Yang says: "The True Man living in a deep abyss, floats about the centre of the round vessel."[784] The mother vase housing the manchild appears even in Mexico (fig. 31).[785]

Among the Mayans, writes Nuttall, the vase symbolized "the divine essence of light and life proceeding from 'the Heart of Heaven.'"[786] Appropriately they designated the symbolic vase as the "navel or centre,"[787] a characterization which agrees with Neumann's interpretation of the vase as the "centre from which the universe is nourished."[788]

The vase denotes, in other words, the celestial earth, the original land of abundance. While the Egyptian priests of Ptah claimed the primeval land to have been fashioned by Ptah on his potter's wheel, the hymns also extol "the pottery which Ptah moulded"[789] in clear reference to the same primordial enclosure: the subject is the realm of the ancestors, where the resurrected dead receive "the fresh water in a jar which Ptah has fashioned."[790]

---

[776] Albright, The Mouth of the Rivers, 173.

[777] Op. cit.

[778] Nuttall, Fundamental Principles of Old and New World Civilization, 105.

[779] Neumann, op. cit., 124.

[780] Pyramid Text 437.

[781] Agrawala, Sparks from the Vedic Fire, 21.

[782] Darmesteter, The Zend Avesta, Part II, 225.

[783] O'Niell, The Night of the Gods, 923.

[784] Jung, Mysterium Coniunctionis, 348.

[785] Nuttall, op. cit., 100.

[786] Ibid., 284.

[787] Ibid., 96.

[788] Op. cit., 132.

[789] M. S. Holmberg, The God Ptah, 46. [Emphasis added.]

[790] Ibid., 46. [Emphasis added.]

Figure 30. The mother goddess as water container. Vase from Troy, fourth stratum.

Figure 31. Man-child in vase. From Mexico, Vienna Codex.

Here is the declaration of “the potter” in the Pyramid Texts (as translated by Faulkner): “I am your potter upon earth . . . I have come and have brought to you this mansion of yours which I built for you on that night when you were born, on the day of your birth-place; it is a beer-jar (sic!).”[791] Most instructive is Faulkner’s parenthetical “sic!” following the phrase “beer-jar”—as if to suggest that the scribe suffered a lapse of reason: what could a beer jar have to do with the great god’s “mansion” and “birthplace”? Among the Egyptians beer symbolized fertility and abundance flowing from on high. The ritual “beer-jar” was the primeval land—the dwelling which congealed around the great father and (as the cosmic womb) “gave birth” to him. The same texts in which the above lines appear locate the potter god in “this Island of Earth.” Vessel, temple, earth, and womb denote the same celestial enclosure.

The Eye

One of the most mysterious symbols which have come down to us is the solitary and all-seeing Eye. In ancient Egypt, where the most complete information is available, the symbol pervades the monuments and the sacred texts of all periods. “The Eye is the key to the religion,” states Clark.[792] Yet no archaic sign has been less understood than the mystic Eye: “The Eye is the commonest symbol in Egyptian thought and the strangest to us.”[793]

---

[791] Pyramid Texts 1184-85. In Numerous ancient rites reviewed by Hentze—from China to Mexico to Italy—the deceased, or their ashes, were placed in vases which possessed the shape of a house; and these “house-urns,” in each cult, symbolized the “Earth-Mother.” Artists in China and Peru depicted the house-urn containing an unborn child. The vase sheltered the deceeased as the womb, giving birth (that is, rebirth) to him in the land of beginnings. Neumann describes similar symbolism of the house-urn in the Aegean cults of the Bronze Age, where the dead man lies in the vessel “as a child in the attitude of an embryo.” The practice of enclosing the dead within house-like vases symbolizing the mother-womb does not explain itself. The union of womb, house, and vessel hearkens back to the primordial order and the original dwelling of the great father. See Hentze, op. cit.; Neumann, op. cit., 163.

[792] Op. cit., 227.

Is the Eye, as almost uniformly asserted, the solar orb? Nowhere is the weakness of solar mythology more apparent than in its handling of this puzzling symbol. One Egyptologist after another, by following the solar interpretation, passes over in silence the many enigmatic particulars of eye symbolism.

To my knowledge the only well-known authority to reject categorically the solar interpretation is Rudolph Anthes. After devoting extensive research to the Eye of Re, Anthes concludes that the Eye “apparently never was the sun.”[794] Yet Anthes, seeking an answer in the heavens as they appear to us today, does not begin to unravel the interconnected symbolism of the Eye.

Strictly speaking the Egyptian Eye is neither a “sun” nor a “star,” but the circle or enclosure fashioned by the creator as his celestial home. The great god resides in the Eye as the pupil. One of the most common names of the Eye in Egypt is Utchat, hieroglyphically rendered as . The Utchat hieroglyph combines three closely related signs:

1) , meaning “to see” and also “to form, fashion, create”;

2) , “to fashion, encircle”; and

3) , “cord, to bind, to encircle.”

The all-seeing Eye is the created enclosure, the bond around the primeval sun.

Thus the god has his home in the Utchat (Eye): “I am in the Utchat.”[795] “I am he who dwelleth in the Utchat.”[796] “Enter thou in peace [em hetep, “at rest”] into the divine Utchat.”[797]

A Coffin Text reads, “I am Horus in his Eye,”[798] while the Harris Magical Papyrus states, “I am Shu under the form of Re, seated in the middle of his father’s eye.”[799] In the Book of the Dead one finds: “I am the pure one in his eye”;[800] “I am he who dwelleth in the middle of his own Eye.”[801]

Thus does the great god reside in the enclosure of the Eye as the “pupil.” “Praise be to thee, O Ra, Exalted Sekhem, aged one of the pupil of the Utchat [Eye].”[802] “I am in the Utchat . . . I sit in [em, “as”] the pupil of the eye . . . ”;[803] “God-the-pupil-of-whose-eye-is-terrible is thy name . . .”

---

[793] Ibid., 218.

[794] Rudolf Anthes, Mythology in Ancient Egypt, in Kramer, Mythologies of the Ancient World, 87-90. [Emphasis added.]

[795] Lacau, op. cit., 177.

[796] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 178.

[797] Ibid., 638.

[798] Lacau, op. cit., 65.

[799] Lenormant, Chaldean Magic, 103.

[800] Budge, Papyrus of Ani, 219.

[801] Renouf, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 164.

[802] Budge, Gods, Vol. I, 344.

[803] Budge, Papyrus of Ani, 219.

When the texts speak of “the Eye of ‘Re who is in his Aten,”[804] one recognizes that the Eye is the Aten, for the Egyptians treated the Eye sign and the Aten sign as interchangeable symbols. Just as the Aten constituted the protective enclosure, so did the Eye: “O Osiris Nu, the Eye of Horus protecteth thee, it keepeth thee in safety . . .”[805] “. . . He is Horus encircled with the protection of his Eye . . .”[806] “My refuge is my Eye, my protection is my Eye . . .”[807] “I am the dweller in the Eye; no evil or calamitous things befall me.”[808]

Such references surely indicate that the Eye is not the sun or the sun-god, but the goddess, in whose protective womb the sun-god dwells. As a matter of fact, though Egyptian ritual presents the goddess under many names, all primary figures of the goddess receive the appellation “Eye of Re.” This includes, among others, Isis, Hathor, Nut, Sekhet, Iusaaset, Mehurt, Bast, Tefnut—and of course, the goddess Utchat (“Eye”).[809]

“The complex meshes of eye symbolism,” states Clark, “are woven all around the Egyptian Goddess and she cannot be understood or compared with other goddesses until they are unravelled.”[810] Yet, while Clark notes several interesting associations of the Eye and goddess he fails to discern the Eye’s root character, as the protective enclosure.

Only the direct identity of the Eye and cosmic womb will explain its context in the ritual: “The child who is in the eye of Horus, hath been presented to thee . . .”[811] “I am he whose being has been moulded in his eye.”[812] Horus is said to “. . . rear and nourish the multitudes through that Unique Eye, Mistress of the Divine Company and Lady of the Universe [All, Cosmos].”[813]

The very goddesses whom the texts depict as the Eye of the primeval sun are also called the “house,” as we should expect. As to the identity of the Eye and the temple, Egyptian sources leave no room for debate (though I know of no Egyptologist to observe the connection). The temple of Karnak is “the healthy eye of the Lord of All,”[814] a striking parallel to the Sumerian temple as the “House, eye of the land.”[815]

In the Book of the Pylons Re hearkens back to the remote age when “I was in the temple of my eye,”[816] while the Book of the Dead speaks of the son of Osiris residing “within the temple of his Eye in Annu.”[817] Elsewhere one finds the primeval sun coming forth “in the sanctuary of my eye.”[818]

---

[804] Vandier, “Iousâas et (Hathor)-Nébet-Hétépet,” 31, 83.

[805] Budge, Egyptian Book of the Dead, 415.

[806] Pyramid Text 195.

[807] Pyramid Text 320.

[808] Renouf, op. cit., 97.

[809] Budge, Gods, Vol. I, 354, 422, 430, 443, 447, 517; Vol. II, 213, 279.

[810] Op. cit., 227.

[811] Budge, The Litany of Funerary Offerings, 135.

[812] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead 178.

[813] Clark, op. cit., 150. [Emphasis added.] That the Eye, though female, belongs to the great father (as the “Eye of Horus,” “Eye of Ra,” or “Eye of Nu”) agrees fundamentally with the character of the enclosed sun (here) already examined. The sun and its enclosure constitute the primordial Androgyne or “Father-Mother.” A common idea underlies the mythical recollections of “birth” from the great gods navel, thigh, or eye; the imagery focuses on the simple and universal form of the primal parents: (here).

[814] Frankfort, op. cit., 152.

[815] Sjöberg and Bergmann, op. cit., 41.

[816] Budge, Gods, Vol. I, 186.

Figure 32. The eye of the resting god.

Of course no one who automatically thinks “sun” when reading “eye” is likely to reflect on the overlapping symbols of the eye as a band or enclosure. Nor can one so trained meaningfully explain why, throughout Egyptian ritual, the eye appears in conjunction with the crown. In the Egyptian mystery play, the king is commanded, “take thou thine eye, whole to thy face,” and the command is carried out by placing the crown upon the king—for the crown, as “the symbol and seat of royal power . . . is called the eye of Horus.”[819]

The Pyramid Texts say, “Horus has given you his eye that you may take possession of the Urert-Crown.”[820] “O king, stand up, don the eye of Horus . . . that you may go forth in it, that the gods may see you clad in it.”[821] As to the identity of Eye and crown one could not ask for more explicit statements than these: “I wear the white crown, the eye of Horus.”[822] “O Osiris the king, I make firm the eye of Horus on your head—a headband.”[823] “I give you the crown of Upper Egypt, the eye which went up from your head.”[824] (The circle of glory issued from the central sun.)

If the god wears the Eye as a crown, so also does he take the Eye as a throne, and this relationship of the Eye and throne helps to explain the hieroglyph for Osiris, in which the two symbols appear together— . But to conventional schools the combination makes little sense. In Budge’s opinion, for example, there is no clear basis for the assimilation of the two signs, and “the difficulty is hardly likely to be cleared up.”[825]

---

[817] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 209.

[818] Piankoff, The Tomb of Ramesses VI, 166.

[819] Frankfort, op. cit., 127.

[820] Pyramid Text 635.

[821] Pyramid Texts 844-45.

[822] Pyramid Text 1234.

[823] Pyramid Text 2274.

[824] Pyramid Text 1816.

[825] Gods, Vol. II, 113-14.

Yet to anyone aware of the interrelated images of the Aten ☉, the Osiris hieroglyph will pose no mystery. The throne is the symbol of Isis (i.e., Isis is the throne), but the same goddess appears as "the eye"—so that Osiris sits enthroned within the circle of the Eye. Indeed, the Egyptian language says as much when it terms the throne ast utchat—"the throne of the Eye." And the Book of the Dead brings the Eye and throne into connection with the crown and egg: "I am the lord of the crown. I am in the Eye, my egg . . . My seat is on my throne. I sit in [em, "as"] the pupil of the eye."[826]

Though the influence of the Eye was felt far beyond Egypt, it is the integrated Egyptian imagery that throws light on later developments of the symbol. While the texts sometimes speak of "two eyes" (see the section The Two Eyes), fundamentally there is only one Eye of the great god. "I am Re who wept for himself in his single eye,"[827] state the Coffin Texts. The single Eye of Re or Horus is paralleled by the "clear-seeing eye" of the Sumerian Enki,[828] the single eyes of the Norse Odin,[829] the Iranian Ahura Mazda,[830] and the Mexican Tlaloc,[831] the "ageless eye of all-seeing Zeus,"[832] and the "one-eye of heaven" belonging to the Japanese Ama no Ma-hitotsu.[833]

The Egyptian Eye of Horus, in the Book of the Dead, is that which "shineth with splendours on the forehead of Re."[834] One can easily understand how subsequent generations, possessing only conceptions rather than perceptions to guide them, gave the great god increasingly human form, translating the central Eye into the legendary "third eye," which in Hindu representations appears as little more than a decorative jewel. The single eye of the Cyclops belongs to the same class of images. If the eye is not centered on the forehead, it may be located on the breast, as in the case of the Hindu demon Kabandha, slain by Rama,[835] and the headless man encountered by Fionn, Oisin, and Caoilte in Celtic myth.[836] (The pupil of the Eye ☉ is the Heart of Heaven.)

Surely one cannot properly evaluate the fanciful one-eyed giants of the classical and medieval age without first taking into account the celestial Eye—which left a mighty imprint on the earliest ritual.[837]

---

[826] Budge, Papyrus of Ani, 96.

[827] Clark, op. cit., 95.

[828] O'Neill, op. cit., 464.

[829] MacCulloch, Celtic Mythology, 50.

[830] O'Neill, op. cit., 464.

[831] Ibid., 464.

[832] Cook, Zeus: A Study in Ancient Religion, Vol. I, 186.

[833] O'Neill, op. cit., 464.

[834] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 56.

[835] O'Neill, op. cit., 464.

[836] MacCulloch, op. cit., 169.

[837] As an example of contemporary analyses I note the explanation of the Cyclopes offered by Robert Graves: "The Cyclopes seem to have been a guild of Early Helladic bronzesmiths. Cyclops means 'ring-eyed,' and they are likely to have been tatoed with concentric rings on the forehead, in honour of the sun . . . Concentric circles are part of the mystery of smith-craft: in order to beat out bowls, helmets, or ritual masks, the smith would guide himself with such circles, described by compass around the centre of the flat disk on which he was working. The Cyclopes were one-eyed also in the sense that smiths often shade one eye with a patch against

The Cyclops, or “wheel-eyed” giant, corresponds in many ways to the god Odin, of Norse mythology. Odin’s all-piercing eye is also “a giant wheel.”[838] In ancient cosmology nothing is more explicit than such imagery of the enclosed sun. If the experts have failed to unravel the mystery of the Eye or Eye-wheel ⊙, the failure is not due to a lack of evidence but to the habit of the researchers, who, from the start, excluded the enclosure from the mythological investigation.

The Circular Serpent

Figure 33. Saturn as Mithraic Zurvan (Time), with central eye. (Pupil of eye=heart of heaven.)

It would be quite impossible, within the limited space permitted here, to review all the interconnections unifying the imagery of the Saturnian band. For every instance previously cited, many others have been left out simply to avoid excessive monotony.

As a final example of overlapping imagery, I shall cite the case of the circular serpent. All of the Saturnian gods—Atum-Re, An, Yama, Huang-ti, Quetzalcoatl, Kronos—reside within the fold of a serpent (dragon, fish, crocodile, etc.). But this symbol cannot be evaluated in isolation from the celestial earths, eggs, wheels, temples, crowns, and eyes which fill the ancient lexicon.

In the general mystic tradition, reports Cirlot, “the dragon, the serpent or the fish biting its tail, is a representative of time.”[839] Father Time, of course, is Saturn. Thus the Greeks placed in the hands of Chronos a snake which formed a ring by holding its tail in its mouth,[840] and this circular serpent is clearly that which the Hindus called Kali (“Time”). The Zoroastrians represented Zurvan (“Time”) by an enclosing serpent. A serpent encircles a Nahuatl calendar wheel (wheel of time) published by Clavigero.[841] On the famous Mexican calendar stone twin serpents form a single enclosure around the stone.[842]

The Egyptians associated the circular serpent with Atum (god of Time), identifying the serpent with the cosmic waters erupting from the creator: “I am the outflow of the Primeval Flood, he who emerged from the waters,” the serpent announces.[843] flying sparks.” Graves, The Greek Myths, 32. In one paragraph Graves offers three different—and equally unsatisfactory—explanations of the “ring-eyed” god.

---

[838] Grimm, Teutonic Mythology, Vol. I, 703.

[839] A Dictionary of Symbols, 48.

[840] Faber, op. cit., Vol. I, 194.

[841] Nuttall, op. cit., 26.

[842] Ibid., 26.

[843] Clark, op. cit., 50.

The water serpent, issuing from Atum, constituted an aspect of the creator, eventually forming a coil around "himself":

I bent right around, I was encircled in my coils,

One who made a place for himself in the midst of his coils.

His utterance was what came forth from his mouth.[844]

Why the reference to the "utterance" of the god in association with the appearance of the serpent-coil? The reason is that the serpent, embodying the "outflow" of erupting waters, was himself a manifestation of the creator's speech.

In the Coffin Text, the great god, or Master of the All (Cosmos), recalls the original age "while I was still in the midst of the serpent coil."[845] And the king hopes to attain this very enclosure: "The King lies down in your coil, the King sits in your circle" proclaims a Pyramid Text.[846]

Can this serpent be anything other than the band of the enclosed sun ☉? The sun-god Re, while deemed ami khet, "dweller in the fiery circle," is also ami-hem-f, "dweller in his fiery serpent." Do not the circle and the serpent mean the same thing? The hieroglyphs offer conclusive evidence. Though the common pictograph of Re is ☉, the Egyptians also denoted Re by the glyph , showing the serpent as the band around the primeval sun.

This direct identification of the serpent and the circle of the Aten enables us to test the coherence of Aten symbolism as a whole. For if the serpent denoted the band of the enclosed sun ☉ one should find:

1. That the serpent was the circle of the mother goddess and defined the limits of the All (i.e., the cord, egg, shield, or belt of Saturn's Cosmos).

2. That the serpent enclosed the world-wheel, city, throne, earth-navel and celestial ocean.

3. That the same serpent formed the wall of the cosmic temple, encircled the god-king as a crown, enclosed the celestial waters as a vase, and defined the circle of the all-seeing Eye.

Figure 34. (a) Egyptian and

---

[844] Ibid., 51.

[845] Ibid., 51.

[846] Pyramid Text 2289.

Figure 34. (b) Mayan versions of the circular serpent as water container.

Throughout all of ancient Egypt the circular serpent was the symbol of the great mother. In the hieroglyphs, the Uraeus serpent, often used in conjunction with an egg, means “goddess.” “The goddess Uatchet cometh unto thee in the form of the living Uraeus, to anoint thy head . . . ,” reads the Book of the Dead.[847] A Karnak temple inscription states that the goddess Mut, in the form of a serpent, encircled “her father Re and gave birth to him as Khonsu.”[848]

In the same way the Babylonians knew the great goddess as “the mother python of heaven.”[849] The Cosmos, according to Jeremias, was represented as the womb of the “shining Tiamat,” the enclosing serpent or dragon of the primeval sea.[850] So also did the Hindus, Cretans, Celts, Greeks, Romans, and Mexicans represent the mother goddess as a serpent or dragon.[851]

It is the same thing to say that the circular serpent enclosed Saturn’s Cosmos. In the Egyptian language the “coil” formed by the serpent is literally “the cord” or “the band,” indicated by the hieroglyphs and . The serpent itself was the rope which the creator stretched round about, gathering the primeval waters or primeval matter into an organized enclosure.

Figure 35. Circular dragon in Haropollo, Selecta hieroglyphica (1597).

---

[847] Quoted in Budge, Gods, Vol. II, 443.

[848] Frankfort, op. cit., 180.

[849] Albright, “The Goddess of Life and Wisdom,” 273.

[850] Handbuch der Altorientalischen Geisteskultur, 21; R. C. Thompson, The reports of the Magicians and Astrologers of Nineveh and Babylon, Vol. II, 249.

[851] Collum, “Die Schöpferische Mutter Göttin,” 249, 274; Neumann, op. cit., 18, 153; Faber, op. cit., vol. II, 456; Burland, The Gods of Mexico, 133.

Figure 36. The alchemist circular dragon.

Figure 37. Mexican circular serpent biting its tail.

Figure 38. Circular serpent motif on the interior of a food basin from Sikyatki in the South-Western United States.

Figure 39 (a) [& b] Two Chinese versions of the circular dragon.

Figure 39b. The dragon encloses the central sun.

Figure 40. Hindu circular serpent, enclosing the bindu, or central sun.

Figure 41. Alaska circular serpent, indicating close relationship to enclosed sun.

In Sumero-Babylonian imagery, too, a circular serpent—called "the rope of the great god"[852]—encloses the original Cosmos. The serpent-rope is "the bond of the All" held by Enki or Ninurta (Saturn).

But the cord is synonymous with the cosmic egg and girdle, and this conjunction of Saturnian symbols makes particularly interesting the statement of the Greek philosopher Epicurus to Epiphanius: ". . . the All was from the beginning like an egg, and the pneuma [World Soul] in serpent wise around the egg was then a tight band as a wreath or belt around the universe."[853] The Orphics called this serpent Chronos, describing it as the bond

---

[852] Sayce, op. cit., 116. [Emphasis added.]

[853] Quoted in Onians, op. cit., 250. [Emphasis added.]

(peirata) of the Cosmos. The serpent-bond "lies around the Cosmos," proclaimed the Pythagoreans.[854] It was thus an ancient custom to display images of the cosmic egg encircled by a vast serpent.

All the evidence in the foregoing sections indicates that this circle of the Cosmos was the "earth" or "place" fashioned in the creation. Hence, the serpent who circumscribes the organized All is the same serpent whom the ancients depicted encircling the created "world."

In the Gnostic work Pistis Sophia, Our Lord states, "The outer darkness is a great serpent, the tail of which is in its mouth, and it is outside the whole world."[855] As shown by Budge, the idea had its roots in Egypt, where the world-encircling serpent was Apepi, "a serpent with his tail in his mouth."[856] Horapollo reports that when the Egyptians wished to depict the "world," they painted a serpent.[857]

The Babylonian Esharra, the circle of created "earth," is identified as the primordial beast Tiamat,[858] the world-enclosing serpent-dragon which the Hebrews called Tehom and the Muslims the "Mysterious Serpent."[859] To the Hindus it was the fabulous serpent Naga that enclosed the world in its folds. Scandinavian myth knew the serpent Midgard, the Weltumspanner, or "Stretcher-round-the-World."[860]

All ancient cosmologies which speak of a world-encircling serpent say that its body formed the river or ocean shielding the organized earth from Chaos. The serpent, dragon, or crocodile, in the Egyptian system, thus denotes the celestial watercourse. (Hence, the primeval serpent encircling Atum not only emerges from the cosmic sea; it is itself "the outflow of the Primeval Flood.")[861]

Sumero-Babylonian cosmology knows "the river of the girdle of the great god"—a world-encircling ocean which is also called "the river of the snake."[862] According to Hebrew and Arabic thought, states Wensinck, "The whole of the earth is round and the ocean surrounds it like a collar. Other authors compare the circle of the ocean around the earth with a wreath, a ring, or with the halo round the moon. The commonest image of the ocean, however, is that of a serpent."[863] Thus the famous Leviathan "grips his tail between his teeth and forms a ring around the ocean."[864] The Scandinavian Midgard serpent occupied the same circular sea, biting his tail.[865] The Greek Okeanos, the boundary of the world, was the serpent Chronos.[866] Even the Aztecs knew "the sea as a circumambient Great Serpent."[867]

---

[854] Ibid., 332.

[855] Quoted in Budge, Gods, Vol. II, 266.

[856] Ibid., 332.

[857] Horapollo 1.c.2.

[858] R. C. Thompson, Reports, 249.

[859] Wensinck, "Ideas of the Western Semites," 61*ff.*

[860] Brown, Researches, Vol. II, 105.

[861] Clark, op. cit., 50.

[862] Sayce, op. cit., 281. [Emphasis added.]

[863] Wensinck, "The Ocean in the Literature of the Western Semites," 25. [Emphasis added.]

[864] Graves and Patai, Hebrew Myths: The Book of Genesis, 51-52.

[865] MacCulloch, Eddic Mythology, 328.

[866] Onians, op. cit., 249-51.

[867] Alexander, Latin American Mythology, 57.

Nor can one ignore the identical serpent enclosing, or forming, the great god's throne. Muslim legends recall a brilliant serpent around the throne of Allah: "Then Allah surrounded it by a serpent . . . this serpent wound itself around the throne."[868] The same serpent, in Hebrew accounts, wound itself around the cosmic throne-wheel of Solomon: "And a silver dragon was on the machinery of the throne."[869] ". . . And a silver serpent bore the wheel of the throne."[870]

One remembers also the serpentine wheeled seats of such Greek figures as Triptolemos and Demeter.[871] The seat of the Mayan god Anhel is a serpent,[872] much like the snake-seat of the primordial pair recalled by the Miztecs.[873] Just as the Egyptian serpent-dragon Set becomes the throne of Osiris, so do the parallel figures of Tiamat and Leviathan become the thrones of Marduk and Yahweh in Babylonian and Hebrew imagery.[874]

So also is the temple likened to the circular serpent. Sumerian hymns describe the cosmic temple "in heaven like a dragon gleaming."[875] This dragon-like abode answers to the Babylonian sanctuary of Ea, represented by a serpent or fish.[876] Belonging to the same class are the Uraei who form the walls of the heavenly dwelling of Osiris,[877] the serpentine temples or dracontia of Abury,[878] the "Iguana House" of Mayan ritual,[879] and the girdling snake of the Greek Achis, which surrounded the temenos or inner shrine of the gods.[880] The Muslims declare that at the founding of the Sacred House of the Ka'ba, a serpent with a "glittering appearance" wrapped itself around the wall "so that its tail approached its head."[881]

The great father's dwelling was the encircling serpent or dragon—issuing from the cosmic sea. And it matters not whether the abode be termed a "temple" or a "city," for the cosmic city was equally tied to the imagery of the circular serpent, as confirmed by Egyptian illustrations of a serpent encircling the district of Hermopolis;[882] the Hebrew imagery of Leviathan surrounding the primeval, celestial Jerusalem; and the serpentine enclosure of the Teutonic Asgard, the city of the gods.

Always we encounter the same serpent, glittering in the light and marking out the primordial enclosure. In the case of the Egyptian Eye and crown the identity with the Uraeus serpent is spelled out with uncanny boldness.

---

[868] Wensinck, "Ideas of the Western Semites," 62.

[869] Ibid., 63.

[870] Ibid., 63.

[871] Cook, op. cit., Vol. I, 221, 229.

[872] J. Eric and S. Thompson, op. cit., 268.

[873] Emerson, Indian Myths, 347.

[874] I intend to take up such imagery in greater detail in the second volume of this work.

[875] Langdon, Sumerian Liturgies and Psalms, 316.

[876] Wensinck, "Ideas of the Western Semites," 65.

[877] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 377.

[878] O'Neill, op. cit., 735.

[879] J. Eric and S. Thompson, op. cit., 212-14.

[880] Nuttall, op. cit., 522.

[881] Wensinck, "Ideas of the Western Semites," 64.

[882] Clark, op. cit., 53.

Egyptian hymns locate the enclosing Uraeus on the "brow" of the great god, and this circular serpent is at once the band of the single Eye and the circle of the crown:

> He has come to you, O NT-Crown; He has come to you, O Fiery Serpent . . . O Great Crown . . . Ikhet the Serpent has adorned you . . . because you are Horus encircled with the protection of his eye.[883]

> O King, the dread of you is the intact Eye of Horus, the White Crown, the serpent-goddess who is in Nekheb.[884]

To wear the crown is to wear the Fiery Serpent, which, in turn, is to reside within the enclosure or "protection" of the Eye. Though offering no explanation, Clark recognizes the identity of these cosmic images: "The Eye is elevated as the defensive cobra which—on the pattern of the earthly pharaohs—encircled the brows of the High God," he writes.[885]

Figure 42. The circular serpent encircling Hermopolis.

The connection immediately explains why the Sumerian Mus-crown, conceived as a golden band, was "the great dragon."[886]

Though the circular serpent appears in many guises, at root there is only one such creature, for its diverse forms—as the Cosmos, "earth," temple, city, throne, crown, and Eye—are simply the different mythical formulations of the circumpolar enclosure.

These unnatural roles of the circular serpent—which mythologists tend to regard as the most irrational and unfathomable aspects of ancient symbolism—actually provide one of the most significant unifying threads.

In Summary: A Coherent Doctrine

Saturn's primordial home was a simple enclosure, a dwelling universally recorded by the sign ⊙. Mythmaking imagination expressed the enclosure in many ways, and it is the very variety of formulations which testifies to the band's overwhelming impact on the ancient world.

To deal meaningfully with this imagery one must admit the influence of a celestial order vastly different from that familiar to us today. We customarily think of "myth" as the opposite of "reality." Yet the consistency of the testimony suggests that the mythical view, passed down to us through sacred signs, monuments, and literature, connects us with a very real world confronted by the first mythmakers.

---

[883] Pyramid Texts 195-98.

[884] Pyramid Text 900.

[885] Op. cit., 93.

[886] Sjöberg and Bergmann, op. cit., 29. [Emphasis added.]

The present heavens explain neither the ancient rites of kingship nor the array of astral symbols which grew up around the king—who was conceived as the human incarnation of the ruling divinity in heaven. Always, the ritual and symbol refer to an age different from our own, an age when Saturn, the central sun, ruled from the celestial pole, encircled by his band of "glory."

Saturn's band was the primeval Cosmos, viewed as the planet-god's own consort, the womb on the cosmic waters. The myths alternately depict the band as a revolving island in the sky, a cord of rope forming the boundary of Saturn's domain, a shining egg, a shield, and the creator's collar, belt, or girdle.

This was the "earth" which (in the universal creation legend) the great god raised from the celestial sea. In mythical history it became the ancestral land of peace and plenty—Adam's paradise. Saturn's kingdom possessed the form of a great wheel; it was the creator's revolving throne, the celestial city, the lost navel or Middle Place, where (cosmic, mythical) history took its start. Around the border of the heavenly "land" flowed a circular river or ocean.

The same band was Saturn's revolving temple, which he wore as a crown and in which he dwelt as the pupil of the all-seeing Eye. As the cosmic vase, the band housed Saturn's waters of life.

And finally, Saturn's band appears in the guise of a shining serpent wrapped around the central sun and denoted by the Egyptian sign .

Divorced from the archetypal enclosure the various symbols (temples, crowns, thrones, wheels, etc.) appear as isolated forms of uncertain origin. We simply take them as "facts." Why, then, were these forms systematically related in language, art, ritual, and myth? It is not a question of later generations recklessly joining unrelated images. The further back we go the greater the unity. The best evidence of the harmonious vision comes from the oldest sources of ancient Egypt and Mesopotamia. Here we find the central sun wearing the cosmic city and temple as a crown; taking as his throne the eye of heaven, the holy land, or the vase of upper waters; shining in the centre of an egg called the "earth"; and encircled by a river which forms the wall of the temple but also the circle of the gods. In each case we find that the symbol refers directly to the womb of the mother goddess enclosing the great father Saturn.

In reviewing this imagery of the enclosure one confronts many dominant motifs of ancient religion. Whatever the mythical formulation of the band, the hymns celebrate its presence at the polar centre. Yet who can locate a source of the imagery in today's tranquil heavens? Where is this revolving river of "splendour and terror"? Where is the city of "the White Wall," the "clear and radiant" holy land, the temple "like a dragon gleaming," the "throne of light," the "golden" egg, or the "fiery" serpent?

If the texts present alternative versions of the band, they never question its existence in primeval times. It is the archaic reality concealed within a massive body of myths and symbols, all pointing to the signs ⊙ and ⊕ as images of Saturn, the polar sun.

VIII: The Cosmic Mountain

To the images of the enclosed sun and enclosed sun-cross ancient myths add the cosmic mountain—a column of light rising along the world axis and visually appearing to hold aloft the great god's home. The signs of the Saturnian mountain are and .

Throughout the world one encounters the story of a shining peak which once rose to the centre of heaven. Though this cosmic mountain appears under many different names, accounts from every section of the world tell much the same story. The Egyptians knew the great column as the Primeval Hill, the Babylonians as the World Mountain. The mount passed into Hinduism as the cosmic Meru, into Iranian myth as Hera-Berezaiti, and into Chinese myth and astrology as Kwen-Lun. Mexican cosmology gave it the name Colhuacan. Its most familiar representatives were Olympus and Zion.

But does not Olympus refer to the well-known peak in Macedonia, and Zion to the small hill in Palestine? In truth the mythical Olympus and the mythical Zion are the same mountain; only their terrestrial representations differ. When the ancients sanctified a familiar hill, giving it the name of the primeval mount, they sought to characterize their own land as a duplication of the "homeland." The local mountain took its mythical attributes from the cosmic peak. Always the sacred mount rises "higher than any mountain on earth," attaining the polar centre and functioning as the cosmic axis.

Legends of the heaven-sustaining peak say that the creator—the central sun—ruled his kingdom from the mountaintop, where stood the original paradise with its four life-bearing streams.

Egypt

According to the long-standing belief of Egyptologists, the sun-god rises over the eastern horizon each morning and sinks below the western horizon each evening. In widely accepted translations of the texts, one repeatedly finds such wording as "horizon from which Re goes forth,"[887] "Thou living Soul who comest forth from the horizon,"[888] or "Re riseth in his horizon."[889] But if the Egyptian light god truly rises from the horizon then surely it is not Saturn, the steadfast polar sun.

A closer look at the terminology is needed. As I have already observed, the words which the translators render as "rise" (pert, uben, un) mean literally "to appear," "to shine," "to send forth light," etc. The conventional choice of the word "rise" follows from the belief that the hymns describe the solar orb emerging in the east.

But what about the word "horizon," which occurs with such frequency in the standard translations? The Egyptian term for the place of the sun's coming forth is khut, whose literal sense is anything but "horizon."[890]

---

[887] Pyramid Text 585.

[888] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 481.

[889] Ibid., 400.

[890] The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 248, note 7.

The hieroglyph for khut (or) combines two signs—the Re or Aten sign and the sign for "mountain" . (I take up the latter sign in the section on the cleft peak.) Its literal meaning, as noted by Renouf, is "Mount of Glory" and "there is no reason why we should continue to use the misleading term horizon." Literally, the great god does not "rise from the horizon," but "shines in the Mount of Glory." To what did the Egyptians refer by such language?

The hymns speak not of the present world order, but the former, when the creator took as his seat the pillar of the Cosmos. An inscription of the Karnak temple extols the khut or Mount of Glory as "the venerable hill of primeval beginning."891 Hearkening to the same age, the Edfu texts recall "the First Occasion in the High Hill at the beginning of Coming Into Existence."892 In the Pyramid Texts we read, "I am the Primeval Hill of the land in the midst of the sea, whose hand no earthlings have grasped."893 (The reader will now recognize the "midst of the sea" as the polar "heart," "navel," or "centre" of the cosmic waters.)

The myths and liturgies of the Mount of Glory (Primeval Hill) relate that the creator raised the mount from the Sea of Chaos. States Frankfort: "Within the expanse of the primeval waters he created dry land, the Primeval Hill, which became the centre of the earth, or at least the place round which the earth solidified. Local traditions differ as regards the details; but everywhere the site of creation, the first land to emerge from chaos, was thought to have been charged with vital power. And each god counting as Creator was made to have some connection with this Hill."894

If Frankfort's summary is accurate, then the Primeval Hill is directly related to the enclosure of earth which the creator gathered together as a stable dwelling—the Cosmos.

To discern the connection of the mount and enclosure we must return once more to the legends of Atum. The texts of all periods agree that in the beginning Atum, or Khepera, floated alone in the Abyss without a resting place. The god recalls the original epoch:

. . . When I was alone in the waters . . .

before I had found anywhere to stand or sit, before Heliopolis [the celestial earth] had been founded that I might be there, before a perch had been formed for me to sit on . . .895

"I found no place where I could stand," states the god in a similar account.896 In the hieroglyph for "to stand," (aha) the key sign is , conveying the meaning "to support," "stability." Which is to say that in the beginning the god wandered without a stable support. This was "before a perch had been formed for me to sit on." The glyph for "perch" is , signifying the primordial pedestal of the great god. It was a common Egyptian practice to place the emblems of the creator upon the perch sign , for the perch or pedestal means the

---

891 Frankfort, Kingship and the Gods, 154. [Emphasis added.]

892 Reymond, The Mythical Origin of the Egyptian Temple, 48-49. [Emphasis added.]

893 Pyramid Text 1022.

894 Op. cit., 51-52.

895 Clark, Myth and Symbol in Ancient Egypt, 46.

896 Budge, The Gods of the Egyptians, Vol. I, 309.

same thing as "mountain." Thus Osiris, enthroned upon the Primeval Hill, is "like an exalted one upon thy pedestal,"[897] while Anup, "the god who is on his mountain," is also "the god who is on his pedestal."[898]

It seems that the creation accounts refer to a time before the appearance of the great mountain or perch. Prior to the emergence of this foundation occurs the central act of creation, recalled in numerous accounts: the bringing forth of the khu—"brilliant lights," "words of power"—the fiery "waters" which erupted directly from the creator and came to be recalled as radiant "speech."

A literal translation of one text yields the following:

I could find no place to stand

I uttered the incantation

[khut] with my heart.

I laid the foundation of Maa.

I produced all the aru [the "guardians" of the deep, the assembly].

I was alone.

I had not spit in the form of Shu.

I had not poured out Tefnut.

No other worked with me.

I laid a foundation with my own heart . . .

I poured out (seed, water) in the form of Shu.

I emitted (seed, water) in the form of Tefnut.[899]

The language indicates that the creator, originally alone, "uttered" or poured out from his "heart" the watery mass (khu, khut) in which the primordial foundation was laid. That this foundation is identified with the gods Maa or Shu is crucial: for Maa and Shu signify the cosmic pillar holding aloft the central sun.

That the pillar of Shu was born from the khu or khut emitted by Atum is the explicit statement of the Coffin Texts, where Shu declares:

I am life, the Lord of years, living for ever, Lord of eternity

the eldest one that Atum made in [or from] his Khu

in giving birth to Shu.[900]

Or again, Shu announces:

. . . I came into being in the limbs of the Self-Creator.

He formed me in [with] his heart and he created me in his Khu.[901]

The Egyptian priests clearly know that the Shu-pillar, formed in the fiery abyss, was the same thing as the "perch," or "pedestal" upon which the heart of heaven eventually found "rest." Thus, while one Coffin Text reads, “I am raised aloft on my standard (, “perch”) above yonder places of the Abyss,”902 another states, “I am high in the form of Horus . . . He has established my heart on his great standard. I do not fall on account of Shu.”903 The “foundation of Maa,” cited above, refers to the same mountain or pillar. A common glyph for maa is , the very image used to designate the Primeval Hill. Often the glyph is simply read as the “pedestal” of the great god. In its root meaning, maa or maat denotes “the stable, enduring foundation,” the source of cosmic regularity. (It is the axle of the Cosmos.) Thus the creator, resting upon the axle-pillar, is he who “rests upon Maat.”

---

[897] Ibid., Vol. II, 159.

[898] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 606, 624, 627.

[899] Budge, Gods, Vol. I, 309.

[900] Clark, op. cit., 86.

[901] Ibid., 83.

In the Egyptian language, the concept “support” or “foundation” merges with “mountain” or “hill.” The word thes, for example, means “support,” “to bear, lift up.” but also “mountain.” The reason is that the only mountain with which the ritual is concerned is the primeval mountain, the foundation of the Cosmos. “May I endure in the sky like a [or the] mountain, like a [the] support,” reads a *Pyramid Text.*904

Figure 43. The solitary Eye upon the primordial “Perch.”

The cosmic pillar, according to the creation accounts, originated in the seed or water of life flowing from the creator Atum: the very khu or khut which congealed into the circle of “glory” took form also as the heaven-sustaining column. Indeed, one finds that in much of the symbolism, the enclosure and the mount are inseparable—the enclosure being considered as the hollow summit of the mount. (See below)

To understand the Egyptian hieroglyph for the Mount of Glory (khut,), one must consider the full range of meanings attached to the terms khu and khut. In their most elementary sense the words refer to the fiery essence or luminous matter which exploded from the creator. From this root meaning are derived a number of interrelated hieroglyphic terms.

When written , khu is often translated “soul” or “spirit.” The reference is not to invisible powers but to flaming debris, conceived as the erupting substance of the creator and personified in the ritual as the light-spirits of the abyss.

Thus, when written with the determinative (i.e.,), khut means “fire.”

---

902 Faulkner, The Coffin Texts, 226.

903 Ibid., 230-31.

904 Pyramid Text 1559.

But the mythmakers interpreted the same erupting debris as visible "speech" or "words" uttered by the creator. Hence khu ( ) means "words of power" while khut ( ) denotes the "creative incantation" which produced the fiery, watery mass.

In fashioning the Cosmos or celestial earth the creator gathered the sea of "words" into a circle of "glory," sometimes denoted by the sign (khu, often written or). This is the enclosure of the Aten , the great god's encircling "aura" or "halo."

But the most common symbol of the creator's "glory" (khu, khut) is the sign , depicting not only an enclosure but vertical streams of light ascending the world axis. It is no coincidence, then, that this very khu sign also denotes Shu, the light-pillar formed in the primordial sea. The radiant column, as proclaimed in the texts, was "poured out" by the creator Atum.

Of precisely the same significance is the khut sign , the "Mount of Glory," or more specifically, "the mount and enclosure of the khu." Because the glyph is regularly used in the sense of "the place from which the sun shines forth," Egyptologists as a whole overlook all the interconnected meanings of the glyph and simply translate it as "the horizon." But as we have seen, "the place from which the sun shines forth" means the circumpolar enclosure, not the eastern horizon. In the Egyptian language it is impossible to separate the polar "place par excellence" from the cosmic mountain.

To this celestial peak the Egyptians continually looked back in their myths and rites. On behalf of the deceased king the priests poured a heap of sand on the floor inside the pyramid, placing atop the sand a statue of the king and reciting a prayer which began:

Rise upon it, this land which came forth as [or from] Atum, the spittle which came forth as [or from] *Kheprer, assume your form upon it, rise high upon it.*905

The sand represented the Primeval Hill, which the Egyptians often depicted by a flight of stairs, or , leading to the centre and summit of heaven. If Atum, or Re, shone from the summit of the hill, so did Osiris: "Osiris sits in judgement in a palace in the Primeval Mound, which is in the centre of the world," writes Clark.906

"Hail, O Osiris, thou hast received thy sceptre and the place whereon thou art to rest, and thy steps are under thee," reads the Book of the Dead.907 The hill was the fixed resting place of the central sun, its summit the supreme object of ascension symbolism. The king beseeches the great god: ". . . May I be established upon my resting place like the Lord of Life."908 The obvious Egyptian monuments to the mount so conceived are the great pyramids, which render in stone the ancient idea of a stairway to and support of the heavenly dwelling. The steps signify the primeval foundation laid by the creator.

---

905 Clark, op. cit., 41.

906 Ibid., 178.

907 Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 388-89.

908 Ibid., 251. [Emphasis added.]

In all Egyptian symbols of the mount one finds the same general significance. Always, it is the stable pillar supporting the resting god.

One of the most famous representations of the Primeval Hill is the obelisk . The small pyramidion on top of the obelisk denoted the Benben stone (Foundation Stone), the Seed of Atum, the central sun. (The same form crowned the pyramid.)

Atum-Khepri, thou wert high as the Hill

Thou didst shine forth as Benben.[909]

Figure 44. Egyptian Re atop the steps.

To the modern mind it may seem peculiar that the foundation stone should lie at the summit rather than the base of the cosmic hill. But when one realizes that the summit was the fixed centre of the turning Cosmos the idea takes on a remarkable logic. Atum, the stone of the foundation, was the "Firm Heart of the Sky," resting upon a stationary support:

The Great God lives,

fixed in the middle of the sky upon his support.[910]

So reads a Coffin Text, in obvious reference to Atum or Re, whom Clark terms "the arbiter of destiny perched on the top of the world pole."[911] Thus the obelisk , the symbol of Atum resting on the cosmic pillar, came to be employed as an ideograph for the Egyptian word men, signifying "stability" and "to rest in one place." Men also means "mountain" and "pedestal."

Derived from the same root is the Egyptian word mena or Menat, the celestial "mooring post." The Egyptians conceived the stationary pillar as the stake to which the lights of the revolving assembly were bound. The cosmic mountain is the Mena-uret, the "Great Mooring Post," symbolized by the sign . (The rope drawn around the neck of the configuration confirms the close connection of the pillar and cosmic bond).[912]

---

[909] Frankfort, op. cit., 153.

[910] Clark, op. cit., 59.

[911] Ibid., 41.

[912] Budge, From Fetish to God in Ancient Egypt, 243; see Pyramid Text 794c.

It seems more than a little likely that the Egyptian Mena-uret was the very pillar from which the Muslims derived the minaret, the lofty tower attached to the Muslim mosque, and designated Qutb, the "pole" or "axis."

While in many myths the mount is personified as a secondary divinity (Shu, Maa) holding aloft the creator, the hill may also appear as the trunk or lower limbs of the creator himself. Atum, as suggested by several sources cited above, is inseparable from the mount on which he rests. The great god Ptah merges with the god Tatunen, a personification of the Primeval Hill, so that the Book of the Dead can say "Thy beauties are like unto the pillar of the god Ptah."[913] The glyph for the great god An is , meaning "pillar."

A famous Egyptian emblem of the pillar was the Tet , the special symbol of Osiris. The Tet sign denotes the support of the Cosmos. "The idea of the Tet column," writes Clark, "is that it stands firmly upright."[914] In the ritual these emblems serve as "world pillars holding up the sky and so guaranteeing . . . the world in which the king's authority holds good."[915] Tet means "stability," "permanence." It is the pedestal of Osiris, the "resting heart" or "motionless heart." Significantly, many Egyptian illustrations of the Tet-column include a pair of human eyes at the top (fig. 151a), emphasizing that the column was (as Egyptologists often observe) the trunk or backbone of Osiris himself.

In other words, the Egyptians viewed the cosmic mountain as the great god's own spinal column. Hence the sign , depicting the pillar of the khu (or of Shu) as vertical streams of light, also means "back" or "backbone." The word aat, signifying the primeval "perch" or "pedestal" of the creator, possesses the additional meaning of "backbone."

Pertaining to the same symbolism is the pillar sign , read as sept, "to be provided with." Helping to explain the sign is the root sep or sepa, "stability," often written with the determinative —"spinal column."[916] So too, while the word thes refers to the primordial "pillar," "prop," or "mountain," thes can also mean "backbone."

Figure 45. Tet, the "stable" pillar of the Cosmos.

---

[913] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 582. [Emphasis added.]

[914] Op. cit., 236.

[915] Ibid., 237.

[916] Énel, Les Origines de la Gènese et l'Enseignement des Temples de l'Ancienne Égypte, 117.

Through extension of the symbolism in a different direction, the cosmic mountain became the creator's "staff" or "sceptre." Texts and reliefs depict the great god's sceptre as the support of heaven or of the god himself.917

The theme may not always be recognized by conventional schools, however. A previously cited hymn from the Book of the Dead proclaims to Osiris, "Hail, O Osiris, thou hast received thy sceptre and the place whereon thou art to rest and the steps are under thee."918 Few have stopped to think that the sceptre signifies the same "resting place" as the steps; both refer to the column of the Cosmos. Thus, in the sign the sceptre holds aloft the glyph for "heaven" .

A spell of the Coffin Texts reads, "I am the guardian of this great prop which separates the earth from the sky."919 But another spell declares, ". . . That staff which separated sky and earth is in my hand."920 Often the sceptre is in the form of a lotus, or papyrus holding aloft the great god.921

Whatever the particular symbolism of the cosmic mountain, all sources agree on one point: the revolving Aten forms the hollow summit of the peak. To shine in the Aten is to shine "in the midst" or "in the interior" of the khut , the Mount of Glory. The god occupies "the enclosure of the High Hill." "O very high mountain! I hold myself in thy enclosure," proclaims the king.922

A literal translation of Egyptian texts will yield:

*O you in your egg, shining in your Aten, growing bright in your Mount of Glory.*923

*Grow bright and diminish at your desire . . . You send forth light every day from the middle of the Mount of Glory.*924

*You shine in the Mount of Glory. The Aten receives praise, resting in the mountain and giving life to the world.*925

*Homage to you, O you shining in the Aten, Living One coming forth in the Mount of Glory.*926

*O Re in the Mount of Glory.*927

*Re shines in the Mount of Glory.*928

*The Osiris Nu is at rest in the Mount of Glory.*929

---

917 Schafer, "Altägyptische Bilder der Auf- und Untergehenden Sonne," 19, note 7.

918 Budge, Egyptian Book of the Dead, 388-89.

919 Faulkner, op. cit., 176.

920 Ibid., 148. [Emphasis added.]

921 Moret, "Le Lotus et la Naissance des Dieux in Égypte," 501.

922 Massey, Ancient Egypt, 363.

923 Cf. Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 104.

924 Cf. Piankoff, The Tomb of Ramesses VI, 320.

925 Cf. Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 11.

926 Cf. ibid., 481.

927 Cf. ibid., 393.

928 Cf. ibid., 400.

You shine in the Mount of Glory day by day.[930]

Again and again the same terminology occurs. The sun-god does not rise from the mount, but shines in it. I know this claim may not be welcomed by those experts who have built their entire interpretation of Egyptian cosmic symbolism around the rising and setting solar orb. But having reviewed all of the primary Egyptian sources I have yet to find an early text which, when translated literally, suggests that the sun-god (during his reign) ever leaves the cosmic peak. Though he sails in a ship, as we shall see, only the ship moves, revolving round the stationary god. And though the texts describe a peak of the right and of the left, they are two peaks of a singular mount.

The widely respected Egyptologist W. R. Kristensen tells us that fundamentally there was only one "horizon" (i.e., khut, Mount of Glory). The two "horizons" were "viewed as essentially identical; what applied to one held true for the other too. That they were geographically separated could not obliterate the impression. In mythical cosmography they often assume one another's functions. The place where the light sets is also called the place where it rises . . ."[931]

To what cosmic idea did the Egyptians refer in order to speak of the sun rising and setting on the same mountain? Kristensen assumes that while sacred cosmology united the two mountains, they were "geographically separated." Holding to the solar interpretation, one could hardly believe anything else.

The problem does not lie with the texts, but with the solar interpretation, which looks for imagery of a rising and setting sun where there is none. The Egyptian sun-god "comes out" ("grows bright") and "goes in" ("diminishes") em hetep, "while standing in one place." That "place" is the enclosure of the stationary summit.

The universal signs of the sun on the mountaintop are and . To the former corresponds the Egyptian hieroglyph denoting khut, the Mount of Glory, or Shu, the divine personification of the Mount, but also serving as the determinative of "spinal column." Other Egyptian illustrations depict the disk of the Aten supported by the Tet-column, or resting over the obelisk (as was customary in the earliest forms of the obelisk),[932] or raised aloft by the divine sceptre. The consistent theme is that the enclosure and the Mount are inseparable.

In the hieroglyphs, the simple form of the mena-uret or Great Mooring Post is , but the larger illustrations offer a more detailed portrait of the binding post. A papyrus, for example, shows the goddess Hathor amid the celestial garden, wearing the Menat symbol.[933] Here the form is: .

The post, or "pillar of the cord (Cosmos)," appears to sustain a circle enclosing the image , the Egyptian sign of the four life-bearing streams (un).

---

[929] Cf. ibid., 446.

[930] Cf. ibid., 71.

[931] Quoted in Piankoff, Mythological Papyri, 29. [Emphasis added.]

[932] Budge, Gods, Vol.I, 354.

[933] Frankfort, op. cit., fig. 39.

Clarification of the mooring-post symbol is provided by a Coffin Text, in which the "All-Lord" (ruler of the Cosmos) looks back to the primordial age and the "four good deeds which my own heart did for me in the midst of the serpent-coil [cord, bond, Cosmos] . . . I did four good deeds within the portal of the Mount of Glory. I made the four winds that every man might breathe thereof."[934]

Does not the above image of the Great Mooring Post answer directly to these lines? On the Mount of Glory stands the garden of abundance, animated by the life elements radiating in luminous streams from the central sun—the great god's "heart."

Of the Egyptian paradise, Massey writes, "The general tradition is that this paradise was a primeval place of birth and that it was in the north, upon the summit of a mount now inaccessible to the living anywhere on earth."[935] This paradisal enclosure at the summit was the cosmic city—and every sacred city—be it Heliopolis, Thebes, Memphis, Busiris, or Abydos—mirrored the history of the prototype, symbolically resting atop the Primeval Hill. Of the deceased king, the Coffin Texts announce:

> Annubis is mindful of you in Busiris, your soul rejoices in Abydos where your body is happy [em hetep, "at rest"] on the High Hill.[936]

When the deceased ruler enters the city of the god-king, he returns to the Holy Land, the celestial earth at the summit of the polar mountain.

Osiris, the "god on the top of the steps [Primeval Hill],"[937] is the universal lord "in possession of a seat, his heart being at peace [em hetep, "at rest"] on the Mountain of the Necropolis [city of the ancestors]"[938] Amen-Re is the "dweller in Thebes, the great god who appeareth in the Mount of Glory."[939] The name of Abydos—Abtu—signifies the "mountain of the heart."

In the same way every temple, as a symbol of the Saturnian enclosure, magically rested on the Primeval Hill. "Each and every temple was supposed to stand on it," writes Frankfort. "This thought is applied even to temples built quite late in the history of Egypt."[940] Surely the temple builders knew that they were not constructing the local dwelling on the actual Primeval Hill; but in imbuing the temple with the mythical qualities of the original dwelling, the architects gave concrete form to an ideal defined in the beginning. When Hatshepsut identifies the Karnak temple as the "Mount of Glory upon earth, the venerable hill of primeval beginning,"[941] she connects the local edifice with the central hill of creation, the mount on which the house of the sun-god originally stood.

States Frankfort: "The queen, by beautifying Karnak, honoured the centre from which the creation took its start . . . The identity of the temples with the Primeval Hill amounts to a sharing of essential quality and is expressed in their names and in their architectural arrangements by means of ramps or steps. Each temple rose from its entrance through its successive courts and halls to the Holy of Holies, which was thus situated at a point noticeably higher than the entrance. There the statue, barge or fetish of the god was kept, resting upon the Primeval Hill."[942]

---

[934] Pritchard, ed., Ancient Near Eastern Texts Relating to the Old Testament, 7.

[935] Op. cit., 376. [Emphasis added.]

[936] Clark, op. cit., 134.

[937] Budge, Gods, Vol. II, 117.

[938] Piankoff, The Wandering of the Soul, 103.

[939] Budge, Gods, Vol. II, 17.

[940] Op. cit., 150.

[941] Ibid., 154.

In all basic details, the Egyptian symbolism of the Primeval Hill corresponds to the cosmic images , . The Mount forms in the cosmic sea, stretching upward along the world axis to hold aloft the central sun. The hollow summit of the Mount is the circle of the Aten, within whose enclosure the sun "grows bright" and "diminishes" with the cycle of night and day. This Mount of Glory is the site of the original paradise, the city or temple of the Universal Monarch.

A review of similar imagery in other lands will show the influence of a world-wide tradition.

Mesopotamia

I have argued that the Egyptian Atum, the solitary god in the deep, is the very figure whom Babylonian astronomy identifies as the planet Saturn. Atum, "the Firm Heart of the Sky," stands "fixed in the middle of the sky upon his support."

Here, on the other hand, is a broken Sumerian reference to Ninurash, or Ninurta, the planet Saturn:

Whom the "god of the steady star" upon a foundation

To . . . cause to repose in years of plenty.[943]

Saturn, founder of the Golden Age, was the stationary light "upon a foundation," exactly as the Egyptian Atum. Accordingly, Babylonian astronomical texts give Saturn the name Kaainu, the Greek kiun, "pillar."

What was this foundation or pillar of Saturn? It was the "mountain of the an-ki [Cosmos]," formed—like the Egyptian counterpart—amid the waters of Chaos. ". . . Of the hill which I, the hero, have heaped up," proclaims Ninurta, "let its name be Hursag [mountain]."[944] This cosmic peak, whose "foundation is laid in the pure abyss," the Babylonians denominated "the mountain of the world."[945] Ninurta "scaled the mountain and scattered seed far and wide"[946] just as Atum, resting upon the Primeval Hill, radiated the seed of life in all directions.

"Here, in the Chaldean Olympus," writes Sayce, "the gods were imagined to have been born; its summit was hidden by the clouds, and the starry firmament seemed to rest upon it."[947]

In what portion of the sky did the ancient Mesopotamians locate the hill? Several texts, as normally translated, identify the Mount as "the place where the sun rises," seeming to fix the peak in the east.

Concerning the Hursag raised by Ninurta, a hymn reads:

Incantation—O Sun-god, from the great mountain is thy rising; from the great mountain, the mountain of the ravine, is thy rising; from the holy mound, the place of destinies, is thy rising.[948]

---

[942] Ibid., 152.

[943] Agrawala, Sparks from the Vedic Fire, 82-83. [Emphasis added.]

[944] Kramer, Sumerian Mythology, 81.

[945] Langdon, Semitic Mythology, 99; Sayce, Lectures on the Origin and Growth of Religion, 360.

[946] Langdon, op. cit., 119.

[947] Op. cit., 360.

[948] Ibid., 515.

The texts also connect the lost land of Dilmun with a cosmic mountain, a peak which appears to be the same as the Hursag, for it is “the mountain of Dilmun, the place where the sun rises.”[949] The temple hymns employ the same terminology in describing the Kur (“mountain”) as Kur-d-utu-e’-a, “the mountain where the sun rises.” In the Epic of Gilgamesh, the hero journeys to the Mashu Mountain upon which the vault of heaven rests. Through its gate the sun comes forth.[950]

Mesopotamian reliefs show the sun-god standing upon a cleft peak virtually identical to the Egyptian “mountain” symbol (fig. 60). With the rarest exceptions, authorities identify the image with the solar orb rising over an eastern hill.

Certain writers, in fact, believe that the entire character of the mythical Mount can be explained by the simple experience of native races viewing the eastern sunrise. Jacobsen, for example, urges that we understand the Hursag as “the range of mountains bordering the Mesopotamian plain on the east. As seen on the eastern horizon, its shining peaks towering from earth up into heaven, the hursag appears indeed to belong equally to both of these cosmic entities, and the epithet . . . ‘of both heaven and earth,’ is therefore as forceful as it is apt.”[951]

But there is a curious feature of the great column: the mount from which the Babylonian sun-god “rises” is the same mount on which it “sets.” The singular hill is “the mountain of the night [“sunset”], the mountain of the sunrise, the mountain of the centre.”[952]

Through the gate of the Mashu Mountain attained by Gilgamesh the sun-god Shamash comes forth. But the keepers of this mountain-gate are those who “guard Shamash at the rising and setting of the sun.”[953]

Similarly, in connection with a hymn to the “Fire-god,” containing enigmatic references to “the mountain of the sun-set” and “the mountain of the sunrise,” Sayce writes: “We must consider the poet to have looked upon the mountain behind which the sun rose and set as one and the same.”[954]

Were the Sumero-Babylonian races oblivious of the geographical realities? One remembers Kristensen’s observation that the Egyptian sun-god rises and sets upon a singular khut or “Mount of Glory.” Is this seeming confusion of east and west due to the abandon of the mythmakers, or to a modern misunderstanding of ancient cosmology?

One can begin to resolve the dilemma by comprehending the primeval mount’s title as “the mountain of the centre.” The mount is the pivot, for the Assyro-Babylonians gave it the title “the axis of heaven”—a designation which leads Lenormant to describe the mount as “the column which joined the heavens and the earth and served as an axis to the celestial vault.”[955] This, of course, creates a conflict with the apparent solar imagery of the peak. Because the “sun”-god shines from the mountain, Lenormant seeks a compromise between the polar and the eastern locations: “. . . The mountain which acted as a pivot to the starry heavens was to the northeast . . .” Unfortunately, the compromise fails to explain either trait of the mountain: the Babylonian sunrise does not occur to the northeast,[956] and in no sense could the northeast appear as a cosmic axis. One faces the very paradox observed by Butterworth when he speaks of the "ambiguity between the Pole and the Sun."[957]

---

[949] Kramer, op. cit., 98.

[950] Langdon, op. cit., 209.

[951] Toward the Image of Tammuz, 118.

[952] Sayce, op. cit., 449. [Emphasis added.]

[953] Langdon, op. cit., 209. [Emphasis added.]

[954] Op. cit., 361. [Emphasis added.]

[955] Chaldean Magic, 152.

[956] Ibid.; see also Lenormant, Les Origines de l’Histoire, Vol. I, 126-127.

The entire difficulty vanishes when one recalls:

—that the Sumero-Babylonian sun-god does not literally rise, but "comes forth" or "grows bright."

—that the sun-god comes forth at the polar centre or heart of heaven.

—that the sun-god is Saturn.

These principles permit us to see that what conventional interpretations must regard as flatly contradictory aspects of the world mountain actually reveal a harmonious idea. The subject is "the mountain of the centre" at whose summit shines the stationary sun. The god "comes out" and "goes in" on the mountaintop, through the "gate" or "door" or "window" of the polar enclosure; but he accomplishes this without moving from his fixed abode.

The Babylonian sun-god, observed Warren, comes forth from "the true summit of the Earth, the Northern Pole."[958]

It is, in fact, impossible to comprehend Babylonian cosmology apart from the polar character of the great Mount. Obviously, to ascend the world mountain is to attain the world summit, and the summit is, as many writers have noted, the polar dwelling of An, the "midst" or "heart" of heaven.

In all ancient cosmologies the centre and summit meet at the celestial pole, and the Sumero-Babylonian world view is no exception. The Babylonian "Pole-star," states Robert Brown, "is seated in majesty on the summit of the northern heights."[959] One of the names of the pole is Dugga (Semitic Saqu), which means "high" and is connected with the idea "to rise up," "to come to the top."[960] The ruling polar god is thus the commander of the summit, which can only be the summit of the world mountain. The "Judge of Heaven [Anu] in the centre is bound" (i.e., he is enclosed within the bond). And "in the Centre he fixed the Zenith"[961] that is, he raised the world mountain, the primeval foundation. Like the Egyptian Mena-uret, the Sumerian mount becomes the "binding post" or "mooring post" (DIM.GAL) of the turning Cosmos.

The god on the cosmic mountain was the planet Saturn, "the pillar." Anu atop the "illustrious Mound," Shamash on the "mountain of the world," Ninurta at the summit of Hursag, Tammuz on the "Shepherd's Hill" of Arallu, and Enki ruling the Ekur ("mountain house"), or the "mountain of Dilmun"—all point to the planet Saturn, the primeval sun upon the column of the Cosmos .

With this cosmic mountain the Sumerians identified every city and every temple. As in Egypt, the Mount and enclosure always appear together, the Mount serving as the heavenly abode's support. Of Enki's temple, the hymns record, "The holy foundation made with skill rises from the nether-sea."[962] Confirming this union of the cosmic temple and Mount are the titles of the sacred dwellings—"The House, Foundation of the An-ki (Cosmos)"; "House, the mountain of the Cosmos"; "House of the Mountain"; "Temple whose platform is suspended from heaven's midst . . . growing up like a mountain."

---

[957] The Tree at the Navel of the Earth, 124.

[958] "The Gates of Sunrise in ancient Babylonian Art," 242.

[959] Researches into the Origins of the Primitive Constellations, Vol. I, 184.

[960] Ibid., 185.

[961] Jensen, Die Kosmologie der Babylonier, 11. [Emphasis added.]

[962] Langdon, "A Hymn to Eridu," 64.

In the same manner the hymns extol the local city as a duplication of the celestial prototype. The earthbound Eridu received its name from Enki's city above, the cosmic Eridu fashioned in the waters of the Apsu "like a holy highland" or "like a mountain." The city of Ninazu was the "mountain, pure place."963 Indeed the entire land of Akkad was symbolically linked with the great mountain and portrayed as the centre of the world.964

If the symbols of the enclosed sun are and , the symbols of the Mount and enclosure are and . The basic images occur throughout Mesopotamia. Depicted is the inaccessible paradise, a circular plain situated atop the mountain of the world and watered by four rivers flowing in four directions. Thus the Assyrians called the world mountain "the land [or mountain] of the four rivers." Massey recognized this as "the mythical Mount of the Pole and the four rivers of four quarters, which arose in Paradise."965 Yet neither Massey nor the more conventional authorities seem to have perceived that the mountain-paradise corresponds in every way to the simple images and .

Nor has any writer given sufficient attention to the extraordinary parallel between the Egyptian and Mesopotamian images of the cosmic mountain.

India

"In all the legends of India," states Lenormant, "the origin of humanity is placed on Mount Meru, the residence of the gods and the column which unites the sky to the earth."966 For the Hindus, Meru was the prototype of the sacred hill. As the Aryans spread through India they named many local peaks "Meru," deeming each a copy of the primeval mount.967

The original Meru was the polar mountain, its summit the quartered enclosure of the celestial paradise . Hindu sources describe the mount as a cosmic pillar fixed in the middle of the plain Jambu-dwipa, or rising in the midst of the cosmic sea. On the summit of this "golden mountain" or "Jewelled Peak" lies the heavenly city of Brahma, and around the peak lie the cardinal points and intermediate quarters.968 Toward each of the four quarters of the mountain paradise flows an outlet of the central water source, the celestial Ganges.969

Meru reaches the centre of heaven, and around its summit the stars revolve.970 The mount, states Lenormant, is "at once the north Pole and the centre of the habitable earth."971 The "world navel" means the zenith.

---

963 Sjöberg and Bergmann, The Collection of the Sumerian Temple Hymns, 51.

964 W. T. Warren, Paradise Found, 166-69.

965 The Natural Genesis, Vol. II, 21.

966 Les Origines, Vol. II, 17.

967 Ibid.; Faber, The Origins of Pagan Idolatry, Vol. III, 201.

968 Wilson, Vishnu Purana, Vol.II, 110*ff.*; Guenon, Le Roi du Monde, 85; O'Neill, The Night of the Gods, 400.

969 Lenormant, Les Origines de l'Histoire, Vol. II, 19.

970 Ibid.

971 Ibid.

Hindu ritual commemorates the cosmic pillar through the sacrificial stake or post. In the Satapatha Brahmana, the priest raises the sacred stake (yupa) with the words: “With thy crest thou hast touched the sky; with thy middle thou hast filled the air; with thy foot thou hast steadied the earth.”[972] The cosmic pillar was the foundation of heaven: “Prop thou the sky! fill the air! stand firm on the earth.”[973] “A stay art thou! Do thou make firm the sky!”[974]

This “firm” or “stable” support corresponds in every way to the primordial foundation of Egyptian and Mesopotamian cosmologies. The Satapatha Brahmana locates the post in the centre of the sacrifice shed (Sadas), itself a symbol of the Cosmos. The participants in the ritual form a circle around the post and touch it with the words, “Here is stability . . . Here is joy.”[975]

The cosmic post, Eliade informs us, was the axis of the world. By mystically ascending the celestial pillar the sacrificer attained the cosmic centre and summit.[976]

The Indian world pillar, whether considered as a cosmic mountain (Meru) or as a pole or stake reaching from earth to heaven, is that which sustains the central sun. Buddhist iconography reviewed by Coomaraswamy depicts the wheel of the “sun” raised upon a cosmic column called “the pillar of fire.”[977] To the solar mythologists the pillar can only be in the east, the direction of sunrise. Yet Coomaraswamy writes: “The wheel is supported by a column, the Axis of the Universe.”[978] The “sun,” in other words, means not the wandering solar orb, but the Buddha or Brahma—the “true sun” which “after having risen thence upwards . . . rises and sets no more. It remains alone in the centre.”[979]

The Indian pillar—reflecting the cosmic images and —serves at once as the foundation of the Cosmos and the axle of the revolving wheel above. That the axle is the pillar is confirmed in the Rig Veda: “. . . by the axle of his wheeled-car indeed, by his abilities, he pillars apart Heaven and Earth.”[980] Resting atop the axle-pillar, the great god appears as the “unmoved mover” of the revolving wheel.[981]

Thus the “axle-born” Buddha resides at the centre or nave of the wheel, imparting motion to the turning circumference while himself remaining motionless. The wheel, in turn, rests upon “a universal ground” or foundation, a lotus-like pillar. “The pillar extends from Earth to Heaven; it is the axis of the Universe,” states Coomaraswamy.[982] Buddhist art and architecture give numerous and elaborate expressions to the idea, but reduced to its fundamentals, it is simply the polar “sun”-wheel sustained by the cosmic mountain .

---

[972] Eggeling, Satapatha Brahmana, III, 7, 1, 14.

[973] Ibid., III, 6, 1, 15; Eliade, Le Chamanisme el les Techniques Archaïques de l’Extase, 362-63.

[974] Satapatha Brahmana, I, 2, 1, 10.

[975] Ibid., Part IIn 140-43, 454, note 3.

[976] Eliade, op. cit., 363.

[977] Elements of Buddhist Iconography, Figs. 1-5.

[978] Ibid., note to Fig. 2. [Emphasis added.]

[979] De Saussure, Les Origines de l’Astronomie Chinoise, 231, 249.

[980] Rig Veda X, 89, 4, in Coomaraswamy, op. cit., 29.

[981] Ibid., 28-29.

[982] Ibid., 34.

Japan, China, Iran, Siberia

With the axis-mountain of Indian thought we can bracket closely related examples from neighbouring lands:

A title of the Indian Meru was Sumeru, the “excellent” Meru, a name which Buddhism carried into China as Siumi, and to Japan as Shumi. Even the relatively late Chinese commentary the Li-Khi locates Mount Siumi in the “middle” of the Cosmos, i.e., at the pole.[983] The Japanese Mount Shumi was, according to Hepburn, “a Buddhist fabulous mountain of wonderful height, forming the axis of every Universe, and the centre around which all the heavenly bodies revolve.”[984]

The most common name of the polar mountain in China is Kwen-lun. Called the world’s highest mountain, Kwen-lun stood at “the centre of the earth.”[985] On its summit lay a shining circular plain, recalled as a celestial homeland whose “sparkling fountains and purling streams contain the far-famed ambrosia.”[986] The paradise, notes Warren, possesses “a living fountain from which flow in opposite directions the four great rivers of the world.”[987]

Named “the Pearl Mountain,” Kwen-Lun rises to the celestial pole, the abode of the first king Shang-ti.[988] Around it revolve the visible heavens.[989] Kwen-lun is “described as a stupendous heaven-sustaining mountain, marking the centre or pole.”[990] It is the “Great Peak of Perfect Harmony,” whose summit displays Shang-ti’s palace, named Tsze-wei, “a celestial space around the N. Pole.”[991]

Distinct from Kwen-lun, but representing the same idea, is the Chinese Mount Kulkun, designated as the “King of the Mountains, the summit of the earth, the supporter of heaven and the axis which touches the pole.”[992]

The true nature of the cosmic mount is evident in the Chinese symbolism of the king post. Mystic traditions defined the centre post of a roof (or the top of such a post) as the Ki. The chief upright (Ki) of the local dwelling symbolized the Tai-Ki or “Great Ki” in heaven, the central support of the turning Cosmos. The “Great Ki” was the god-king Shang-ti, dwelling upon the summit of the polar mount Kwen-lun.[993]

The Iranian counterpart of Meru was the cosmic mountain Hera Berezaiti, raised by Ahura Mazda. In the Zend Avesta this “bright mountain” appears as “the first mountain that rose up out of the earth.”[994]

From this cosmic mountain the sun shone forth each day. “Up! rise up and roll along! thou swift-horsed sun, above Hera Berezaiti, and produce light for the world . . .”[995] (Darmesteter’s translation seems to suggest a solar chariot ascending in the east to pass swiftly over the sky.) According to the Bundahish the "light rises up from Hera Berezaiti."[996]

---

[983] O’Neill, op. cit., 400.

[984] Ibid., 400.

[985] W. T. Warren, op. cit., 146-47.

[986] Ibid., 143-44.

[987] Ibid., 128.

[988] Massey, Ancient Egypt, 349.

[989] Warren, op. cit., 129.

[990] Ibid., 147.

[991] O’Neill, op. cit., 521.

[992] Nuttall, Fundamental Principles of Old and New World Civilization, 288.

[993] O’Neill, op. cit., 226. O’Neill summarizes the Ki as follows: “Placed in the middle, it is (like the pivot, like the king, like the Pole star) the center and the Terminus; or like the upper point of the post of a house, which is the center, and supports all . . . The Ki, the supreme Pole, is the centre of the heavens and of the Earth. Ibid., 520. Again, the “center” coincides with the “summit.”

[994] Darmesteter, The Zend Avesta, Part II, 175.

Does the mountain, then, lie to the geographic east? It does not. The sun atop the mount is Mithra, "the lord of wide pastures, . . . sleepless, and ever awake; from whom the Maker Ahura Mazda has built up a dwelling on the Hera-Berezaiti, the bright mountain around which the many stars revolve, where come neither night nor darkness, no cold wind and no hot wind, no deathful sickness, no uncleanness made by the Daevas, and the clouds cannot reach up unto the Hera-Berezaiti."[997]

The polar character of the mount was not lost on Lenormant, who wrote: "Like the Meru of the Indians, Hera-Berezaiti is the pole and centre of the world, the fixed point around which the sun and the planets perform their revolutions."[998] Through the paradise at the zenith flowed the four directional rivers; and here was Ahura Mazda's "shining" abode, the "house of praise."[999]

So profoundly influenced were the Iranians by this primordial mountain that one encounters the same cosmic hill under numerous names. As reported by Lenormant, all the groups embodied by the race, "desiring to have their own Hera-Berezaiti," left commemorative sacred mountains in one location after another.[1000]

When the Zend Avesta speaks of "Mount Us-hindu, that stands in the middle of the sea,"[1001] one recognizes the same central mountain. The Bundahish describes the cosmic peak as "that which, being of ruby, of the substance of the sky, is in the midst of the wide formed ocean."[1002] Is this not the character of every Primeval Hill, rising to the centre of the cosmic sea?

The Iranians also called the cosmic mountain Taera (or Terak). In the Pahlavi Texts Taera appears as the "Centre of the World."[1003] And again, the central mount is the axis, for the Zend Avesta depicts the "holy Rasnu" resting "upon the Taera of the height Haraiti, around which the stars, the moon and the sun revolve."[1004]

On the cosmic mount lay the birthplace of the first ancestor. In the "centre of the earth" Gayomarth was born "radiant and tall," ruling upon the great hill as "king of the mountain."[1005] This world centre was the paradise Airan-vej, the Iranian Eden, and Gayomarth was the "first man." The most distinctive characteristic of this paradise was the great peak Kadad-i-Daitik, termed "the Centre of the Earth." And where was this primordial mountain at the centre of the world? It is identified as "the peak of judgement" atop Hera Berezaiti.[1006]

---

[995] Ibid., Part I, 225, including note I.

[996] West, Bundahish XX.

[997] Darmesteter, op. cit., Part II, 131-32. [Emphasis added.]

[998] Ararat and Eden, 41.

[999] Dresden, "Mythology of Ancient Iran," 359.

[1000] Les Origines, Vol. I, 30*ff.*

[1001] Darmesteter, op. cit., Part II, 101.

[1002] West, op. cit., xii, 6.

[1003] Warren, op. cit., 243.

[1004] Darmesteter, op. cit., Part II 175.

[1005] Ibid., 33, note 1.

[1006] Warren, op. cit., 156-57.

Thus could the Manichaeans say with assurance, “The Primeval Man comes, then, from the world of the Pole Star.”[1007]

Siberia

Among Altaic races one finds a well-preserved memory of the cosmic pillar. “The conception of a sky-supporting pillar reaches back among the Altaic race to a comparatively early period,” states Uno Holmberg.[1008] The consensus holds that the column rose to the stationary celestial pole. Among many tribes it was “the golden pillar.” The Kirghis, Bashkirs, and other Siberian Tatar tribes recall it as “the iron pillar.” To the Teleuts it was “the lone post” and to the Tungus-Orotshons, “the golden post.”[1009]

Siberian myths describe the pillar as a great mountain, which the Mongols and Kalmucks call Sumur or Sumer and the Buriats Sumbur (closely related to the Hindu Meru or Sumeru). “In whatever form this mountain is imagined, it is connected always with the cosmography of these peoples, forming its centre . . . As far back as can be traced it has been a cosmological belief.”

“Where, then, is the summit of this earth-mountain?” asks Uno Holmberg. “We might suppose it to be at the summit of Heaven, directly above us . . . It was not, however, envisaged thus, but instead its peak rises to the sky at the North Star where the axis of the sky is situated, and where, on the peak, the dwelling of the Over-god and his ‘golden throne’ are situated. To this idea points also the assumption, met everywhere in Asia, that the world mountain is in the north.”[1010]

Siberian creation myths relate that the “high God” Ulgen, at the creation of the world, sat atop a “golden mountain.”[1011] The Siberians conceived the axle-pillar as the centre post to which the revolving celestial bodies were bound. Just as Egyptian texts termed the pillar the “Great Mooring Post” and the Sumerians denominated it the “binding post,” Altaic races gave it the name “mighty tethering post.” Nomads of Central Asia claim that their use of a post for tethering of their steeds imitates the gods, who fastened their horses to the heavens post. Certain Siberian Tatar tribes describe the cosmic pillar as a “golden horse post” raised in front of the gods’ dwelling.[1012]

Altaic and Finno-Ugric tribes commemorated the world pillar through the sacrificial pillars erected in the centre of the village or as the centre-pole of the tent. The ritual post of the Lapps was Veralden Tshould—“the pillar of the world"—and represented the lofty polar column.[1013] Uno Holmberg reports that the wood post which supports the centre of the Altaic shaman's tent duplicates the cosmic character of the primeval pillar upholding heaven. In the magical rites the shaman ascends this post to reach the navel and summit of the world.

[1007] Uno Holmberg, Die Religiösen Vorstellungen der Altaischen Völker, 80.

[1008] Siberian Mythology, 333.

[1009] Ibid., 341.

[1010] Ibid., 342.

[1011] Uno Holmberg, Die Religiösen Vorstellungen, 59.

[1012] Uno Holmberg, Siberian Mythology, 337. Though the cosmic pillar is explicitly polar, the Siberians (like so many other races) connect it with the primeval “sun.” The Ostiaks describe the celestial binding post as standing “on the side of the sun.” Certain tribes deem the celestial pole the “Pillar of Gold,” “the Pillar of Fire,” or “the Pillar of the Sun.” Eliade, op. cit., 236.

Some traditions describe the binding post as made of iron. The Voguls recall “the holy iron pillar of god erected for the tethering of the holy animal with many-coloured thighs,” while others often depict it as a shining “nail” serving as the axis and support of the cosmos. The Samoyeds, for example, speak of a polar “nail of the sky,” “round which the heavens revolve.” Uno Holmberg, Siberian Mythology, 221. Among the Finns and Lapps the conception of the world pillar as a golden nail was very common. Holzmayer describes the belief as follows: “In the middle of the sky, or in the north, the heavens are affixed to a nail in such a manner that they are able to revolve round the nail, the revolving causing the movement of the stars.” This nail is at the same time conceived as the support or foundation of the sky. Ibid.

The Altaic “Nail of the North” was the axis of the world mill. The Ostiaks sang: “There is a mill which grinds by itself, and scatters the dust of a hundred versts away. And there is a golden pole with a golden cage on top which is also the Nail of the North.” De Santillana and von Dechend, Hamlet’s Mill, 96. We can now understand this mill as the ever-turning cosmic wheel supported by the “golden pole” or axis-pillar: (here).

"In the middle of the world stands a pillar of birch wood, say the Yakuts."[1014] The sacred pole, Holmberg reports, stood for the mountain of the navel.

Like so many other races, the Finns identify the navel with the summit, for they recall the origin of fire:

Over there at the navel of heaven

On the peak of the famous mountain.[1015]

On the cosmic mountain appeared the "first man," radiating light. Altaic and Finno-Ugric races as a whole regard this centre—the "stillest place"—as the site of the lost paradise, watered by four rivers, each associated with a different colour. Here, they claim, the "sun" never set beneath the horizon, and here the original race enjoyed a perpetual spring.[1016]

Greece And Rome

When the Greeks speak of Mount Olympus as the home of the gods, one customarily thinks of the famous Macedonian peak, the highest mountain in Greece. Yet numerous peaks in Greece and Asia Minor competed for the title "Olympus." Arcadia and Thessaly had their own Olympus, as did Laconia. Mountains in Attica, in Euboea, and in Skyros are still called Olympus today. Four different peaks of Mount Ida bore the name, while there was another Olympus in Galatia, another in Lydia, another in Lycia, another in Celicia. So also did Lesbos and Cyprus possess a sacred Olympus.

For an explanation of the many locations one must look to the cosmic prototype. Each hill entitled Olympus commemorated the original resting place of the great father Kronos (later Zeus), just as the hill which the Romans called the Capitoline symbolized the "Mount of Saturn."[1017] Dionysius of Halicarnassus thus reports a complete assimilation of the Capitoline or Saturnian hill and the Greek Olympus or Mount Kronos.[1018] Both hills signified the primordial mount on which the old god Saturn founded his celestial residence.

The mythical Olympus, which gave its name to so many sacred peaks, was the "wholly-shining" summit, the "aetherial" height or "burning sky." The author of the Platonic Epinomis refers to Olympus as "the Cosmos."[1019]

Plato tells us that Olympus was the omphalos or navel of the earth,[1020] a fact of vital significance, since the Greeks knew the omphalos as the "axis."

[1013] In one such wooden post described by Leem an iron nail was stuck in the top as an obvious symbol of the world nail. Uno Holmberg, Siberian Mythology, 221-22.

[1014] Uno Holmberg, Die Religiosen Vorstellungen, 47-48.

[1015] Ibid., 62.

[1016] Ibid., 75-88.

[1017] Lenormant, Les Origines, Vol. I, 146.

[1018] Dionysius of Halicarnassus, I, 34; II, 1.

[1019] Cook, Zeus: A Study in Ancient Religion, Vol. I, 101, 114-15.

[1020] Plato, Critias, 120; Lenormant, Les Origines de l'Histoire, Vol. I, 146.

Moreover, the tradition of Olympus cannot be divorced from that of Ida, another mythical mountain possessing more than one localization. That Mount Ida bore the name Olympus and, like Olympus, was said to rise into the aether,[1021] reveals the underlying identity of the two heaven's pillars. Ida was the birthplace:

In the centre of the Sea is the White Isle of Zeus
There is Mount Ida, and our race's cradle.[1022]

So declares Aeneas. To anyone aware of the general tradition, this mountain in the middle of the sea can only be the primeval hill, the cosmic peak to which every race on earth traces its ancestry.

Also conceived as the centre of the world was the famous Mount Parnassus, from which, according to local myths, the human race descended. On the slope of Parnassus stood Delphi, Apollo's popular shrine, esteemed as "the navel." But here too we must look beyond the commemorative terrestrial mount to comprehend its symbolism. The mythical Parnassus is doubtless the same as the Sanskrit Parnasa, which the Hindu Puranas call Meru, the polar mountain.

One of those to perceive the Greek sacred mountain as the copy of the cosmic mount was Warren, who concluded: "Olympus was simply the Atlantean pillar [the "pillar of heaven"] pictured as a lofty mountain, and supporting the sky at its northern Pole. In fact, many writers now affirm that the Olympus of Greek mythology was simply the north polar 'World-mountain' of the Asiatic nations."[1023] But the point is only rarely acknowledged today, and most treatments of the subject still ask the Macedonian mount to explain its own mythical image.

Western Semitic

Mount Zion, the site of the ancient Hebrew temple, is a small hill in Jerusalem, between the Tyropoeon and Kedron valleys. The Hebrews frequently call Jerusalem itself "Zion."

But in the "last days," according to Isaiah (2:2), Zion "shall be exalted above the hills." This will be the new Jerusalem. The Book of Revelation, in reference to "a new heaven and a new earth," implies a transformation of the mount: "[An angel] carried me away in the spirit to a great and high mountain, and showed me that great city, the holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven."[1024] The verse suggests that in the order to come the celestial city will rest on a mountain reaching to heaven.

The concrete image of the new Jerusalem, however, is supplied by the memory of the primordial Jerusalem, founded at the creation. This was the mount on which Yahweh, or El, stood in the beginning. From the available evidence, one observes the following characteristics of the cosmic Zion:

1. The mountain stood at the navel of the world.*[1025]

Thus, in the "creation," God fashioned the "earth" around Zion.[1026]

2. The mountaintop was the world summit.*

Among the Hebrews, states Wensinck, "the sanctuary [Zion] has been considered as the highest mountain or the highest territory of the earth." This is, Wensinck adds, "the first character of the navel."[1027] (Every navel marks the centre and summit.) Through assimilation with the cosmic Zion, the local hill acquires the imagery of the original.

[1021] Cook, op. cit., Vol. I, 116.

[1022] Quoted in Warren, op. cit., 182. [Emphasis added.]

[1023] Ibid., 212.

[1024] Revelation 21:10. [Emphasis added.]

[1025] Wensinck, "The Ideas of the Western Semites Concerning the Navel of the Earth," 1-10.

[1026] Ibid., 16.

[1027] Ibid., 13.

> Great is the Lord, and greatly to be praised in the city of our God, in the mountain of his holiness. Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth, is mount Zion.[1028]

The phrase "beautiful for situation" (yepeh nop) has the concrete meaning of "towering superb" (Gaster's rendering of the phrase).[1029] Needless to say, the small hill in terrestrial Jerusalem did not supply this image.

3. Zion lies in the farthest north.*

Mt. Zion, "thou far reaches of the North," an emperor's citadel.[1030]

Here the cosmic Zion is identified with the celestial Zaphon, the Mount of Congregation in the uttermost north. This is the mount from which Lucifer was cast down:

> For thou [Lucifer] hast said in thine heart, I will ascend into heaven, I will exalt my throne above the stars of God: I will sit also upon the mount of the congregation, in the sides of the north [Zaphon]. I will ascend above the heights of clouds; I will be like the most High.[1031]

Thus does God (as El, the Most High) reside on a great northern mountain, reaching the stars. Clifford tells us that "Zaphon's meaning seems to be practically 'heavens'."[1032] That Zion was synonymous with this cosmic mountain in the far north links the modest hill in Jerusalem with the polar mountain of global mythology.

4. God appears as a radiant light atop Zion.*

> Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined. Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence: a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him.[1033]

5. The primeval temple (or city) rests on Zion.*

". . . The habitation of Yahweh on Zion is the earthly counterpart of the glorious mansion which, in traditional popular lore, the divine overlord is said to have built for himself on the supernal hill of the gods," writes Gaster.[1034]

6. God resides* "in" the cosmic Zion.

The enclosure of God's dwelling (temple, city) is inseparable from the mountain on which it rests. Thus can the Psalm employ the phrase, "in the city of our God, in the mountain of his holiness."[1035] God's "dwelling place in Zion"[1036] is the enclosure of the summit.

7. Zion is the site of Adam's paradise, the land of the four rivers.

To the prince of Tyre (clearly the cosmic, not the terrestrial city) the Lord declares:

[1028] Psalm 48: 1-2.

[1029] Gaster, Myth, Legend and Custom in the Old Testament, 758.

[1030] Psalm 48:2, as translated by Gaster, op. cit., 758.

[1031] Isaiah 14:13-14. [Emphasis added.]

[1032] Clifford, The Cosmic Mountain, 162.

[1033] Psalm 50: 2-3.

[1034] To Come.

[1035] Psalm 48:1. [Emphasis added.]

[1036] Psalm 76:2. [Emphasis added.]

> Thou hast been in Eden, the garden of God; every precious stone was thy covering . . . Thou wast upon the holy mountain of God; thou hast walked up and down in the midst of the stones of fire.[1037]

In these lines the prince of the cosmic city appears in the character of Adam, enthroned amid the fiery stones of Eden. To occupy the primeval garden is to abide upon "the holy mountain of God."[1038] The point is noted by Wensinck: "Paradise really consists of a mountain higher than any mountain on earth . . . Paradise is also considered as a navel."[1039] That the mountain surpassed all terrestrial peaks simply means that it was cosmic, as was the paradise at the summit.

These characteristics of the heaven's peak in Hebrew tradition find additional confirmation in the closely related cosmic mountain of Canaanite myth. Zaphon in the far north appears repeatedly in the texts as the resting place of the high god Baal. "There are striking similarities between the mountain spn [Zaphon] in the Ugaritic texts and Mount Zion in the Hebrew Bible," writes Clifford. "On both the deity dwells in his temple from which he exercises his rule; thunder and lightning are frequently his means of disclosure; the mountain . . . is impregnable; it is connected with fertility; and it is a cosmic centre."[1040]

Noteworthy is "the mythic and cosmic dimension of the pillar or mountain. That is, it joins the upper and lower world; in it is contained a super abundance of life, of water; it is the throne of the deity."[1041] Just as the Hebrew Yahweh dwells in Zion, so does the Canaanite high god Baal dwell in the cosmic Zaphon:

In the midst of my mountain, divine Zaphon,

In the holy place, the mountain of my heritage,

In the chosen spot, on the hill of victory.[1042]

Baal is enthroned, yea (his) seat is the mountain . . .

In the midst of his mountain, divine Zaphon . . .

His head is wonderful.[1043]

It must be this cosmic hill depicted in a Phoenician ivory, reproduced by Clifford. The ivory (dated to the first millenium B.C.) shows a mountain personified as a male deity. The mountain-god holds in his hand a vase from which four streams flow in opposite directions.[1044] Issuing from the summit of the mount, the four rivers provide a distinct parallel to the four rivers of other traditions.

[1037] Ezekiel 12: 13-15. [Emphasis added.]

[1038] See also the Book of Jubilees 8:19.

[1039] Op. cit., 14.

[1040] Clifford, op. cit., 131.

[1041] Ibid., 97.

[1042] Ibid., 68. [Emphasis added.]

[1043] Ibid., 77. [Emphasis added.]

[1044] Ibid. Complementing Hebrew traditions of Zion are the Muslim tales of the world mountain Kaf. According to the commentary of Tha'labi, "Allah created a large mountain of green emerald, from which the green colour of the sky is derived: it is called mount Kaf and it surrounds the whole earth." Wensinck, op. cit., 5. The mount served as a stable support and enclosed the "world." This is exactly the image of the enclosed celestial earth forming the summit of the primeval hill: (here).

Muslim cosmology knows the holy city of Mecca as the summit of the worlds highest mountain. Ibid., 12, 25. The throne of Allah on the mountaintop or world summit stood at the celestial pole. "The highest point and the center of heaven is the Polestar," states Wensinck. Ibid., 47.

The Americas

"The ancient Mexicans," writes Warren, "conceived of the cradle of the human race as situated in the farthest North, upon the highest of mountains, cloud-surrounded, the residence of the god Tlaloc. Thence come the rains and all streams, for Tlaloc is the god of the water. The first man Quetzalcoatl, after having ruled as king of the Golden Age of Mexico, returned by divine direction to the primeval Paradise in the North (Tlapallan) and partook of the draught of immortality. The stupendous terraced pyramid-temple of Cholula was a copy and symbol of the sacred Paradise mountain of Aztec tradition, which was described as standing 'in the Centre of the Middle-country.'"1045

Called Colhuacan, Tlaloc's mountain was the site of the mythical homeland Atzlan, the "White Mountain" from which, according to the myths, the Mexicans descended.1046 Resting on the summit of Colhuacan was the temple of Mixcoatl, "the god of the Pole Star."1047 Though Mexican myths abound with references to the primordial "centre," one notes that (as stated by Sejourne) "the centre . . . is also the point where heaven and earth meet,"1048 i.e., it is "the world's highest point," the summit of the world mountain.

As an indication of the close correspondence between the Mexican paradisal mountain and that of other races, I cite the following Mixtec account of divine origins. The account relates that "the father and mother of all the gods" constructed a mansion upon a great hill while the world yet lay "in deep obscurity":

. . . When all was chaos and confusion,

the earth was covered with water,

there was only mud and slime on the surface of the earth.

At that time . . .

there became visible

a god who had the name 1-Deer and the surname Snake of the Lion and a goddess, very genteel and beautiful,

whose name was also 1-Deer and whose surname was Snake of the Tiger.

These two gods are said to have been the beginning of all other gods . . .

Western Semitic races claim that the creator dwelt in a celestial tent, reflected in imitative tents on earth. The central pole of the terrestrial tent corresponds to the world mountain. The Arabs called the cosmic mountain itself the "Central Pole of the Tent," while the Arabic name for the pole star, Al-rucaba, gave the Spanish arrocabe, "the kingpost of a roof." O'Neill, op. cit., Vol. I, 226.

The polar mount also finds symbolic expression in the Arabic minaret or "light house," a slender and lofty tower atached to a Muslim mosque. On the balcony of the minaret the muezzin calls the people to prayer. The worlds largest minaret is the Qutb Minar at Delhi, standing over 240 feet high and described by one observer as resembling "a cyclopean red telescope." Ibid., 206-8. The Quth (of Qutb Minar) is, as we have seen, the "pole" or "axis" of the universe. The minaret—commemorating the axis-pillar—thus corresponds well with the sacred poles and pillars of other nations. (I earlier proposed that the prototype of the minaret was the Egyptian Mena-uret—the Great Mooring Post.)

1045 Op. cit., 247. [Emphasis added.]

1046 Masey, Ancient Egypt, 588.

1047 Krickerberg, in Pre-Columbian Religions, 41; Fay Diego Duran, Book of the Gods and Rites, 161, translator's footnote.

1048 Sejourne, Burning Water, 89.

As soon as these two gods became visible on earth, in human form, the accounts of our people relate that with their power and wisdom they made and established a large stone on which they built a very sumptuous mansion, constructed with the finest workmanship
which was their seat and residence on earth . . .
This large stone and the mansion were on a very high hill, near the village of Apoala . . .
This large stone was named
"the-place-where-the-heavens-were."
And there they remained many centuries in complete tranquillity and contentment, as in a pleasant and delightful place . . .

The poem goes on to describe the planting of a garden of abundance on the mountaintop with—flowers and roses and trees and fruit and many herbs

and in this way
began the Mixtec kingdom.[1049]

Here we have the god One ("1-Deer") appearing in the primeval waters and taking as his spouse the great mother. The appearance of the primal pair coincides with the fashioning of a mansion atop "a very high hill." That this was the cosmic mountain is clear from the reference to the "large stone" of foundation atop the hill: its name was "the-place-where-the-heavens-were" (it was not of our earth). With its garden of plenty, this home of the Mixtec pair offered "complete tranquillity and contentment." (Compare the Egyptian Garden of Hetep, whose very name conveys the dual meaning "rest" and "abundance.")

All nations look back to the god One as the first king and to the first generation of gods as the "ancestors." Thus the poem concludes: "in this way began the Mixtec kingdom."

A central mountain, identified with "the earth's navel," appears also in the myths of the Pima of the southwestern United States. From this mountain the world was populated.[1050] The Omaha commemorate the great rock which Wakanda summoned from the waters, at the beginning of the world:

. . . The great white rock,
Standing and reaching as high as the heavens, enwrapped in mist.
Verily as high as the heavens . . .[1051]

[1049] Léon-Portilla, Pre-Columbian Literatures of Mexico, 56-57.

[1050] Alexander, North American Mythology, 178.

[1051] Ibid., 107.

"The Indians, like the Semites," states Alexander, "conceived the world to be a mountain, rising from the waste of cosmic waters, and arched by the celestial dome."[1052]

The aborigines of Guiana know the great mountain Roraima, "ever-fertile source of streams." Surrounding this peak, the natives say, is "a magic circle." On the same mountain they recall an enormous serpent "which could entwine a hundred people in its folds."[1053]

In the Eskimo tradition, the upper or netherworld lies beyond a great mountain around which the celestial dome revolves. The land above this axis-mountain is said to resemble our earth.[1054]

Like other races, the American Indians represented the cosmic Mount by the centre-post of the sacred dwelling. Perhaps the most interesting version occurs in the Delaware symbolism of the "Big House," a ritual dwelling known to represent the primeval creation. Atop the centre-post of the Big House stood the effigy of the creator god Gicelemukaong. "The post on which his face appears represents him in his aspect as centre post of the universe, the supporter of the whole structure of creation," writes Muller.[1055] The connection of this king-post with the Great Bear[1056] proves its polar character, while the creator at the summit is without doubt the supreme polar god.

A Collective Memory

The myths and symbols of the cosmic mountain constitute a collective memory shared by all mankind. The Mount universally appears as the inaccessible height, attaining the centre of heaven. Around its summit revolves the circle of the Cosmos. In all principal accounts the Mount appears as the ancestral homeland—the lost paradise with its four rivers.

From one section of the world to another the ancients represented the primeval hill through sacred posts and pillars—the centre-posts of temples and other holy dwellings, or the free-standing columns holding aloft various emblems of the great god and his enclosure.

The pillar of light appearing to support the planet-god was "the earth's highest mountain." The god on the mountaintop seemed to occupy the summit of the terrestrial landscape, yet also appeared literally as the pivot around which all the heavenly bodies turned.

In other words, one can speak of the great father as ruling "on our earth" without reducing him to mere human proportions. The same figure ruled as the central sun.

It is to the cosmic mountain that one must refer in order to make sense of the commemorative hill or sacred column. Yet the priority of the cosmic peak is only rarely admitted by the experts.

Were the Greeks so unsophisticated as to believe that Kronos—acknowledged to be the planet Saturn—sat enthroned on a local Olympus? Did the Hebrews truly believe that Yahweh, at the creation, actually stood on the mound of earth which we now call Zion? (The truth is that in the age of epic poetry and fable, when the chroniclers confused the cosmic Olympus and Zion with their local representations, most educated men stopped believing the myths.)

[1052] Ibid., 8.

[1053] Latin American Mythology, 277.

[1054] Alexander, North American Mythology, 8.

[1055] In Pre-Columbian Religions, 163.

[1056] Ibid., 166. The Mexican national temple of Tlaloc and Vizilputzi (Tlaloc's brother) stood in the center of the city of Mexico, whence four causeways radiated in the four direction. "In the center of the temple stood a richly ornamented Pillar of peculiar sanctity," noted Warren, op. cit., 247, note 1. Since the intersection of the crossroads symbolized the cosmic center and summit, the pillar clearly represented Tlaloc's celestial mountain at the navel of the world.

The center and capital of the Peruvian city of Cuzco stood at the intersection of four great highways running to the north, south, east, and west, each traversing one of the four provinces or vice-royalties into which Peru was divided. In the central temple was a circle and in the center of the circle stood a sacred pillar. Ibid., note 2.

The memory of the cosmic mountain existed prior to the naming of sacred hills on our earth or the fashioning of symbolic representations. Indeed, the point should go without saying. While Greek mythologists like to think that the Macedonian Olympus gave rise to myths of the Olympic home of the gods, surely no one would suggest that the towering obelisks, iron posts, or minarets were fashioned before men conceived the great god resting on such a support. The cosmic myth precedes and gives meaning to the symbol. Local mountain and sacred pillar share the same role as characterizations of a cosmic prototype.

Divorced from the prototype the symbol will always appear as an expression of gross ignorance. A good illustration of this is Cook's explanation of the Germanic sacred pillar Irminsaul, "the pillar of heaven." To the primitive, Cook tells us, "the sky stands in need of a visible support. Early man was in fact haunted by a very definite dread that it might collapse on him."

"How that belief arose, we can only surmise. It may be that in the dim past, when the ancestors of these tribes developed out of hunters into herdsmen and emerged from the forest on to the open plain, they missed the big tree that seemed to support the sky ('heaven-reaching' as Homer calls it). And in the absence of the mighty prop there was nothing to guarantee the safety of their roof [the sky]."

"Now early man was a practical person. His roof being insecure, he proceeded to shore it up."[1057]

One observer after another confuses the symbol with the prototype. Can one credibly suggest that primitives raised the sacred post because "they missed the big tree that seemed to support the sky"? Could the most ignorant savages have believed that the very piece of wood before them sustained the entire heavens so that a few blows of an ax would bring down the sun, moon, and stars?

A few comparative mythologists, noting the sacred mountain's connection with the world axis, seek to understand it as an astronomical metaphor: the ancients must have been so impressed by the visual revolution of the heavens around a central point—the celestial pole—that they conceived a great column supporting heaven at its pivot and constituting the fixed axle of the universe. These writers see the mountain as a primitive fiction employed to explain the regular and harmonious motions of the heavens.

But in the ancient world view, the cosmic axis-pillar belongs to an integrated vision and cannot be separated from other central themes. If the Mount was no more than a colourful metaphor for the cosmic axis, in what metaphor did the polar sun originate? Why was this stationary light called Saturn? And why do the hymns incessantly invoke a shining band around the god, or four primary rays of light radiating from this central sun? To explain the cosmic mount as an analogy drawn by primitive imagination, one must, in similar terms, account for the entire range of motifs attached to the signs and , the world-wide images of the mountain. Such a task would require abstractions far beyond any to which the ancients were accustomed.

While modern man looks for an explanation of the myths in the present heavens, the mythmakers themselves repeatedly tell us that they speak of a vanished world order. The cosmic mountain is the Primeval Hill; the garden at the summit is the lost paradise; and the central sun ruling the enclosure is the banished god-king. The entire drama set forth in archaic ritual takes place in a previous age, separated from our own by overwhelming catastrophes (a subject which must be reserved for treatment in a separate volume).

When the ancient priests invoke the "Mount of Glory," the "Jewelled Peak," the "pillar of fire," or the "golden mountain" they affirm the Mount as a visible and powerful apparition.

Moreover, one need only consider the diverse mythical forms of the Mount to discover a symbolism of such breadth and coherence as to refute any appeal to abstractions.

The Mount Of Masculine Power

[1057] Op. cit., Vol. I, 55-56.

Mythical history presents the cosmic mountain as the masculine power of the heavens, implanting the luminous "seed" (Saturn) within the womb of the mother goddess. The goddess, personifying the band around the central sun, thus becomes the "mistress of the mountain."

If the Egyptian Atum or Re is the Great Seed, the Mesopotamian Ninurta, or Ningirsu, is "the life giving Seed."[1058] The ritual declares the primal seed to have been generated by the world pillar. "My king Ningirsu . . . , trusty lord, Seed spawned by the Great Mountain," reads a Sumerian hymn.[1059] In the same vein the Egyptians conceived Re the "Seed" of the cosmic mountain Shu.

The mountain is the generative pillar and the great goddess its queen. Upon forming the great column in the waters of Kur, Ninurta addresses his wife Ninmah (a form of Ninhursag):

Therefore on the hill which I, the hero, have heaped up,

Let its name be Hursag (mountain), and thou be its queen.[1060]

Similarly, Ishtar, the "womb," is the spouse on the mountain:

O supreme mistress of the mountain of the universe.[1061]

The concrete meaning of the goddess' title will be observed in a Canaanite fragment referring to Ishtar and Mount Pisaisa: the mount cohabits with the goddess.[1062] The world mountain takes the form of the Ithyphallus, observes Jeremias.[1063]

Egyptian ritual invokes the mother goddess as the "Spouse on the Mountain,"[1064] while the great father becomes An-mut-f, "the pillar of his mother."[1065]

That the great goddess, as mistress or queen of the mountain, actually cohabits with it may not always be explicitly spelled out, though the relationship is often explicit in the symbolism of the Mount itself. The phallic dimension of the cosmic pillar is very clear in the Egyptian obelisk , symbol of the Primeval Hill supporting the Benben stone or "Seed" of Atum. According to Rouge, "A comparative study of these little monuments proves that the obelisk was revered because it was the symbol of Amen the generator . . . The obelisk passes insensibly from its ordinary form to that of the phallus."[1066]

The Egyptian and Mesopotamian conceptions of the world mountain as masculine power accord with Hindu symbolism of the cosmic mount Meru, deemed the male principle of the universe.[1067] Meru was, in fact, the famed lingam or phallus of Shiva, extending upward along the "axis of the universe."[1068] Reflecting this idea is the phrase "the virile mountain," employed by the Atharva Veda.[1069]

[1058] Kramer, The Sacred Marriage Rite, 54.

[1059] Frankfort, op. cit., 257.

[1060] Kramer, Sumerian Mythology, 81.

[1061] Jastrow, The Religion of Babylonia and Assyria, 399.

[1062] Clifford, op. cit., 30.

[1063] "Der Ithyphallus, der auf der elamischen Vase realistisch dargestellt ist, entspricht in der mythischen Symbolik der Weltberg." Jeremias, Handbuch der Altorientalischen Geisteskultur, 24.

[1064] Renouf, op. cit., 115, note 1.

[1065] Ibid., 54.

[1066] Quoted in O'Neill, op. cit., 201.

[1067] Faber, op. cit., Vol. I, 331.

The "heavenly pillar" on which the Japanese pair Izangi and Izanami stood in the beginning[1070] was, according to the respected authority Hirata, at once the world axis and the lingam.[1071]

". . . Every mountain was deemed the phallus of the World, and every phallus or cone was an image of the holy mountain," observes Faber.[1072]

The phallic character of many sacred pillars is so widely acknowledged as to require little argument.[1073] Indeed, certain scholars are so impressed by this attribute of sacred pillars that they seek to build an entire interpretation of ancient ritual around the theme: every pillar and every related symbol becomes an expression of a primitive preoccupation with human reproduction—and nothing else.

Figure 46. Cretan Mistress of the Mountain.

Yet in each instance, one sees the prevailing theme of the cosmic mountain. It is one thing to admit the masculine attribute of the pillar (among other attributes), but quite another thing to assert, as some do, that the pillar was initially nothing more than a masculine emblem. The cosmic mountain came first, and it was quite natural that the ancients, reflecting on the mountain's relation to the enclosed sun at the summit ( ), interpreted the entire configuration in masculine-feminine terms. Faber, after reviewing the global image of the holy mountain, concludes that in each case the mountain had on its summit a mystic circle given the name of the mother goddess and called "the Circle of the World." The "sun"-god, states Faber, resides within this enclosure as husband of the great mother, while the mountain itself is the organ of universal generation. (Unnoticed by Faber, however, is the connection of this universal cosmology with the sign .)

Those who assert the absolute priority of phallicism not only forget that the sacred pillar was cosmic from the start (i.e., it was not a mere phallic emblem gradually enlarged to cosmic dimensions), but must gloss over the many independent attributes of the pillar and enclosure. (It would be absurd, for example, to argue that the mythical lost paradise—watered by four rivers running to the four corners—was the product of primitive phallicism.)

[1068] Coomaraswamy, op. cit., 54-5; 66, note 15; 88, note 132.

[1069] Whitney, Atharva Veda, 680.

[1070] Philippi, The Kojiki, 50.

[1071] Ibid., 398-99, citing Hirata, Pure Shinto, 67.

[1072] Faber, op. cit., Vol. III, 203.

[1073] Ibid., 30*ff.*, 201*ff.*

One interpretation of the polar configuration overlaps with another. But only the prototype explains the symbol.[1074]

The Cosmic Mountain Personified

The cosmic mountain often takes the mythical form of a great giant supporting the central sun or holding aloft the womb of the Cosmos. On other occasions the Mount becomes the lower limbs of the great god himself.

Of the heaven-sustaining giant, there is no more popular figure than the Greek Atlas. In modern imagination Atlas is the lonely god bearing our earth on his shoulders. But Hesiod surely speaks for the original version when he writes: “And Atlas through hard constraint upholds the wide heaven with unwearying head and arms, standing at the borders of the earth, before the clear-voiced Hesperides.”[1075] Pindar has Atlas “bearing up against heaven’s weight,”[1076] while Ovid speaks of “strong Atlas who wears heaven on his shoulders.”[1077] (The reader will recall that “heaven” means “the Cosmos.”)

The usual view is that the Hesperides, in whose company Hesiod places Atlas, occupy a mysterious region either in Libya or in the far west. But Apollodorus, describing the eleventh labour of Hercules, relates that the golden apples guarded by the Hesperides “were not, as some have said, in Libya, but on Atlas, among the Hyperboreans.”[1078] This, of course, places Atlas in the far north, as noted by Frazer.[1079]

When Apollodorus uses the phrase “on Atlas,” he refers to Atlas as the mountain on which Hera planted the garden of the gods.[1080] The mythical Mount Atlas and heaven-sustaining god were synonymous, the myths declaring that Perseus petrified Atlas into the mountain.[1081] Since there is a range of mountains in northwest Africa called Atlas many writers assume this to be the subject of the myth, but Apollodorus’ location of the mount and garden among the far-northern Hyperboreans speaks for a quite different idea.

[1074] The cosmic mountain was the masculine source of universal generation, a fact reflected in the pronounced phallic atributes of the mountain-god. Enlil, the Mesopotamian “great mountain,” raises aloft the goddess Ninhursag, the “queen” of the cosmic hill, and implants the male “seed” (Saturn) within the celestial womb.

The Babylonian Bel (Canaanite Baal) receives the title “lord, the mightly mountain Bel.” Allegro informs us that the god “derives his name from a Sumerian verb Al, ‘bore,’ which combined with a preformative element BA, gave words for ‘drill’ and ‘penis’ and gave Latin and us our word ‘phallus.’ The Sacred Mushroom and the Cross, 24. Bel, the “mighty mountain,” was the generative pillar of the heavens. The phallic mountain was also the bore because it was the turning axle.

The Egyptian Shu, personifying the Light Mountain, is “lord of the Phallus” and appears in one text (Pyramid Text 642) to be equated with the male organ of Atum. More generally the pillar-god represents the phallus of Geb, brother and husband of Nut. Egyptian art depicts Shu standing on the recumbent Geb and supporting the curved and star-studded body of Nut with outstretched arms. Elsewhere, however, the artists replace Shu by the phallus of Geb. These illustrations, coming from the late period of Egyptian history, yet preserve a vital idea, whose origins will be found in the simple configuration (here). The identity of Shu, the heaven’s pillar, with the phallus of Geb, illuminates these lines from the Coffin Texts: “As Geb I shall impregnate you [Nut] in your name of sky. I shall join the whole earth to you in every place. O high above the earth! You are supported upon your father Shu.” Quoted in Clark, op. cit., 49.

[1075] Evelyn-White, Hesiod, the Homeric Hymns and Homerica, 117.

[1076] Pindar, Pythian Odes iv, 289.

[1077] Ovid, Metamorphoses, 168.

[1078] Frazer, Apollodorus, II. V. II.

[1079] Ibid., 221, note 2.

[1080] Hyginus, Poetic Astronomy ii. 3.

[1081] Graves, The Greek Myths, 144.

To find the original character of Atlas, one must consult the global tradition, for this heaven-sustaining god has many counterparts around the world.

In India numerous gods appear as personifications of the world mountain. Agni is a “supporting column,” or the “pillar of life,”[1082] a god who “upholds the sky by his efficacious spells,”[1083] and serves as the “axle” of the cosmic wheel or chariot.[1084] “Agni is represented as the axis of the Universe, extending as a pillar between Earth and Heaven,” states Coomaraswamy.[1085]

Closely related is Indra, he “who is vast and self-sustained like a mountain, the radiant and formidable Indra.”[1086] “Be thou just here; be not moved away; like a mountain, not unsteady; O Indra, stand thou fixed just here; here do thou maintain royalty.”[1087]

Of Vishnu, Hindu ritual declares, “Thou proppedst asunder those two worlds, O Vishnu.”[1088] Savitar is the axis-pillar of the world wheel: “All immortal things rest upon him as on the axle end of a chariot.”[1089] And the Upanishads sing of Prajapati “By him the heavens are strong and earth is steadfast, by him light’s realm and sky-vault are supported.”[1090]

Hindu traditions of the heaven-sustaining god find a parallel in the cosmic image of the Buddha as “the golden mountain.” Buddhist iconography presents the Buddha either as a pillar of fire or as the central sun atop such a pillar, which was the “axis of the Universe.”[1091]

Among Altaic races the central pillar often receives personification as a towering figure supporting the heavens. The celestial column becomes “the Man-Pillar of Fire,”[1092] or “the iron pillar man.”[1093] The Finnish supreme polar god was Ukko, invoked in the Kalevala with the words “O Ukko, god on high, supporter of the whole sky!”[1094]

Mithraic shrines depict Mithras in the form of Atlas, supporting the vault of heaven. “From the moment of his birth Mithras held the globe as Kosmocrator (ruler of the Cosmos),” states Cumont. “Atlas served to stress both the significance of Mithras’ task as bearer of the heavens and the power derived from this junction.”[1095] The

---

[1082] Oldenberg, Vedic Hymns, 49.

[1083] Ibid., 61.

[1084] Op. cit., 65.

[1085] Ibid., 10.

[1086] Rig Veda V, 3, 160.

[1087] Whitney, op. cit., 347.

[1088] Eggeling, op. cit., III, 5, 3, 14.

[1089] Campbell, Oriental Mythology, 208.

[1090] Nikhilananda, The Upanishands, 18. We also saw that the Hindu skambha, or universe post, acquired the form of a cosmic giant sustaining the heavens. See here.

[1091] Coomaraswamy, op. cit., 10; 68, note 30; see plates I and II; see also O’Neill, op. cit., 194.

[1092] Eliade, op. cit., 239.

[1093] Uno Holmberg, Siberian Mythology, 234-35.

[1094] Lenrot, The Kalevala, 5.

[1095] Cumont, The Mysteries of Mithra, 116.

Germanic Heimdall represented the turning axle-post of the heavens[1096] while the name of the Semitic god El has for its primitive sense "a column."

In North America, the divinity widely recognized in legend and myth by diverse Indian tribes was Manabozho, who "resides upon an immense piece of ice in the Northern Ocean," directing the cosmic movements. One of the forms of Manabozho was Ta-ren-ya-wa-go, "the holder of the Heavens."[1097] The assimilation of the great god to the cosmic mountain on which he rests will explain why, in the language of ancient astronomy, Saturn is the "pillar." The connection bears on an enigmatic reference to Saturn in the Old Testament. The prophet Amos charges Israel with having "borne the tabernacle of your Moloch and Chiun, your images, the star of your god."[1098] The term Chiun refers to the "pillar" or "pedestal" of the star-god worshipped by the Israelites in the desert. It is the name of the planet Saturn and traces back to the Babylonian Kaiun, also Saturn—the "steady star upon a foundation." Plutarch gives the title Kiun to the Egyptian Anup, the "god who is on his pole." Kiun, states Massey, "denotes the highest point, at the centre, and is applied to the founding of the world. The name was assigned to Saturn as the god in the highest."[1099]

Saturn, the Heaven Man, thus acquires the form of a cosmic giant, whose vast trunk is the mountain of the world. The sign offers us a picture of the Kosmocrator, the all-containing being embracing the male and female powers and supporting the Cosmos.

Moreover, this connection of the supreme god to the cosmic pillar provides a further refutation of the common view which has the god, as our sun, leave the mountain each morning and soar across the sky to sink below the western horizon. It is the mountain that gives the god his identity as the supporter of the heavens. Could one reasonably call the mount the god's lower limbs if the sun were joined to the mount only at the moment of sunrise? The true light god does not move, but remains fixed at the summit.

The Single Leg

Reflecting the assimilation of the great god to the cosmic mountain is the repeated characterization of the Mount as the god's single "leg."

The ancient Mayans knew no greater god than Huracan, "the Heart of Heaven." In the Popul Vuh, the sacred book of the Quiche Maya, Huracan presides over the creation, bringing forth the first dawn.[1100] The name Huracan means literally "One-Leg." Goetz and Morley render his name as "flash of a leg or the lightning."[1101]

Did the single leg of Huracan derive from a bolt of lightning? We can answer the question by looking at other one-legged gods, of which world mythology presents a surprising number. Huracan's counterpart in Nahuatl ritual was the polar god Tezcatlipoca, who also possessed a single leg. And the same people worshipped Huitzilopochtli:

> Portentous one, who inhabits the region of clouds, you have but one foot.[1102]

[1096] De Santillana and von Dechend, op. cit., 158-59.

[1097] Emerson, Indian Myths, 338-39, 438. Atlas was the cosmic mountain personified. Thus both Euripides and Aristotle relate the pillar of Atlas to the world axis. Warren comments: "The upright axis of the world is often poetically conceived of as a majestic pillar, supporting the heavens and furnishing the pivot on which they revolve." Op. cit., 122.

[1098] Amos 5:26.

[1099] Ancient Egypt, 670. [Emphasis added.]

[1100] Goetz and Morley, Popul Vuh, 81-84.

[1101] Ibid., 82, note 7.

[1102] Léon-Portilla, op. cit., 65.

Similarly, the Lillooet Indians of British Columbia recall an old thunder god who stood on one leg.[1103]

Looking beyond the Americas one finds that the natives of Australia remember a one-legged god Turunbulun, who also possessed a single eye.[1104] This peculiarity, in turn, reminds one of the ominous figure met by Owein in the Arthurian legend: coming to a clearing in the forest, Owein encountered a large mound on which stood a black, one-eyed, one-legged giant.[1105]

The Celtic Sol stood on one foot all day.[1106] The African Wachoga tell of the old god Mrule who resided on earth for a time before departing because of human unkindness; the god had only one leg.[1107] O'Neill notes that a bronze statue of a Cabirean god of the Medici lararium stood on one foot.[1108] Russian myth presents the demonic Verlioka as a one-eyed and one-legged figure.[1109] So also was the Chinese primeval god K'uei one-footed.[1110]

That more than one of these figures possesses a single eye in addition to one leg is surely the key to a solution.

The Cyclopean eye answered to the enclosed polar sun , which the myths place on the world pillar . Does not the latter image offer us the simplest and most direct explanation of the one-eyed, one-legged god?

The decisive evidence comes from Egypt and India. In language which Egyptologists rarely attempt to comprehend, Egyptian texts speak of the "leg" or "thigh" of Osiris, Set, or Ptah. While the female "thigh" was the lap (womb) of the great mother, Egyptian texts similarly show that the masculine "thigh" or "leg" was the cosmic mountain. While numerous texts depict the god shining over the Light Mountain, the god Osiris is said to "shine above the Leg of heaven."[1111] "Hail, Leg of fire, who comest forth from Akhekhu" proclaims the Book of the Dead.[1112]

The Egyptian sept, written with the mountain symbol , means "provide with." But sept also means "leg." Massey's conclusion must be our own: "The leg or thigh was an Egyptian figure of the pole, as we find it in 'the leg of Ptah' . . . Hence, 'above the leg' is equivalent to 'over the pole.'"[1113] Kees tells us that the leg of Set, from which the "Nile" was said to flow, represented the pole.[1114]

[1103] Harris, Boanerges, 33.

[1104] Coomaraswamy and Mivedita, Myths of the Hindus and Buddhists, 388.

[1105] Rhys, Arthurian Legend, 594.

[1106] MacCulloch, Celtic Mythology, 190.

[1107] Werner, African Mythology, 138.

[1108] Op. cit., 214.

[1109] Ibid., 216.

[1110] Bodde, "Myths of Ancient China," in Kramer, Mythologies of the Ancient World, 374-76.

[1111] Budge, The Papyrus of Ani, 118.

[1112] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 370.

[1113] Ancient Egypt, 311.

[1114] Cited in Neumann, The Great Mother, 224.

The one-legged god appears to be represented in the Egyptian hieroglyph ab , for the determinative seems to depict a figure turning round while standing on one leg. At least this is the motion suggested by the word's sense "to go round." That ab ( ) also means "heart" suggests that the one-legged god is the stationary but ever-turning heart of heaven—the Egyptian counterpart of the one-legged Mayan god Huracan, the "Heart of Heaven."

We can test this interpretation against Hindu symbolism. Hindu legends say that the old god Manu, the "king of men" (the first man and the first king), "did arduous penance for ten thousand years"—all the while "poised on one leg."[1115] The great father Shiva not only endured "heavy penances on Mount Himavant," but "stood on one foot for a thousand years."[1116] In the Upanishads one reads that the "Brahman is only one-footed."[1117]

The great god's one foot reinforces the principle of "rest", "Meditation," or "penance." A case in point is the archaic figure of Aja Ekapad, called the "one-footed" support of the Cosmos.[1118] Agrawala tells us that "ekapad or one-footed denotes the absence of motion." The one-footed god "was devoid of any motion and represented the principle of Absolute Static Rest."[1119]

On the meaning of the great god's single leg, Coomaraswamy and Nivedita write: "The earliest of male anthropomorphic gods is said to have been Pole-star, and there is a touch of humour in the way he is portrayed up and down the pages of ancient mythology. The Pole-star, it seems, from his solitary position at the apex of the stellar system gave rise to the notion of a god who was one-footed . . . Thus the Rig-Veda contains numerous references to Aja-Ekapad—a name that may be translated either the One-footed Goat or the Birthless One-footed One."[1120]

The Hindus knew the celestial pole as Dhruva-lok or "place of Dhruva," (the "firm" god).[1121] In the Bhagavata-purana, one reads that Dhruva, god of the pole, in profound meditation, "maintained himself upright on one foot, motionless as a stake."[1122] (In truth, the one leg of the motionless Dhruva was a "stake"—the central pillar or mountain of the world.)

[1115] Suryakanta, The Flood Legend in Sanskit Literature, 4. [Emphasis added.]

[1116] Keith, Indian Mythology, 113.

[1117] Nikhilanda, op. cit., 221*ff.*

[1118] Schwabe, Archetype und Tierkreis, 34.

[1119] Agrawala, op. cit., 41, 70. Yet strangely, while observing the connection of the one foot and motionlessness, Agrawala never mentions the celestial pole—and even more strangely, he identifies Aja Ekapad as the solar orb (page 42).

[1120] Coomaraswamy and Nivedita, op. cit., 388-89.

[1121] Ibid., 378.

[1122] O'Neill, op. cit., 501. [Emphasis added.] The identity of the single leg as the world pillar finds additional confirmation in the symbolism of sacred structures, mythical and historical. In the Japanese Kojiki the mythical emperor Jimmu encounters a palace which appears to rest on a central post. Chamberlain renders the description as "a palace which could be entered with one stride." But the most literal translation, according to Chamberlain, would be "a one-foot-rising palace." As is so often the case the literal rendering is superior to that chosen by the translators. That the palace rises on a single foot or leg is confirmed by the Nihongi reference to the same palace: here, instead of ashi, "foot," we have hashira, "pillar." The native commentators seem to agree that the single pillar supported the whole weight of the palace, observes O'Neill, op. cit., 224.

That the polar god rules the world while standing on one leg throws light on the Siamese ritual in which the king, in imitation of the Universal Monarch, and in order to prove his fitness for holding supreme authority, stood on one leg.[1123] One thinks of the Greek purification rites which required initiates to stand on one foot only.[1124] The practice of praying on one leg occurs also in old Jewish rites in Jerusalem and among Muslim dervishes and Hindu hermits.[1125] It would be useless to seek a "natural" explanation for the practice, for the prototype does not lie in what we call the natural world today. Emulated is the feat of the Universal Monarch or first ancestor, conceived as the Ideal Man. "He who has one foot has out-stripped them that have two," states the Rig Veda.[1126] The statement derives meaning from the supremacy of the one-legged polar god, who, while standing fixed at the cosmic centre yet moved the turning heavens. The great god's single "leg" means the world mountain.[1127]

The Serpent/Dragon

The serpent fills more than one role in the myths of beginnings. While the circular serpent denotes the Saturnian enclosure, there is also a masculine serpent who serves as the foundation or pillar.

A comparison of global traditions indicates that while many legends locate the celestial "earth" on the cosmic mountain, this enclosure may also appear as the crown of an erect serpent. In the beginning, according to a creation myth of southeastern Borneo, there was only the sky and the sea, "in which swam a great serpent upon whose head was a crown of gold set with a shining stone. From the sky-world the deity threw earth upon the serpent's head, thus building an island in the midst of the sea; and this island became the world."[1128]

The Battak of Sumatra say that in the "primeval ocean swam or lay a great serpent on whose head the heavenly maiden spread a handful of earth . . . and thus she formed the world."[1129]

In Hindu myth the gigantic serpent Shesha sustains the "world" on his head,[1130] as do the Hebrew Leviathan and the Muslim cosmic serpents. Among the Buriats of Siberia, the tradition prevails that the mighty Ulgen created a giant fish amid the cosmic waters to support the "world."[1131]

[1123] Frazer, The Golden Bough, Vol. I, 230.

[1124] Cook, op. cit., Vol. I, 422.

[1125] O'Neill, op. cit., 230. This leads us to the suggestion that the fabulous polar mountain of Meru must in some sense have been the leg or thigh of the great god. There is a well-known classical tradition that Zeus gave birth to Dionysus from his "thigh" (which reminds us of the Egyptian god-king issuing from the cosmic "leg"). The Greek "thigh" is meros, and the Greek Mount Meros was equivalent to the Hindu Meru, the starting point of creation and mythical birthplace of gods and man. Birth from the leg or thigh is equivalent to cosmic birth atop the mountain of the world. (We must remember that the feminine "thigh" or womb composed the summit of the mount or leg and thus an inseparable part of the androgynous Heaven Man.)

[1126] Coomaraswamy and Nivedita, op. cit., 388.

[1127] Perceiving the influence of astral symbolism, O'Neill recognized the leg-pillar as the polar axis. "In Mailduins Voyage he came to an island called Aenchoss, that is One-foot, so called because it was supported by a single pillar in the middle . . . ," reports O'Neill. A curious form of the palace on one foot occurs in a Russian tale, relating how four heroes who are wandering about the world come to a dense forest in which an izba or hut twirls round on a fowl's leg. "The youngest, prince Ivan (our Jack) makes it revolve with the magic word Izbushka. This supplies the idea of cosmic rotation which is absent in the Japanese myth." O'Neill, op. cit., 225. The mythical dwelling raised on a single leg echoes a cosmic tradition. No one has even seen, on our earth, an island supported by a pillar or leg—or a house revolving on a leg. The leg was the central pillar seeming to sustain the primeval sun's cosmic dwelling.

[1128] Dixon, Oceanic Mythology, 159-60.

[1129] Ibid., 161.

[1130] Coomaraswamy, "The Symbolism of the Dome," 19.

[1131] Uno Holmberg, Siberian Mythology, 310.

Is there an underlying consistency between these myths and other myths which depict the celestial earth as the summit of the world mountain? What is the connection of the serpent/dragon and the axis-pillar?

Of course, it is easy to imagine that a stream of ice or debris stretching between the Earth and Saturn would, before the latter orb attained stability at the polar centre, take on a twisting, serpentine appearance. And, in fact, the cosmic mountain in many creation epics is presented as a churning, serpentine column rising along the world axis and finally achieving stability. (I intend to explore this churning mountain in a subsequent volume).

Here is a fact which linguists and comparative mythologists overlook: in several lands the word for "mountain" is the same as the word for "serpent" or "dragon," though our natural world offers no basis for the equivalence. In Mexico, Nahuatl can mean "serpent" but also "mountain,"[1132] so that one might term the polar Mount Colhuacan a cosmic "serpent-mountain." "Serpent-Mountain" is indeed the title of the Mexican primeval hill Coatepelt.[1133]

The Egyptian Set is the primordial serpent or dragon, but set also means "mountain." The mythical Mountain of Set, in fact, is the acknowledged Egyptian counterpart of the Hebrew Zaphon in "the farthest reaches of the north."[1134] And like the Mexicans, the Egyptians knew the "Serpent Mountain," a figure of the pole, according to Massey.[1135]

The ancient Sumerian dragon in the cosmic sea was the Kur, playing a prominent role in the creation myth, but kur also possessed the meaning "mountain"; indeed, "the sign used for it is actually a pictograph representing a mountain."[1136] The Greek Boreas is the primeval serpent raised from the waters of Chaos, but etymologists connect the serpent-god's name with a primitive bora, "mountain."

"Among primitive peoples," writes Suhr, "there are signs of the column in the form of a python or dragon riding from the level of the earth to the clouds."[1137] Suhr notes several Chinese paintings "in which a dragon is represented as rising from the water of the earth."[1138] "A dragon ascending from the earth to the clouds can serve as the whirling column—which no doubt accounts for so many dragons on pillars."[1139] In northern Australia ceremonies of the Murngin commemorate with a central pole the great python who "rises up from a pool" and "towers up to the level of the clouds . . ." The python was the central pillar of heaven.[1140]

Only the identity of the world pillar and erect serpent/dragon can explain the primitive habit of decorating commemorative pillars with scales. The shaft of early Jupiter columns "was often patterned with scales," notes Cook.[1141] In both Egypt and Mesopotamia images of sacred mountains reveal a scaled pattern.

Since the great god often unites with the Mount in such a way that it becomes his lower limbs, we need look no further for an explanation of the great father's universal serpentine character: the erect serpent/dragon formed the god's pillar-like trunk. Describing Ningirsu as "like heaven his tremendous size," a Sumerian text calls this creator god a "Flood-demon [i.e., dragon] by his lower limbs."1142 "Your hinderparts are the Celestial Serpent," declares the Egyptian Pyramid Texts.1143 The idea is vividly expressed by the illustration of the African god Ammon reproduced by Cook: the head and shoulders of the god melt into a pillar-trunk formed by the body of a serpent.1144 (fig. 47) Babylonian cylinder seals show the high god wearing a robe or dress in the form of a mountain.1145 Typically, the mountain-dress is covered with scales, identifying it with the serpent/dragon.

[1132] Nuttall, op. cit., 262-63.

[1133] Krickerberg, in Pre-Columbian American Religions, 47.

[1134] Budge, Gods, Vol. II, 249.

[1135] Ancient Egypt, 304.

[1136] Kramer, Sumerian Mythology, 76.

[1137] Before Olympos, 81.

[1138] Ibid., 87.

[1139] Ibid., 85.

[1140] Ibid., 84. Sacred pillars claimed to have been fashioned by the companions of Quetzalcoatl also received the form of serpents, as did sacred pillars in Ireland. O'Neill, op. cit., 378.

[1141] Op. cit., Vol. II, 89.

Serpentine lower limbs of divine figures are, of course, common to the art of many peoples. Indeed it would be useless to attempt a review of all the creator gods joined with the serpent/dragon, since no prominent figure of the great father appears to have escaped this identification, even if at times subdued. The unanswered question is, Why? The last thing suggested (to us) by slithering serpents is the idea of a creator! Yet the prototypical identity of the erect serpent/dragon and the cosmic mountain gives striking coherence to the symbolism and places the world-wide union of creator and serpent above grotesque and inexplicable coincidence.

Figure 47. Ammon, with serpentine trunk.

An equally bizarre feature of the mythic serpent is its phallic powers, as documented by Crawley, Hartland, Briffault, Eliade, and others. Here is Eliade's summary of the theme: "Even today it is said in the Abruzzi that the serpent copulates with all women. The Greeks and Romans also believed it. Alexander the Great's mother, Olympia, played with snakes. The famous Aratus of Sicyon was said to be a son of Aesculapius because, according to Pausanias, his mother conceived him of a serpent. Suetonius and Dio Cassius tell how the mother of Augustus conceived from the embrace of a serpent in Apollo's temple. A similar legend was current about the elder Scipio. In Germany, France, Portugal and elsewhere, women used to be afraid that a snake would slip into their mouths when they were asleep, and they would become pregnant, particularly during menstruation. In India, when women wanted to have children, they adored a cobra. All over the East it was believed that woman's first sexual contact was with a snake, at puberty or during menstruation. The Komati tribe in the Mysore province of India uses snakes made of stone in a rite to bring about the fertility of women. Claudius Aelianus declares that the Hebrews believed that snakes mated with unmarried girls; and we also find this belief in Japan. A Persian tradition says that after the first woman had been seduced by the serpent she immediately began to menstruate. And it was said by the rabbis that menstruation was the result of Eve's relations with the serpent in the Garden of Eden. In Abyssinia it was thought that girls were in danger of being raped by snakes until they were married. One Algerian story tells how a snake escaped when no one was

---

1142 D'Alviella, The Migration of Symbols, 29.

1143 Pyramid Text 2128.

1144 Cook, op. cit., Vol. I, 359.

1145 Hans Henning Van Der Osten, Ancient Oriental Seals in the Collection of Mr. Edward T. Newell, 113.

looking and raped all the unmarried girls in a house. Similar traditions are to be found among the Mandi Hottentots of East Africa, in Sierra Leone and elsewhere.”[1146]

No extent of conventional rationalization could hope to explain this pervasive superstition. The supposed masculine power of serpents echoes an age-old tradition, whose original subject was the cosmic serpent, not the lowly serpents of our earth. The impregnating serpent was a creature of myth, his phallic power deriving from his identity with the engendering mountain of the world. The primeval serpent, often regarded as the male organ of the great father himself, rose along the world axis. That this archetypal memory produced reverberations in global folklore for thousands of years attests to the dramatic power of the original experience.

The Stream Of Life

The cosmic mountain also found expression as a stream of wind or water either descending from the polar abode or ascending the world axis from “below.” As a stream of air it was the life-giving “breath” of the great father, often called the “North Wind.” As a river it was the central stream in which the ancients believed all the waters of the world to originate—or a well, fountain, or spring channeling the waters of the deep upward along the world axis to be dispersed in four streams flowing to the four corners of the celestial abode .

Boreas And The Hyperboreans

The Pelasgian Boreas or Ophion is an archaic, serpentine god whom pre-Hellenic Greeks apparently revered as the father of creation. Graves reconstructs the fragments of the myth:

“In the beginning, Eurynome, the Goddess of All Things, rose naked from Chaos, but found nothing substantial for her feet to rest upon and therefore divided the sea from the sky, dancing lonely upon its waves. She danced towards the south, and the wind set in motion behind her something new and apart with which to begin a work of creation. Wheeling about, she caught hold of this north wind, rubbed it between her hands and behold! the great serpent Ophion. Eurynome danced to warm herself, wildly, until Ophion, grown lustful, coiled about those divine limbs and moved to couple with her. Now the North Wind, who is called Boreas, fertilizes; which is why mares often turn their hindquarters to the wind and breed foals without aid of a stallion. So Eurynome was likewise got with child.”[1147]

As to the origins of Boreas, Graves can only say that he “is the serpent demiurge of Hebrew and Egyptian myth,” from whom the Pelasgians claimed to have descended. But questions come immediately to mind. Why was Boreas, the Pelor or “prodigious serpent,” called the “North Wind”? Why was this wind, like the erect serpent, believed to bring about conception?

Boreas, the North Wind, figures in a long-standing debate concerning the Hyperboreans, the servants of boreal Apollo. Ancient chroniclers unanimously agree that the *Hyper*boreans lived beyond or above Boreas, taking this to mean “beyond the North Wind,” or in the farthest north. But certain modern etymologists contend that the classical interpretation rests on a confusion of terms: these critics connect Boreas and the Hyperboreans not with the “North Wind,” but with a primitive Greek word, bora, meaning “mountain.” Bora is the name of a mountain in Macedonia, the highest peak between the Haliakmon and Axios rivers. Under this modern interpretation Boreas is simply “the wind of the mountain.”

By such reasoning boreal Apollo becomes the god of a local peak, and Apollo’s servants (the Hyperboreans) become either divine assistants above this mount or human worshippers beyond the mount. The classical identification of Boreas and the Hyperboreans with the utmost north loses its long-standing validity.[1148]

[1146] Patterns in Comparative Religion, 165-66.

[1147] Op. cit., 27.

[1148] Cook, op. cit., Vol. II, 494; Guthrie, The Greeks and Their Gods, 78.

Yet to accept the primitive identity of Boreas with the bora or "mountain" does not require one to concede that Bora or Boreas originated in reference to a Macedonian peak. If we focus on prototypes rather than local geography we see that Boreas pertained to both the "mountain" and the "North Wind"—but the original reference was cosmic. The "North Wind" was the luminous "breath" of the polar god, stretching along the world axis; and this very stream received mythical interpretation as the world mountain (the true Bora in heaven).

The North Wind Shu

A widely overlooked fact is that the world's oldest ritual designates the celestial pillar as "the breath of life."

The Egyptians, as previously observed, personified the Mount of Glory as the heaven-sustaining giant Shu. Yet Egyptologists as a whole rarely think of the god in such concrete terms. Budge writes: "Shu was a god who was connected with the heat and dryness of sunlight and with the dry atmosphere which exists between the earth and the sky."[1149] It is hard to imagine any link between "the dry atmosphere" and the god whom the Egyptians regularly depicted as a cosmic pillar holding aloft the goddess Nut, the womb of heaven.

But Budge remarks, almost incidentally, that Shu "was a personification of the wind of the North." Or again: "He was certainly, like his father Tem, thought to be the cool wind of the North."[1150] Budge's language seems to describe a transitory breeze from Lower Egypt. If the god personified such an ephemeral force, why did he receive explicit representation as the pillar of the heavens? The answer is that the "North Wind" did not refer to a terrestrial breeze but to the visible "breath" of Atum, the "firm Heart of the Sky" at the celestial pole. More than once the Book of the Dead speaks of "the north wind which cometh forth from Tem [Atum]."[1151] "I have come to protect thee, Osiris, with the North Wind which cometh forth from Tem," states one hymn.[1152] Elsewhere the wind issues from Atum-Re in conjunction with the mother goddess: "Let me snuff the air which cometh forth from thy nostrils, and the north wind which cometh forth from thy mother [Nut]."[1153]

The texts leave no doubt that this "wind" or "breath," descending from Atum (or Re), was the light pillar Shu: ". . . He breatheth and the god Shu cometh into being," states one hymn.[1154] "Thou art established upon that which emanateth from thy existence," states another.[1155] "Thou hast emitted Shu and he hath come forth from thy mouth."[1156] One text describes the god as "a great column of air" holding aloft the womb of Nut.[1157] In the Pyramid Texts the "north wind" is described as "smoke" and said to "lift up" the god-king.[1158] Clearly, the Egyptians conceived the stream of breath as a visible pillar.

Rather than "air" I should call this life-bearing breath "ether." While many sources describe the wind descending from the mouth or nostrils of Atum or Re, others view it as rising from "below" to vivify the god and his company of celestial spirits. "O thou Re, who dwellest in thy divine shrine, draw thou into thyself the winds, inhale the North Wind."[1159] This wind is the "sweet air for thy nose."[1160] "The sweet wind of the North is for thy heart."[1161] The deceased king aspires to attain the cosmic domain of the great god: "I will take for myself my breath of life . . . I will snuff the wind for myself, I will have abundance of the north wind, I will be content among the gods."[1162]

[1149] Gods, Vol. II, 87.

[1150] Ibid., 91.

[1151] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 625.

[1152] Ibid., 503.

[1153] Ibid., 65.

[1154] Ibid., 391.

[1155] Ibid., 373.

[1156] Budge, Gods, Vol. II, 90.

[1157] Hassan, Hymnes Religieux du Moyen Empire.

[1158] Pyramid Texts 277, 1551.

Actually, the Egyptians left for us a very expressive image of this life-bearing ether in the hieroglyph , depicting luminous streams of khu, "glory," rising to the enclosed sun. And the relationship of Shu, the heavens pillar, to this stream is beyond dispute. For the hieroglyph appears as the determinative in the name of Shu . Shu, the pillar bearing aloft the womb of the mother goddess, was no terrestrial breeze, but rather the visible North Wind flowing in a brilliant stream between our earth and Saturn's Cosmos.

This very connection of the polar mount and the breath of life prevails also in Mesopotamia. One text states that the cosmic mountain on which the Sumerian Ningirsu (Saturn) resides is the dwelling place of the North Wind:

To the mountain where the North Wind dwells,
I [Ningirsu] have set my foot.
The man of immense strength, the North Wind,
From the mountain, the pure place,
Will blow the wind straight towards you.[1163]

The text calls this North Wind "the breath of life to the people."

The Sumerians personified the cosmic mountain as the giant Enlil ("the great mountain"), a striking counterpart to the Egyptian pillar-god Shu. Like Shu, Enlil is the "Wind of the Netherworld Mountain"—that is, he personifies at once the cosmic hill and the breath of the creator. "Between heaven and earth the Sumerians recognized a substance which they called lil [in En*lil*], a word whose approximate meaning is wind (air, breath, spirit)," states Kramer.[1164] Enlil thus represents the ethereal column joining heaven and earth.

And the Hindu Agni, the pillar of heaven, was the same stream of air, or "smoke": "He (Agni) as a pillar of smoke upholds the heavens."[1165] The Rig Veda says, "Agni, even as it were a builder, hath lifted up on high his splendour" (compare Shu holding aloft the circle of khu, "glory"). "His smoke, yea, holdeth up the sky . . . a standard as it were the pillar of sacrifice, firmly planted and duly chrismed."[1166]

[1159] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 401.

[1160] Ibid., 625.

[1161] Piankoff, The Shrines of Tut-Ankh-Amon, 115.

[1162] Pyramid Text 1158.

[1163] Kramer, Sacred Marriage Rite, 32.

[1164] From the Tablets of Sumer, 72.

[1165] Coomaraswamy, A New Approach to the Vedas, 96, note 92b.

[1166] Coomaraswamy, "Symbolism of the Dome," 35, citing Rig Veda IV, 6, 2-3.

The Upanishads thus declare: “The Breath-of-Life is a pillar.”[1167] Both the Hebrews and Muslims claimed that the created earth rested on “the wind,”[1168] that is, the primeval wind and the primeval foundation were one and the same thing.

We return, then, to the Greek Boreas. In exploring the question of Boreas and the Hyperboreans, can one ignore the archaic identity of the cosmic mountain and North Wind? Once we acknowledge this identity, the question as to whether Boreas received his name from the North Wind or from the bora (“mountain”) becomes meaningless: the North Wind was the mountain. And Boreas’ serpentine form corresponds to the original form of the Mount in both Mesopotamia and Egypt. Moreover, the myth of Boreas impregnating the mother goddess—which gave rise to the later belief that the wind brings about conception[1169]—agrees with the universal character of the cosmic pillar: it is the engendering mountain of heaven.

The River Of Life

Ancient ritual also celebrates a stream of water either descending from on high or welling up from the deep as a central fount, spring, or well bringing life to the celestial abode.

In Egypt the heaven-sustaining giant Shu—the ethereal pillar of the North Wind—also represents the descending or ascending river. Shu is the “waterway,” while the polar god “is established upon the watery supports of the god Shu.” Egyptian creation tales describe the pillar-god as the emission of the polar Atum or Re. Shu is “poured” or “spit” from the mouth of the ruling divinity. “What flowed from thee became Shu,”[1170] states a hymn to Amen-Re.[1171] “You are the eldest son of Atum, his first-born; Atum has spat you from his mouth in your name of Shu.”[1172]

“Thou hast emitted Shu, and he hath come forth from thy mouth . . . He hath become a god, and he hath brought for thee every good thing; he hath toiled for thee, and he hath emitted for thee in his name of Shu, the royal double. He hath laboured for thee in these things, and he beareth up for thee heaven with his hands in his name of Shu, the body of the sky.”[1173]

The “toiling” Atlas-like pillar bearing the heavens was the watery “emission” of the creator. In the phrase “Thou hast emitted Shu,” the Egyptian word translated as “emitted” is ashesh, which means both “pouring out” and “supporting,” as noted by Budge: “It is difficult to reconcile these totally different meanings unless we remember that it is that which Tem, or Re-Tem has poured out which supports the heavens wherein shines the Sun-god. That which Tem, or Re-Tem has poured out is the light, and the light was declared to be the prop of the sky.”[1174] Yet, while recognizing this connection of the heavens pillar with the “waters” and “light” poured out by the creator, Budge has no concrete image with which to link the integrated concepts.

The cosmic river, “poured out” from the receptacle of the mother womb, was not only the world mountain but also the single leg of the great god. Thus, in the Egyptian glyph we see the vase resting on the leg of heaven, as we should expect. And the Book of the Dead appropriately juxtaposes the leg with the river of light:

[1167] Ibid., 53.

[1168] Wensinck, The Ocean in the Literature of the Western Semites, 18.

[1169] Cook, op. cit., Vol. I, 759, note 6.

[1170] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 327.

[1171] Budge, Gods, Vol. II, 88.

[1172] Pyramid Text 1871.

[1173] Budge, Gods, Vol. II, 90.

[1174] Ibid., 90.

"O thou leg in the Northern Sky, and in that most conspicuous but inaccessible Stream."[1175] If one refers the imagery to the cosmic original , one sees that the descending stream was the leg!

The Egyptian river of the pillar, the celestial Nile, compares with the heavenly Euphrates invoked in Mesopotamian ritual. For the Babylonians knew "the pure Euphrates" as the "great mountain" Enlil:

> With water which the lord [Ea] has guided from the great mountain [Enlil],
> Water which down the pure Euphrates he has guided,
> The product of the apsu, for the purpose of lustration.[1176]

Enlil, the world mountain personified, is thus "the man of the river of the netherworld, the man devouring river,"[1177] and, as noted by Van Buren, "the expression 'to set for the mountain' signified to depart this life by crossing the river of death."[1178]

While some traditions describe a descending pillar-stream, others depict it as an upward-flowing current. And often it is both. In a Sumerian myth, Enlil says to his wife:

> "The 'water' of my king, let it go toward heaven, let it go toward earth . . ."[1179]

The Hindu Rig Veda has the waters passing "upwards and downwards"—like the stream of ether which Aristotle describes as a constantly moving "river" joining heaven and earth and composed of "ascending and descending vapours."[1180] An ancient Chinese philosopher, Yang Hiung, states that "the ether emanates and rises, and its splendorous essence floats above, and rolls in a sinuous current which has been named the heaven-River or torrent, and the vaporous stream or pure River."[1181] Having noted that the Egyptians recorded the ethereal stream by the hieroglyph , symbol of the pillar-god Shu, we thus find most relevant the ancient Chinese hieroglyph for "ether" . This concrete image sharply contrasts with the popular definition of the mythical ether as an imaginary substance filling the entire heavens. The ether was the fiery, pillar-like river flowing along the world axis.

[1175] Renouf, op. cit., 165.

[1176] Albright, "The Mouth of the Rivers," 178.

[1177] Kramer, Sumerian Mythology, 46.

[1178] Symbols, 8. Though many writers on comparative mythology note the common belief in a celestial river—the mythical source of all terrestrial waters—no one seems to have perceived the root identity of this famous stream with the Primeval Hill. Darmesteter, however, comes close when he writes (of the Iranian celestial river): "Waters and light are believed to flow from the same spring and in the same bed: 'As light rises up from Hera Berezaiti [the polar mountain] so waters spring up from it and come back to it.'" Darmesteter, op. cit., Part I, 225.

Similarly, Clifford reports that Ugaritic texts and seals depict the Canaanite cosmic mountain as "the paradisiacal source of water that gives fertility." The Mount, he states, "joins the upper and lower worlds; in it is contained a super abundance of life, of water; it is the throne of the deity." Op. cit., 97.

Thus can the Japanese Kojiki announce: "That down river which is like a mountain of green leaves, looks like a mountain but it is not a mountain" (Philippi, op. cit., 222), and the northwestern American Indians can speak of the river leading to the end (summit) of the world as a vast "pole" ascended by the souls of the dead. Alexander, North American Mythology, 248-49.

[1179] Kramer, Sumerian Mythology, 45.

[1180] O'Neill, op. cit., 866.

[1181] Schlegel, L'Uranographie Chinoise, 208.

The Eden-Fountain

That all the world's waters originate in a central source is a belief found among all ancient peoples. The explanation lies not in geography but in cosmography—the map of the celestial earth. Viewed as an upward-flowing current the heavenly river becomes the fountain, spring, or well whose waters are dispersed in four streams flowing to the four corners of the circular plain on the mountaintop .

From the perspective of the cosmic dwelling, the fount rises from below, or "the deep." This very idea occurs in the imagery of Eden. In the Genesis account two statements concern the waters of the primitive paradise:

> But there went up a mist from the earth, and watered the whole face of the ground. (Gen. 2:6)
>
> And a river went out from Eden to water the garden; and from thence it was parted, and became into four heads. (Gen. 2:10)

According to the general consensus of authorities, the second reference amplifies the first, indicating that a central source "watered the whole face of the ground" through four headstreams.[1182]

The word conventionally translated as "mist," observes Gaster, "is really a technical term (borrowed ultimately from Sumerian) meaning an upsurge of subterranean waters."[1183] We can reasonably connect this channel of water from below with the "fountain of life" which a Psalm locates in the dwelling of God: "And thou shalt make them drink of the river of thy pleasures. For with thee is the fountain of life: in thy light shall we see light."[1184] Gaster calls this the "paradisiacal fountain."[1185]

But whether the life-bearing waters appear as "upsurge," "river," or "fountain," one receives the impression of a central source rising from below and flowing outward in four streams. Gaster finds a prototype of the upsurge in an Old Babylonian creation myth according to which, at first, "all land was sea, and in the midst of that sea was a spring which served as a pipe."[1186] The same passage is noted by Butterworth, who suggests that the pipe or "well" rose along the cosmic axis.[1187] When one relates this evidence to the concrete Mesopotamian imagery of four rivers radiating from the central sun the connection with the cosmic image becomes clear.

That the Babylonian and Hebrew channels of water are dispersed in four streams suggests a Germanic parallel—the spring Hvergelmer, the "navel of the waters," from whence all rivers flow.[1188] The Edda declares that four streams issue from this central fount watering Asaheim, the home of the gods, while Hindu texts describe a fourfold headspring of all waters at "the Centre of Heaven."[1189] The Iranian Realm of the

---

[1182] Clifford, op. cit., 78.

[1183] Op. cit., 6-7.

[1184] Psalm 36: 7-8.

[1185] Gaster, op. cit., 27.

[1186] Ibid., 7.

[1187] Op. cit., 68.

[1188] De Santillana and von Dechend, op. cit., 208-9; MacCulloch, Eddic Mythology, 333.

[1189] Gaster, op. cit.; Rig Veda ix 74, 6; ix, 113, 8.

Blest is watered by four streams issuing from the central fountain Ardvi Sura, while the central fount of the Chinese Kwen-lun disperses its waters in four streams, watering the garden at the summit.[1190]

It does not take a great deal of imagination to see that the paradisal fountain, sending forth the elements of life in the primordial birthplace—or place of rebirth—is the legendary "fountain of youth" or "fountain of immortality."

Probably the earliest prototype of these fountains is the Egyptian pillar-god Shu, bearing the waters and breath of life along the world axis. To breathe the North Wind of Shu or drink of the polar waters is to enjoy rebirth in the domain of beginnings, the land of immortality and perpetual youth. This breath or water (as the four Winds or Four Niles of heaven) courses out from the central fount and through the womb of Nut, the Holy Land which every king sought to attain upon death.[1191]

The King Of The Mountain

The few mythologists who discuss the cosmic mount at all tell us that it is a metaphor for the world axis: the axis of the turning heavens is like a mountain reaching from earth to the celestial pole (or pole star); by imagining a great pillar as the support and axle of the universe (say these mythologists), the ancients possessed a simple explanation for the observed motions of the heavenly bodies.

To evaluate this interpretation of the mythical mountain one must ask how well it accounts for all aspects of the tradition. In the myths the Mount appears as a column of light, often constituting the Universal Monarch's lower limbs or single "leg." United to the pillar, the god-king becomes the heaven-sustaining giant.

The myths also express the Mount as a cosmic serpent, whose body forms the serpentine trunk of the great father. In many traditions the pillar appears as the vertical stream of life—the ether, wind, breath, or waters either coursing down the world axis or rising along the axis to be dispersed in four streams animating the celestial kingdom. Saturn, the central sun, enthroned within the polar enclosure, ruled from the mountaintop.

Perhaps we can best judge the metaphorical explanation of the cosmic hill by placing ourselves in the position of an ancient observer and assuming that he looked out upon the same heavens which we see today. Our observer, noticing that the stars of the circumpolar region slowly swing around a central point, realizes that a line from that polar pivot through the earth serves as an invisible axle around which the sun, the moon, and all the stars revolve.

[1190] The Biblical Fountain of Life, states Gaster, "has abundant parallels in folklore. In the Koran, for example, we read of the wondrous paradisiacal fountains, Salsabil and Kauthar ('Abundance'); while the North American Indians knew . . . of a Fountain of Youth and Vigor on the paradisal island of Bimini (or Boiuca). A hula chant from Hawaii likewise makes mention of such a fountain; while in Celtic belief it was held that in the midst of the island of Avalon flowed a rill from which sprang a fountain the waters of which gave life to the spirits of the departed. An old French poem speaks in a similar vein of a fountain of perpetual youth in the land of Cocagne; all who bathe in it are at once rejuvenated. In Pseudo-Callisthenes' version of the Alexander legend, the hero goes in search of the Fountain of Immortality; and it need scarcely be added that the Fountain of Youth, Beauty, or Immortality is a very common feature of European folktales." Op. cit., 27, 28.

[1191] The central spring or fount comes alive each night, appearing as a river of fire. This was the nature of Ammon's legendary "Fountain of the Sun" and of the spring of Zeus at Dodona. At midday, Pliny reports, the spring of Zeus fails altogether, "but it soon increases till it is full at midnight, from which time onwards it again gradually fails." Ammon's pool (the "Fountain of the Sun"), "cold by day, is hot by night."

The tradition is noted by Cook, who cites the reports of Herodotus, Lucretius, Ovid, Diodorus, and others to the effect that the Fountain of the Sun grows colder each morning until midday, but that as the day declines the fount grows warmer "becoming tepid at sundown and fairly bubbling with heat at midnight." It may seem strange that such a spring, increasing with the setting of the solar orb, was the "Fountain of the Sun." Among the chroniclers of the fount the current explanation was that by night the sun went below the earth and there boiled the water. Cook, op. cit., Vol. I, 868.

In truth, the cosmic fountain rose to the central sun at the pole, becoming a fiery stream each night ("day," in the earliest ritual). Pliny says that the spring of Zeus at Dodona kindles torches—obviously no characteristic of a terrestrial spring. The mythical imagery pertains to the archetypal fountain of the sun, the fiery, ethereal stream of Shu, to which the Egyptians gave pictorial expression in the hieroglyph: (here).

Starting from this perception, what conjectures must our observer add in order to evolve the mythical view outlined in the previous pages? First, he must decide, in contradiction of his observations, that the axis is not an invisible column but a veritable pillar of fire and light. He must conclude also that a stationary sun rests (or once rested) atop the shining pillar—again in contrast to actual observation. He must identify this central sun not with the blazing solar orb but rather with the planet Saturn—though this remote and unimpressive planet today never approaches the polar region. Further, it must occur to our observer that Saturn, as king of the mountain, resides (or once resided) within a great band, divided by four primary streams. And finally, in a series of baseless speculations, he must conclude that in primeval times Saturn ruled at the summit as the creator, the first king, and the first man, presiding over a paradise of unlimited abundance.

Can one realistically propose that such a progression of thought could follow from a mere metaphor for the world axis? To arrive at the complete mythical image of the cosmic mountain (,) our hypothetical observer must not only heap one conjecture upon another, but repudiate direct observation at each stage. Of what value—religious, psychological, or otherwise—is a fiction which flatly contradicts the phenomena it is intended to explain?

Cynics may say that primitives are capable of conjuring any force imaginable to explain something they do not understand. But the hypothetical case before us does not require the primitive simply to invent explanations for things observed; it requires him to deny immediate experience and yet to compose a grandiose vision sufficiently persuasive to acquire hypnotic power over the ancient world. Of course the mass of available evidence argues against any such inventiveness on the part of early man.

Yet these difficulties vanish once we free ourselves from the doctrine of cosmic uniformity and consider whether our primitive observer may have actually witnessed the strange forces which ancient records describe in such detail. The polar mountain is only one ingredient in an integrated cosmology which seems to have prevailed over the entire ancient world. May not the mythical Mount, the central sun, the polar enclosure and crossroads—focusing on the celestial image —speak for powers which were “really there”?

IX: The Crescent

Our investigation up to this point covers five primary images of the Saturnian configuration: the enclosed sun , the sun-cross , the enclosed sun-cross , the enclosed sun and pillar , and the enclosed sun-cross and pillar . I have contended that these symbols realistically depict Saturn's actual appearance to the terrestrial observers.

Of course, one faces a special difficulty in attempting to prove that the sacred signs denoted a visible apparition. One can show that a coherent, global symbolism developed around the cosmic image ; but how can one really prove that this configuration was more than the invention of an ancient cult—perhaps the extraordinary product of an advanced race whose abstract unification of discordant cosmic powers gained world-wide distribution?

There is a specific category of evidence, I believe, which removes any possible appeal to abstractions. I refer to the symbolism of the crescent . In the detailed sources left us by the oldest civilizations the symbolic crescent—which all men automatically identify with our moon—plays a vastly greater role than generally perceived. But in none of the primary sources can one actually identify the crescent with the body we call "moon" today!

If there was any single turning point in my inquiry it was the realization that the crescent with which ancient ritual deals is inseparable from the band of the enclosed sun . The key is the image (or the simplified) showing the crescent as the lower half of the band.

It was this connection—occurring in both Egypt and Mesopotamia—that convinced me of the band's reality and led me to explore more deeply its various mythical formulations.

The crescent in the sign suggests that Saturn's band received illumination from the solar orb in such a way as to present terrestrial observers with two semicircles of light and shadow.

The concept of a half-illuminated band immediately places in a new perspective the universal image : is it possible that the famous sun-in-crescent represented not a contrived "conjunction" of the solar orb and new moon (the conventional explanation), but rather the primeval sun Saturn resting over the illuminated portion of his polar enclosure? Certainly the overlapping images and imply that the enclosed sun and sun-in-crescent pertain to a single astral configuration.

When O'Neill claimed that the sign symbolized the celestial pole, he took the sign as a kind of metaphor—an ancient means of representing the revolution of the circumpolar stars around a fixed centre. Others have identified the band as the illusory atmospheric halo which occasionally surrounds the solar orb, while still others explain the band as an abstract "circle of the sky." But the connection of the band with a crescent would suggest a more tangible character.

As a test of this possibility several questions require examination:

—Is Saturn, the primeval sun, associated with a crescent?

—Is there a consistent connection of the crescent and the band of the enclosed sun ◯?

—Is the crescent equated with the circle of the mother goddess?

—Does the Holy Land or celestial earth rest within the embrace of the crescent?

—Does a crescent occupy the summit of the cosmic mountain?

The Crescent And Saturn

It is well known that in classical mythology Saturn (or Kronos) wields a curved harpe or sickle by which he establishes his primeval rule, and most authorities would concur with Kerenyi in identifying the sickle as the "image of the new moon"[1192] But why should Saturn possess the "new moon" as his weapon?

The connection appears to be very old, for it occurs also in ancient Babylonia. Ninurta, the planet Saturn, holds in his hands a weapon called SAR-UR-U-SAR-GAZ, and also BAB-BA-NU-IL-LA. The first name of Ninurta's weapon means "who governs the Cosmos and who massacres the Cosmos," while the second name means "hurricane which spares nothing."

The astonishing fact is this: these names of Saturn's weapon are the very epithets of the Babylonian Sin, the crescent "Moon."[1193] That is, the crescent of Sin is the "weapon" (sickle, sword) with which Saturn founded and destroyed the primeval order.

But there is another peculiarity also: though always identified by scholars as the lunar sphere, Sin is never presented as a "half-moon," "three quarters moon" or "full moon." He is simply Udsar "the crescent." And however incongruous the relationship might appear today, Babylonian art continually presents Sin as the lower half of the enclosed sun-cross ⊕.

Figure 48. Various Mesopotamian versions of the sun-in-crescent.

Did this relationship of the Sin-crescent to Saturn and his enclosure originate in a haphazard combination of once independent symbols—or in a fundamental equation? The connection between Sin and Anu (the planet Saturn) amounts to an "identity," according to Jensen.[1194] Rawlinson says the same thing: the Babylonians regarded Sin—the crescent—as an aspect of the planet Saturn.[1195] Jeremias states the equation unequivocally: Sin=Saturn.[1196]

[1192] Kerenyi, Prometheus, 51.

[1193] Combe, Histoire du Culte de Sin, 11-12.

[1194] Die Kosmologie der Babylonier, 191.

[1195] Rawlinson, Herodotus, Essay X.

[1196] Handbuch der Altorientalischen Geisteskultur, 96.

When one considers the relationship of the Sin-crescent to the sign , the nature of the identity becomes clear. The Sin-crescent is part of the circular dwelling or "body" of Saturn. Thus the texts invoke Sin as the protective rampart of the Cosmos—a "high defensive wall,"[1197] or a:

Golden sanctuary, which in the land is magnificent!

Luminous sanctuary which in the land is elevated![1198]

As Saturn's emanation, Sin is synonymous with the great god's circle of "glory" (halo); and this fact gives stunning significance to what must otherwise be regarded as a purely esoteric statement of Assyro-Babylonian astronomical texts: "Saturn stands in the halo of Sin," the texts proclaim (not once but several times).[1199] Crescent and enclosure are one.

Do not these evidences strongly suggest that the ancients perceived a literal band around Saturn and that this Saturnian dwelling or "halo" displayed a crescent?

Another piece of evidence is noteworthy. The Babylonians represented the circle of Saturn's Cosmos (the circle of the gods) by the sign . If my contention is correct, the crescent of Sin was simply the brightly illuminated half of this circle (assembly). So it is of no small significance that Babylonian symbolism also represented the assembly by the sign . Needless to say, the heavens familiar to us today offer no conceivable source of the image.

Figure 49. Sun-in-crescent, on the Ur-Nammu stele from Ur.

Figure 50. Hawaiian cross design showing alternate positions of the crescent around the central sun.

[1197] Combe, op. cit., 146.

[1198] Ibid., 114.

[1199] Jastrow, "Sun and Saturn," 143.

Figure 51. American Indian mounds, conveying the image of the revolving crescent.

Such identities point emphatically to an underlying relation of the ancient signs and . While the former depicts the entire Saturnian enclosure, the latter portrays only the brightly illuminated portion of the band—so that one might appropriately speak of Saturn's "crescent-enclosure" and schematically render the idea this way : .

It should be stressed, however, that the common location of the crescent beneath the central sun is not its only placement in ancient symbolism. At times the crescent appears to stand on end (or), while at other times it is inverted above the sun . Of course, this is exactly what we should expect—for if the crescent was the illuminated portion of a circumpolar band then that crescent must have appeared to revolve around the band with every full rotation of our planet upon its axis. One could thus render the daily rotation of the crescent schematically: .

As we shall see, there is a distinctive relationship of this revolving crescent to the phases of the archaic "day" and "night"—as well as to many other aspects of ancient cosmography. But let us take the present line of inquiry a little further. Does the equation of the crescent and enclosure occur also in Egypt? The Egyptians (as previously observed) called the enclosure Aten, recorded by the hieroglyph . (In the course of time this symbol evolved into the simplified form , with the enclosed sun dropped out. It is the latter form that generally prevails in later Egyptian art.)

In numerous representations of the Aten a crescent forms the lower half of the enclosure. In fig. 52, I offer an imposing example from the tomb of Ramesses VI, showing the Aten resting within a crescent and flanked by four male figures, two right and two left.

Figure 52. The Egyptian crescent-enclosure.

The hieroglyphic form of the crescent-enclosure is , a form which progressively developed into the images , as the artists gradually expanded and flattened the crescent into a larger receptacle supporting the enclosure.

This image of the Aten and crescent seems to have generated great confusion among Egyptologists. One of the gods associated with the crescent-enclosure is Khensu, whom all authorities identify as the moon. But the god’s image remains enigmatic, for Budge writes: “He wears on his head the lunar disk in a crescent, or the solar disk with a uraeus, or the solar disk with the plumes and uraeus.”1200 Did the Egyptians have difficulty deciding whether the god was the sun or the moon?

Figure 53. Three illustrations of the Egyptian god Khensu, showing the progressive enlargement of the Aten’s crescent by Egyptian artists.

When Budge calls the sign a “lunar disk in a crescent,” he avoids any association of the sign with the sun. But on the following page he writes of Khensu: “On his head rest the lunar crescent and disk. In this form he represents both the sun at sunrise and the new moon.”1201 Either the Egyptians possessed a remarkable indifference concerning the astral character of their gods, or scholars have misunderstood the symbolism.

By putting aside all a priori verdicts one discerns a root consistency in the Egyptian image of the crescent-enclosure. In Egyptian ritual, the crescent is not the moon but a semi-circle “embracing” the central sun . Very early the Egyptians personified the crescent-enclosure as the divinity Ah, Aah, or Aahu, denoted by the glyph or , and always translated “moon.” The word ah, however, also means “to embrace”—a concept devoid of meaning in connection with our moon, but charged with meaning when referred to the band (or the illuminated portion of the band) enclosing the central sun. Ah further signifies “to defend against” and “collar.” That is, like the Babylonian “moon”-god Sin, the Egyptian ah signifies the defensive rampart protecting the sun-god: and the same crescent-enclosure is worn by the great god as his “collar.” Again, such interrelationships can only appear absurd when considered as aspects of our moon.

Figure 54. Ah, god of the crescent-enclosure.

The only “moon” invoked in early Egyptian ritual is that which houses the central sun. Chapter LXV of the Book of the Dead, bearing the title “The Chapter of Coming Forth by Day and of Gaining the Mastery over

---

1200 The Gods of the Egyptians, Vol. II, 36. [Emphasis added.]

1201 Ibid., 37. [Emphasis added.]

Enemies," begins, "Hail (thou) who shinest from the Moon [Ah] and who sendest forth light therefrom."[1202] "In several chapters the sun is spoken of as shining in or from the moon," notes Renouf.[1203]

One version of the Coffin Texts reads: "Going forth into the day and living after death. O you Sole One who rises [comes forth] in the moon, O you Sole One who shines in the moon."[1204] The "moon" is the dwelling of the solitary god, and the nature of this dwelling is accurately communicated to us in the ancient signs and .

Recalling that the Babylonians related the crescent of Sin to the circle of the gods , one wonders whether a similar relationship occurs in Egypt. The Egyptian assembly is the paut—a term which refers at once to the company of gods, the limbs of Osiris or Re, and the grain or bread of heaven. Though the Aten sign may serve as the determinative of paut, the most common hieroglyph for paut is , the inverted crescent-enclosure!

One thus finds a striking correspondence between the Egyptian and Mesopotamian symbolism of the crescent—a symbolism which takes on coherence only when one sees the crescent as the illuminated half of the polar enclosure . By no extent of rationalization can one accommodate the imagery to the sun and moon familiar to us today. Indeed the difficulty is recognized by Butterworth in his examination of the sun-in-crescent . The crescent "is not the natural luminary of heaven," writes Butterworth, "for it has its hollow side turned towards the 'sun.'"[1205] The point is worth emphasizing. The crescent of our moon always faces the solar orb, but in the early symbolism of the sun and crescent such a relationship rarely if ever occurs. No matter what the position of the crescent around the sun (, , , or), the sun stands within the "embrace" of the crescent, giving rise to what Briffault deems an "astronomically incongruous" image.[1206] But the image appears discordant only if we judge it against the present heavens. The primeval sun, states Butterworth, is "contained in the hollow of the recumbent crescent moon. This is the sun that is always in the zenith"[1207] (i.e., it is not the body we call "sun" today).

Figure 55. Hindu syllable OM, the creative word.

[1202] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 228.

[1203] The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 263-64.

[1204] Faulkner, The Coffin Texts, 131.

[1205] The Tree at the Navel of the Earth, 109.

[1206] The Mothers, Vol. III, 82.

[1207] Op. cit., 127. [Emphasis added.]

Figure 56. Phoenician sun-in-crescent.

The Crescent And Womb

If the crescent revered in antiquity denoted the illuminated half of Saturn's enclosure, then it must be synonymous with the cosmic womb—the mother goddess.

That numerous goddesses, in later times, came to be associated with our moon is a fact so thoroughly documented that we need not belabor the evidence here. Yet the reasons for this association are by no means clear. "From the beginning," states G. E. Smith, reviewing the early counterparts of the Egyptian Hathor, "all goddesses—and especially this most primitive stratum of fertility deities—were for obvious reasons intimately associated with the moon."[1208]

And what are the "obvious" reasons for the connection of the goddess with the moon? It is, Smith claims, "the cyclical periodicity of the moon which suggested the analogy with the similar physiological periodicity of women . . ." Also, "The influence of the moon upon dew and the tides, perhaps, suggested its controlling power over water and emphasized the life-giving function which its association with women had already suggested."[1209] These reasons are neither obvious nor adequate.

What requires explanation is the crescent-goddesses' elementary character as a receptacle housing the central sun. That the Egyptian goddess Hathor was represented by a crescent or "lunette" does not alter the fact that her very name means "the dwelling of Horus." Similarly, Isis, also represented by a crescent, was the temple chamber or throne enclosing Osiris. The Babylonian Ishtar, whose symbol was the crescent, was the "womb" housing the man-child Tammuz. This very aspect of the crescent is explicit in the title of the "moon"-divinity Sin, who is called the "mother womb, begetter of all things."[1210]

It can hardly be doubted that the Saturnian crescent eventually became confused with our moon. The confusion is most noticeable in the case of the Greek Selene and Latin Luna, whose names were assigned to the lunar sphere. But neither the names nor the imagery of Selene and Luna originated in connection with our moon. Within the sphere of Luna "Sol is hidden like a fire." Helios dwells as the impregnating seed within the womb of Selene.[1211] "According to these ancient ideas," writes Jung, "the moon is a vessel of the sun: she is a universal receptacle of the sun in particular."[1212] For an explanation of this imagery one must look to the former celestial order. Long before the Greeks named the solar orb Helios, they knew Helios as the planet Saturn—just as Sol primitively signified the same planet. Selene and Luna derive their mythical character from Saturn's enclosure, and the signs and offer a literal portrait of the ancient mother goddess.

[1208] The Evolution of the Dragon, 56.

[1209] Ibid., 56.

[1210] Suhr, The Spinning Aphrodite, 57.

[1211] Jung, Mysterium Coniunctionis, 177.

[1212] Ibid., 129.

Crescent And Motherland

There is a further implication: the "moon" must mean the same thing as the created "earth" watered by the four rivers of life. Though it is difficult to imagine a less likely identity in conventional terms, here is Faber's conclusion concerning the moon and earth in global mythology: "The female divinity, however apparently multiplied according the genius of polytheism, ultimately resolve themselves into one, who is accounted the great universal mother both of gods and men, and this single deity is pronounced to be alike the Moon in the firmament and the all-productive Earth."1213

Faber gives far too many examples than can be cited here. In each case the goddess "was astronomically the Moon," but "her mystic circle is declared to be the circle of the World."1214 The goddess Isis, reports Faber, "was declared to be equally the moon and the earth: and she is at the same time unanimously determined by the ancient theologists to be one with Ceres, Proserpine, Minerva, Venus, Diane, Juno, Rhea, Cybele, Jana, Atergatis . . . (etc.). These again are said to be mutually the same with each other: and if we descend to particulars, we still find them indifferently identified with the Earth and the Moon."1215

What might our earth (as perceived by the ancients, not by modern astronomy) have in common with the lunar sphere to promote this seemingly irrational identity? The question is raised by Briffault: "There is not, in fact, an earth-goddess who is not at the same time a moon-goddess. All Earth Mothers, as Bachofen remarked 'lead a double life, as Earth and as Moon.'"1216 The identity prevails not only in the advanced civilizations but among primitive races also. The Maori identify the "moon" (Hine, or "the Woman") with the earth. So do Caribbean natives—and this identity corresponds with the overlapping personalities of the "moon" and "earth" among the Mexicans, Chaldaeans, Chinese, Hindu, Greeks, and northern European races.

Briffault confesses the irrationality of the equation: "The Greeks expressly called the moon 'a heavenly earth' and 'a part of the earth.' That persistent identification of the moon with the earth would be unintelligible in peoples ignorant of modern astronomical conceptions, let alone in uncultured races such as the Caribs and the Polynesians. When the earth is conceived as a huge, solid, immovable surface contrasting in every respect with the wandering sphere or disc of the moon in the heavens, there appears to be no imaginable ground for assimilating the one to the other. The identification cannot arise from any analogy in appearance or function."1217

Briffault proposes to resolve the dilemma by positing an intimate connection of "the moon and earth with women and their functions." He suggests that the divinized female came first and her attributes were, through analogy, transferred at once to the moon and the earth.1218 But that such indirect reasoning on the part of ancient man should lead to an identification so universal and so fundamental is not easy to believe.

Actually, no rationalization of this identity is necessary. In the archaic world order, the crescent and earth (land, province) were identical. The circle of the "moon" (crescent-enclosure) was the island of beginnings—Saturn's Earth. The mythical "moon," as Faber observes, was "what some call 'a terrestrial heaven' or 'paradise,' and others a 'heavenly earth' . . . it is described as wearing the semblance of a floating island . . ."1219 This "island of the Moon" contained "within its sphere the Elysian fields or Paradise," which came to be known as "the paradise of the moon."

1213 The Origins of Pagan Idolatry, Vol. II, 3. [Emphasis added.]

1214 Ibid., 5.

1215 Ibid., 6.

1216 Op. cit., Vol. III, 61.

1217 Ibid., 61. [Emphasis added.]

1218 Ibid., 61.

1219 Faber, op. cit., Vol. III, 13. [Emphasis added.]

There exists, in fact, a most appropriate Mesopotamian symbol of this paradise, though it has yet to receive the serious attention of the experts. It is the sign , repeated again and again on Mesopotamian cylinder seals. The sign depicts the quartered earth, the celestial “land of the four rivers.” That this paradisal earth lies within the embrace of a vast crescent may appear foolish to modern critics, but is strictly consistent with numerous independent traditions equating the primeval “earth” and “moon.”1220

The Crescent And Mount

In all ancient myths of the lost paradise, the land of peace and plenty rests upon a cosmic pillar—“earth’s highest mountain.” One of the peculiarities of the Mount is that it possesses two peaks, rising to the right and left of the central column.

The Egyptian Mount of Glory (Khut) reveals two peaks between which rests the Aten or enclosed sun . Depicted by this sign are “the two great mountains on which Re appears.”1221 And what is most interesting about the Egyptian symbol of the cleft peak is that it finds strikingly similar parallels in other lands. The Mesopotamian sun-god rests upon a twin-peaked world mountain of identical form (fig. 60), and the same dual mount occurs also in Mexico—here too revealing the sun-god between the two peaks (fig. 61).

Figure 60. Assyro-Babylonian Shamash standing between the two peaks.

Figure 61. (a) Mexican twin peaks, with central staff;

1220 Ibid., 18.

1221 Faulkner, op. cit., 224.

Figure 61. (b) Central sun between two peaks.

The Delaware Indians recall a primeval land—“the Talega country,” where long ago “all kept peace with each other.” The pictograph of the lost land is —an extraordinary counterpart to the Egyptian Mount of Glory .

In Hebrew and Muslim thought “the mountain of paradise is a double one,” observes Wensinck.[1222] To the Hebrews Sinai, Horeb, Ebol, and Gerezim were all conceived as images of a twin-peaked mountain, states Jeremias.[1223] In the primeval Tyre (paradise), according to the description of Nonnus, a “double rock” rises from the ocean. In its centre is an olive (the central sun) which automatically emits fire, setting it in a perpetual blaze.[1224] The Syrian and Hittite great gods stand equally balanced upon two mountains.[1225] In the beginning, according to a central Asiatic legend related by Uno Holmberg, “there was only water, from which the two great mountains emerged.”[1226] From the central mount of Hindu cosmology rise two secondary peaks to the right and left.[1227] Of course, the twin pillars of Hercules point to the same idea.

The ancient concept of a cleft summit left a deep imprint in ancient architecture, according to Vincent Scully, author of the book The Earth, the Temple and the Gods. In Crete, “a clearly defined pattern of landscape use can be recognized at every palace site,” Scully writes. “More than this, each palace makes use, as far as possible, of the same landscape elements. These are as follows: first, an enclosed valley of varying size in which the palace is set; I should like to call this the ‘Natural Megaron’; second, a gently mounded or conical hill in axis with the palace to north or south, and lastly a higher, double-peaked or cleft mountain some distance beyond the hill but on the same axis. The mountain may have other characteristics of great sculptural force . . . but the double peaks or notched cleft seem essential to it . . . It forms in all cases a climactic shape which has the quality of causing the observer’s eye to come to rest in its cup . . . All the landscape elements listed above are present at Knossos, Phaistos, Mallia, and Gournia, and in each case they themselves—and this point must be stressed—are the basic architecture of the palace complex.”[1228]

The same pattern occurs repeatedly throughout Greece and Asia Minor, according to Scully. A good example is the siting of the citadel of Troy, which looks out across the isle of Imbross to the more distant isle of Samothrace from which rises (directly “beyond the long low mound of Imbross”) the “double peaks” of Phengari.[1229]

[1222] “The Ideas of the Western Semites Concerning the Navel of the Earth,” 13.

[1223] Jeremias, op. cit., 57.

[1224] Wensinck, “Tree and Bird Cosmological Symbols in Western Asia,” 19, citing Nonnus, Dionysiaca, XI, 407 sqq.

[1225] Butterworth, op. cit., 55.

[1226] Der Baum des Lebens, 62.

[1227] Lenormant, Les Origines de l’Histoire, Vol. II, 204-5.

[1228] The Earth, The Temple and the Gods, 11. [Emphasis added.]

[1229] Ibid., 22, 203.

In what ritual notion did this common architectural requirement originate? The name of Samothrace's sacred mountain offers a vital clue: Phengari is the "Mountain of the Moon." The title is not incidental, for the "Mountain of the Moon"—in more than one land—is the very title of the Primeval Hill, the pillar of the Cosmos! Thus, the "White Island" of Hindu myth is distinguished by the presence of a primordial mountain rising to the "moon." Mount Ararat, which Faber connects with the paradisal hill, is denominated Laban, "the mountain of the Moon." So too does the crescent moon rest on the summit of the Hindu Meru. Faber writes: "At the head of the Nile, according to the Indian geographers, is the Meru of the southern hemisphere: this is also a mountain of the Moon . . . At the source of the Rhine, the Rhone, the Po and the Danube, all of which were holy rivers, is what may be styled 'the Meru of the west': here again we have a mountain of the Moon, for Alpan is but a variation of Laban, and Jura or Ira or Rhe denotes 'the Moon' equally in the Celtic and the Babylonian dialects. Lebanon, at the head of the sacred river Jordan, was another lunar mountain . . . And even in the island of Borneo, the peak at the head of its largest river is known by the title of 'the mountain of the Moon.'"[1230]

An early prototype of such mountains, Faber contends, is the vast summit of the Himalaya, from which the Ganges flows. The Hindus deemed this towering mass Chandrasichara, the "mountain of the Moon," while two small hillocks of this lofty region receive the title Somagiri, the "Mountains of the Moon."[1231]

At work is the cosmic image of a crescent moon resting upon a great mountain and thereby forming a cleft summit. ". . . The figure presented to their imagination, would be a conical peak terminating in two points formed by the two horns of the crescent."[1232] Consistent with the universal sun-in-crescent , the great father himself stands midway between the peaks of the right and left, states Faber.[1233]

One thus derives the images and as the simplest renderings of the "Mountain of the Crescent." Every student of ancient symbolism, of course, will recognize these as images of global distribution, presented in an infinite number of variations.

Figure 62. Babylonian pillared crescents.

[1230] Op. cit., Vol. III, 202.

[1231] Ibid., 203-4.

[1232] Ibid., 204.

[1233] Ibid., 204.

Figure 63. Sabaean altar, with pillared sun-in-crescent.

Figure 64. Hittite crescent-enclosure on support.

Figure 65. Pillared crescent, from Peru.

Surely one cannot ignore this general symbolism of the cosmic mountain in attempting to understand the common mountain image . This pictograph, I suggest, simply adapts the primal crescent to its mythical interpretation as two peaks. Which is to say, the Egyptian (or the later) refers to the same cosmic form as the crescent-enclosure . In fact, Budge says as much when he calls the latter sign an image of "the sun at sunrise"—for this is precisely the purported meaning of the sign . (I shall subsequently show that by picturing the crescent below the central sun as opposed to the alternative positions , , the ancients denoted the archaic "day," the period of Saturn's greatest brilliance.)

That the two peaks of the Egyptian Khut signified the cleft summit of a single mountain is forcefully indicated by the "mountain-sceptre" of Re, showing the dual mount as the top of a single column . As observed by many authorities, the sceptre represented the pillar of heaven. This particular form closely parallels the early "mountain" hieroglyph , which passed into the image , identifying the cleft peak with the solitary god's original "perch" or "pedestal."[1234] The "pedestal," as we have seen, was also called the pillar of Shu, which the hieroglyphs record by the sign . Here too a single column branches into two secondary supports. (In following sections the reader will find numerous evidences connecting the images and with the underlying cosmic form).

The Egyptian hieroglyphs also employ the mountain sign , appearing to show three peaks; and in early representations this configuration, too, appears as the summit of a central pillar . There can be little doubt that the three-peaked mount pertains to the same idea as the twofold summit. The middle peak appears to indicate a simple extension of the central column. The great god, who stands between the peaks of the right and left, becomes himself a part of the mount on which he rests.

This development finds illustration in the Hindu symbolism of Mount Meru, the mountain of the crescent moon. Meru, despite its crescent peak, is the tricutadri, or mountain of three summits. Similarly, the Hindu "White Island" or lost paradise is deemed "the three-peaked land."[1235]

Compare Olympus in the Greek poem:

From Olympus, the summit
From the three peaks of Heaven.[1236]

The basis of this symbolism, according to Faber, is the great god, "standing upright" in the midst of the cleft so as to present the image of a central mountain "terminating in three points formed by the two horns of the crescent and its centrical mast [the great god]."[1237]

[1234] Percy E. Newberry, "Two Cults of the Old Kingdom," 24*ff*.

[1235] Faber, op. cit., Vol. III, 204.

[1236] Quoted in Cook, Zeus: A Study in Ancient Religion, Vol. I, 114. [Emphasis added.]

[1237] Op. cit., vol. III, 204-5.

Accordingly, the primal Hindu image passes into the later , which forms the crest of the Hindu trident —the symbol of the cosmic column. The trident, in other words, originated in the cleft “Mountain of the Moon” . To this image answers the Egyptian three-peaked column .

Of the three-peaked mount much more could be said, but at the cost of distracting from the more basic theme—the two-fold summit. It is my contention that the myths of the split peak originated in the prehistoric perception of a vast crescent seeming to constitute the summit of a cosmic column . Within the cup of the crescent rested the sun . Moreover the crescent was itself simply the illuminated half of a circular band . And if we include the four rivers of life we arrive at the form as the complete image of the Saturnian configuration. Have the ancients preserved for us a literal rendering of this idea?

One could not ask for a more accurate representation than that provided by the cylinder seals of ancient Mesopotamia, which offers us the symbol .[1238] The circular paradise on the mountaintop, watered by the four rivers, lay within the primeval “moon” (of which our lunar crescent is but a pale emblem).

Surely the remarkable correspondence of myth and symbol concerning this celestial configuration (a configuration which flatly contradicts the present arrangement of the heavens) suggests that something more than primitive fancy is at work. If the thesis outlined here is correct, then a single celestial apparition gave rise to these interrelated images: .

The crescent is a central ingredient in the symbolism, and its presence implies a tangible band so illuminated as to display two halves, one bright, the other more subdued.

The Heavenly Twins

Saturn’s enclosure united two semicircles of light and shadow, distinguished by a revolving crescent. In the bright and dark divisions of the enclosure the ancients perceived the cosmic twins, the “two faces” of the Universal Monarch.

In the human domain, one of every eighty-six births involves twins. But among the gods, the abnormal is the rule. The great father is either born of or raised by twins, while also giving birth to twins. And the great god himself commonly appears in dual form.

Prevailing astronomical explanations of the celestial twins identify them as a circle of day and night, or as the evening and morning star, or as the sun and moon. The constellation Gemini became the zodiacal representative of the celestial twins, though it is almost universally agreed that the mythical pair existed long before the naming of such star groups.

Who Were The Dioscuri?

Privileged as the starting point of countless treatises on the twins are the Greek Dioscuri (the two sons of Zeus), Castor and Polydeuces. In a battle with their cousins Idas and Lynceus (sons of Aphareus) Castor fell mortally wounded. While his brother gasped for breath, Polydeuces beseeched Zeus: “Bid me also die, O King, with this my brother.”

[1238] Hans Henning van Der Western, Ancient Oriental Seals in the Collection of Mr. Edward T. Newell, fig. 6, no. 217.

Zeus answered the prayer by granting that the two brothers spend alternate days above and below the earth. Pindar records Zeus’s promise: “. . . If thou contendest for thy brother, and art minded to have an equal share with him in all things, then mayest thou breathe for half thy time beneath the earth, and for half thy time in the golden homes of heaven.”[1239]

Cook’s explanation of the reward is simple enough: the brothers represented the day and night sky, revolving round our earth. Their alternating position provides “a simple but graphic expression of the obvious fact that the divine sky is half dark, half bright.”[1240] Supporting this interpretation is the remark of Philon the Jew concerning the habit of mythologists: “They bisected the sky theoretically into hemispheres, one above, the other below, the earth, and called them Dioskoroi, adding a marvelous tale about their life on alternate days.”[1241]

Several centuries after Philon, Joannes the Lydian (living in the sixth century A.D.) repeated the theory: “The philosophers declare that the Dioskoroi are the hemisphere below, and the hemisphere above, the earth; they take it in turns to die, according to the myth, because turn and turn about they pass beneath our feet.”[1242] Observing that semicircles were sacred to the Dioscuri, Cook concludes that the two brothers personify two halves of a celestial circle—“the animate Sky.”[1243] This, of course, would not preclude the ancients from employing the sun and moon or the morning and evening star as symbols of the light and dark hemispheres: “These are but secondary modes of denoting the great primary contrast between Day and Night,” states Cook.[1244]

Of the celestial twins one could pursue example upon example in classical myth alone: Apollo and Artemis, Zetes and Calais, Zerhus and Amphion, Hercules and Iphicles, Otus and Ephialtes, Pelias and Neleus, to name a few. And these figures of the celestial twins are simply a small segment of the vastly larger Indo-European pattern reviewed by Walker.[1245]

Figure 66. The Latin twin god Janus, whose single hat means “Cosmos.”

[1239] Pindar, Nemian Odes, 10.148*ff.*

[1240] Op. cit., Vol. II, 440.

[1241] Ibid., Vol. II, 432-33.

[1242] Ibid., Vol. II, 433.

[1243] Ibid., Vol. II, 434.

[1244] Ibid., Vol. II, 435.

[1245] Ibid., Vol. I, 771.

Also, one must place alongside the twins the comparable two-headed or two-faced god. Here we meet Janus, whom the Italians knew as the "most ancient of gods," and whom they regularly depicted with two faces, looking in opposite directions (fig. 66). Janus, according to Cook, personified the vault of heaven, his two faces signifying the two aspects of the sky (day and night): Janus "was originally the divine Sky. The divine Sky is bright by day and dark by night. Being, therefore, of a two-fold or twin character, Janus was naturally represented as a double-faced god."[1246]

Janus, as the twin-god par excellence gives us the title Janiform, applied to any two-headed or two-faced deity (of which the ancient world provides innumerable instances). I give as an example a specimen from Etruria (fig. 66), depicting a Janiform head wearing a petasos or broad-brimmed hat (often associated with Hermes). This compares with the "broad-brimmed hat" worn by Odin, Attis, and others. According to Eisler, whose opinion is shared by Cook, the hat symbolized, simply, "the sky" so that the two faces together correspond to the entire circle of the hat (heaven, sky).[1247]

The Black And White Twins

Though not all twins are black and white, many are, and it is this very dichotomy which Cook notices in several Greek examples. In certain instances one twin appears on a white horse and the other on a black.[1248]

This aspect of the twins appears to be universal. In his character as a twin-god the Mexican Quetzalcoatl unites with Mictlantecuhtli, the two divinities appearing back to back, one black, the other white.[1249] The Zuni represented their twin war gods by black and white masks. The black and white Asvins of Hindu myth are an obvious parallel. Hindu philosophers, states Agrawala, divided the cosmic wheel into two halves, one black and one white, which they personified as twin sisters forming "a circle (chakra) revolving in eternal time."[1250] In Melanesia, states Eliade, "one constantly comes across the myth of the two brothers, one bright, the other dull."[1251]

Often the twins struggle with each other (sometimes one is "good" and the other "evil"), a feature which complements the black-white and rising-setting aspect of the Dioscuri. Chinese myth describes two brothers named Opeh and Schichin at constant war.[1252] The Ugaritic twins Mot and Aliyan quarrel, as do the Celtic Gwyn and Gwythur.[1253] Remus dies at the hand of Romulus. Acrisius and Proetus quarrel while in the womb of their mother. Jacob and Esau do the same. The North American Indian mother goddess Awehai conceived twins who battled while yet in the womb. There can be little doubt that the Chinese yin and yang (primordial forces of light and darkness) or the Manichaean primal pair of good and evil bore a close relationship to this general tradition of the cosmic twins.

The black and white aspect of the twins appears to be consistent with Cook's theory of a revolving heavenly sphere divided into contending hemispheres of light and darkness. But there are other features of the twins which fit less comfortably into Cook's model. Why were the twins so often conceived as two primeval rulers (or two aspects of the Universal Monarch, the founder of civilization)?

[1246] Ibid., Vol. II, 378.

[1247] Eisler, Weltenmantel und Himmelszelt.

[1248] Cook, op. cit., Vol. II, 435.

[1249] Neumann, The Great Mother, 205.

[1250] Sparks from the Vedic Fire, 42-43, 62*ff.*

[1251] Patterns in Comparative Religion, 52.

[1252] O'Neill, The Night of the Gods, 836.

[1253] Graves, The Greek Myths, 243, note 2.

The Dioscuri bore a distinct relationship to the twins Romulus and Remus, the legendary founders of Rome. There seems to have been a general tradition of dual kingship, for just as the Dioscuri, in early Doric days, found personification in two kings of Sparta, the Latin Romulus and Remus appear as royal twins, reigning with equal rights. Representations of Romulus and Remus often assimilate the pair to the Dioscuri.[1254]

The question is whether something as abstract as a boundless "sky" could have provoked the idea of a primeval pair ruling in effect as a single king. The twins, as in the case of Janus, attach themselves to the Universal Monarch as his two faces, looking in opposite directions. Cook, of course, recognizes this, but he conceives Janus, the primeval god-king, not in concrete terms, but as an open expanse—the "sky."

Was this the true identity of Janus? One notes with considerable interest the statement of Joannes the Lydian: "Our own Philadelphia still preserves a trace of the ancient belief. On the first day of the month (i.e., January) there goes in procession no less a personage than Janus himself, dressed up in a two-faced mask, and the people call him Saturnus, identifying him with Kronos."[1255]

To Cook this identity of Janus and Saturn must result from an ancient confusion, but to us it accurately reflects the archaic doctrine. Janus, as the "most ancient indigenous god of Italy" (Herodian's phrase),[1256] is the great father, whom the star-worshippers of many lands recognized as the planet Saturn.

Also crucial is the relationship of the celestial pair to the cosmic pillar. Many ancient representations of the twins or twin-god place the two heads atop the sacred pole. As for the Janiform type in Greece, Cook cites instances in which "the double face is set on a pillar or post."[1257] One finds similar portrayals of the two-faced god in China, northern Europe, Siberia, India, the Americas, and elsewhere. To one who conceives the post as nothing more than a venerated piece of wood, the connection between it and the two-faced god will mean nothing. But to one who sees the sacred post as the emblem of the Primeval Hill, the placement is charged with meaning: the cosmic twins occupied the summit of the central mountain.

Of the male deities worshipped by the Navaho, states Alexander, the most important are the twins Nayanezgani and Thobadzistshini, who bring to an end the primeval Age of Giants. "Their home is on a mountain in the centre of the Navaho country." "The legend of the heaven-growing rock, lifting twins to the skies, occurs more than once in California."[1258]

Here are two aspects of the celestial twins which do not readily fit Cook's explanation of the pair. The twins are two faces or two aspects of Saturn, the Universal Monarch; and they sit upon the cosmic mountain. Are these accidental attributes of the twins or do they pertain to an integrated image?

It is surprising that Cook, while giving meticulous attention to classical testimony, gives no attention to the more ancient prototype of the Dioscuri and the Janiform god. The most complete evidence comes from ancient Egypt, whose ritual and art provide an incisive portrait of the twins.

[1254] Cook, op. cit., Vol. II, 442-43.

[1255] Quoted in Cook, op. cit., Vol II, 376. [Emphasis added.]

[1256] Ibid., 335.

[1257] Op. cit., Vol. II, 381.

[1258] Alexander, North American Mythology, 235.

Figure 67. The twin god Horus-Set.

Of the black and white brothers the world knows no older example than the Egyptian pair Horus and Set. In fig. 67 the heads of Horus and Set appear upon one body, looking to the right and left. The black head of Set contrasts sharply with the light head of Horus, emphasizing the pair's role as "the two opponent gods."

Closely related to Horus and Set are the twins Isis and Nephthys, often portrayed back to back. The Egyptian pairs Shu and Tefnut, Thoth and Maat, Sekhet and Neith all reveal a similar underlying character.

In the Book of the Dead the pictograph of the two "portions" of Horus and Set is the sign , the band of the Aten.[1259] The clear implication is that the sun-god's enclosure possesses two twin-like divisions, one light, the other dark. Moreover, if the circle of the Aten is half light, half dark, surely one cannot ignore the related sign , the crescent-enclosure, which appears to provide a literal illustration of the two realms of Horus and Set.

In the same way, the Egyptian shen bond stood not only for the sun-god's enclosure (Aten) but for the twins Isis and Nephthys.

Together Isis and Nephthys, the back-to-back twins, formed the protective "border" or "boundary" of the All, the Cosmos. While the Egyptian tcher means "boundary," "limit," tehera means "protective rampart" and tcherti the two halves of the boundary or rampart. The two Tcherti are Isis and Nephthys.

Egyptian cosmology reveals the coherent image of a bisected enclosure revolving around the central sun. Two interrelated aspects of the twins stand out:

1. In one sense the twins are simply the light and dark halves of the enclosure—a characteristic most pronounced in the pair Horus and Set.

2. But the twofold enclosure revolved around the stationary light god, and by its revolution, the illuminated crescent—the "face" of the great god—marked out the respective divisions of the "right and left" (,) and "above and below" (,). In their primary personality, the twins Isis and Nephthys represented these counterpoised positions of the crescent, and hence two divisions of the celestial kingdom. (In standard translations, the divisions of the left and right are usually rendered as "east" and "west," confusing cosmography (the map of the Cosmos) with the local geography, while the "above" and "below" are translated "heaven" and "earth," leading to a different but equally troublesome confusion.)

This interpretation of the cosmic twins coincides with Cook's in identifying the pair with a celestial circle, half dark and half light. Distinguishing this view from Cook's, however, is the proposed nature of the circle. Did the twofold circle mean the abstract "sky," or a concrete band (with crescent) enclosing the central sun?

[1259] Massey, Ancient Egypt, 375.

A requirement of the interpretation set forth here is that the sun-god stand between the twins and that the circle of the twins revolve around him. Of course, if the twins refer to the open "sky" and the sun-god means the solar orb, it would be meaningless—in fact a contradiction—to place the god in the centre of the circle (i.e., between the semicircles of day and night) or to speak of the twins revolving around the sun-god.

The Egyptians' great god wears the enclosure of the Aten as a "girdle." According to the Pyramid Texts this garment is the circle of the celestial twins: "I am girt with the girdle of Horus, I am clad with the garment of Thoth, Isis is before me and Nephthys is behind me."[1260] Such language occurs repeatedly in early Egyptian sources. In the Book of the Dead, the king asks, "May I see Horus . . . , with the god Thoth and the goddess Maat, one on each side of him."[1261] In the Coffin Texts Atum declares of the twins Shu and Tefnut: "I was between these two, the one being in front of me, the other behind me."[1262] "The two mistresses of Buto accompany you to the right and left."[1263] The Pyramid Texts announce that the "two great and mighty Enneads . . . set Shu for you on your east [left] side and Tefnut on your west [right] side."[1264] The king proclaims, "Neith is behind me, and Selket is before me."[1265] Thus the Universal Monarch gives "judgement in the heavens between the two Contestants [Horus and Set]."[1266]

The light and dark halves of the enclosure—in perpetual revolution, or "conflict"—are balanced by the great god. "I am the girdle of the robe of the god Nu . . . which uniteth the two fighting deities who dwell in my body [khat, "womb"]."[1267] "I am the god who keepeth opposition in equipoise as his Egg circleth round."[1268]

With a little imagination one might possibly conceive the open sky as a black and white sphere revolving around our earth, but such a circle could in no sense appear as a twofold band around a central sun. It is here, in short, that Cook's explanation of the twins appears to break down.

The Egyptian twins signify two divisions of the Aten ☉. There is only one enclosure of the sun, yet by virtue of its portions of light and shadow it becomes the "twofold circle" or, as often translated, "the two circles." And this "double" band is the womb of the mother goddess, giving birth to the central sun. A Coffin Text thus celebrates "the two rings which have given birth to the gods."[1269] The reference is to the twofold enclosure of Isis and Nephthys. "He was conceived in Isis and begotten in Nephthys," states the Book of the Dead.[1270] The same source declares: "I was conceived by the goddess Sekhet, and the goddess Neith gave birth to me."[1271]

Accordingly, the Coffin Texts say:

[1260] Pyramid Text 1089.

[1261] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 6.

[1262] Lacau, Traduction des Textes des Cercueils du Moyen Empire, 52.

[1263] Ibid., 37.

[1264] Pyramid Texts 1690-91.

[1265] Pyramid Text 1375.

[1266] Pyramid Text 289. [Emphasis added.]

[1267] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 261.

[1268] Renouf, op. cit., 108.

[1269] Lacau, op. cit., 48. [Emphasis added.]

[1270] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 261.

[1271] Ibid., 229.

> . . . Your two mothers who are in Nekheb [the celestial province] shall come to you . . .[1272]
>
> Oh you two who conceived Re, you shall bear me who am in the egg.[1273]

The Pyramid Texts reveal the same notion of a twofold womb:

> . . . The two great ladies [Isis and Nephthys] bore you.[1274]
>
> My mother is Isis, my nurse is Nephthys.[1275]
>
> The King was conceived by Sakhmet, and it is Shezmetet who bore the King.[1276]

The two goddesses were not merely twins, but the two halves of a single womb. These two divisions may appear either as the two thighs of Nut ("Re shines between the thighs of Nut")[1277] or as the thighs of Isis and Nephthys. To attain the primeval womb "the King ascends upon the thighs of Isis, the King climbs upon the thighs of Nephthys."[1278]

That the two-fold enclosure was something more than an ill-defined "sky" is proved by the enclosure's various symbolic forms. The fact is that every mythical formulation of the Saturnian band (assembly, holy land, temple, city, eye, serpent, etc.) is specifically portrayed as a twofold circle, whose two divisions are the cosmic twins.

Here are a few examples from the Egyptian system:

The Two Assemblies

Egyptian texts identify the circle of the gods as the "Two Conclaves" or "Two Enneads":

> . . . You stand in the Conclaves of the Mount of Glory . . . the Two Enneads come to you bowing.[1279]
>
> The sky is strong and Nut jubilates when she sees what Atum has done, while he sat among the Two Enneads.[1280]
>
> I have given you vindication in the Two Conclaves.[1281]
>
> My lips are the two Enneads: I am the Great Word.[1282]

This twofold circle of the gods forms at once the "body" of the great god and the "womb" of the great mother:

> Hail, Khepera . . . the two-fold company of the gods is thy body. [khat, "body," may also be translated "womb"].[1283]

[1272] Faulkner, op. cit., 61. [Emphasis added.]

[1273] Ibid., 168.

[1274] Pyramid Text 804. [Emphasis added.]

[1275] Pyramid Text 1375.

[1276] Pyramid Text 262.

[1277] Piankoff, Mythological Papyri, 210.

[1278] Pyramid Text 996.

[1279] Pyramid Texts 1292-93.

[1280] Faulkner, op. cit., 232.

[1281] Ibid., 237.

[1282] Pyramid Text 1100.

[1283] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 108.

I am a great one, the son of a great one. I issue from between the thighs of the Two Enneads.[1284]

I have come forth between the [two] thighs of the company of the gods.[1285]

It was a crescent which divided the circular assembly into two portions, for the hieroglyphic symbol of paut, “company of the gods,” is the crescent-enclosure .

The Two Lands

The celestial “Egypt,” founded and ruled by the Universal Monarch, possessed two divisions, alternately termed “the right and left” or “the above and below.” The priests of the Memphite doctrine announced: “Thus it was that Horus appeared as King of Upper Egypt and as King of Lower Egypt who united the Two Lands in the province of the (white) Wall at the place where the Two Lands are united.”[1286]

The first king is the creator, and the “land” which he gathered together and unified is a twofold circle. Hence the Two Lands receive the title “the Two Ladies” (Isis and Nephthys) or appear as “the portions of Horus and Set,”[1287] or the twin circle of the gods.[1288]

In their organization of the terrestrial kingdom the Egyptians strove to reproduce the bisected enclosure, the ideal kingdom. Writes Frankfort: “The dualistic forms of Egyptian kingship did not result from historical incidents. They embody the peculiarly Egyptian thought that a totality comprises opposites . . . A State dualistically conceived must have appeared to the Egyptians the manifestation of the order of creation . . .”[1289]

Figure 68. The Egyptian twin gods bind together the unified “land.”

In the early ritual texts the phrase “Upper and Lower Egypt” consistently refers to the celestial kingdom, not local geography. When the Pyramid Texts, for example, declare that “the Two Lands shine again and he [the great god] clears the visions of the gods,”[1290] it should be obvious that they refer to the primordial dwelling above, rather than terrestrial Egypt.

The Two Crowns

[1284] Pyramid Text 1087.

[1285] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 594.

[1286] Frankfort, Kingship and the Gods, 27.

[1287] Ibid., 21-27.

[1288] Pyramid Text 1297.

[1289] Op. cit., 19-20. [Emphasis added.]

[1290] Pyramid Text 373.

The god-king is "the Good Ruler who appears in the Double Crown, King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Lord of the Two Lands."[1291] No one reading these lines for the first time is likely to imagine that the "Double Crown" denoted the same dual enclosure as the "Two Lands." Yet, drawing on the cosmic imagery discussed in previous pages one perceives the influence of a single conception. Though the Two Lands are Isis and Nephthys, the same twins appear as two crowns worn by the god-king. ". . . [Y]our two mothers the two White Crowns caress you, your two mothers the two White Crowns kiss you . . ."[1292]

The Egyptians proclaimed that the two crowns composed the circle of glory (khu) which issued from the heart or head of the great god. "The two 'Great in Magic' [crowns] grew out of his head. Thus it was that Horus appeared as King of Upper Egypt and as King of Lower Egypt . . ."[1293] To acquire the two crowns was to unify the Two Lands.

The Two Eyes

"Thou didst stretch out the heavens wherein thy two eyes might travel," reads the Book of the Dead.[1294] The two eyes are simply the two halves of the singular revolving eye, personified by the cosmic twins. "Thine eyebrows are the two sister goddesses who are at peace with each other," reads the Book of the Dead.[1295] Isis and Nephthys are thus called "the two eyes" of Re.

The Two Serpents

If the Egyptian sign relates the circular serpent or uraeus to the band of the enclosed sun, the sign of the "two" uraei shows the latter to be two halves of the same band—a fact which agrees with the title of Isis and Nephthys as "the two serpent-goddesses." "The goddess Nebt-Unnut is established upon thy head [as the crown] and her uraei of the South [Upper Egypt] and North [Lower Egypt] are upon thy brow."[1296] (The Two Lands compose the two uraei serpents, which the god-king wears as a double crown.)

The texts leave no doubt that the eye, crown, and circular serpent, each referring to the same enclosure around the light god, possessed a dual aspect, as two eyes, two crowns, and two serpents; and this twofold enclosure was the double circle of the gods (the Two Enneads) encircling the Two Lands.

O King, I provide you with the Eye of Horus, the Red Crown rich in power and many natured, that it may protect you, O king, just as it protects Horus; may it set your power, O King, at the head of the Two Enneads as the two serpent-goddesses who are on your brow, that they may raise you up.[1297]

Passing briefly to other forms of the primeval enclosure one finds the same connection with the celestial twins:

The Two Thrones

The king has come to his throne which is upon the Two Ladies.[1298]

The Two Vases (=Two Eyes)

[1291] Piankoff, The Shrines of Tut-Ankh-Amon, 118. [Emphasis added.]

[1292] Pyramid Text 310.

[1293] Frankfort, op. cit., 27.

[1294] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 87.

[1295] Ibid., 583.

[1296] Ibid., 72.

[1297] Pyramid Text 901-2.

[1298] Pyramid Text 263.

*Take the two Eyes of Horus, the black and white; take them to your forehead that they may illuminate your face—the lifting up of a white jar and a black jar.*1299

The Two Lakes or Rivers

*I am born, I purify myself in the two great and mighty lakes in Heracleopolis . . .*1300

*O Destroyer who comest out of the Double Throne Lake.*1301

He has circumambulated the Two Banks. [The Two Banks denoted the circle of Upper and Lower "Egypt," enclosed by the revolving river.]1302

The Two Cords

*Oh you two who are lifted up . . . , who make the metacord of the god . . .*1303

*These are the two knots of Elephantine which are in the mouth of Osiris.*1304

Every mythical form of the primeval enclosure in Egypt appears as a twofold band, the circle of the celestial twins. The diverse figures of the twins, though complicating the symbolism, always point to the same root idea. The twins denote the revolving enclosure of the great god's dwelling in heaven, divided into equal portions of light and shadow. Neither Cook's identification of the twins as the abstract night and day sky, nor any other explanation based on the present celestial order, can account for the underlying identity of the twins as a circle revolving around a central sun.

Figure 69. An Etruscan mirror depicts the Dioscuri to the right and left of a central "sun" or "star."

1299 Pyramid Text 33.

1300 Piankofff, Shrines of Tut-Ankh-Amon, 51.

1301 Piankoff, The Tomb of Ramesses VI, 324.

1302 Pyramid Text 406.

1303 Pyramid Text 666.

1304 Pyramid Text 234.

Figure 70. The Uruboros, identified as "the One, the All," half dark and half light. From the Codex Marcianus (11th century).

In numerous lands the great father appears to have his home within the embrace of celestial twins. Butterworth reports that ". . . From Asia Minor to Egypt, from Delos to Syria, reliefs and coins and other works of art and craftsmanship bear representations of a triad consisting of the Dioskoroi, the 'Heavenly Twins,' dispersed on either side of a divine figure . . ."[1305]

In Egyptian, Sumero-Babylonian, Iranian, Hindu, and Greek imagery the twins appear as twin doors (of the right and left) from which the sun shines forth.[1306]

The Gnostic uroborus or circular serpent is half black and half white and encloses the sun (fig. 70). The Muslim circular serpent, enclosing the Ka'ba and constituting the world ocean, "glitters" in the sun and is half white and half black.[1307] But the same twofold serpent will be found from China to the Americas (figs. 71, 72, 73, 74 & 75).

The world egg of Hindu, Greek, and Chinese symbolism is bisected into black and white semicircles. Hindu sources depict the primeval womb as "two bowls" which together form a single circle, half white, half black.[1308] The face of the Mexican mother goddess is half black, half white, resembling the black and white Greek Erinyes or the bright and dark aspects of the Greek goddess Demeter-Persephone.[1309]

Similarly, two winged goddesses turn the wheel of Ixion, just as two goddesses operate the wheel of the Icelandic world mill or the wheel of the Hindu Skambha.[1310]

The Babylonian Shamash and Tammuz rest within the mouth of the "twin rivers,"[1311] while the Canaanite El stands "at the sources of the Two Rivers, in the midst of the pools of the Double-Deep."[1312]

[1305] Op. cit., 101.

[1306] Like the Egyptian Horus and Set the Babylonian gates of the right and left are "the twin fighters." Sayce, Lectures on the Origin and Growth of Religion, 492; Jastrow, The Religion of Babylonia and Assyria, 285.

[1307] Wensinck, "The Ideas of the Western Semites," 64.

[1308] Agrawala, The Thousand Syllabled Speech, 106.

[1309] Briffault, op. cit., Vol. III, 62, 163.

[1310] Cook, op. cit., 49.

[1311] Wensinck, "The Ideas of the Western Semites," 169.

[1312] Clifford, op. cit., 49. [Emphasis added.]

Aqua ☿ Phi:
Phi
Phi:
Phi
Corpus

Figure 71. Twofold circular dragon in alchemist manuscript.

Figure 72. (a) Egyptian;

Figure 72. (b) Sumerian, and

Figure 72. (c) Malayan illustrations of the primeval twins reveal a remarkably similar concept. Together the twins form an enclosure.

Figure 73. Buddhist Tri-Ratna.

Figure 74. Chinese twin dragons, and the quartered circle.

Figure 75. Twofold dragon from Honduras.

The band of the enclosed sun, whatever its mythical form, is consistently portrayed as a twofold circle, half black and half white. What defines the two divisions is the illuminated crescent , revolving about the band so as to alternately face "above and below" , or "left and right" , .

While ancient sources never question the dual character of the enclosure, the language of the two divisions is susceptible to considerable misunderstanding by anyone attempting to read it within the context of an assumed solar mythology or of local geography. (I examine these confusions in later sections on "Heaven and Earth" and "East and West.")

Symbolism Of The Crescent

The connection of the circumpolar enclosure with a crescent confirms that the images and pertained to the same celestial configuration as the images and . But just as the ancients interpreted the enclosure and cosmic mountain in different ways, should we not find that they expressed the crescent in varying forms also? In seeking to answer this question one must reckon with the most extraordinary aspects of the Saturnian imagery.

Of the crescent in the primary images and ancient sources present these basic forms:

—The horns of the bull-god (or cow-goddess).

—The great father's ship.

—The uplifted arms of the heaven-sustaining giant.

—The outstretched wings of the mother goddess (or winged god).

In the language of ancient ritual, "horns," "ships," "arms," and "wings" possess an underlying identity which defies all natural relationships between such concepts in the modern world. To reside within the wings of the mother goddess is to dwell upon the upraised arms of the Heaven Man. But these same wings, or arms, constitute the great god's sailing vessel—which in turn is depicted as two shining "horns." Let us examine the connection of these forms with the Saturnian configuration .

The Crescent Horn

In accord with the images and , the central sun appears as a horned god (the Bull of Heaven), while his spouse, the cow-goddess, encloses the sun-god within two horns.

Though extolled as the "sun," all figures of the great father possess the crescent "moon" as two horns, reigning over the first age as the generative Bull.

In Egypt, the "sun-gods" Re, Horus, Osiris, Amen, and Ptah all take the form of a horned god—the mighty "bull."[1313]

Osiris is the "son of Nut, lord of the two horns."[1314] The Litany of Re celebrates the god as the "supreme power, with attached head, with high horns."[1315] One of Re's epithets is simply "Shining Horn."[1316]

A chapter of the Book of the Dead begins: "I am the sharp-horned Bull, who regulateth the sky, the Lord of the risings in heaven, the great Giver of Light, who issueth from Flame."[1317]

"I am seated in front of the Great Ones like the horned Re," reads a Coffin Text.[1318] As the incarnation of the great god, the king acquires the title "Bull of Light."[1319]

[1313] Briffault, op. cit., 192.

[1314] Budge, Gods, Vol. I, 157; Budge, From Fetish to God in Ancient Egypt, 409.

[1315] Piankoff, The Litany of Re, 24.

[1316] Ibid., 13.

[1317] Renouf, op. cit., 107.

[1318] Faulkner, op. cit., 243.

It is the general consensus of Egyptologists that Re and his counterparts originated as solar gods. To what, then, do the sun-god's shining "horns" refer?

The characterization of the great god as a horned deity seems to be a general principle of ancient thought. A Babylonian hymn to Ramman (the "sun-god") begins: "O lord Ramman, thy name is the great god glorious bull, child of heaven . . . , lord of plenty."[1320] Anu, Ninurta, Enlil, and Enki all possess radiant horns. ". . . The sun, as the 'Bull of Light' [the very title of the Egyptian god-king], was accorded the supreme position in the Babylonian solar-god hierarchy," writes Conrad.[1321] But the horns of the Bull of Heaven are the crescent "moon":

Father Nannar, heavenly lord

. . . moon god . . . lord of Ur . . .

lord of the brilliant crescent . . .

O strong bull, great of horns.[1322]

Hindu sources depict Vishnu, Brahma, Shiva, Agni, and Indra as bulls with luminous horns. The Greek Dionysus (Latin Bacchus) is "the bull-horned god" said to have been born a "horned child." Adonis receives the same form. The Canaanite El is addressed as "Bull-god" while the Greek Kronos is "the horned god." If Yahweh was "the Bull of Israel," Helios was the "Adiounian bull."

From Africa to northern Europe to the Americas the archaic "sun"-god wears the horns of the crescent "moon."[1323]

In the myths of several lands the celestial bull appears in the guise of Heaven Man, his body providing the primeval matter of the Cosmos. A hymn of the Hindu Atharva Veda, titled "Extolling the Ox," identifies the various gods with the limbs of the cosmic bull: "Prajapati and the most exalted one are his two horns, Indra his head, Agni his forehead, Yama his neck-joint . . ." etc.[1324] The Persians knew this beast as the "Primal Bull" or "the Sole-Created Ox" dwelling in Eran Vej, the "central land"; his form was "white and brilliant as the moon." The world of the first man and first woman was created from his body.[1325]

There is only one sense in which the myth of the horned "sun" or great father will find meaningful interpretation. The horns belong to Saturn, the sun within the crescent-enclosure ☉. If the Babylonians knew Saturn as Anu, "the horned one," the Phoenicians called the planet-god Ba'al Qarnaim, "Lord of the Two Horns."[1326] The Greek Saturn-name Kronos, according to Robert Brown, possesses the radical sense "the Horned."[1327]

[1319] Hassan, Hymnes Religieux du Moyen Empire, 72.

[1320] Conrad, The Horn and the Sword, 102.

[1321] Ibid., 39.

[1322] Ibid., 38. [Emphasis added.]

[1323] Gelling, The Chariot of the Sun, 81-82; Bailey, The God-Kings and the Titans, 192.

[1324] Whitney, Atharva Veda, Vol. II, 547.

[1325] Campbell, Occidental Mythology, 204-5; Briffault, op. cit., Vol. III, 191.

[1326] Brown, Researches into the Origins of the Primitive Constellations, Vol. II, 183; Cook, op. cit., Vol. III, 554.

[1327] Op. cit., Vol. I, 3n.

Figure 76. Two Egyptian versions of the winged bull: (a) the Apis bull of Memphis;

Figure 76. (b) the Bacchis bull of Hermonthis.

Figure 77. The horns of the celestial ibex (Mesopotamia) enclose the sun-cross. From a vase discovered at Susa.

Figure 78. Bucranium design, Mesopotamia.

Figure 79. Fragment of painted vessel from Baluchistan, showing the “sun” between the borns of the bull.

Ancient Egyptian imagery is unvarying in connecting the horns with the Aten, the enclosure of the sun . In a Coffin Text the great god recalls the first occasion, “before the Aten had been fastened on the horns.”1328 Another source describes the “Aten which is between his horns.”1329 Pharaoh Thutmose I calls himself the god “Horus-Re, Mighty-Bull—the sun with sharp horns who comes out of the Aten.”1330 Can one seriously doubt that such hymns refer to the light god within the crescent-enclosure ?

Two popular forms of the Egyptian horned god were the Apis Bull, worshipped at Memphis, and the Mnevis Bull of Heliopolis. Illustrations of these bull-gods confirm the very relationship of the horns and enclosure described in the hymns: the circle of the Aten rests firmly upon the bull’s horns, offering the precise image . The Egyptian bull-god Bakha similarly wears the Aten between his two horns. The hieroglyphic symbol of the horned Aten is . (On the meaning of this imagery the specialists remain silent.) One of the hieroglyphic forms of the Aten has as its determinative the sign , signifying “the two-horned enclosure.” That the mystic horns embrace or encircle the central sun is a principle reaching far beyond Egypt. In the famous horned cap of Mesopotamian divinities, “the horns were imagined as encircling the head of a divinity rather than springing out of it,” writes Van Buren.1331 Sometimes the symbolic horns in Mesopotamia are not those of a bull but rather of an ibex, a heavenly beast whom the myths call the “Ibex of the Apsu [cosmic ocean].”1332 Vase paintings show the horns of the ibex encircling the sun-cross1333 (fig. 77). Elsewhere the “sun” appears between the horns of a bull (figs. 78, 79).

In Egyptian and Scandinavian rock drawings the “sun” rests between the horns of bovine figures, and the illustrations often emphasize the horns’ character as an enclosure by drawing them full circle (figs. 84, 87). Correspondingly, a poem of the East African Didinga extols the:

1328 Clark, Myth and Symbol in Ancient Egypt, 88.

1329 Piankoff, Tomb of Ramesses VI, 125.

1330 Piankoff, Shrines of Tut-Ankh-Amon, 6.

1331 “Concerning the Horned Cap of the Mesopotamian Gods,” 319. See Hans Henning Van Der Osten, op. cit., fig. 22, no. 114, 116, 128, 153, 168.

1332 Kramer, Sumerian Mythology, xii.

1333 Jeremias, op. cit., 99, fig. 70.

*White Cow of heaven, your horns have curved full circle and are joined as one.*1334

In the same vein the Hindu Atharva Veda recalls "The ruddy one, the sharp-horned bull, who encompassed Agni, the sun."1335 The Iranian Verethraghna, who bears the "glory" (halo) of Ahura Mazda, possesses "the shape of a wild beautiful ram, with horns bent round."1336

The horns which are "bent round" will be the crescent-enclosure, the dwelling of the central sun —which is to say, the horns are inseparable from the womb of the mother goddess. Hence the Egyptian sign , which neatly expresses the crescent's mythical aspect as two horns, denotes the goddess Hathor, the "House of Horus." Because Hathor is the goddess of the horned womb, there is no contradiction between the hymns locating Re "in the womb of thy mother Hathor" and the representations of the goddess as "sky-cow who bears the sun-god between her horns."1337

In the same way, Hathor is at once the Eye of Re and the horns supporting the Eye: "I am that eye of yours which is on the horns of Hathor," reads a *Pyramid Text.*1338 One of the names of the Egyptian goddess is simply "Horns, Lady of Purification."1339

Figure 80. The goddess Hathor, wearing the horned Aten.

Closely paralleling this title of Hathor is the name of the Mesopotamian goddess: "the Lady with the horned countenance."1340 The Sumerian goddess Inanna describes her own womb as "a horn,"1341 while the related Phoenician goddess Ashtoreth appears as "Queen of heaven with crescent horns" or "Ashtoreth of the double horn."1342 A horn, in the Hindu Satapatha Brahmana, means the womb of primeval genesis. ". . . The black deer's horn is the same as that womb," states the text. The priest "touches with it [the horn] his forehead close over the right eyebrow, with the text, 'Thou art Indra's womb'—for it is indeed Indra's womb, since in

---

1334 Conrad, The Horn and the Sword, 89.

1335 Whitney, op. cit., Vol. II, 714.

1336 Darmesteter, The Zend Avesta, Part II, 237.

1337 Bleeker, Hathor and Thoth, 48. [Emphasis added.]

1338 Pyramid Text 705.

1339 Piankoff, The Wandering of the Soul, 10.

1340 Lenormant, Chaldean Magic, 149.

1341 Kramer, The Sacred Marriage Rite, 59.

1342 Sayce, op. cit., 256.

entering it he enters thereby, and in being born he is born therefrom: therefore he says, ‘Thou art Indra’s womb.’”[1343]

It makes no difference whether the horns are those of a bull, cow, ram, antelope, deer, goat, or buffalo. The vital idea was of a horned enclosure, and ancient nations inheriting the tradition obviously adapted the celestial horn to animal forms most familiar to them.

The Horned Mountain

In the Pyramid Texts, the king returns to the womb of his birth, with the words: “I have joined my mother the Great Wild Cow. O my mother, the Wild Cow which is upon the Mountain . . .”[1344] “Homage to thee, Re, supreme power, Shining Horn, Pillar of Amentet,” reads the Litany of Re.[1345] The Bakha bull, which supports the Aten between its horns, is “the Bull of the two Mountains.”

That the horns of the bull or cow constitute the two peaks of the cosmic mountain can alone explain such imagery. The Bull of Heaven, in its original form, is nothing more than a horned pillar—as is made clear in a Pyramid Text addressing “the Pillar of the Stars . . . , the Pillar of Kenset, the Bull of Heaven.”[1346] This is the bull “whose horns shine, the (well) anointed pillar, the Bull of Heaven.”[1347]

In truth, all that distinguishes the horned Aten from the “Mount of Glory” hieroglyph is the mythical form in which the recumbent crescent found expression. Mythically, the crescent was viewed as both a split peak and two horns.

Indeed, one finds that the Egyptian priests had no doubts about the identity of the horns and the cleft summit, for the two symbols constantly overlap in Egyptian art. Sometimes the head of a bull is placed between the two peaks of the mountain symbol , with the Aten resting on the bull’s two horns (figs. 81, 82).

In an early period, the Egyptians represented the twin peaks by the image , locating the cleft summit atop the primeval “pedestal” . At other times, however, they showed a bull resting on the pedestal with the mountain sign displaced to the side (fig. 83). Clearly, the artists recognized the overlapping meanings of the two symbols.

Often, in fact, the mountain sign is drawn so as to appear more like horns than two hills (fig. 85b), and this image, as noted by Percy Newberry some time ago, is virtually identical to the Cretan “horns of consecration” discussed by Sir Arthur Evans in his now-famous work, “The Mycenaean Tree and Pillar Cult”[1348] (fig. 85a) Thus G.E. Smith observes the “identity of what Evans calls the ‘horns of consecration’ and the [Egyptian] ‘mountains of the horizon.’”[1349] (By “mountains of the horizon” Smith means, of course, the two-peaked Mount of Glory.)

[1343] Eggeling, Satapatha-Brahamna II, Part II, 33.

[1344] Pyramid Text 389.

[1345] Piankoff, Litany of Re, 26.

[1346] Pyramid Text 280, in Piankoff, The Pyramid of Unas.

[1347] Pyramid Text 282-83.

[1348] Newberry, “Two Cults of the Old Kingdom,” 24*ff.*

[1349] Op. cit., fig. 26.

Figure 81. Illustration of the Aten (circular serpent) from the Papyrus Of Her-Uben shows the overlapping interpretations of the Aten's crescent as a twin-peaked mountain, the horns of a cosmic bull, and twin loins (Aker).

Figure 82. To show the identity of the Aten's crescent-horns and the twin peaks, Egyptian artists placed the bull's head between the two peaks.

Perceiving the horns as the cleft summit of the pillar sustaining the Cosmos , one can understand the spell of the Coffin Texts, which reads: "I am the Bull, the Old One of Kenzet [Kenset, the horned pillar] . . . I support the sky with my horns."[1350]

[1350] Faulkner, op. cit., 148.

Figure 83. Prehistoric Egyptian symbols for the two-peaked mount.

Figure 84. By indicating the horns as a full circle, prehistoric Egyptian pictures of the cosmic bull (or twin bulls) emphasize the connection of the horns with the celestial enclosure.

Figure 85. (a) Cretan “horns of consecration”;

Figure 85. (b) Egyptian “cleft peak.”

Figure 86. Mesopotamian horned pillar.

The Sumero-Babylonians personified the heaven-sustaining peak Hursag as the mountain giant Enlil, also a horned pillar:

O great Enlil, im-hur-sag [Great Mountain] whose head rivals the heavens, whose foundation is laid in the pure abyss,
Whose horns gleam like the rays of the Sun-god.[1351]

Both Egyptian and Mesopotamian sources give the heaven-sustaining mountain shining horns! The name of the Babylonian antediluvian king Alaparos derives from alap, "bull" and ur, "foundation." He is the "Bull of the Foundation."[1352]

[1351] Langdon, Semitic Mythology, 99. [Emphasis added.]

[1352] Brown, op. cit., Vol. I, 56.

Figure 87. Variations of the cosmic bull in Scandinavian rock drawings. At root the bull is the pillar and crescent-enclosure.

Figure 88. Rock picture from Germany, identified by Herbert Kuhn as "stylized oxen."

Figure 89. American Indian horned enclosure, resting on erect serpent.

Thus the paradisal "earth" rested upon the crescent-horns. The Babylonians called the horned pillar the "Great Bull, the most great Bull, stamping at the holy gates . . . director of Abundance, who supports the god Nirba . . ."[1353] Lenormant comments: "This bull thus plays the role of a kind of Atlas, bearing the earth and its harvests upon his shoulders."[1354] But the primeval "earth," as we have seen, was simply Saturn's Cosmos.

Many Siberian legends speak of a primeval bull supporting the "world."[1355] Hebrew and Muslim traditions place a bull atop the serpent-dragon Leviathan (here a symbol of the heavens pillar). The bull supports the earth on its shoulders.[1356] The ram's horn of the Germanic Heimdal holds fast the rim of the world.[1357]

We consider again the Mesopotamian symbol of the quartered earth upon its pillar . What is astonishing about this symbol is that it exactly corresponds to the mythical image of the bull, or horned pillar, holding aloft the cosmic enclosure (with four streams of life) and supporting the sun-god between its horns. To my knowledge, however, no one has yet proposed any connection between this sign and the myths.

[1353] Lenormant, Les Origines, Vol. I, 116.

[1354] Ibid.

[1355] Uno Holmberg, Siberian Mythology, 331-2.

[1356] Wensinck, "The Ocean in the Literature of the Western Semites," 3.

[1357] Perry, Lord of the Four Quarters, 182.

As our earth turned on its axis, the crescent-horn must have visually appeared to revolve around the enclosure , , , . “The Great Bull of Osiris circles around!” proclaims a text from the *Shrines of Tut-Ankh-Amon.*1358 Two lines from the Book of the Dead suggest the same thing: “I am the steer . . . I go round the Sekhet-Aaru [the circular plain of abundance].”1359

Accordingly, the revolving horns mark out a twofold enclosure. One of the earliest symbols of the Two Lands is a double-headed cow, facing to the right and left.1360(fig. 90) The Pyramid Texts call this “the two bulls within the Ibis.”1361 The reference is more significant than one might recognize at first glance, for the ibis encompassing the two twins is the god Thoth—whose symbol is the crescent-enclosure —:

“I have come and I have installed this house of mine . . . The door which is on it is two opposing bulls,” reads a *Pyramid Text.*1362 Together the “opposing” horns of the left and right , distinguish the full circle of the “door.”

To anyone perceiving the role of the Egyptian “two Bulls” as two halves of the sun’s enclosure (the door or gate through which the sun comes forth), it is impossible to overlook the corresponding imagery of two bulls in Mesopotamia, guarding the gates of the palace or temple. These are the “two bulls of the gate of the temple of E-Shakil,” the “two bulls of the gate of Ea,” or the “two bulls of the gate of the goddess Damkina.”1363

Figure 90. The Egyptian twin-headed bull, symbol of the “Two Lands.”

1358 Piankoff, Shrines of Tut-Ankh-Amon, 84.

1359 Renouf, op. cit., 114-15.

1360 Mackenzie, The Migration of Symbols, 18.

1361 Pyramid Text 425.

1362 Pyramid Text 1266. Another text reads: “See among whom this King stands, the horns on his head being those of two wild bulls, for you are a black ram, the son of a black ewe, whom a white ewe bore.” Pyramid Text 252. In this hymn one discerns the two primary forms of the cosmic twins. The twins, as the two “wild” or fighting bulls, are simply aspects of a singular horned god, whose horns alternately face opposing directions. But the twins also have to do with a circle half light and half shadow, and this bisected enclosure is the womb of the great gods birth. Hence he is “the son of a black ewe, whom a white ewe bore.”

1363 Lenormant, Les Origines, Vol. I, 114. In the symbolism of the Hindu Rig Veda it is the universal Bull and Cow who together compose the primeval womb. They “are like two inverted bowls uniting to form a common womb,” writes Agrawala. Thousand Syllabled Speech, 106.

Figure 91. Mesopotamian design conveying the image of the primeval enclosure and revolving horns.

As to the primary meanings of the horned god or goddess ancient sources do not equivocate: mythically, the horns signify the revolving crescent reaching around the primeval enclosure and seeming to "support" or "embrace" the sun-god. The horns compose the two peaks of the cosmic mountain. And in their opposing positions around the central sun, they are identified as the cosmic twins, the "opponent gods."

X: The Crescent-Ship (Part 2)

All ancient sun gods sail in a celestial ship. In the oldest ritual the ship appears as a crescent revolving around the circle of the great god's dwelling, while the god himself remains stationary. The ship's "mooring post" (and, by extension, its "mast") is the cosmic mountain.

One of Saturn's most extraordinary possessions is the ark of heaven. Saturn is "literally represented as sailing over the ocean in a ship," remarks Faber.[1364] Ovid tells us that because the planet-god traversed the entire sphere of the "earth" in his primordial voyage, his special token was a ship, and this is the ship which appears on the reverse of coins stamped with the double face of Janus.[1365] The latter god, as Saturn's alter ego, was the "inventor" of barks and ships.[1366]

All of the Saturnian gods of the Sumero-Babylonian pantheon sail in a celestial ship, one of whose names is Magula-anna, "Great boat of Heaven." The "beloved ship" of Ningirsu is "the one that rises up out of the dam of the deep."[1367] Ea rides "the ship of the antelope of the Apsu,"[1368] while Ninurta sails in the ship Magur.

The Chinese Huang-ti—the planet Saturn—was the first to sail in a ship. In his journey across the ocean, Hercules rode in a "golden goblet"—the ship of Helios (Saturn)—to which one naturally compares the "new-moon" boat of Dionysus. A ship of "self-made light" transports the Avestan great god Yima (Saturn).

The Phoenician great father Chrysor "was the first man who fared in ships,"[1369] but it was also said that the twin god Ousoos "was the first who launched a boat."[1370] The Japanese creator god Sukuna-Biko-Na rides "on the crest of the waves in a heavenly Kagami boat."[1371] "A golden ship of golden tackle moved about in the sky," reads the Hindu Atharva Veda.[1372]

Natives of the Marquesas say that in the beginning there was only the sea on which the creator Tiki floated in a canoe.[1373] The Hawaiian god Tanaroa sailed above in a "flying canoe,"[1374] much like the great shaman of the Yenisei Ostiaks, who "rows his boat in heaven." The legendary Hiawatha navigated "a white canoe which moved without human aid."[1375]

[1364] Op. cit., Vol. II, 495.

[1365] Cited in ibid.

[1366] Ibid.

[1367] Jastrow, Religion of Babylonia and Assyria, 654.

[1368] Langdon, op. cit., 106.

[1369] Brown, Eradinus: River and Constellation, 12.

[1370] Brown, Researches, Vol I, 39.

[1371] Philippi, The Kojiki, 115.

[1372] Whitney, op. cit., Vol. I, 227.

[1373] Dixon, Oceanic Mythology, 20.

[1374] Melville, Children of the Rainbow, 37.

That the original form of the sun-god's ship was a crescent is a fact disputed by no one. The crescent form prevails in Egypt, Mesopotamia, Persia, India, Greece, Scandinavia, and even in the Americas, leading to the popular belief that the mythical sun voyages in the "ship of the new moon."

This opinion is due to one fact alone: the new moon is the only crescent familiar to the modern age. Yet so routine is the identification of the crescent-ship with our moon that mythologists give almost no attention to specific imagery suggesting a radically different interpretation.

Having observed the "unorthodox" role of the crescent-horn, it is appropriate to note first that ancient symbolism always equates the great god's ship with the bull or cow of heaven. Prehistoric drawings from Egypt continually relate the ship to a horned creature and later Egyptian art continued the theme.[1376]

Figure 92. The Mesopotamian great gods sail in the horned ship.

The same connection occurs in many Scandinavian rock drawings. A rock picture from the Nubian desert south of Kerma shows the ship so placed on the back of a bull that the boat and the galloping animal are one.[1377]

The Sumero-Babylonian Nannar or Sin, esteemed as the bull with glistening horns, is also "the shining bark of the heavens."[1378] "May you ferry over by means of the Great Bull," reads an Egyptian Pyramid Text.[1379] Another declares: "the Bull of the sky has bent down his horn that he may pass over thereby . . . ,"[1380] while a Coffin Text celebrates the "long-horn which supports the bark of Anubis."[1381]

Many years ago G.S. Faber, examining ancient symbolism of the ship, wrote: "A heifer seems to have been adopted as perhaps the most usual emblem of the Ark . . . That the heifer was an emblem of the Ark appears from a very curious passage in The Etymological Magnum, the author of which informs us, that Theba, in the Syrian dialect, signified 'a heifer' . . . The import, however, of Theba, in the Hebrew language, is 'an ark'; and the only reason why a heifer was designated by the same appellation, was the circumstance of its being used as an arkite emblem.”[1382]

[1375] Alexander, North American Mythology, 52.

[1376] Winkler, Rock Drawings of Southern Egypt, no. 17, 22, and inset, pl. xxxiii; Piankoff, Tomb of Ramesses VI, 153.

[1377] Campbell, Oriental Mythology, 69-70.

[1378] Jeremias, op. cit., 243.

[1379] Pyramid Text 792.

[1380] Pyramid Text 1433.

[1381] Faulkner, op. cit., 279. [Emphasis added.]

If the crescent-horn is that which embraces the enclosed sun and visually revolves around the band each day, the ship of heaven must be the same crescent.

Direct confirmation comes from ancient Egypt. Though the Egyptian ship (as depicted in the reliefs) always possesses the crescent form, it revolves in a circle: “. . . the ark of heaven was the revolving sphere configurated as a sailing vessel . . . the ark is portrayed in the act of sailing over a vast unfathomable hollow void,” writes Massey.[1383]

Perhaps the most common Egyptian word for “to sail” is seqet, from the root qet, “a circle” (written with the determinative). Literally, seqet means “to go in a circle” (compare seqeti, “encircled”). Hence one text declares that “the barge circles in the sky,”[1384] while another extols “the circlings of the henhenu-bark”[1385] (henhenu is a name of the circular ocean above).

But what was the nature of the ship’s circular pathway? The ship sails around the sun-god’s enclosure: “I stand up in thy enclosure, O Maa; I sail round about.”[1386] Chapter CXXXVI of the Book of the Dead is thus entitled “The Chapter of Sailing in the Great Boat of Re to Pass over the Circle of Bright Flame.”[1387] Moreover, this connection of the crescent-boat with an enclosure will be found also in Mesopotamia. Though the crescent of Sin was the ma-gur boat possessed by Ninurta (Saturn), the sign for gur means “circular enclosure.”[1388]

Is there any direct statement that the enclosure depicted in the sign is the ship’s pathway? The Egyptians called the band Aten or khu (“glory,” “halo”): “Hail to you who sails in his Khu, who navigates a circle within his Aten,” reads the Book of the Dead.[1389]

Clearly, the subject is the crescent-enclosure. In the Pyramid Texts, King Unas announces, “I revolve round heaven like Re, I sail round heaven like Thoth.” While Re’s image is the Aten , the common symbol of Thoth is the crescent-enclosure . Allowing the one image to explain the other, we see that Unas does not here engage in two separate acts, but in a single act depicted in two different ways: to revolve within the Aten is to sail in the crescent-ship of Thoth.[1390]

The circle of the Aten is the “brow” of Re, and it is on Re’s brow that the texts locate the ship: “I fly up and perch myself upon the forehead of Re, in the bows of his boat which is in heaven,” states the Book of the Dead.[1391]

[1382] A Dissertation on the Cabiri, Vol I, 177-78.

[1383] Op. cit., 576.

[1384] Piankoff, Mythological Papyri, citing a text from the Shrines of Tut-Ankh-Amon. [Emphasis added.]

[1385] Faulkner, op. cit., 149. [Emphasis added.]

[1386] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 488.

[1387] Ibid., 411.

[1388] Vanderburgh, Sumerian Hymns from Cuneiform Texts in the British Museum, 44.

[1389] Cf. Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 83.

[1390] Pyramid Text.

[1391] Budge, Gods, Vol. I, 443, citing the Book of the Dead, Chapter LXVI.

“Thou sailest on high in the Evening Barge, thou joinest the followers of the Aten,”1392 To appreciate this line from the Shrines of Tut-Ankh-Amon one must recognize that the “followers” themselves compose the enclosure of the Aten; the great god in the ship resides within the circle of lesser gods. It is the same thing to say that the secondary gods, by forming the enclosure, stand on the “pathway” of the ship, as stated in the Coffin Texts: “Every god who is on the border of your enclosure is on the path of your boat.”1393 Could one ask for a more explicit statement equating the enclosure and the revolving ship?

Figure 93. The “sun”-wheel resting in the cosmic ship, as depicted in Scandinavian rock drawings.

It is clear from the Egyptian sources that the ship and the secondary gods (the ship’s crew), in revolving around the Aten, circumscribe the great god, who resides in the centre of the circle:

> I cause Truth [maat] to circle about at the > head of the great barge which carries the > Justified One in the council . . .
> *The crew of Re circles about.*1394
> The dwellers in the Sektet Boat go > *round about thee . . .*1395

This, then, is the only sense in which the central sun “moves”: he sails around the enclosure , , , , while yet remaining em hetep, “at rest” or “in one place.” The ship is thus “the Boat of Rest [Hetep].”1396

> *O God Re, grant thou that the Osiris Nu may travel on in thy boat em hetep.*1397

1392 Piankoff, Shrines of Tut-Ankh-Amon, 72.

1393 Lacau, op. cit., 33.

1394 Piankoff, Wandering of the Soul, 27.

1395 Budge, From Fetish to God, 401.

1396 Piankoff, The Tomb of Ramesses VI, 250.

1397 Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 410.

Let me embark in thy boat, O Re, em hetep.[1398]

Thy resting place is the barge of Khepri.[1399]

Agreeing with this view of the ship and pathway are the many hymns and liturgies which describe the boat of heaven navigating the circular ocean. (As earlier observed, this revolving river was the circle of the Aten ☉.)

I have made my way and gone round the heavenly ocean on the path of the bark of Re.[1400]

Lo, I sail the great Bark on the Stream of the god Hetep.[1401]

Other hymns similarly depict the ship going around the "Lake of the Tuat," "the Pool of Maat," or "the Pool of Fire."[1402]

This cosmic ocean, lake, or river means the circular womb (or body) of the mother goddess. Hence, the goddess Nut, the enclosure around the sun-god Re, takes the form of the circumambient sea, and numerous reliefs show the sun-god's boat sailing over the body of the goddess. "I am a Sahu, who assigneth the bounds as he saileth round the starry throng of Heaven, the body of my mother Nut," states the Book of the Dead.[1403]

But it is not sufficient to identify the mother goddess as the pathway of the crescent-ship, for the crescent and enclosure are one: the ship is the goddess. Though Nut is the "pathway," the deceased king beseeches the goddess:

"Row me, O mother of mine; tow me, O abode of mine."[1404]

"O Boat of the sky . . . O Boat of Nut."[1405]

Similarly, the "ship of Hathor," as stated by Bleeker, was "the expression of her being. When the boat was carried in procession, it was the dramatization of the deity's hierophany."[1406] One of the names of the Hathor-ship is "mistress of love"; it is called "the boat which exalts her beauty."[1407] A ship was also the symbol of the goddess Isis.[1408] The dweller in the primeval womb is the captain of the ship.

A survey of ship symbolism in other lands will reveal the same identity. The womb of the Sumerian Inanna is "a ship."[1409] "The ship of the brilliant off-spring" was an epithet of the Babylonian goddess Bau.[1410] In

---

[1398] Ibid., 398.

[1399] Piankoff, The Tomb of Ramesses VI, 239.

[1400] Renouf, op. cit., 86.

[1401] Ibid., 193.

[1402] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 97, 135, 515, etc.

[1403] Renouf, op. cit., 131.

[1404] Pyramid Text 303.

[1405] Budge, Osiris: the Egyptian Religion of Resurrection, Vol. I, 118.

[1406] Op. cit., 61.

[1407] Ibid., 60, 89.

[1408] Faber, Origins, Vol. III, 24-27.

[1409] Kramer, The Sacred Marriage Rite, 59, 64.

[1410] Jastrow, Religion of Babylonia and Assyria, 655.

Hindu myth the goddesses Ila, Isi, Lacshmi, and Parvati are synonymous with the ship Argha,[1411] transporting the great father (Manu, Shiva, Brahma) over the waters. Bergelmir—the Norse mythical giant—"was born in a boat"[1412] (i.e., boat=womb). The Latin goddess Minerva "was surnamed Ergane, from Ereg or Erech, the 'ark'; under which title she was venerated both in Laconia, and in Boeotia," Faber tells us.[1413] The Celtic Goddess Ceridwen takes the form of a ship,[1414] and the ship was the symbol of the old Latin goddess Ceres (Demeter), the Phrygian goddess Cybele, and the Phoenician goddess Ashtoreth.[1415]

The ship, in other words, is part and parcel of the circumpolar enclosure. And the identity finds confirmation in all mythical formulations of the enclosure:

The World-Ship

The Egyptian ship is "the Barge of Earth." "O gods who carry the Barge of Earth, who support the barge of the Tuat," proclaims the Book of Gates.[1416]

While the name of the Hindu goddess Ida (or (Ila) means "the world," she is depicted as a floating ship; Stonehenge, the famous Druidic monument, was called at once "the circle of the World," "the enclosure of the ship-goddess Ceridwen," and the "Ark of the World."[1417]

The ship-goddess is none other than the mother earth in heaven.

The Island-Ship

Ancient history is filled with legends of floating, paradisal islands, of which the Greek Delos and Hindu "island of the Moon" are noteworthy examples. The Italian floating isle of Cotyle; the Egyptian floating island of Chemnis, described by Herodotus; and the Celtic floating island of Snowdon suggest a common theme.[1418]

The tradition of the island-ship receives remarkable expression in the Roman island of Tiber, which, as a monument to Asclepius, was fashioned with a breastwork of marble into the form of a ship, its upper part imitating the stern and its lower part the bow.[1419] Fig. 94, taken from Carl Kerenyi's Asklepios, shows the ancient form of Tiber Island as reconstructed by a sixteenth-century draftsman.[1420] Symbolized is the island of the blessed resting within the vast crescent of the cosmic ship.

[1411] Faber, Origins, Vol. I, 330, 385; Vol. III, 43, 63.

[1412] MacCulloch, Eddic Mythology, 275.

[1413] A Dissertation, Vol. I, 106.

[1414] Faber, Origins, Vol. I, 330, 363, 384.

[1415] Ibid., Vol. III, 28-33.

[1416] Piankoff, The Tomb of Ramesses VI, 153.

[1417] Faber, Origins, Vol. I, 330; Vol. III, 30, 230. So also does the world navel appear in the form of a ship. Cook, op. cit., Vol. I, 355*ff.*; [1418] Faber, Origins, Vol. III, 222-27, 40-41, 89*ff.*

[1419] Ibid., Vol. II, 263.

[1420] Kerenyi, Asklepios, 5, fig. 3.

Figure 94. The city-ship of Tiber island, as reconstructed by a draftsman in the sixteenth century.

The City-Ship

The Egyptians commemorated the ship's daily revolution by fashioning an image of the great god's barge, placing it on a sledge-shaped stand, and *dragging it around the walls of the city*1421—for the city wall denoted the primeval rampart, the path of the ship. "This Great God travels in this city, on the water," states one text.1422 Thus, the Mesopotamian Surripak is "the city of the Ship," corresponding to Homer's Mycenae, the "ark-city." The Greek cities of Thebes, Argos, and Berytus are connected by Faber with the ancient "ship" names theba, argha, and baris or *barit.*1423

The Temple-Ship

Just as the Egyptians conveyed the sacred ship around the wall of the city so did they also pull it around the wall of the temple, in imitation of the cosmic ship which coursed daily around the great god's dwelling. Egyptian illustrations depict the shrine as an inseparable part of the boat. And the texts confirm this connection: "The Sektet boat receiveth fair winds, and the heart of him who is in the shrine thereof rejoiceth."1424

A Sumerian hymn to the Kes temple equates the dwelling with "the princely Magur-boat, floating in the sky."1425

Good temple, built on a good place,

Kes temple, built on a good place,

Like [or as] the princely Magur-boat, floating in the sky.

Like the pure Magur-boat . . .

Like the boat of heaven, foundation of all the lands,

Cabin of the banda-boat which shines from the beaches,

*Temple, roaring like an ox, bellowing like a breed bull.*1426

The Greeks designated a temple and a ship by the same word, naus or naos. Our word nave (from the Latin navis) possesses the dual significance of a temple and a ship.1427

The Wheel-Ship

1421 Piankoff, Shrines of Tut-Ankh-Amon, 66.

1422 Piankoff, The Tomb of Ramesses VI, 273.

1423 A Dissertation, Vol. I, 177-78.

1424 Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 13. [Emphasis added.]

1425 Gragg, The Kes Temple Hymn, 168.

1426 Ibid.

1427 Faber gives several examples of ship-temples from India, Italy, and Ireland. Origins, Vol. II, 288-89.

One of the most unnatural aspects of the great god's "chariot" (wheel) is that it functions also as a ship. In commemoration of the god's remarkable vehicle, the ancients often placed the sacred ship on wheels, drawing it on dry land. Scandinavian rock carvings depict the "wheel of the sun" resting in a cosmic boat (fig. 93), and from Assyria to Britain to Polynesia images of cosmic ships either contain wheels or are set on wheels. The vehicle of the Chinese Huang-ti was both a ship and a chariot.[1428] Similarly, the Sumerian magur-boat receives the appellation "chariot." Cosmic ship and world wheel are one.

Figure 95. Egg of Lunus.

Figure 96. Atum, seated within the Aten, sails in the ship of the Eye.

The Egg-Ship

"The god Lunus of Heliopolis and Carrhae," writes Faber, "was an egg, on the top of which rested a crescent formed like a boat."[1429] (fig. 95) But the god whom classical writers translated as Lunus was the Egyptian Aah, or Thoth, whose hieroglyph was the crescent-enclosure , and one can reasonably assume that, in accord with this symbol, the egg originally stood within, or upon, the crescent boat. Thus the Hindus knew the ship Argha as the lower half of a primeval egg which floated on the waters of Chaos.[1430]

The Eye-Ship

An Egyptian Coffin Text speaks of "the barge, the Eye of thy father."[1431] Elsewhere one finds, "I am the Great One in the midst of his Eye, sitting and kneeling in the great barge of Khepri [the Turning One]."[1432] "O you who are in the Eye of the Bark of the God."[1433] In precise accord with such language the symbolic Eye was regularly inscribed upon ships of Egypt (fig. 96). Interestingly, the same symbol appears on the Greek Argo. A [1428] O'Neill, Night of the Gods, 585; see references in Nibley, "Tenting, Toll, and Taxing," 602, note 19.

[1429] Origins, Vol. I, 195; see plate I, fig. 11, 22.

[1430] Ibid., 192; Guenon, Le Roi du Monde, 92, note 4.

[1431] Piankoff, Wandering of the Soul, 14.

[1432] Ibid., 28.

[1433] Pyramid Text 124.

Phoenician terra-cotta model of a galley from Amathus reveals the central Eye upon its prow.[1434] The Eye occurs also on Chinese boats.[1435]

The Vase-Ship

Reflecting the identity of the ship and receptacle is the English word vessel, meaning both "container" and "ship." The German Schiff means, at once, "ship" and "water container," and the roots of the German Kanne, "pot," and Kahn, "boat," are identical.[1436]

In Egyptian symbolism, Piankoff tells us, "The jar is the cradle and at the same time a vessel for crossing the celestial waters."[1437] The receptacles in which Hindu priests offered fruits and flowers to the gods were called arghas. But the Argha was the ship on the cosmic sea.[1438]

The Shield-Ship

Norse mythology knows the "shield-god" Ull, the son of Thor's wife Sif by an unknown father. "The shield, according to the skalds, was 'the ship of Ull,' that on which he traveled—a reference to a lost mythology . . ." writes MacCulloch.[1439] Similarly, King Arthur's magic shield Prydwen served as the hero's ship.[1440]

The Throne-Ship

In the Pyramid Texts the king ascends to the "throne which is in your bark, O Re."[1441] And the Book of the Dead locates the throne in the same ship: "I shall advance to my throne which is in the boat of Re. I shall not be molested, and I shall not suffer shipwreck from my throne which is in the boat of Re, the mighty one."[1442]

The Serpent (Dragon)-Ship

G.E. Smith writes: "The custom of employing the name 'dragon' in reference to a boat is found in places as far apart as Scandinavia and China . . . In India the Makara, the prototype of the dragon, was sometimes represented as a boat which was looked upon as a fish-avatar of Vishnu, Buddha or some other deity."[1443]

Numerous Egyptian sources identify the ship with the cosmic serpent—who is also the "pathway" traversed by the boat. The Book of the Dead, for example, describes the ship sailing over the "back" of the serpent-dragon Apepi.[1444] A dragon-like creature often serves as a ship in Mesopotamian cylinder seals, just as the serpentine Chronos forms the path of the ship of Helios

One could, of course, endlessly expand the list of such connections between the enclosure and the ship. One might even say that the ship has no independent existence apart from the enclosure.

[1434] O'Neill, op. cit., 820.

[1435] Ibid.

[1436] Neumann, op. cit., 256.

[1437] Piankoff, Litany of Re, 64; Pyramid Texts 437, 1185.

[1438] Asiatic Researches, Vol. III, 134.

[1439] MacCulloch, Eddic Mythology, 157.

[1440] Faber, Origins, Vol. III, 91-92, 177.

[1441] Pyramid Text 336.

[1442] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 230.

[1443] Op. cit., 117, note 1.

[1444] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 297.

Nor can one ignore the widespread connection of the great god's ship with the cosmic mountain. In accord with the archaic forms and , the ship rests on the mountaintop, providing the Mount with its cleft summit. From Egypt to Mesopotamia to Scandinavia one finds the images of the ship brought into connection with the pillared crescent . Fig. 101f, from southwest Norway can be compared to a prehistoric drawing from Egypt (fig. 102f). In the latter instance the pillared crescent is shown twice, while one end of the ship terminates in a crescent-enclosure .

For a more formal version of the ship and Mount I offer details from two illustration in the Book of the Dead (fig. 97). In both drawings the ship, in the form of a double serpent, rests upon the Primeval Hill. While one shows the throne within the ship, the other shows the steps of the Primeval Hill: "I have reached the high portals of the Entourage of Re, who reckon up the pillared bark," announces the king in a *Coffin Text.*1445

The subject is a revolving ship, traversing a circle around the summit of the cosmic mountain, , , , . That is, the Mount serves as the axis of the ship's revolution: "I assume my pure seat which is in the bow of the Bark of Re. It is the sailors who row Re, and it is the sailors who convey Re round about the Mount of Glory, and it is they who will convey me round about the Mount of Glory."1446 "Hail, Only One! behold thou art in the Sektet boat as it goeth round about the Mount of Glory."1447

When the texts describe the god "sailing over the supports of Shu,"1448 or engaged in his "voyage over the Leg of Ptah,"1449 they do not depart from the integrated symbolism of the world pillar, for the supports of Shu ( ) and the leg of Ptah refer to one and the same cosmic column.

It is surely significant that in both Egypt and Mesopotamia the cosmic pillar appears as the "mooring post" of the great god's ship. What the Sumerians called dimgal (Babylonian tarkullu) and the Egyptians mena or menat may be translated either as the "Binding Post" or "Mooring Post." The Egyptian image of the menat is , depicting the enclosed sun-cross atop the cosmic pillar; but menat is a common term for the post to which the ship of heaven is tied or moored, and the verb mena means "to tie the boat to the post."

One can also understand the axis-pillar as the ship's mast. We earlier noted that the great father, considered as an extension of the Mount, becomes the central (third) peak rising between the two peaks of the right and left. When one views the crescent (two peaks) as the ship of heaven the equivalence of the Mount and the ship's "mast" becomes self-evident. The general tradition is observed by Faber: "A vast centrical mountain formed the mast or boss of the mundane boat: and the great father, rising out of the sacred umbilicus of the arkite

---

1445 Faulkner, op. cit., 186. [Emphasis added.] The close connection of the ship and the Mount of Glory is apparent in another hymn from the same texts: "The Great Ones who are in the Mount of Glory appear, the Followers of the Lords of all rejoice, the crews and servants of the bark are glad, and those who are in the Mount of Glory are happy when they see you in this dignity of yours." Ibid., 39.

1446 Pyramid Text 710-11.

1447 Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 478.

1448 Faulkner, op. cit., 261.

1449 Renouf, op. cit., 166. A widespread association of the ship and the axis-pillar is noted by Cirlot: " . . . Many primitive peoples place ships on the end of a pole or on the roof of a house . . . all these forms, then, represent the axis valley-mountain, or the symbolism of verticality and the idea of height. An obvious association here is with all the symbols of the world-axis." A Dictionary of Symbols, 295.

world, supplied to it the place of a mast. That mountain was the hill of paradise."[1450] The Hindu symbol of the ship on the mountaintop, according to Faber, is the trident of Shiva, composed of a rod or staff surmounted by a "lunette" with a spike rising in its centre. The trident, he states, denotes "the ship Argha under its sidereal form of a crescent with Shiva standing in the midst of it and supplying the place of a mast."[1451]

This identity of the ship's mast and the axis-pillar is also noted by Coomaraswamy, who relates an introductory verse of the Dasakumaccrita, listing "the mast of the ship of the earth" as an aspect of "the axis of the universe." In the construction of Hindu stupas the universe axis was represented by a central finial often extending upward to an impressive height. The column bore the title "sky-scraping" yasti, or "mast."[1452]

It is noteworthy also that the Sumerian dimgal, the "mooring post" or "binding post," often receives the translation "ship's mast."[1453] In our world a mast and a mooring post are wholly distinct, but in the symbolism of the cosmic ship and mountain they are strictly synonymous, as we should expect.

By understanding the ship's mast as an extension of the cosmic mountain one perceives a deeper meaning in the steps which rise in the centre of the Egyptian boat illustrated below (fig. 97). The steps, as the most common Egyptian symbol of the Primeval Hill, here replace the ship's mast. And it is no accident, for while the Egyptian khet means "steps" (Primeval Hill), khet also means "ship's mast" (Primeval Hill=steps=mast=Primeval Hill). The symbolism becomes all the more fascinating when one discovers that the Hindus identified the steps or pyramid as both the polar Mount Meru and the mast of the ship Argha.

Figure 97. Two Egyptian versions of the cosmic ship and Primeval Hill.

Such integrated symbolism underlines the fundamental relation of the crescent-ship to the cosmic mountain. Faber thus concludes: "Here we may perceive the reason why the pagans deemed those mountains peculiarly sacred, which branched out at their summits into either two or three smaller peaks or tumuli. They considered them, in the one case, as naturally shadowing out the holy hill with the navicular Moon resting on its top, and in the other case, as still being a physical copy of the same holy hill surmounted by the Moon, but the Moon now rendered complete by the addition of the centrical mast or pilot . . . "1454

[1450] Origins, Vol. II, 20.

[1451] Ibid., 382.

[1452] Coomaraswamy, "Symbolism of the Dome," 18. The mast of the cosmic ship of Life coincides "with the vertical axis of the house and the axle-tree of the chariot," writes Coomaraswamy. Ibid., 11.

[1453] Sjöberg and Bergmann, The Collection of the Sumerian Temple Hymns, 21, 67, 151.

It follows from this line of evidence that the Egyptian mountain signs and —offering a natural representation of the two- or three-peaked summit—must have possessed the same import as the ship of heaven; both the ship and the cleft summit had their reference in the crescent, visually united to the celestial column so as to form the image . The ship on the mountaintop merges with the two peaks of the right and left. Consistent with this overlapping imagery are those prehistoric Egyptian vase paintings depicting the cosmic ship bearing the mountain sign .1455

It is, of course, the universal opinion of Egyptologists that the mountain glyph represents two geographical peaks real or imaginary, from which the solar orb rises each morning.

But if the analysis set forth here is correct, the twin peaks of the Mount, being synonymous with the ship of heaven, must have revolved daily around the sun-god's enclosure—in flagrant contradiction of natural geography!

Figure 98. The twin-peaked Khut , depicted as an inseparable part of the cosmic ship.

Could the Egyptians have believed that the cleft summit sailed with, or as, the cosmic ship? Actually, it was not uncommon for the Egyptian artists to place the Khut (Mount of Glory) within the revolving ship, proclaiming the essential identity of the two images (fig. 98). Of this identity Clark provides two examples. In each case the Aten rests between the peaks of the right and left, which in turn sit squarely in the cosmic ship.

Responding to the first instance, Clark calls the cleft hill the "eastern horizon," adding that "this hill is incongruously placed in the solar boat."1456 In the second illustration the Aten "rests on the twin-peaked mountain of sunrise. Against all verisimilitude this figure, mountain and all, is being conveyed across the waters of the heavenly ocean in a boat."1457 As bizarre as this sailing mountaintop may appear to conventional mythologists, it is, to us, one of several independent proofs that the mountain sign means simply the revolving Saturnian crescent, here rendered naturalistically in its mythical form as two peaks. When the texts say that the god "sails round about in the Khut ," they mean literally that he sails within the cleft peak as in a ship. Of course, to reckon with these concepts one must abandon once and for all the standard translation of Khut as "horizon." The twin peaks are anything but a fixture of the local landscape. (Though the most common position of the mountain image is upright, some illustrations depict it in an inverted position ,

---

1454 Origins, Vol. III, 205.

1455 Newberry, "The Petty-Kingdom of the Harpoon and Egypt's Earliest Mediterranean Port," 18n.

1456 Op. cit., 252. [Emphasis added.]

1457 Ibid., 251. [Emphasis added.]

again contradicting geography.) Moreover, the distinction between the upright and inverted positions of the revolving twin peaks is crucial to the symbolism of the archaic "day" and "night," as I shall show.

Equally important is the relation of the ship to the cosmic twins. The image tells us that the ship itself divides the enclosure into two portions of light and shadow. Accordingly, though the Egyptian word At denotes the boat of heaven, the same word means "to divide, bisect." The language conforms precisely to the cosmology of the crescent-enclosure, half dark, half light.

But the Egyptians also identified the ship with the twins Isis-Nephthys, the "two eyes" (the left and right positions of the revolving crescent).[1458] "Thy right eye is in the Sektet boat, and thy left eye is in the Atet boat," declares the Book of the Dead.[1459] In the ritual for the deceased, a chapter of the Book of the Dead is to be "said over a Bark of Re coloured in pure green. And thou shall place a picture of the deceased at the prow thereof. And make a Sektet boat on the right side of it and an Atet boat on the left side of it."[1460] Together, the boats of the left and right compose the protective enclosure or bond, represented by the shen sign .

In its every feature, then, the great god's ship conforms to the revolving Saturnian crescent—enclosing the central sun, resting upon the cosmic mountain, and dividing the circumpolar enclosure into divisions of light and shadow.

The Crescent-Arms

To terrestrial observers gazing up the axis-pillar, the Saturnian crescent appeared as two outstretched arms reaching around and holding aloft the crescent-enclosure .

No one considering the image of the sun-in-crescent resting atop the cosmic pillar will have any difficulty understanding why the crescent came to be viewed as the outstretched arms of the great mother, or of the heaven-sustaining god.

Of course, it is only in combination with the central sun and pillar that the crescent could acquire this significance. Nothing in our crescent moon, for example, could possibly suggest the upraised arms of a human-like figure. In ancient art, however, the crescent is often located behind the shoulders of a divinity (as suggested by the form) and in certain cases replaces the arms. (In fig. 99 I offer several examples from the Americas.)

In fig. 100 the Hindu twins Jagan-Nath and Bal-Rama, bearing the respective black and white countenances of Shiva and Vishnu (with whom they are identified), stand to the right and left of the goddess Subhadra, a form of Devi. The "body" of each of the three deities appears to be composed of two eggs ([twofold] egg="body"); upon the bodies of Jagan-Nath and Bal-Rama rests a crescent-like form and in each crescent appears the head of the deity. Commenting on this image, Faber writes: "The crescent itself exhibits the rude semblance of arms, as the twofold egg does that of a body: but a sort of standard attached to the frame on which the three divinities are seated, sufficiently shows that the apparent arms are really a lunette, for the standard displays in a black background the mystic crescent with a circular ball within it representing the head of the deity."[1461]

[1458] Pyramid Texts 1981-82.

[1459] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 507.

[1460] Renouf, op. cit., 259.

[1461] Origins, Vol II; see plate I, fig. 16. [Emphasis added.]

Figure 99. (a) Columbian pictograph;

Figure 99. (b) Columbian pictograph;

Figure 99. (c) Bolivian pictograph;

Figure 99. (d) Brazilian pictograph;

Figure 99. (e) Arapahp sign for "person";

Figure 99. (f) North American goddess.

Figure 100. Hindu twins, Jagan-Nath and Bal-Rama, with semicircular arms, stand to the right and left of the goddess Subhadra.

A more pure form of the crescent- or horned-arms occurs in Scandinavian rock drawings, repeatedly exhibiting the image along with numerous variations which present the semi-circular shape alternately as horns or as outstretched arms of more human-like forms (fig. 101). This mixture of images, in fact, leaves the archaeologists undecided as to whether, in the simple form , it is arms, or horns, that are horn-like arms, or arms extended upward to form a crescent. In other instances, the human figure does not stand in the boat, but holds the boat aloft on upraised arms (figs. 101a, 101b). Moreover, in some cases the ship rests on the human shoulders in such a way as to replace the arms (figs. 101c, 101d).

Figure 101. (a)

Figure 101. (b)

Figure 101. (c)

Figure 101. (d) In numerous Scandinavian rock drawings the cosmic ship either rests on the upraised arms of a Heaven Man or actually forms the god's arms (a, b, c & d);

Figure 101. (e)

Figure 101. (f) In other drawings from the same religion a pillared crescent stands in the ship. (e & f)

Figure 102. Prehistoric Egyptian images of the cosmic ship alternately show the Heaven Man (with upraised arms) or the pillared crescent standing in the ship.

Figure 103. Predynastic Egyptian figurines.

Figure 104. Cretan mother goddess.

Figure 105. Symbols of the Phoenician goddess Tanit.

Figure 106. Hittite image.

The cosmic divinity with upraised arms will be found in all quarters of the world (figs. 103, 104, 105 & 106). Most crucial are the associations of such figures with the axis-pillar and enclosure. The mythical Afrite of Arabian myth was an apostate angel, "tall and black" (Saturn="black" planet), whose trunk formed a vast pillar, his arms stretching heavenward.

Compare the description of the Hindu Manu, the "glorious sage" and first king: "With arms uplifted and poised on one leg, he, the king of men, practiced hard austerities in the Badari forest, named Vishala. And there he did arduous penance for ten thousand years with his head downwards and his eyes unwinking."[1462]

[1462] Suryakants, The Flood Legend in Sanskrit Literature, 4. [Emphasis added.]

Of the Iranian Mithra, the Zend Avesta declares: “With his arms lifted up towards Immortality, Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, drives forward . . . in a beautiful chariot [the world wheel] that drives on, ever-swift, adorned with all sorts of ornaments, and made of gold.”

I pose the question: are the upraised arms an accidental convention, or an integral component of the Saturnian image ? A conclusive answer is provided by Egyptian sources.

The Ka-Arms

One of the most familiar Egyptian terms is ka, the symbol for which is two upraised arms . Though the word ka occurs with great frequency in the hieroglyphic texts, few writers can agree on a tangible meaning. Budge confesses the general lack of agreement on the subject: “The exact meaning of this word [ka] is unknown, but it has been translated by double, image, genius, subconscious self, natural disposition, abstract personality, character, mind, etc.; all these meanings are suggested by their contexts, but the real meaning of the word has yet to be discovered.”1463

“The closest approximation to the Egyptian notion of Ka is ‘vital force,’” writes Frankfort. “The qualification ‘vital’ frees it from the precision of the natural sciences, which would, of course, be an anachronism: and the combination ‘vital force’ may stand for a somewhat vague popular notion without mechanistic implications. The Ka, according to this view, should be impersonal and should be present in varying strength in different persons or in the same person at different times.”1464

In none of the common interpretations is the Ka regarded as a visible power. Instead, the experts tend to treat the Ka as a hidden source of life. Clark tells us that “the Ka is a symbol of the transmission of life power from the gods to man. But it is not only the act, it is also the source of this power. Everyone is a receiver of divine power and everyone is an individual, so each has his own Ka.”1465

I am not prepared to argue that these modern-sounding definitions are wholly wrong—only that they focus on derived, rather than concrete meanings. In its original sense the Ka is exactly what its glyph indicates—two upraised arms— ! The ancients saw the two arms of the Ka, and every aspect of the symbolism springs from a once visible relationship of these arms to the great god and his dwelling.

In recording the Saturnian configuration nothing could have been more natural than the interpretation of the crescent as two arms, straining upward. To present the “arms” in human form, is, of course, the only possible way to express pictorially this mythical interpretation of the crescent (just as the only way to depict the crescent’s mythical form as horns was to draw it as horns or to place the crescent-enclosure on the head of a Bull).

To test the proposed connection of the Ka-arms with the Saturnian image , several questions require investigation:

Do Egyptian sources locate the central sun within the Ka-arms? Are the cosmic ship and horns identified with these outstretched arms? Do the Ka-arms reach around the enclosure? Do the arms constitute the cleft summit of the world mountain? Is the Ka one half of a twin circle?

1463 Quoted in Perry, op. cit., 138.

1464 From Fetish to God, 328.

1465 Op. cit., 62.

Figure 107. (a) The Ka;

Figure 107. (b) The Ka resting on the primordial "perch";

Figure 107. (c) The Ka embracing the royal "name."

Figure 108. The arms of the Abyss supporting the Aten.

On each of these questions, Egyptian sources yield a clear-cut reply.

1. While most analyses discuss the Ka as a (hidden) dimension of the human personality, Egyptian sources consistently locate the Ka not in this world, but among the gods. The point is noticed by Breasted: "... The ka was not an element of the personality, as is so often stated. It seems to me indeed from a study of the Pyramid Texts, that the nature of the ka has been fundamentally misunderstood . . . It was in the world of the hereafter that he [the Ka] chiefly if not exclusively had his abode . . ."[1466]

When the king dies "he goes to his Ka in the sky,"[1467] and here, in heaven, the Ka protects him from the destructive demons of Chaos.[1468] But why is this protective genius portrayed as two outstretched arms ? The reason is that the heaven attained by the deceased king is the dwelling of the central sun, who resides within the embrace of two shining arms raised aloft in the Abyss. "This god is like this," states one mythological text: "Two arms guard the body of this god."[1469] Another invokes Atum shining forth from "the arms of Aker."[1470] The great god Re "is like this on the arms of the Mysterious One."[1471] "The Aten is in the Tuat. The arms of the Mysterious Face come out and lift it up,"[1472] reads another text.

Thus Osiris "rests" within the two arms of the Ka: "Hail, O Osiris, thy ka hath come unto thee and . . . thou resteth therein in thy name of Ka-Hetep."[1473] "Thy father Tatunen lifteth thee up and he stretcheth out his two hands behind thee."[1474]

[1466] Op. cit., 231.

[1467] Development of Religion and Thought in Ancient Egypt, 52.

[1468] Ibid., 53; Pyramid Text 1431.

[1469] Thus the dead king Pepi "lives with his ka; he [the ka] expels the evil that is before Pepi, he removes the evil that is behind Pepi, like the boomerangs of the lord of Letoplis [the cosmic city], which remove the evil that is before him and expel the evil that is behind him." Pyramid Text 908, translated in Breasted, op. cit., 53.

[1470] Piankoff, Mythological Papyri, 212.

[1471] Piankoff, The Tomb of Ramesses VI, 71.

[1472] Ibid., 94.

[1473] Ibid., 376.

[1474] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 388.

In truth, the saying “to go to his ka” means to attain heaven and thus to reside in the protective embrace of the heaven-sustaining god .

*O Re-Atum, your son comes to you, the King comes to you; raise him up, enclose him in your embrace . . .*1475

*It is pleasant for me . . . within the arms of my father, within the arms of Atum.*1476

*O Atum, set your arms about the King . . . O Atum, set your protection over this King . . .*1477

*Go up on high, and it will be well with you, it will be pleasant for you in the embrace of your father, in the embrace of Atum.*1478

To represent the union of the king with the outstretched arms of heaven the Egyptians depicted the Ka enclosing the cartouche or royal name of the Horus-king (fig. 107c). In the hieroglyphs the Ka-arms signify “to embrace” and “to protect.” “The royal Ka put his arms around the Horus name to protect it from harm,” notes Clark.1479 There is no need to seek out hidden metaphysical implications in this symbolism, for the Ka was in every way an emblem of the visible enclosure, the protective rampart in heaven.

2. That the Ka-arms pertain to the “embracing” crescent will explain why the sun-god sails on the two arms; the same text which describes Re “like this on the arms of the Mysterious One,” declares, “This Great God sails over this cavern [the hollow of the Tuat] on the arms of the Mysterious One.”1480

A spell from the Coffin Texts has the king appearing “in the bark of the morning . . . in the arms of Anup.”1481 And Osiris sails “on the two arms of Horus in his [Horus’] name of ‘Henu-bark.’”1482 This equation of the ship and the outstretched arms finds repeated illustration in the cosmic scenes depicted on coffins and papyri.

It follows from this identity, of course, that the arms of the Ka are synonymous with the luminous horns of the celestial bull. And here lies the simple explanation why the Egyptian word for “bull” is also ka, written with the same arms , to which the determinatives are added. (The subject is the generative Bull of Heaven.)1483

I know the secret of Hieraconopolis.

It is the two hands of horns *and what is in them.*1484

The embracing hands or arms mean the same thing as the horns.

1475 Ibid., 86.

1476 Pyramid Text 160.

1477 Pyramid Text 151.

1478 Pyramid Texts 1653-54.

1479 Pyramid Text 212.

1480 Op. cit., 232. [Emphasis added.]

1481 Piankoff, The Tomb of Ramesses VI, 93.

1482 Lacau, op. cit., 31.

1483 Hassan, op. cit., 12.

1484 Newberry, “Two Cults of the Old Kingdom,” 28. [Emphasis added.]

3. If the outstretched arms, as suggested by the configuration , reach around the circumpolar enclosure, then “to go to his Ka” must signify the king’s rebirth in the primeval womb. Did the Egyptians identify the Ka-arms with the mother goddess?

“When the dead king was placed in his coffin,” writes Piankoff, “he was placed between the arms of his mother Nut.”[1485] The king’s return to the mother womb is expressed in the Pyramid Texts:

Thou art given to thy mother Nut, in her name coffin;

She embraces thee, in her name sarcophagus.[1486]

Nut, the “coffin,” means Nut, the womb of primeval birth (or rebirth). And to dwell in the womb is to reside within the embracing arms of the goddess. Thus, the very goddess in whose womb shines the central sun is also described enclosing and protecting the sun, or king, with outstretched arms.

I am thy mother Nut. My arms encircle thee in life and health.[1487]

The arms of Nut who bore you are about you so that your beauty may be upraised.[1488]

Words spoken by Isis the Divine:

I have come, I encircle my son with my arms . . . I shall be his protection eternally.[1489]

. . . The goddess Maat embraceth thee.[1490]

Figure 109. Nut embracing the Aten with outstretched arms.

In apparent defiance of nature, the texts proclaim that the Ka-arms give birth to the sun-god. The Pyramid Texts extol “the Great One who came into being in the arms of Her who bore the god.”[1491] In the Instruction of Ptahhotep appears the statement, “He is thy son, whom thy Ka hath begotten for thee.”[1492] And elsewhere we read: “Thy mother bringeth thee forth upon her hands, that thou mayest give light to the whole circumference which the Aten enlighteneth.”[1493]

[1485] Piankoff, The Pyramid Text of Unas, 43. [Emphasis added.]

[1486] The Tomb of Ramesses VI, 21.

[1487] Ibid., 21, quoting Pyramid Text 616.

[1488] Ibid., 114.

[1489] Faulkner, op. cit., 54.

[1490] Ibid., 83.

[1491] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 4.

[1492] Pyramid Text 258.

In the tomb of Tut-Ankh-Amon appear four gold coffins containing the extracted viscera, each coffin being represented by a goddess, and symbolically enclosing one of the Four Sons of Horus. The inscriptions upon the lids of the coffins leave no doubt as to the identity of the enclosing arms and the protective womb:

> Words spoken by Isis: I close my arms over that which is in me. I protect Imesty who is in me, Imesty, Osiris King Neb-Kheperu-Re, justified before the Great God.
>
> Words spoken by Nephthys: I embrace with my arms that which is in me, I protect Hapy of Osiris King Neb-Kheperu-Re, justified before the Great God.
>
> Words spoken by Neith: I encircle with my arms that which is in me, I protect Dua-mutef who is in me, Dua-mutef, Osiris King Neb-Kheperu-Re, justified before the Great God.
>
> Words spoken by Selkit: My two arms are on what is in me. I protect Keb-senuf who is in me, Keb-senuf, Osiris King Neb-Kheperu-Re, the justified one.[1494]

The inscriptions explicitly declare that the arms of the goddess enclose the god-king within the womb. That the goddess (womb) is the arms, and that these arms are those of the Ka, is confirmed by a design in the funerary temple of King Seti I (fig. 110). The design shows a female figure embracing the king. On the head of the goddess stands the two arms of the Ka within which is written the goddess’ name.[1495]

In depicting the Ka, Egyptian artists were obviously constrained by the awkwardness which would result from the human-like representation of the image as a man-child within the arms of a god or goddess. In our world one does not embrace a child with uplifted arms. To accommodate the primal image to a natural anthropomorphic mode of representation, the artists showed the arms twice—first, as the arms of the human, or personified Ka, embracing and protecting the man-child; and second, as upraised arms placed upon the head of the Ka-divinity. It is the latter representation which expresses the cosmic form of the protective embrace.

Figure 110. The divinized Ka embraces the man-child.

[1493] Erman, The Literature of the Ancient Egyptians, 59.

[1494] Renouf, op. cit., 24.

[1495] Piankoff, op. cit., The Shrines of Tut-Ankh-Amon, 19.

Figure 111. The Egyptian goddess Isis, whose upraised arms enclosed the central sun.

Hence, the goddess Isis, often depicted enclosing her son Horus upon her lap (womb), is also shown standing erect with arms held aloft (fig. 111). Since the uplifted arms, by Egyptian symbolism, mean "protect" and "embrace," one can be certain that the raised arms of Isis pertain directly to Isis' role as the "protectress" of the sun-god. Cosmic symbolism was not determined by what is "natural" in the human world so much as by the literal form of the Saturn apparition .

The outstretched arms of the Egyptian great god or goddess hold aloft and encircle the celestial earth.

*O King, you have enclosed every god within your arms, their lands and all their possessions. O King, you are great and round as the circle which surrounds the Hau-nebut.*1496

*The earth is raised on high under the sky by your arms, O Tefenet.*1497

An identical picture occurs in the Iranian Zend Avesta, where Mithra, "with arms lifted up towards immortality," encloses "the boundary of the earth."

*And do thou, O Mithra! encompassing all this around, do thou reach it, all over, with thy arms.*1498

Pointing to the same relation is the common Egyptian phrase "house of the Ka."1499 To dwell in the cosmic temple is to rest within the arms, and the texts thus speak of "the two arms of the temple."1500

4. Among the Egyptian gods none is more often depicted with upraised arms than the pillar-god Shu, between whose arms rests the primeval sun Atum, or Re. Egyptian reliefs regularly portray Shu standing erect and sustaining the body (womb) of the goddess Nut with his arms held in virtually the same position as those of the Ka-symbol . The arms which enclose the sun-god belong to the cosmic mountain. Thus we read: "The mountain will hold out its arms to him and the living Ka's will accompany him."1501

The hieroglyphic symbol of the Shu-pillar or mountain is —called "the two pillars of heaven." The two pillars, in other words, are really one pillar, with two arms. Hence Re, who shines between the mountain peaks

---

1496 Frankfort, op. cit., 67.

1497 Pyramid Text 847.

1498 Darmesteter, op. cit., Part II, 146; Perry, op. cit., 138-39.

1499 Pyramid Text 1405.

1500 Énel, Les Origines de la Genèse et l'Enseignement des Temples de l'Ancienne Égypte, 211.

1501 Piankofff, The Shrines of Tut-Ankh-Amon, 125.

of the right and left, also rests atop the forked pillar of Shu, whose two secondary supports are the embracing arms of the Ka. “Thou seest Re upon the pillars which are the arms of heaven,” reads the Book of the Dead.[1502]

In the Papyrus of Mut-hetep the embracing arms are those of Tatunen, the acknowledged personification of the Primeval Hill. “Thy father Tatunen, placing his hands behind thee, raiseth thee up.”[1503] What are these two arms of the Primeval Hill other than the two peaks of the right and left?

Most relevant in this connection is the hieroglyphic symbol for “living Re”— . The image not only shows the sun-god resting within the upraised Ka-arms, but presents the arms as an extension of the heavens pillar, so that the entire configuration suggests a human form virtually identical to that of Shu in the above-mentioned illustrations. The same image in yet more human form is offered by the hieroglyph , symbol of the elevated god and the cosmic summit. And in the glyph the Egyptians depicted the personified pillar holding aloft the symbol of heaven . What is clear from a survey of the related texts and symbols is that the Egyptians conceived the arms of the Mount or god in visible terms. When the king, in a Pyramid Text, beseeches the god, “O Shu, may your two arms be behind Teti,” one witnesses the influence of things seen, not abstract speculation.

In the signs , , and , we have three closely related ways of representing the prototypal form , and it is this prototype which enables one to see why the Egyptians celebrated the Ka-arms as the two peaks of the Mount of Glory. The Ka-sign and the mountain sign gave pictorial expression to two equally compelling interpretations of the pillared crescent. Once one perceives this underlying identity of the arms and the twofold peak, it is impossible not to notice that the Egyptians themselves remembered the connection through many centuries (even if they did not understand it perfectly). Repeatedly the artists showed two arms extended upward from the cleft peak (fig. 112). As is usually the case with the most significant symbolic relationships, the union of the arms and two peaks is set forth in spite of its seeming mockery of the natural order.

Figure 112. Khepre, residing in the Aten, appears between the two arms, which correspond to the two peaks of the Khut.

[1502] Clark, op. cit., 233.

[1503] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 587.

The equivalence of the Ka-arms and two peaks is confirmed by other symbols also. One of the Egyptian names of the twofold Mount of Glory was Aker, drawn as a twin-headed lion .[1504] Just as the Aten rests on the two peaks of the Khut , so also does it lie on the "back of Aker." In one text the sun-god Re commands Aker, "O, give me your arms, receive me . . . I give light for you, I dispel your darkness."[1505] The arms of Aker can be nothing other than the two peaks from which the sun-god shines forth each day, for the Book of Caverns says that the "One of the Tuat goes forth [shines] from the arms of Aker."[1506] The same source also invokes:

Duati, the Infernal One, who comes out of the arms of Aker.[1507]

Atum, who comes out of the arms of Aker. Ifeny, who comes out of the arms of Aker.[1508]

Though the terminology will offend the modern ear, it is perfectly consistent with the cosmic image to speak of the "two arms of the mountain," and this is exactly what the Egyptians meant by the phrase "the arms of Aker."

5. It remains to be asked, then, what was the relationship of the crescent-arms to the cosmic twins. Certainly one cannot ignore the fact that the Egyptian ka is often translated "double" or "twin." "The ka of the king is his twin; it accompanies him through life as a protective genius, it acts as his twin and his protector in death."[1509]

The imagery of the king has its origin in the image of the Universal Monarch. If the arms depicted by the Ka sign refer to the Saturnian crescent, reaching halfway around the circumpolar enclosure, this in itself is sufficient to explain the Ka's designation as the "twin." In the configuration the twin (or half the enclosure) is the two arms.

In accord with the counterposed positions of the revolving crescent (and , or and), Egyptian representations of the arms show alternating relationships to the central sun. While the upright position of the arms is very common in Egyptian art, one finds innumerable instances in which the arms embrace the Aten either from the right or left, or from above. Of the latter instance I give three examples (figs. 81, 113, 114). Like so many Egyptian representations, all of these examples juxtapose different mythical versions of the crescent. In the first (fig. 81) we see the man-child sitting upon the mountain symbol and resting within the enclosure of the Aten, here presented as a circular serpent with tail in mouth. This circle, in turn, rests upon the horns of a bull whose head is placed between the twin lions Shu and Tefnut, representing the peaks of the right and left. But reaching around half of the serpentine band from above are two arms—clearly the same arms which elsewhere embrace the Aten from below.

[1504] Budge, From Fetish to God, 401.

[1505] The reader will have no difficulty seeing that the Aker glyph simply translates the image (here) into leonine form.

[1506] Piankoff, The Tomb of Ramesses VI, 71.

[1507] Ibid.

[1508] Ibid.

[1509] Frankfort, op. cit., 69.

Figure 113.

Figure 114. To depict the full cycle of the "day" Egyptian artists showed the outstretched arms embracing the Aten alternately from above and from below. (113 & 114)

It is my contention that such symbolism represents alternate phases of the archaic day, each "day" being marked by a full revolution of the crescent around the enclosure, as it passes from its position below to an inverted position above and back to below again.

As figures of the revolving crescent, the upright and inverted arms are synonymous with the cosmic twins, who personify the above and below (as well as the right and left). Just this connection of the arms with the twins is indicated in the Papyrus of Pa-di-Amon (fig. 113). The illustration shows the Aten in the centre flanked by the two goddesses. Two male figures are also present, one above and one below, each reaching around the Aten with outstretched arms, so that together the upright and inverted arms compose a complete enclosure—the circle of the cosmic twins.[1510] The same relationship of the upright and inverted arms to the circle of the Aten will be seen also in the Papyrus of Khonsu-Renep.[1511] (fig. 114)

Closely related are the symbolic representations which portray the arms alternately reaching round the Aten from the right and left. One such example occurs in the Papyrus of Khonsu-mes A. Here the arms are explicitly connected with the symbols of Abtet and Amentet, the two divisions of the celestial kingdom (left-right).[1512]

[1510] Piankoff, Mythological Papyri, 37.

[1511] Ibid., 39.

[1512] Ibid., 38.

Figure 115. The twin goddesses Isis and Nephthys stand to the right and left of Osiris-Re, forming an enclosure with their arms.

Clearly, the counterpoised arms denote the cosmic twins, revolving daily round the Aten. The texts say as much when they locate the great god within the arms (or hands) of the twins. In a Coffin Text Atum recalls the beginning:

> [At first] I lived with my two children, my little ones,
>
> the one before me, the other behind me . . .
>
> I rose over them, but their arms were around me.

Similarly, one finds:

> The arm of Horus is about you [and] *the arm of Thoth, the two great gods have supported you.*1513
>
> *You are raised aloft on the hands of Shu and Tefnut . . .*1514
>
> Isis and Nephthys salute thee, they sing songs of joy at thy rising [coming forth] *in the boat, they protect thee with their hands.*1515

Together the counterpoised arms of the twins form the protective enclosure—the womb giving birth to the central sun.

> *. . . The god is given birth by the sky upon the arms of Shu and Tefnut.*1516

The symbolism of the outstretched arms meets every test of the Saturnian crescent. The arms take the form of a crescent enclosing the central sun. They are inseparable from the cosmic womb; they constitute the two peaks of the world mountain; and they are identified directly with the celestial twins.

The Crescent-Wings

The same crescent which appeared to the ancients as upraised arms also received mythical interpretations as the extended wings of the great god or goddess.

Ancient Sumerian myths recall a monstrous bird called Imdugud hovering over the primeval waters, its wings outstretched. Imdugud (the Akkadian winged dragon Zu) was a form of Ningirsu or Ninurta, the planet Saturn.1517

1513 Pyramid Text 1570-71.

1514 Pyramid Text 1353.

1515 Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 17.

1516 Pyramid Text 1443.

1517 On the connection of Imdugud with Ninurta, see Jacobsen, Toward the Image of Tammuz, 4.

In this primordial wind-bird or thunder-bird scholars recognize the prototype of the Teutonic Hraesvelgr, the winged god of the storm, and the Hindu eagle Garuda, whose wings were so great as to affect the cosmic revolutions. According to the Athapascans of North America a raven hovered over the waters generating claps of thunder by the movement of his wings.[1518]

Natives of Hawaii say that at the beginning of time, when only the ocean existed, a great white bird appeared in the highest heaven, the egg of the world resting between its outstretched wings.[1519] Very similar is the Hebrew mythical bird Ziz, standing in mid-ocean. The Ziz was as monstrous as Leviathan, for while his ankles rested on our earth, his head reached the sky.[1520]

Though the relation is sometimes forgotten, the primeval winged beast originally appears either as the great god himself or as the god's vehicle. When the Orphics celebrated the "Sun that soarest aloft on golden wings," they hearkened back to an age-old tradition. Among all of the great gods of antiquity it would be difficult to find a single figure who neither possesses wings nor rides upon wings.[1521]

If the Hebrew Yahweh "rides upon the wings of the wind," the Hindu Vishnu is carried about on the shoulders of the eagle Garuda. The Hindu Agni, Mithra, Varuna, and Yama receive the title Suparna, meaning "strong-winged." It is said that the outstretched wings of the Suparna embrace the Cosmos.[1522] Also presented as winged gods are the Persian Mithra and Zurvan, the Hebrew and Phoenician El, the Greek Kronos, and all of the leading deities of ancient Egypt.

Anyone willing to look beneath the surface will find that the great god's wings are much more than a contrived convenience enabling him to "fly." To thoughtful observers the special role of the winged god presents many enigmas. In Egypt, for example, the hieroglyph for the great god Horus is a falcon, but the wings of the falcon, in early Egyptian art, do not convey the sense of "flight" (as one should expect, if the god acquired his wings for a "natural" purpose). Rather the wings—always outstretched—define the limits of the Cosmos, and it is not easy to see how the Egyptians could have arrived at this consistent notion through observation of what we call the natural world today. Horus is "the venerable bird in whose shadow is the wide earth; Lord of the Two Lands under whose wings is the circuit of heaven [the Cosmos]."[1523] Concerning this image of Horus, Frankfort writes, ". . . The central problem, the relation between god and falcon, seems entirely insoluble."[1524]

What powers did the ancients seek to represent by the spread wings of the divine eagle, hawk, or falcon—or the extended wings of the purely mythical "thunder-bird" described around the world? The Egyptians called the cosmic island of beginnings the "Great Foundation Ground of the Ruler of the Wing"[1525] almost as if the Wing possessed a character of its own. The divinized Wing marched around the island, according to the texts.[1526]

Few comparative mythologists seem to have recognized that a common image of the cosmic bird prevails throughout the world, and this image corresponds directly to the pillared sun-in-crescent . Rather than portray the winged beast either in flight or in a seemingly normal resting position, the artists regularly depicted it virtually standing on its tail feathers, with its wings spread upward to form a crescent.

[1518] Gaster, Myth, Legend and Custom in the Old Testament, 5.

[1519] Melville, op. cit., 32.

[1520] Ginzberg, The Legends of the Jews Vol. I, 28-29; Graves and Patai, Hebrew Myths: The Book of Genesis, 55.

[1521] Cook, op. cit., Vol. I, 342, citing Orphic Frag. 49, 3.

[1522] Agrawala, Sparks from the Vedic Fire, 52-55.

[1523] Frankfort, op. cit., 37.

[1524] Ibid., 143.

[1525] Reymond, The Mythical Origin of the Egyptian Temple, 16.

[1526] Ibid., 120-21.

Figure 116. Examples of the winged divinity on the cylinder seals of western Asia.

Figure 117. The primeval eagle, from the Mesopotamian city of Lagash.

Figure 118. Egyptian eagle, with symbols of "life."

Figure 120. The American Indian thunder-bird.

In figs. 116, 117, 118 & 120 I include examples from Western Asia to the Americas. The reader will see that certain of the instances are virtually indistinguishable—and all present the sacred bird in the same "unnatural" way.

In Homer’s hymn to Selene, the poet extols “the long-winged Moon.”[1527] But does the lunar crescent alone suggest extended wings? It is only in connection with the cosmic form that the crescent’s role as wings takes on meaning. And this is the very crescent which the ancients also knew as the sacred horn, the ship, and the upraised arms.

As seen in fig. 121, the wings of the cosmic falcon enclose and protect the deified king, in precisely the same fashion as the Ka-arms. A review of the artistic tradition shows that the wings of the great god or goddess melt into the divinity’s extended arms in such a way as to become indistinguishable from them. The identity is also confirmed in Egyptian texts, where the arms of Re are called “the two birds of Ptah.”[1528] A text from the tomb of Ramesses VI invokes the great god’s “two wings, the arms of Tay.”[1529]

Figure 121. The cosmic falcon.

Figure 122. The winged goddess Nut.

[1527] Evelyn-White, Hesiod, The Homeric Hymns and Homerica, 459.

[1528] Piankoff, Litany of Re, 54.

[1529] Piankoff, The Tomb of Ramesses VI, 368.

Figure 123. Zuni winged goddess.

Figure 124. Spartan goddess Artemis Orthia.

Adding to the "unnatural" character of the winged divinity is the continual association of wings and horns. The great god may be called either a winged bull or a horned bird. Moreover, it is clear that the combination of the two images did not result from syncretism (a later merging of incompatible or once independent traditions). Frankfort acknowledges "the simultaneous validity of these views of the king," insisting that the winged and horned aspects of the god are "a primitive feature and not the product of the syncretism of later times." Noting this dual aspect of the god Horus and his mother-spouse Hathor, Frankfort writes: "The mingling of the falcon and cattle images in the relationship of Horus and Hathor is not due to syncretism. It recurs in the case of the war-god Monthu of Thebes, who was conceived as a falcon but was also manifest in the Buches bull. The royal titulary shows it, too, for after Thutmosis I the name which is crowned with the falcon and is called the Horus- or Ka-name regularly includes the epithet 'strong bull.' The palette of Narmer illustrates how little ancients were disturbed by this simultaneous use of the two images. It shows the king's victory three times, once as a man destroying the enemy chief with his mace, once as the Horus falcon holding him in subjection with a rope passed through his nose, and once as a 'strong bull' demolishing enemy strongholds."[1530]

If the Egyptians were not bothered by this paradoxical duality, it was for a simple reason: the great god's shining horns were also his wings! This is why the Apis bull was pictured with outstretched wings upon its back[1531] (fig. 76a) and why the portrait of the Bakha bull shows a vulture extending its wings over the bull's hindquarters.[1532] (fig. 76b)

The same winged bull, of course, is common to Mesopotamian ritual (fig. 126) and passes into Hebrew cherubim, protectors of the divine throne. The wings of the cherubim "reached from one end of the world to the other."[1533]

[1530] Op. cit., 173.

[1531] Budge, I 74.

[1532] Budge, Gods, Vol. I, 437.

[1533] Patai, The Hebrew Goddess, 122; Lenormant, Les Origines, Vol.I, 112*ff.*

Figure 126. Assyrian winged bull.

Further evidence is provided by the winged ship, which occurs in almost every segment of the world.[1534] While it may not be immediately clear from the later, more fanciful versions of the bird-ship, it is abundantly clear in the earliest sources that the wings and the ship are the same thing. In the Egyptian Pyramid Texts, the expanded wings constitute the ship of the gods—just as the image suggests:

O you gods who cross over on the wing of Thoth to yonder side of the Winding Waterway.[1535]

. . . Ferry me over, O Thoth, on the tip of your wing as Sokar who presides over the Bark of Righteousness.[1536]

O wings of Thoth, ferry me across, do not leave me boatless.[1537]

O Thoth . . . put me on the tip of your wing on yonder northern side of the Winding Waterway.[1538]

Surely it is no coincidence that the symbol of Thoth, the master of the wing-ship, was the crescent-enclosure . The wings of the winged god or goddess answer to the illuminated portion of the circumpolar band. The subject is a winged circle, as one discerns in numerous representations of the primeval sun's dwelling. Whether it is the Egyptian Aten, or the Assyro-Babylonian enclosure of the sun, the Greek wheels of Ixion, Dionysus, or Triptolemus, the Hindu world wheel or Chakra, the Mexican "shield" of the sun-god—the enclosure consistently appears with wings and/or tail feathers. If the ancients soon forgot the special form of the winged enclosure (i.e.,), they did not lose the general idea.

[1534] Gelling, The Chariot of the Sun, 120*ff.*; Magoun, The Kalevala, 37-38; O'Neill, op. cit., vol. II, 1,009, 1,012.

[1535] Pyramid Text 595.

[1536] Pyramid Text 1429.

[1537] Pyramid Text 1176.

[1538] Pyramid Text 1377.

Figure 127. The Egyptian winged KhepRer, the Turning One.

Figure 128. The Assyrian winged circle.

Figure 129. The Hindu Chakra or winged wheel of the “sun.”

Figure 130. Inscription at Mehterhane, the Central Prison of Constantinople.

Figure 131. Drawing from a thirteenth-century window in Auxerre catherdral.

Figure 132. Mexican winged bird.

Figure 133. Detail from fig. 74 showing enclosed sun on back of bird.

Figure 134. (a) Persian Ahura Mazda, dwelling in the winged enclosure;

Figure 134. (b) Assyrian winged god Asshur, in the winged enclosure. Note that both the Assyrian and Persian examples connect the god's skirt with the tail feathers. In the ancient Mesopotamian pictographs the "skirt" means "mountain."

Figure 135. Aztec shield, with tail feathers.

Figure 136. Mesopotamian winged circles confirm (a) that the band encloses the sun-cross and

Figure 136. (b) that the band displays a crescent.

Figure 137. Isis, protecting the sun-god with her extended wings.

The relation of the wings to the enclosure is vital to any meaningful interpretation of the winged god or goddess. Surely we are not simply dealing with a venerated bird gradually translated into a god (as many authorities propose). From the beginning, the wings belonged to the Saturnian band. In many instances the artists show the great god residing within or issuing from the winged circle (figs. 134a, 134b).

In the symbolism of the Egyptian goddess Nut one sees the underlying identity of the outstretched wings and the cosmic womb. Though Nut personifies the band of the Cosmos, she is often depicted standing erect with arms and wings extended outward and upward (fig. 122) in striking accord with the prototypal form . The spread wings are those which enclose and protect the central sun, for the king beseeches the goddess: "Mother Nut, spread thy wings over me, encircle (me) with thy arms in health and life that I may be inside thee, that thou (mayest) be my protection."[1539] To be embraced by the outspread wings is to dwell within the great goddess, in the womb. Daily the goddess "conceives you, she bears you, she puts you within her wing."[1540] Nothing could be more futile than attempting to resolve the enigmatic language in conventional (or "natural") terms. But when referred to the overlapping images of the Saturnian configuration , the ritual terminology acquires an extraordinary precision. The outstretched and upraised wings actually do enclose the sun within the celestial womb.

No less remarkable is the location of the all-seeing Eye upon the crescent wing or wings:

The Eye of Horus gleams upon the wing of Thoth.[1541]

The Eye of Horus is placed on the wing of his brother Set.[1542]

All figures of the primeval bird reveal a common feature: they dwell upon the cosmic mountain. Indeed, as already observed, it is the Mount, rendered as the "tail feathers," which makes intelligible the common interpretation of the polar crescent as outstretched wings.

Egyptian myths say that at the dawn of the world the great god took the form of the Bennu bird or Phoenix, radiating light from its extended wings and perched atop the Primeval Hill. The Bennu was the "Soul" of Re, which means that it issued directly from Re, congealing out of the primeval matter, or waters. (Thus bennut means "matter" or "issue," while bennu means the "bread" of the gods, the primeval matter organized into a circle.)

Figure 138. Prehistoric Hopi image of winged earth mother.

[1539] Piankoff, Shrines of Tut-Ankh-Amon, 46. [Emphasis added.]

[1540] Pyramid Text 1370.

[1541] Pyramid Text 976.

[1542] Pyramid Text 1742.

Figure 139. Mesopotamian eagle supporting divine figure between its wings.

The relation of the Primeval Hill to the Phoenix or Bennu is summarized by Clark: "Since the waters were in absolute darkness the emergence of God meant the coming of light, the first morning. For the Heliopolitans morning was marked by the shining of light on an erect pillar or pyramidion on a support which could reflect the rays of the rising sun. At the beginning a light-bird, the Phoenix, had alighted on the sacred stand, known as the Benben, to initiate the great age of the visible God. The rising of the mound and the appearance of the Phoenix are not consecutive events but parallel statements, two aspects of the supreme creative moment."[1543] To the same elementary image belongs the winged Khepera, resting upon the tet or pillar of the Cosmos, and supporting the Aten with outstretched wings.[1544] The Pyramid Texts speak of the "Mountain of the zehzeh-bird,"[1545] or "the Pillar of the zehzeh-bird."[1546]

Similarly, the Sumerian Imdugud, who "looks down upon the mountain,"[1547] was said to have his home on the northern Mount Masius; while his counterparts—the Persian Saena or Simurgh and the Hindu Garuda dwelt upon the polar mountains of Hera Berezaiti and Meru.[1548] Accordingly, the Assyro-Babylonians consistently located the winged circle of the "sun" atop the cosmic pillar.[1549] The natives of Northwest Siberia fix upon their symbols of the world pillar a wooden figure of a bird sometimes with two heads. The winged figures which so often adorn the summit of American Indian totem poles provide an obvious parallel.

[1543] Op. cit., 39.

[1544] O'Neill, op. cit., 220.

[1545] Pyramid Text 389.

[1546] Pyramid Text 2243.

[1547] Sjöberg and Bergmann, op. cit., 99.

[1548] Albright, "The Goddess of Life and Wisdom," 268, note 3.

[1549] Van Buren, Symbols of the Gods in Mesopotamian Art, 96-99.

Figure 140. Mesopotamian cylinder seals indicate the close relation of the “sun”-bird’s wings to the two peaks of the cosmic mountain.

Like all figures of the crescent, the expanded wings, alternately embracing the central sun from the left and from the right (or from above and below), appear in the role of the twins. The goddess Nut may be presented in the primary form ; but two secondary divinities flank the goddess to the right and left, extending their wings toward each other so as to form a complete enclosure. These winged twins are equivalent to Isis and Nephthys, the “two kites” who, standing to the right and left, together enclose the sun-god within their wings.

A spell of the Coffin Texts reads:

> Isis comes and Nephthys comes, one of them from the west [literally the right] and one of them from the east [literally the left], one of them as a kite and one of them as a screecher . . . They prevent Horus of the Two Lands from putrefying.[1550]

Compare this line from the Pyramid Texts:

> . . . This King has become pure through the eye of Horus, his ill is removed by the Two Kites of Osiris.[1551]

To be purified and protected within the Eye is to be made strong by the “Two Kites” of the left and right (,), whose counterpoised wings shadow out the full circle of the Eye. The same twin birds compose the crown:

> O you two kites who are on the wings of Thoth, you two who are on the crown . . .[1552]

Thus the goddesses Isis and Nephthys are said to have placed themselves upon the head of the great god “as the two kites” and these, in turn, are identified as the two uraei serpents and the two Eyes—all figures of the bisected womb or enclosure.[1553] And the proof of this identity is the very name of the “two kites.” They are the Tcherti, which means nothing more than the two halves of the tcher, the “enclosure” or “boundary,” of the Aten .

Interconnected Symbols

A comprehensive discussion of the Saturnian crescent’s wide-ranging mythical forms would require vastly more space than available here, but a brief summary should be sufficient to indicate the breadth of the symbolism. Supplementing the imagery discussed above are the following mythical versions of the crescent:

The Plant Of Life

Egyptian sources relate that the original dwelling of the solitary god took the form of a shining lotus—called “the Great Lotus that issued from the pool in the Island of the Two Flames, the Province of the Beginning.” The lotus “initiated light” at the “First Occasion in the High Hill at the Beginning of Coming into Existence.”[1554]

According to the legend, the lotus sprang up from the watery abyss, emerging from the Khu (luminous matter) erupting from the creator. One of the Egyptian names for this plant of life was Nefer Tem (“the young or beautiful Tem”), a personification of the “North Wind” or breath of Re. In Chapter CLXXIV of the Book of the

[1550] Faulkner, op. cit., 68.

[1551] Pyramid Text 312.

[1552] Pyramid Text 1254.

[1553] Budge, The Papyrus of Ani, 32.

[1554] Reymond, op. cit., 68.

Dead, the deceased announced “I grow bright like Nefer-Tem, who is the lotus at the nostrils of Re, when he comes forth in the Mount of Glory each day.” Re is thus “that great god who is within the lotus bud of gold.”[1555]

Inscriptions at Dendera show the king offering a lotus to the god Horus with the words, “I offer thee the flower, which was in the beginning, the glorious lily of the great water. Thou camest forth from the midst of its leaves in the town of Chmun (Hermopolis magna) and didst lighten the earth, which was still wrapped in darkness.”[1556]

Parallels to the Egyptian cosmic lotus, as the home of the great god, will be found in all sections of the world, including the Americas. The Mayans knew the flower as “the form of the moisture of heaven, the substance of heaven, the yellow blossom of heaven.”[1557] Looking back to the creation a Mayan text recalls, “Then it was that the flower sprang up, wide open . . . Thereupon the heart of the flower came forth to set itself in motion. Four-fold [can-hek, literally “four-branched”] was the place of the flower and Ah Kin Xocbiltun was set in the centre.”[1558]

Figure 141. The primeval sun’s birth in the lotus.

Figure 142. The man-child Horus on the lotus blossom.

Much the same tradition occurs in Mesopotamia, where a Babylonian text depicts the plant of life emerging in Eridu, the dwelling on the cosmic sea:

[1555] Clark, op. cit., 67.

[1556] Mariette, Denderah, 1, 55a.

[1557] Roys, The Book of the Chilam Balam, 131.

[1558] Ibid., 105.

(In) Eridu a stalk grew over-shadowing: in a holy place did it become green; its root was of white crystal which stretched toward the deep;
(before) Ea was its course in Eridu, teeming with fertility;
its seat was the central place of the earth: its foliage was the couch of Zikum (the primeval mother).
Into the heart of its holy house which spread its shade like a forest hath no man entered . . .
In the midst of it was Tammuz.[1559]

Figure 143. Tut-Ankh-Amon, presented in the form of Nefer-Tem.

This "bright plant which grows up from the apsu [the cosmic sea]"[1560] is clearly an early prototype of the famous Hindu soma and Iranian haoma plants both recognized as belonging originally to the gods in heaven.[1561] (Thus the haoma is "the first of the trees planted by Ahura Mazda in the fountains of life.")[1562]

Egyptian, Hindu, and Buddhist sources either show the head of the great god emerging from a lotus or depict the god in a resting position in or above the lotus.

It is logical to refer such imagery of the lotus-seat to the archetypal sun-in-crescent ☉ and all the more so because the plant of life is regularly identified with the crescent "moon."[1563] The soma and haoma plants are widely discussed as figures of the "moon." The Mayan Book of Chilam Balam refers to the "moon" as the "flower of the night."[1564] Similarly, the Sumero-Babylonian crescent of Nannar or Sin is the "lofty plant, magnificent, whose abundance never ceases."[1565]

We have seen that the Babylonians depicted the crescent of Sin as the support, or lower half, of the world wheel ⊕. The relationship illuminates Hindu and Buddhist symbolism of the cosmic wheel resting in the expanded leaf of a lotus (fig. 144). The lotus supports and reaches around the celestial "land" and is thus always identified with the mother goddess, the female personification of the wheel. In the ritual of the Satapatha Brahmana a lotus leaf becomes the "birthplace of Agni" and "the symbol of his womb." Upon the symbolic lotus leaf the priest lays a round gold disk said to represent the "sun." "The lotus means the Waters, and this earth is a leaf thereof . . . and this same earth is Agni's womb," reads the text.1566 It is imagery of this sort which yields such epithets of the Hindu great god as "lotus-born," "lotus-seated," or "lotus-navelled."1567

[1559] Sayce, op. cit., 238.

[1560] Albright, "The Mouth of the Rivers," 193.

[1561] See, for example, the discussion in Eliade, Patterns in Comparative Religion, 290.

[1562] Briffault, op. cit., Vol. I, 130.

[1563] Ibid., 131.

[1564] Roys, op. cit., 94.

[1565] Combe, op. cit., 99.

The connection of the lotus and "lotus-born" god with the sun-in-crescent is equally evident in the equation of the lotus and the cosmic ship. In the Egyptian system the ship and the lotus are synonymous: the great god sails in a lotus-ship, which the artists illustrate either by a lotus blossom in the centre of the ship or by a lotus terminating either one end or both ends of the vessel.1568

Figure 144. Hindu world wheel resting in lotus leaf.

Figure 145. Lotus blossom=ship as mythical image of the Saturnian crescent.

And the same equation occurs among the Hindus, who tell us that the cosmic ship Argha was the lotus on which the great god sailed in the beginning.1569

Now if the blossom of the plant of life is the circumpolar crescent, one can assume that the "stem" is the cosmic mountain. The Egyptians represented the great god's "sceptre" as a lotus and in both the hieroglyphs and in art this sceptre becomes the pillar upholding "heaven" .1570 Lotus-pillars are often depicted supporting the god's shrine or throne,1571 while at other times the great god is depicted resting upon a lotus column.

But the plant of life was also represented as a papyrus—and called "the Gleaming Sceptre of Papyrus."1572 A text published by Dumichen says "Thou art the Eye of Re, at the tip of the papyrus-stem."1573 Of course other

---

1566 Coomaraswamy, Elements of Buddhist Iconography, 19-20.

1567 Ibid., 17-18.

1568 Morez and Schhubert, Der Gott auf der Blume, 38.

1569 Faber, Origins, Vol. II, 217; vol. I, 19. In Egyptian ritual there is also a fascinating relationship of the plant of life and the outstretched arms of heaven (the Ka). Pyramid Text 544a has the king proclaiming himself to be the "flower which issued from the Ka."

1570 Budge, Gods, Vol. I, 413, 439.

1571 See example in Budge, Egyptian Book of the Dead, 29.

1572 Clark, op. cit., 163.

texts say that it is the light-pillar Shu which holds aloft the Eye, but there can be no contradiction: the Egyptian word shu means both "light-pillar" and "papyrus."

The identity of the two powers is also explicit in Hindu iconography. The soma plant, to which many hymns of the Rig Veda are devoted, is "the stabilizer and supporter of heaven."[1574] The introductory verse of the Dasakumaraccrita includes as a figure of the world axis "the stalk of the lotus where Brahma resides."[1575] Of the cosmic lotus in Buddhism, M. Mus writes: "The prolongation of the stem, which is the axis of the sensible world, bears at the summit of the universe the spiritual lotus-throne . . ."[1576] Thus does the cosmic Mount Meru become the "lotus-mountain,"[1577] and in the same way the Iranian haoma plant appears as the "imperishable pillar of life."[1578]

Figure 146. The Lotus column surmounted by the Horus-falcon.

Figure 147. Egyptian Eye (=crescent-enclosure) supported on the lotus column.

[1573] Quoted in O'Neill, op. cit., 467.

[1574] Bhawe, The Soma Hymns of the Rig Veda, 82.

[1575] Coomaraswamy, Elements of Buddhist Iconography, 89, note 139.

[1576] Quoted in ibid., 55.

[1577] O'Neill, op. cit., 400.

[1578] Ibid., 290.

Figure 148. Saturn riding on his serpentine chariot and wielding his scythe (from Poeticon Astronomicon, Venice, 1485).

Sword

Saturn comes to power wielding his curved sword or scythe, which writers generally connect with the crescent "moon." The Greek Kronos carries as his special weapon the curved harpe and it has often been proposed that this weapon lies behind the relatively late astronomical sign of Saturn, ♄. The harpe and the winged harpies (birdlike female monsters) surely trace to the same root. (That is, "sword" and "wings" refer to the same cosmic form.)

In a Sumerian hymn, Ninurta, or Saturn, invokes the "sickle of my Anuship" [i.e., of kingship] and the weapon is called at once sharur and shargaz—both names of Sin, the crescent "moon."1579 Sin is the "sickle" and the "curved sabre" of the great god.1580

The Egyptians knew the sword as the khepesh, written with the signs and , or as the ma, whose sign, , depicts a sickle fashioned from the jawbone of an animal. The Pyramid Texts identify the great god's sword as "a sharp strong horn"1581 (sword=horn). But khepesh also means the "shoulder" or "two arms" of heaven. And here the symbolism meshes precisely with that of the Babylonian system, which declares the sickle of Sin to be "the two arms" of Enlil, the cosmic mountain.

That the sword shares in the coherent imagery of the Saturnian crescent is suggested by other traditions also. In Genesis 3:24, Yahweh is said to have placed in front (translators say to the "East") "of the garden of Eden kerubim and the flaming blade of the sword which turns, to keep the way of the tree of life." If the thesis presented here is correct, the winged kerubim refer to the same revolving crescent as the turning sword. Many scholars logically connect the Hebrew kerubim with the Assyro-Babylonian kirubi, the winged and horned beasts who in the form of twins guard and define the limits of the great god's enclosure. In the Assyrian vocabulary, kirub means "bull," while kirubu designates a large species of bird of prey. The revolving "sword" of Genesis, on the other hand, is the khereb, a "curved sickle," recognized as the Hebrew counterpart of the Greek harpe and the Egyptian *khepesh.*1582

The Altar

1579 Combe, op. cit., 11; Langdon, Semitic Mythology, 91.

1580 Langdon, op. cit., 27.

1581 Pyramid Text 240.

1582 Lenormant, Les Origines Vol. I, 129*ff.*

For reasons which I intend to examine at length in a subsequent volume, the Saturnian crescent was the receptacle of a primordial "sacrifice." Together the crescent and cosmic mountain formed "the Altar of the World."

Egyptian hieroglyphs record the altar by the sign . Upon the altar—called the Altar of Hetep ("rest") or Altar of the Uatchet (Eye)—rests all the food and drink of the celestial habitation.

In the Book of the Dead, the great god comes forth "in the city of Annu, upon the altar of the lady of the two lands," and it is clear that the Egyptians conceived the altar as supporting and embracing the entire celestial domain (or twin "lands").[1583] Hence the sign —glyph of the "holy domain"—shows the womb of Nut , resting on the altar.

Always, the altar conveys the same significance as the primordial "world." Among the Hindus, notes Eliade, "the building of the altar was conceived as a creation of the world. The water with which the clay was mixed was the same as the primeval waters."[1584] "As large as the altar is, so large is the earth," reads the Satapatha Brahmana.[1585]

The same altar may be termed "the navel of the earth . . . the lap [womb] of Aditi," in close correspondence with Egyptian symbolism.[1586]

Hebrew and Muslim thought, according to Wensinck, considered the altar "as a symbolic representation of the earth."[1587] A Midrash asks, "Where is the navel? In Jerusalem. But the navel itself is the altar."[1588] Of the primeval altar, tradition says, "Its top reached to heaven."[1589]

The god upon the altar is simply the "sun" resting in the pillared crescent . (Hence the image of the sun-in-crescent upon the Sabaean altar in fig. 63.) Early prototypes of the altar throughout the ancient world not only connect it with the central pillar of the Cosmos[1590] but suggest a radical association with the cosmic bull, while altars from Persia to Crete to Africa were either decorated with horns or given the shape of horns. "The horned altar" and "the horns of the altar" were, of course, common phrases among the ancient Hebrews.

Above And Below, Left And Right

More than once, in discussing common translations of ancient sources, I have had occasion to refer to the inappropriate use of the phrases "east and west," "north and south." and "heaven and earth." Such terminology, I have suggested, arises from the habit of reading solar imagery into non-solar texts and of interpreting the great god's cosmic dwelling in terrestrial terms.

[1583] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 476.

[1584] Patterns 372.

[1585] Eggeling, op. cit., Part I, 86.

[1586] Ibid., 213, note 2.

[1587] "The Ideas of the Western Semites," 10.

[1588] Ibid., 11.

[1589] Ibid.

[1590] Schwabe, Archetype und Tierkreis, 377*ff.*

Without attempting to provide a complete analysis of the problem (which I intend to explore in a separate volume on Egyptian religion), I shall simply indicate the manner in which the question can be resolved by reference to the Saturnian configuration.

Of course, there can be little progress toward an improved understanding of ancient religious texts until the translators and commentators acknowledge the celestial character of the imagery. From start to finish the hymns and liturgies deal with cosmic figures and cosmic events. And when these mythical figures and events are connected with a primordial "land" it is imperative that one understand this "land" as the enclosure of the original great god, who is Saturn. The texts deal, not with geography, but with cosmography—the map of the celestial kingdom. In relation to Saturn's dwelling the words which translators render as "east" and "west" actually mean something quite different. And while the modern phrase "heaven and earth" suggests little concrete meaning, the archaic terms so translated convey a very specific sense.

In the Egyptian language the word rendered as "east" is Abtet (Abt or Abti), while the word translated "west" is Amentet (or Amenti). To what did the Egyptians refer by these words?

If the first mistake of the translators is to assume that Abtet and Amentet are geographical terms, the second is to assume that they necessarily refer to opposite regions, or directions. Standard translations are based on the premise that the "sun" rises in the east and sets in the west. Yet to anyone following this logic ancient Egyptian texts will leave the impression that the priests were continually forgetful of the place of sunrise and sunset. If Amentet was the "west," why did the Egyptians repeatedly describe the great god "coming forth" or "renewing himself" in Amentet*?* I cite below a few conventional translations:

Behold the coming forth from the West.[1591]

Osiris, He who arises in Health, He at the Head of the West.[1592]

The arms of the inhabitants of the West receive thee in thy forms of glory and rejuvenation.[1593]

I make myself young (in) the fair West.[1594]

When thou comest forth in peace there arise shouts of delight to thee, O thou lord of heaven, thou prince of the West.[1595]

Of such imagery as this, Kristensen writes: "What was meant is evidently that the sun, when it goes down does not die but reaches the hidden fountain of life."[1596] But one naturally remains skeptical of such conjecture. Do the hymns cited above portray the solar orb "when it goes down"? The truth is that if we substituted "east" for "west" in these lines they would appear to solar mythologists as perfectly reasonable descriptions of the rising sun. Rather than the "west," Amentet is simply the Holy Land, the primeval enclosure. The head, or governor, of Amentet is the central sun, which does not rise or set, but "goes in and out" (i.e., grows bright and diminishes) with the full cycle of each "day." The great god's "coming forth in Amentet" signifies the beginning of the day. (An equivalent phrase, "coming forth by day," occurs repeatedly in Egyptian texts). Thus Chapter CVII of the Book of the Dead is "The Chapter of Going Into and Coming Out from the Gate of the Gods of Amentet."[1597] Chapter XVII extols the great god's "coming out and going in" within Amentet.[1598]

[1591] Piankoff, The Tomb of Ramesses VI, 217.

[1592] Piankoff, Mythological Papyri, 76.

[1593] Ibid., 37.

[1594] Ibid.

[1595] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 85.

[1596] Quoted in Piankoff, Mythological Papyri, 30.

[1597] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 314.

It is the same thing to say that the god grows bright and diminishes within the womb of the mother goddess. There was, in fact, a goddess Ament whom the Egyptians equated with Isis, while Isis herself was "the Divine Mother, Lady of Amentet."[1599] The phrase has no original connection with geography; it simply refers to Isis as the womb or enclosure of the Holy Land above. Hathor is the same goddess: "Hathor, Lady of Amentet . . . , Lady of the Holy Country."[1600] Elsewhere the texts identify Amentet as the circumpolar Tuat, the womb of Nut.[1601] There is no association with the geographical "west."

To reside within the Holy Land of Amentet is to rest in the mother-womb, which goes by many names. In text after text the priests seek to show that the various names of the Holy Land signified the same enclosure. When the Book of the Dead calls Osiris the "mighty one who comest forth from Nut, thou king in the city of Nifu-ur, thou Governor of Amentet, thou lord of Abtu (Abydos),"[1602] the reference is not to different dwellings but to different names of the same dwelling.

What has caused so much confusion is the fact that the Holy Land is a bisected circle. The central sun is he who "unites the two Tuats, the two regions of Amentet."[1603] Here one must reckon with the paradox of the celestial twins. In naming the two divisions of the Holy Land the Egyptians brought together two independent names for the enclosure as a whole, pairing them as opposites.

This development of the language stands out in the case of Isis and Nephthys, both of whom, independently, denote the full circle of the Aten ☉. Isis is the "house," "chamber," or "throne" of the central sun, while Nephthys is the "Lady of the House" (or simply "Lady-House"). As a pair, however, Isis and Nephthys personify two halves of the circle, the "left and the right," suggested by the counterpoised positions of the revolving crescent , .

In the same way the Egyptians paired the name Amentet with another name of the same dwelling—Abtet—yielding the dual kingdom of Amentet-Abtet.[1604] When joined as opposites, Amentet and Abtet are precisely synonymous with the twins Isis and Nephthys. By this union, Amentet acquires the literal meaning "region of the right" and Abtet, "region of the left." The idea that the god-king, standing in the centre of the enclosure, balances the divisions of the left and right will be found repeatedly in both the texts and in art. That translators commonly use the terms "east and "west" has caused a major confusion in conventional translations.

Like Amentet, in other words, the Egyptian term Abtet (conventionally translated "east") may refer either to the entire celestial kingdom or to one of its two divisions. Fundamentally, Abtet is the sacred land at the centre and summit. The king, in the Pyramid Texts, seeks to attain this dwelling, with the words, "May I ascend and lift myself up to the sky as the great star in the midst of Abtet." "I have come into heaven, and I embrace my seat which is in Abtet," reads a line from the Book of the Dead.[1605] Here, any connection of Abtet with the "east" or the solar orb exists only in the mind of the translators.

[1598] Budge, The Papyrus of Ani, 27.

[1599] Piankoff, Mythological Papyri, 93.

[1600] Ibid., 79.

[1601] "Hail Re! His resting place is the Tuat; what he traverses is the Beautiful Amentet." Piankoff, Pyramid of Unas, 30. "The disk is in the Tuat, the disk rests in Amentet." Piankoff, Tomb of Ramesses VI, 376. "The souls of Re in Amentet are exalted, and in the zone of the Tuat the souls . . . cry out in their songs of exultation unto the soul of Re who dwelleth therein . . . O ye Hetepu gods, grant ye that I may enter into the Tuat, and let me make a way into the beautiful Amentet." Budge, Egyptian Book of the Dead, 612-13.

[1602] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 387.

[1603] Piankoff, The Tomb of Ramesses VI, 76. [Emphasis added.]

[1604] Pyramid Text 1038.

[1605] Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 516-17.

The same inappropriate use of terms is evident in the phrase "heaven and earth" recurring in virtually all accepted translations. "The universe as a whole was referred to as 'heaven and earth,'" states Frankfort.1606 The two terms in question are pet (translated "heaven") and ta (translated "earth").

Literally, the phrase "pet and ta" means "the above and below." Numerous Egyptian illustrations indicate that, together, the two divisions composed an enclosure around the "sun"-god. As opposites the pet and ta mean the celestial twins, here personifying the revolving crescent in its alternate positions above and below the stationary god.

But this does not mean that pet necessarily denotes "above" any more than ta necessarily means "below." As a matter of fact, many signs extol "two pet," one above and one below (denoted by the sign and its inverse). And few phrases are more common in Egyptian sources than the "two ta," explicitly referring to the upper and lower divisions of the celestial kingdom. Fundamentally, the pet is the twofold circle of Saturn's Cosmos, and the ta is the same circle, conceived as an enclosure of "land" around the central sun. It is only as a pair that pet and ta acquire the meaning "above and below." And in no sense does the translation "heaven and earth" convey the tangible significance of the terms.

The Egyptian "circle of above and below" is the womb of Nut, the "holy abode" (written with the sign).1607 Yet Nut's identity with the full circle did not prevent the Egyptians from pairing Nut with another goddess, Naunet, so that together they represented the two halves of the circle, represented by the signs of the "above" (Nut) and the "below" (Naunet). In the same way the priests joined Nut with the male figure Geb, identifying Nut with the upper half of the enclosure and Geb with the lower. According to tradition the separation of the portions was carried out by the god Shu, the pillar with outstretched arms. *Indeed, it was the arms of Shu (*i.e., the Saturnian crescent) which divided the circle into upper and lower regions, according to the original tradition.

The division of the enclosure into male (lower) and female (upper) halves gave rise to two interrelated signs of masculine and feminine connotation. The sign depicts the male power (usually translated "lord") while the same semicircular image inverted (and in smaller scale) signifies "feminine." Together the upper and lower hemispheres compose the complete circle of the Aten or shen bond. To translate masculine and feminine divisions as "heaven" and "earth" simply destroys the interrelated symbolism of the enclosure.

Figure 149. Nut and Geb, as the Above and the Below.

The terminology in question ("left and right," "above and below") concerns celestial regions marked out by the revolving Saturnian crescent, which is the ever-turning face of the central sun (or the "two" faces of the twin god). This is why the sign , which may also be presented inversely , means, among other things, heru, or "face." The herui are the "two faces" of Horus, or of Horus and Set, acknowledged personifications of the "Upper Land" and the "Lower Land."

Pertaining to the same imagery is the notion of two semicircular "mounds" joined so as to form a full circle. The Egyptian "mound" sign is nothing more than one half of the quartered womb of Nut . Its

---

1606 Op. cit., 19.

1607 "Nut encompasses and 'is' heaven and earth," states Neumann. Op. cit., 223.

meaning is “division of the holy abode.” The central sun may be designated either “the Great One in the Mound” or the dweller in “two” mounds.1608

The two mounds are the two atenti or aterti, the two halves of the Aten. Atent, written with the sign (one half of the elongated shen bond, or cartouche), signifies a “division into opposite regions.” The texts speak of an atert meht, the “lower half” of the Aten; and an atert shema, the “upper half.” Any attempt to understand such terminology in terrestrial terms can only yield confusion.

The divisions of the “right and left” and “above and below” are not only manifestly cosmic, their special character derives from the relation of the revolving crescent to the stationary god and his enclosure. When the crescent passes below the god it “supports” him, and when it arches above , it “bows” to him. Thus the texts say of the cosmic twins: “The two mistresses of Buto [the celestial city] accompany you to the right and left . . . , they support you and bow to you.”1609 The same thing is said of the twin regions:

> The two regions of Abtet [the left] and Amentet [the right] make adoration unto thee, bowing low and paying homage unto [sethes, “supporting”] *thee.*1610
>
> O luminary, the lower and upper halves of Heaven [pet] *come to thee and bow low in adoration.*1611

That the bowing region means the upper half of the enclosure (in opposition to the “supporting” region below) is demonstrated by the symbolism of Nut. While Nut, in her relationship to Geb represents “above,” this quality of the goddess may be represented either by the sign or another sign of precisely the same significance— —depicting the “above” as a bowing goddess.

Saturn’s Day

In the revolving crescent we possess the key to Egyptian symbolism of the “day” and “night,” for the crescent’s position simply reflected the position of the solar orb in relation to the terrestrial observer. One should think of the revolving crescent as Saturn’s ship, in which the god voyaged around the four regions (“above” , “left” , “below” , “right”), all the while standing in one place. The four positions (regions) will correspond to four segments of the archaic day:

1. The cycle began with the descent of the crescent as it moved from its position “above” (solar orb directly overhead) to its position directly to the “left” of Saturn (solar sunset). On reaching the region of the “left,” Saturn and the crescent began to grow bright, due to the darkening of the heavens as the solar orb sank below the horizon. Hence, in the general symbolism of the “left and right” (Abtet and Amentet) the left is the region of “dawn” or “growing bright.”

The cosmic ship, on reaching Abtet, the “left,” became the Matet ship, whose name means “becoming strong.” It was, in other words, a descending ship which grew bright—a fact which has frustrated many solar mythologists, who would have expected the “dawn” or “morning” to express itself in a rising solar bark. “I descend in the ship of the morning,” states the god.1612

1608 Piankoff, Litany of Re, 169.

1609 Lacau, op. cit., 37.

1610 Budge, The Egyptian Book of the Dead, 85.

1611 Ibid., 80.

1612 Coffin Text 118; see also Spell 302.

Including the polar mount, the image of the "dawn" is . The Egyptians gave human form to the image in the hieroglyph , symbol of the tua or "morning." Mythically, the god "awakens," and the spirits of the celestial city come to life, "praising" and "supporting" the god with the descending crescent-arms. It was these aspects of the archaic dawn which supplied the Egyptian pillar-sign with its interconnected meanings: "to awaken," "to praise," "to support."

2. The supreme moment of the "day" was that at which the Saturnian crescent sat squarely upon the central pillar, the two horns of the crescent reaching equally to the left and right . At this moment the solar orb stood directly beneath the terrestrial observer, and the entire Saturnian configuration shone its brightest.

3. As the crescent traveled toward the region of the "right" (which it reached at the solar sunrise) Saturn's brilliance began to diminish. The god's vessel became the Semktet ship, or the ship of "becoming weak." The god "sails upstream" in the Semktet ship (again, a surprise to solar mythologists). In the dual kingdom of Abtet-Amentet the region of Amentet (the "right") is thus the domain of declining, or "going in."

4. The cycle was completed with the return of the crescent to the position "above" (solar orb directly overhead). This point in the cycle, when Saturn's light was most subdued, was the archaic "night."

The cycle of the day and night is one of the most pervasive themes in Egyptian art, and the key is the revolving crescent. In connection with the cosmic twins, I have already noted that the primal pair has its origin in the alternating positions of the crescent around the central sun, and that this symmetrical opposition is depicted in illustrations of the daily cycle. The artists often showed a pair of arms (=crescent) reaching around the Aten alternately from above and below, or from the left and right. These are not only pictures of the dual regions, but of the cycle of "coming forth and diminishing."

Around this cycle the Egyptians built an impressive range of symbols, and the underlying connection with the revolving crescent reflects itself in two basic rules:

1. All symbols of the "day" (in opposition to "night") have their origin in the image of the crescent "below." This is why the signs for the "lower" region generally overlap with signs for the "day." In fact, a number of interrelated ideas converge on the same celestial image (, , ,): "below," "lower," "day," "coming forth," "life," "existence," "awake," "support," "celebrate," "masculine power."

2. Similarly, the symbols of the "night" generally coincide with the symbols of the "above," all taking their meaning from the inverted crescent (, , ,), The meanings include: "above," "upper," "mound," "night, diminished," "negation, absence," "asleep," "concealment," "bowing," "feminine," "arrival" (at the top), and "completion" (of the cycle).

Here are a few of the key signs:

1. , . The signs not only portray the Khut or Mount of Glory, they signify "the coming forth" of the sun-god, who shines between the two peaks of the right and left. In this sense the signs have exactly the same meaning as the image , i.e., the "day." But the mountain sign also means "the below."

While Egyptologists like to think of the two peaks as fixed on our earth, the Egyptians themselves knew that the great god "sailed" in the Khut or "revolved" round the Aten in the Khut. This is why the artists not only placed the two peaks in the revolving ship, but often depicted them in an inverted position above the Aten.

The inverted peaks simultaneously mean “the above” and “concealment” or “obscurity.” Together, the upright and inverted peaks represent both the full cycle of the day and the full circle (above and below) of the celestial kingdom.

Figure 150. Khut and Ankh, interchangeable symbols of the twin-peaked mountains.

Figure 151. (a)

Figure 151. (b) Egyptian illustrations of the Ankh, with outstretched arms holding aloft the Aten. The Ankh issues from the Tet, the pillar of “stability.” (a & b)

2. . No Egyptian sign is more familiar to the modern world than the Ankh. In Egyptian symbolism the Ankh corresponds in fundamental meaning to the Khut, or Mount of Glory. To convey this equation the artists either superimposed the Ankh on the two peaks (fig. 150) or showed the Aten resting, not on the Khut, but on two arms extending upward from the Ankh (figs. 151a, 151b).

The Ankh (whose origins the experts have long debated) is but a conventionalized image of the polar configuration during the period of "coming forth," or "life." We have already seen that the image of the crescent-enclosure passed into the related forms , , , . The Ankh . merely adds the central pillar.

Just as the central sun "comes forth in the Mount of Glory," so also does it "come forth in the Ankh"—literally, "in the Mountain of life." As a figure of the sun-god's period of brilliance or "activity" the hieroglyph came to signify "life" generally.

3. . This sign for the "upper face" of the sun-god takes its meaning from the crescent in its position "above" , i.e., the "night"-time position. Thus, in addition to its meaning as "the upper region" the sign also denotes "obscurity," "concealment," and "night."

To show the relation of above and below ("night and day"), the artists often placed the sign over the cleft peak , so that together the two images present an enclosure, signifying the full circle of the Aten.

Figure 152. Together, the "above" and the "below" (the upraised arms) form the enclosure of "the above and below."

Figure 153. Nut, the Above, held aloft by Shu. (Arms of Shu=ship=twin peaks as figures of the Below).

4. , , , , . Upraised arms, in Egyptian symbolism, signify the crescent "below" , and thus possess the full range of meanings associated with Saturn's "day." The Ka-arms, commonly shown supporting the Aten, convey the sense of "life," "coming forth," "support," and "masculine power" ("below"="male principle"). The sign (or) denotes "living Re," while the sign carries the interrelated meanings "to support," "to celebrate."

But numerous illustrations also show the Ka-arms embracing the Aten from above (figs. 113, 114). Here they denote "the upper region," the region of the "night." Hence the related signs and (inverted) arms mean "cessation," "absence," "negation," and completion."

5. , , . In illustrations of the daily cycle, these signs of the “upper region” (corresponding to the crescent above) are interchangeable with the image of the inverted cleft peak . They mean “hidden,” “concealed,” and by extension, “mysterious,” “secret.”

(Concerning the sign , however, an additional significance deserves consideration. The twofold enclosure, or circle of the cosmic twins—pertaining to symmetrically related positions of the crescent—is a circle half light and half shadow. In one character, the twins simply represent the light and dark divisions, so that the inverted semicircle might represent, not the “night”-time crescent, but the shadow in the “day”-time configuration . It is thus highly significant that the sign , read Khaibit, means “shadow.” As the female [upper] portion of the circle, the Khaibit comes to be conceived as the consort of the male power [lower region]. Of course, one could hardly expect the Egyptians to rigorously maintain the distinction between the “shadow” and the inverted crescent.)

6. , , , . As earlier noted, all symbols of the Aten resting in the horns signify “coming forth” and “below.” But in the sign the horns are inverted over the central sun and pillar. The sign’s meaning is “concealed,” “mysterious.”

7. , , , . All of these images of the primeval “mound” depict the upper region, marked out by the crescent at the completion of the daily cycle. Thus the mound sign (or) means “to arrive (at the top),” “to complete the journey (or cycle).” Closely related is the sign , “to arrive.” Generally the mound signs refer to the region of “sleep,” “death,” or “diminished light.”

The reverse of these mound signs is suggesting the crescent in its “day”-time position. The glyph means “golden” or “brilliant.”

8. , . While the sign denotes the masculine power of the Cosmos (the below), the inverse image denotes the feminine (the above). When the crescent reaches the below the celestial kingdom is in “celebration.” Hence the sign means “celebration,” “festival of life.”

Though many additional aspects of the Egyptian twofold kingdom and the related circle of “day and night” need to be explored, I cite the above simply to indicate how the Saturnian configuration can illuminate certain Egyptian images which have long remained unexplained.

Concerning the relation of the Egyptian system to the language and symbols of other nations, I offer no steadfast rule. But there is every reason to believe that certain general principles can be applied elsewhere. In ancient Sumerian thought, for example, the “Cosmos” is designated by the term an-ki. (Jensen renders the word as “the All.”)[1613] The most common translation of an-ki is “heaven and earth.” But the symbol of “the All” is , and the literal meaning of an-ki is “above and below,” suggesting a noteworthy parallel with the Egyptian circle of pet-ta. And just as the Egyptian goddess Nut forms the “circle of above and below,” so does the Sumerian goddess Inanna “encompass the an-ki.”

[1613] Op. cit., 1-3.

To unravel the symbolism of the dual kingdom, or of the quartered kingdom, the first requirement is to put aside prevailing geographical interpretations. The language originated in connection with the celestial dwelling. In the original imagery the phrase “heaven and earth” is meaningless. There is no “north,” “south,” “east,” or “west,” There is simply the above and below, the left and right, the regions of coming forth and declining. As to the capacity of this principle to resolve numerous enigmas of ancient speech I have no doubt.

XI: Conclusion

In the foregoing pages I have attempted to show that the oldest motifs of ritual and myth focus on a coherent set of ideas—and that these ideas bear no relationship to the present world order. What modern man views as creations of a fragmented and irrational imagination actually pertain to a vision of exceptional simplicity. The Cyclopes, dragons, and one-legged giants speak not for unconstrained speculation, but for once visible powers.

To modern writers, seeking to penetrate the language of myth, it is as if early races contrived their fantastic symbolism in conscious disdain for later efforts to understand. “Anyone who has ever entered the labyrinth of an archaic culture’s mythical compendia (the Pyramid Texts, the Vedas, the Theogony) can testify to a desperate suspicion that there is no thread of objective reality,” confessed one classicist. Such a suspicion is difficult to dispel in the face of such “primitive” imagery as golden mountains reaching heaven, revolving islands and temples, winged goddesses, cosmic bulls, circular serpents, and descending rivers of fire. Mythologists quickly despair of rational explanation.

But it is the thesis of this book that the confusion results chiefly from the failure of the modern age to discern the underlying cosmic order to which the myths refer. Our reconstruction of this order includes the following elements:

1. In the earliest age recalled by man the planet Saturn was the dominant celestial body. Ancient races the world over record that there was once a “Golden Age”—a kingdom of cosmic harmony ruled by a central light god. Numerous sources identify this light god as the planet Saturn.

2. Accounts of Saturn’s appearance suggest that the planet hung ominously close to the earth. In early ritual and astronomy Saturn appears as the “primeval sun,” described as a figure of “terrifying splendour.” Today, Saturn appears as a bare speck of light following the same visual path as the solar orb. But during the legendary Golden Age, Saturn stood in the north. Legends from every continent depict the primeval sun as an immense, fiery globe at the north celestial pole—the visual pivot of the heavens. Unlike the rising and setting solar orb, the primeval sun remained fixed in one place.

3. The modern age has misread the ancient accounts of “the beginning.” These accounts speak of a creator, a first man, and a first king—all referring to the same cosmic figure. It is impossible to understand these accounts in any conventional sense because the ancient terminology carries meanings radically different from the modern. The legendary creator, first man, and first king was Saturn.

4. The subject of the global creation legend is a spectacular cosmic event actually witnessed by the ancients: massive quantities of cosmic debris exploded from Saturn, clouding the heavens and eventually congealing into a vast band around the planet. In mythical terms this band was Saturn’s created “land” in heaven. Saturn ruled this celestial kingdom as both the Universal Monarch and Adam, the Primordial “Man.”

5. The ancients drew pictures of Saturn incessantly, and these pictures will be found around the world. Ancient papyri, clay tablets, monuments, artifacts, and rock drawings consistently show a central orb surrounded by a circle. This symbol of the “enclosed sun” is the original hieroglyph for the planet Saturn.

6. Images of Saturn in his enclosure occur on every page of ancient texts. The band is Saturn’s spouse, the mother goddess. But it is also his revolving temple, city, or island in heaven. It is the stationary, but ever-turning “world-wheel” recalled by almost every ancient race. Saturn wears the band as a golden girdle, collar, or crown. He dwells in it as the pupil of the all-seeing Eye. The same band receives mythical interpretation as Saturn's throne, a receptacle of cosmic waters, and an encircling serpent.

7. Four primary streams of light appeared to radiate from Saturn, dividing the Saturnian band into quarters. The symbols of these four streams are the sun-cross and enclosed sun cross . Mythically, these are the four rivers of the lost paradise, the four winds, and the four pillars of Saturn's Cosmos. The enclosed sun-cross is thus the universal image of the "unified state" on our earth, for every terrestrial "holy land" was a copy of the ideal kingdom above.

8. The same records which describe Saturn's band and its four-fold division depict a pillar-like stream ascending the world axis and visually seeming to sustain Saturn's dwelling. Two primary images of this "cosmic mountain" are and . In the myths this column appears as the great god's single leg, a vertical stream of water or air (the North Wind), and the erect serpent or dragon of the deep.

9. Receiving light from the solar orb, the Saturnian band acquired a brightly illuminated crescent, which, as the earth rotated on its axis, visually revolved around Saturn each day. The light and dark portions of the band found expression in the black and white cosmic twins, while the alternating positions of the crescent produced the twins of the "right and left" or "above and below."

10. In the polar configuration the ancients saw, at once, the cleft summit of the cosmic mountain, with the central sun standing between the peaks of the right and left; the cosmic bull supporting Saturn between its horns; Saturn's crescent-ship on the mountaintop; the heaven-sustaining giant with out-stretched arms; the winged god or goddess; the plant of life; Saturn's turning sword; and the altar of the world. It was the relation of the Saturnian crescent to Saturn's period of brilliance which produced the original symbolism of the four directions and of "day and night."

In the earliest age the Saturnian configuration was the exclusive focal point of religious rites. But when Saturn's Golden Age passed away, mankind drew on all aspects of nature to commemorate his reign. The solar orb, the moon, meteorological forces, various animals, mountains and rivers—all manifest some special quality of the creator-king. And where no representative powers were available in nature, the ancients fashioned their own monuments in earth and stone.

The first requirement, then, is to distinguish between the primeval, cosmic forms on the one hand, and, on the other hand, the representative images chosen to depict those forms in ritual and myth. We must separate the archetype (concealed reality) from the symbol (analogy or representation of reality).

In examining the world of symbolism our predicament is much like that of the dwellers in Plato's allegorical cave, who can discern the nature of things only through the shadowy specters cast on the wall. Most of the cave's inhabitants take the shadows for the real world, but occasionally a wiser man recognizes that the shadows are merely the blurred image of a more coherent reality.

So it is with ancient myth and ritual. One must not confuse the shadow with its source, the symbol with the thing symbolized.

If the Egyptians came to regard the bull as sacred it was only because this animal was the natural counterpart to the Bull of Heaven, whose horns, supporting the very vault of the Cosmos, "shone like day." If the eagle was similarly venerated, this was because its expanded wings seemed to mirror a special quality of the "winged" creator, or the "winged" goddess.

The same principle applies to the symbolism of the constellations. The vital powers depicted by constellation figures date back to an era long before men began imposing anthropomorphic and zoomorphic forms on star groups. But eventually the ancients sought to represent diverse aspects and traditions of the great god by sketching them out in the heavens.

Could a patternless group of stars have inspired the history of mighty Orion? Rather, the story of Orion preceded astrology. (In fact, Orion is widely acknowledged to be the Greek version of the Babylonian Tammuz-Ninurta, the planet Saturn.) And when priest-astronomers finally projected Orion onto the starry dome, they received only the most feeble assistance from the stellar patterns themselves.

Likewise, our sun, contrary to long-standing opinion, never inspired the idea of a "supreme god" and never produced an original myth of creation. Only in later times did the poets and historians confuse the solar orb with the great god of beginnings. But that such a confusion did occur is crucial to an understanding of the development of ancient religion. In Egypt, for example, the original ritual of the central sun was eventually transformed into eulogies to the solar orb; and the devotion to the celestial kingdom passed finally into a veneration of nature as a whole. (The most decisive shift occurred in the time of Akhenaten.) One could trace similar developments among numerous races, as priests, philosophers, astronomers, and more practical-minded generations became ever more preoccupied with "this world," recasting Saturnian imagery within the context of a less spectacular cosmic order.

Rather than attempt to follow the complex process here, I ask the reader to await treatment of the subject in the second volume of this work (entitled The Cataclysm). The fact is that the traditions reviewed in previous sections supply only the preface to the Saturnian drama. In these pages I have sought only to demonstrate the reality of Saturn's polar configuration, reserving discussion of the ultimate calamity for the subsequent volume.

Saturn's death or fall, we will discover, constituted the prototypal catastrophe, recounted by the ancients in numerous forms and elaborations. The collapse of the celestial kingdom; the world-destroying deluge; the battle with the serpent-dragon of the deep; the birth of Jupiter; the Child-Hero; the resurrection and transformation of Saturn; and Saturn's eventual departure to the distant realm—these are key elements in a story of incalculable impact on ancient imagination.

But to decipher the myths of the great catastrophe one must have clearly in mind the nature of the celestial order brought to an end with Saturn's fall. For those willing to pursue the question in an objective spirit there is the promise of dramatic discoveries about man's past.

Bibliography

V. S. Agrawala,

—Sparks from the Vedic Fire (Benares, 1962);

—The Thousand Syllabled Speech (Benares, 1963).

W. F. Albright,

—"The Mouth of the Rivers," The American Journal of Semitic Languages and Literatures, Vol. XXXV, No. 4;

—"The Goddess of Life and Wisdom," The American Journal of Semitic Languages and Literatures, Vol. XXXVI, No. 261.

Hartley Burr Alexander,

—North American Mythology, "Mythology of All Races," Vol. X (New York, 1964);

—Latin American Mythology, "Mythology of All Races," Vol. XI (New York, 1964).

John M. Allegro, The Sacred Mushroom and the Cross (New York, 1970).

Apollodorus, The Library (Cambridge, 1967), James G. Frazer, ed., 2 vols.

James Bailey, The God-Kings and the Titans (New York, 1973).

H. S. Bellamy, Moons, Myths and Man (New York, 1938).

Elsdon Best, The Astronomical Knowledge of the Maori (Wellington, 1922).

S. S. Bhawe, The Soma Hymns of the Rig Veda (Baroda, 1957).

C. J. Bleeker, Hathor and Thoth (Leiden, 1973).

Raymond Bloch, "Le Symbolisme Cosmique," Série Orientale Roma, Vol. XIV (Rome, 1957).

Franz Boll, "Kronos-Helios," Archiv für Religionswissenschaft, XIX (1916-19).

A. Bouche-Leclerq, L'Astrologie Grecque (Paris, 1899).

Robert Briffault, The Mothers (London, 1927), Vol. I.

Robert Brown, Jr.,

—Eradinus: River and Constellatton (London, 1883);

—Researches into the Origins of the Primitive Constellations (Oxford, 1900), 2 vols.

K. H. Brugsch,

—Thesaurus Inscriptionum Ägyptiacarum (Leipzig, 1883-91);

—Religion und Mythologie der Alten Ägypter (Leipzig, 1890).

E. A. Budge,

—The Egyptian Book of the Dead (London, 1901);

—A Hieroglyphic Vocabulary to the Theban Recension of the Book of the Dead (London, 1911);

—From Fetish to God in Ancient Egypt (London, 1934);

—Osiris: The Egyptian Religion of Resurrection (New York, 1961);

—The Papyrus of Ani (New York, 1967);

—The Gods of the Egyptians (Dover edition, New York,1969), 2 vols;

—The Litany of Funerary Offerings (New York, 1972).

C. A. Burland, The Gods of Mexico (New York, 1967).

E. A. S. Butterworth,

—The Tree at the Navel of the Earth (Berlin, 1970);

—The Cambridge Ancient History (Cambridge, 1971), Vol. I.

Joseph Campbell,

—Oriental Mythology (Viking Compass edition, New York, 1970);

—Occidental Mythology (Viking Compass edition, New York, 1970).

Maurice A. Canney, "Ancient Conceptions of Kingship," Oriental Studies in Honor of Cursetji E. Pavry, J. D. C. Pavry, ed. (London, 1933).

Albert J. Carnoy, Iranian Mythology, "Mythology of All Races," Vol. VI (New York, 1964).

R. H. Charles, ed., The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament (Oxford, 1913).

Mohini M. Chatterji, translator, The Bhagavad Gita (New York, 1960).

J. C. Cirlot, A Dictionary of Symbols (London, 1962).

R. T. Rundle Clark, Myth and Symbol in Ancient Egypt (New York, 1959).

Hermann Collitz, "König Yima und Saturn," in Oriental Studies in Honor of Cursetji E. Pavry, J. D. C. Pavry, ed. (London, 1933).

V. C. C. Collum, "Die Schopferische Mutter Göttin," in Olga Fröbe-Kapteyn, Vorträge über Gestalt und Kult der Grossen Mutter, EranosJahrbuch (Uppsala, 1938).

E. Combe, Histoire du Culte de Sin (Paris, 1908).

Jack Randolph Conrad, The Horn and the Sword (New York, 1957).

A. B. Cook, Zeus: A Study in Ancient Religion (New York, 1964), 3 vols.

A. K. Coomaraswamy,

—"Symbolism of the Dome," The Indian Historical Quarterly, Vol. XIV, No. 1 (March 1938);

—A New Approach to the Vedas (London, 1963);

—Elements of Buddhist Iconography (New Delhi, 1972).

A. K. Coomaraswamy and Sister Nivedita, Myths of the Hindus and Buddhists (New York, 1967).

F. Cumont, The Mysteries of Mithra (New York, 1956).

James Darmesteter, The Zend Avesta (Oxford, 1880), 3 vols.

H. R. Ellis Davidson, Gods and Myths of Northern Europe, Penguin Books edition (Middlesex, 1964).

Hertha von Dechend, with Giorgio de Santillana, Hamlet's Mill (Boston, 1969).

Armand Delatte, Études sur la Litterature Pythagoricienne (Paris, 1915).

Edouard Dhorme, Les Religions de Babylonie et d'Assyrie (Paris, 1949).

Roland B. Dixon, Oceanic Mythology “Mythology of All Races,” Vol. IX (New York, 1964).

Ignatius Donnelly,

—Atlantis, the Antediluvian World (New York, 1882);

—Ragnarok: The Age of Fire and Gravel (New York, 1883).

M. J. Dresden, “Mythology of Ancient Iran,” in Samuel N. Kramer, ed., Mythologies of the Ancient World (Garden City, 1961).

E. S. Drower, The Coronation of the Great Sislam (Leiden, 1962).

Fray Diego Duran, Book of the Gods and Rites, Fernando Horcasitas and Doris Heyden, trans. (Norman, 1971).

J. Eggeling, trans., Satapatha Brahmana (Delhi, 1963), 3 vols.

Robert Eisler, Weltenmantel und Himmelszelt (Munchen, 1910).

Mircea Eliade,

—Le Chamanisme et les Techniques Archaiques de l’Extase (Paris, 1951);

—The Myth of the Eternal Return (Westminster, 1954);

—Patterns in Comparative Religion (New York, 1963).

Ellen Russell Emerson, Indian Myths (Wayzata, 1965).

Énel, Les Origines de la Genèse et l’Enseignement des Temples de l’Ancienne Égypte (Paris, 1963).

Adolf Erman, The Literature of the Ancient Egyptians (New York, 1971).

W. Y. Evans-Wentz, The Tibetan Book of the Dead (Oxford, 1957).

Hugh G. Evelyn-White, trans., Hesiod, the Homeric Hymns and Homerica (Cambridge, 1970).

G. S. Faber,

—A Dissertation on the Cabiri (Oxford, 1803), 2 vols.;

—The Origins of Pagan Idolatry (London, 1816), 3 vols.

R. O. Faulkner, trans., The Ancient Egyptian Pyramid Texts (Oxford, 1969) , trans., The Coffin Texts (Oxford, 1974).

John C. Ferguson, Chinese Mythology, “Mythology of All Races,” Vol. VIII (New York, 1964).

Maurice Fluegel, Philosophy, Qabbala and Vedanta (Baltimore, 1902).

Henri Frankfort,

—The Intellectual Adventure of Ancient Man (Chicago, 1946);

—Kingship and the Gods (Chicago, 1948).

James G. Frazer,

—The Golden Bough, Vol. l (London, 1907);

—The Golden Bough, abridged edition (New York, 1963).

Theodor H. Gaster, Myth, Legend and Custom in the Old Testament (New York 1969).

Peter Gelling, with Hilda Davidson, The Chariot of the Sun (New York, 1969).

Louis Ginzberg, The Legends of the Jews (Philadelphia, 1913), Vols. I and 11.

Eugene Goblet d’Alviella, The Migration of Symbols (New York, 1956).

Delia Goetz, with Sylvanus G. Morley, Popul Vuh (Norman, 1950).

B. L. Goff, Symbols of Prehistoric Mesopotamia (Yale, 1963).

Ignaz Goldziher, Mythology Among the Hebrews (New York, 1967).

Robert Graves, The Greek Myths (New York, 1955).

Robert Graves, with Raphael Patai, Hebrew Myths: The Book of Genesis (New York, 1966).

L. Grevan, Der Ka in Theologie und Königskult der Ägypter des Alten Reichs (Gluckstadt, 1952).

Jacob Grimm, Teutonic Mythology, J. S. Stallybrass, trans. (New York, 1966), 4 vols.

Rene Guenon,

—Le Roi du Monde (Paris, 1958);

—Le Symbolisme de la Croix (Paris, 1931);

—Études sur l'Hindouisme (Paris, 1968);

—Formes Traditionelles et Cycles Cosmiques (Paris, 1970).

W. K. C. Guthrie,

—The Greeks and Their Gods (Boston, 1955);

—Orpheus and Greek Religion (New York, 1966).

Manly P. Hall, An Encyclopedic Outline of Masonic, Hermetic, Qabalistic and Rosicrucian Symbolic Philosophy (San Francisco, 1928).

J. Renel Harris, Boanerges (Cambridge, 1913).

M. Selim Hassan, Hymnes Religieux du Moyen Empire (Cairo, 1928).

C. Hentze,

—"Cosmogonie du Monde Dresse Debout et duMonde Renverse," Serie Orientale Roma, Vol. XIV (Rome, 1957);

—Das Haus als Weltort de Seele (Stuttgart, 1961).

H. Heras, The Empire of the Swastika (Bombay, 1937).

Thor Heyerdahl, Kon-Tiki (Chicago, 1951).

Hirata, Pure Shinto (Yokohama, 1910).

A. M. Hocart,

—Kingship (Oxford, 1927);

—Kings and Councilors (Chicago, 1970).

Hans Hoerbiger, Glacial Kosmogonie, 2nd edition (Leipzig, 1925).

Maj Sandrnan Holmberg, The God Ptah (Lund, 1946).

Uno Holmberg,

—Der Baum des Lebens (Helsinki, 1922);

—Die Religiösen Vorstellungen der Altaischen Völker, Folklore Fellows Communications, Vol. 125 (1938);

—Siberian Mythology, "Mythology of All Races," Vol. IV (New York, 1964).

Indianapolis, Indiana, Historical Society, Walum Olum (Indianapolis, 1954).

T. Jacobsen, Toward the Image of Tammuz (Harvard, 1970).

M. Jastrow,

—The Religion of Babylonia and Assyria (Boston, 1898);

—“Sun and Saturn,” Revue d’Assyriologie et d’Archeologie Orientale, Vol. 7 (1909).

Peter Jensen, Die Kosmologie der Babylonier (Strassburg, 1890).

Alfred Jeremias,

—Monotheistische Strömungen Innerhalb der Bab. Religion (Leipzig, 1904).

—Handbuch derAltorientalischen Geisteskultur (Leipzig, 1913);

C. G. Jung, Collected Works, Bollingen Series (Princeton, 1956-72).

C. G. Jung, with C. Kerenyi,

—Essays on a Science of Mythology, R. F. C. Hull, trans. (Princeton, 1969);

—The Kalevala (Cambridge, 1963), Francis P. Magoun, Jr., translator.

Hermann Kees, “Kulttopographische und Mythologische Beiträge,” Zeitschrift für Ägyptische Sprache und Altertumskunde, 71 Band, Erstes Heft.

A. B. Keith,

—Indian Mythology, “Mythology of All Races,” Vol. XII (New York, 1964);

—The Religion and Philosophy of the Veda and Upanishads (Delhi, 1970), 2 vols.;

—Rigveda Brahmanas (Delhi, 1971).

Carl Kerenyi,

—Asklepios (New York, 1959);

—Prometheus (New York, 1963).

C. Kerenyi, with C. G. Jung, Essays on a Science of Mythology, R. F. C. Hull, trans. (Princeton, 1969).

R. Klibansky, with E. Panofsky and R. Saxl, Saturn and Melancholy (London, 1964).

Samuel Noah Kramer,

—From the Tablets of Sumer (Indian Hills, 1956);

—Mythologies of the Ancient World (New York, 1961);

—The Sacred Marriage Rite (Bloomington, 1969);

—Sumerian Mythology (New York, 1972).

Walter Krickeberg, Pre-Columbian American Religions (New York, 1969).

Pierre Lacau, Traduction des Textes des Cercueik du Moyen Empire (Paris, 1937).

Stephen Langdon,

—A Sumerian Grammar (Paris, 1911);

—Sumerian Liturgical Texts (Philadelphia, 1917);

—Sumerian Liturgies and Psalms (Philadelphia, 1919);

—“A Hymn to Eridu,” Journal of the Society of Oriental Research, Vol. 5, No. 2 (1921);

—Semitic Mythology, “Mythology of All Races,” Vol. V (New York, 1964).

Francois Lenormant,

—Chaldean Magic (London, 1878);

—Les Origines de l’Histoire (Paris, 1880), 3 vols.

Miguel Leon-Portilla, Pre-Columbian Literatures of Mexico (Norman, 1969).

G. Rachel Levy, Religious Conceptions of the Stone Age (New York, 1963).

Hildegard Lewy, “Origin and Significance of the Mâgen Dâwîd,” Archiv Orientalni, Vol. 18 (1950).

Hildegard and Julius Lewy, “The Origin of the Week and the Oldest West Asiatic Calendar” Hebrew Union College Annual, Vol. 17 (1942-43).

H. P. L’Orange, Studies in the Iconography of Cosmic Kingship (Oslo, 1953).

J. A. MacCulloch,

—Eddic Mythology, “Mythology of All Races,” Vol. II (New York, 1964);

—Celtic Mythology, “Mythology of All Races,” Vol. III (New York, 1964).

Donald A. Mackenzie, The Migration of Symbols (London, 1926).

F. P. Magoun, Jr., trans., The Kalevala (Harvard, 1963).

Maude Worcester Makemson, The Morning Star Rises (New Haven, 1941).

A. E. Mariette, Denderah (Paris, 1880).

Gerald Massey,

—The Natural Genesis (London, 1883), 2 vols.;

—Ancient Egypt (New York, 1970), 2 vols.

Leinani Melville, Children of the Rainbow (Wheaton, 1969).

Siegried Morenz, with Johannes Schubert, Der Gott auf der Blume (Ascona, 1954).

M. A. Moret, “Le Lotus et la Naissance des Dieux in Égypte,” Journal Asiatique, T IX No. 1 (Jan.-Feb. 1917).

William Mullen, “The Center Holds,” Pensee (May 1972).

W. Muller, Die Heilige Stadt (Stuttgart, 1961).

W. M. Muller, Egyptian Mythology, “Mythology of All Races,” Vol. 12 (NewYork, 1964).

E. Neumann, The Great Mother (Princeton, 1973).

Percy E. Newberry,

—“The Petty-Kingdom of the Harpoon and Egypt’s Earliest Mediterranean Port,” Annals of Archaeology and Anthropology, Vol. 1 (1908);

—“Two Cults of the Old Kingdom,” Annals of Archaeology and Anthropology, Vol. I (1908).

Hugh Nibley, “Tenting, Toll, and Taxing,” The Western Political Quarterly, Vol. XIX (1966).

Swami Nikhilananda, The Upanishads, abridged edition (New York, 1963).

Sister Nivedita, with A. K. Coomaraswamy, Myths of the Hindus and Buddhists (New York, 1967).

Zelia Nuttall, Fundamental Principles of Old and New World Civilization, Archaeological and Ethnological Papers of the Peabody Museum, Vol. II (Harvard, 1901).

W. T. Olcott, Myths of the Sun (Capricorn Books edition, New York, 1967).

John O’Neill, The Night of the Gods (London, 1893).

R. B. Onians, The Origins of European Thought (Cambridge, 1954).

Ovid, The Metamorphoses, Horace Greeley, trans. (New York, 1960).

E. Panofsky, with R. Saxl and R. Klibansky, Saturn and Melancholy (London, 1964).

Raphael Patai,

—The Hebrew Goddess (New York, 1967);

—Man and Temple (New York, 1967).

Raphael Patai, with Robert Graves, Hebrew Myths: The Book of Genesis (New York, 1966).

John Weirr Perry, Lord of the Four Quarters (G. Braziller, 1966).

Donald L. Philippi, trans., The Kojiki (Princeton, 1969).

Alexander Piankoff,

—The Tomb of Ramesses VI (New York, 1954);

—The Shrines of Tut-Ankh-Amon (New York, 1955);

—Mythological Papyri (New York, 1957);

—The Litany of Re (New York, 1964);

—The Pyramid of Unas (Princeton, 1968);

—The Wandering of the Soul (Princeton, 1974).

Erwin Pousselle, "Seelische Führung in Lebenden Taoismus," in Olga Fröbe-Kapteyn, ed., Yoga und Meditation im Osten und im Westen (Zurich, 1934);

J. B. Pritchard, ed., Ancient Near Eastern Texts Reaching to the Old Testament (Princeton, 1969);

George Rawlinson, Herodotus (London, 1964);

P. Renouf, The Egyptian Book of the Dead (London, 1904);

E. A. Reymond, The Mythical Origin of the Egyptian Temple (New York, 1969);

John Rhys, Studies in the Arthurean Legend (Oxford, 1891);

William Ridgeway,

—The Origin of Tragedy (New York, 1910).

—Dramas and Dramatic Dances of Non-European Races (Cambridge, 1915);

W. H. Roscher,

—Omphalos (Leipzig, 1913).

—Neue Omphalosstudien (Leipzig, 1915).

—Der Omphalosgedanke bei Verschiedenen Völkern (Leipzig, 1918);

Ralph L. Roys, The Book of the Chilam Balem (Norman, 1967);

Giorgio de Santillana, with Hertha von Dechend, Hamlet's Mill (Boston, 1969);

Leopold de Saussure,

—"Origine Chinoise de la Cosmologie Iranienne," Journal Asiatique (Oct.-Dec. 1922);

—"Origine Babylonienne de l'Astronomie Chinoise," Archives des Sciences Physiques et Naturelles, Vol. 5 (Jan.-Feb. 1923);

—"Le Systeme Cosmologique Sino-lranienne," Journal Asiatique (April-June 1923);

—"La Série Septénaire, Cosmologique et Planétaire," Journal Asiatique (April-June 1924), Les Origines de l'Astronomie Chinoise (Paris, 1930).

R. Saxl, with R. Klibansky and E. Panofsky, Saturn and Melancholy (London, 1964).

A. Sayce, Lectures on the Origin and Growth of Religion (Oxford, 1898).

Heinrich Schäfer, "Altägyptische Bilder der Auf- und Untergehenden Sonne," Zeitschrift für Ägyptische Sprache und Altertumskunde, VI Band.

G. Schlegel, L'Uranographie Chinoise (Taipei, 1967).

G. G. Scholem, Jewish Gnosticism, Merkabah Mysticism and Talmudic Tradition (New York, 1960).

Johannes Schubert, with Siegried Morenz, Der Gott auf der Blume (Ascona, 1954).

Julius Schwabe, Archetyp und Tierkreis (Basle, 1951).

Vincent Scully, The Earth, the Temple and the Gods (New York, 1969).

Laurette Sejourne, Burning Water (New York, 1956).

Åke W. Sjöberg with E. Bergmann, The Collection of the Sumerian Temple Hymns (Locust Valley, 1969).

G. Elliot Smith, The Evolution of the Dragon (Manchester, 1919).

Vincent A. Smith, "The Iron Pillar of Derhi," Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society (January 1897).

Herbert Spencer, The Principles of Sociology (London, 1872-96).

M. C. Stevenson, The Zuni Indians (Washington, 1905).

Snorri Sturluson, The Prose Edda, J. I. Young, trans. (Berkley, 1971).

Elmer G. Suhr,

—Before Olympos (New York, 1967);

—The Spinning Aphrodite (NewYork, 1969);

—The Mask, the Unicorn and the Messiah (New York, 1970).

Surya Kanta, The Flood Legend in Sanskrit Literature (Delhi, 1950).

Knut Tallquist, "Himmelsgegende und Winde," Studia Orientalia 11 (1928).

J. Eric and S. Thompson, Maya History and Religion (University of Oklahoma, 1970).

R. C. Thompson,

—The Reports of the Magicians and Astrologers of Ninevah and Babylon, Vol. II (London, 1900);

—The Devils and Evil Spirits of Babylonia (London, 1903).

Giuseppe Tucci, The Theory and Practice of the Mandala (London, 1969).

Edward Burnett Tylor,

—Researches into the Early History of Mankind (London, 1878);

—Primitive Culture (London, 1903).

E. Douglas Van Buren, "Concerning the Horned Cap of the Mesopotamian Gods," Orientalia, Vol. 12 (1943) Symbols of the Gods in Mesopotamia (Rome, 1945).

F. A. Vanderburgh, Sumerian Hymns from Cuneiform Texts in the British Museum (New York, 1966).

Hans Henning Van Der Osten, Ancient Oriental Seats in the Collection of Mr. Edward T. Newell (University of Chicago Oriental Institute Publications, Vol. XXII).

Jacques Vandier, "Iousâas et (Hathor)-Nébet-Hétépet," Revue d'Egyptologie t. 17 (1965).

J. Van Dijk "Le Motif Cosmique dans la Pensée Sumérienne" Acta Orientalia (Vol. XXVIII No. 1-2).

H. D. Velanker, Rigveda Mandala VII (Bombay, 1963).

Zev Vilnay, Legends of Jerusalem (Philadelphia, 1973).

W. H. Ward, The Cylinder Seals of Western Asia (Washington, 1910).

W. F. Warren,

—"The Gates of Sunrise in Ancient Babylonian Art," The Babylonian and Oriental Record, Vol. 111, No. 11 (Oct. 1889);

—Paradise Found (Boston, 1885).

A. J. Wensinck,

—"The Ideas of the Western Semites Concerning the Navel of the Earth," Afdeeling Letterkunde (Deel XVII No. 1);

—"The Ocean in the Literature of the Western Semites," Afdeeling Letterkunde (Deel XIX No. 2).

Alice Werner, African Mythology, "Mythology of All Races," Vol. VII (New York, 1964).

William Whiston, A New Theory of the Earth (London, 1696).

W. D. Whitney, Atharva Veda (Berlin, 1966).

Hans Winkler, Rock Drawings of Southern Egypt (London, 1938).

R. C. Zaehner, Zurvan: A Zoroastrian Dilemme (Oxford, 1955).

Endnotes

(back)

(back)

(back)

(back)

(back)

(back)

(back)

(back)

(back)

Svali Speaks Again

Healing from ritual abuse and mind control

- Mizpah: Svali Speaks Again
- About
- Contact
- Blog
- Articles
- Book Info

svalispeaksagain 7:01 pm on March 24, 2019

Tags: Christian (24), mind control (69), occult (13), programming (60), SRA (45)

The Real Agenda Behind the Occult

As I have healed, my parts inside have shared more and more of the "real picture" of what was going on during my life. Early on, I had recovered some memories which were part of the story, but by no means the whole story of my life. This is due to the fact that healing is a process, and over time, as parts deeper within the system have shared information, I have learned more. Early in my healing, I had only learned about my six brainwave systems (alpha, beta, gamma, delta, epsilon, theta) (see my earlier article on this) and had not discovered the six systems that were previously unknown to me (omicron, mu, null, lambda, omega, and chi). When I remembered these other six previously unknown systems, I remembered more about the cult's agendas, as that information was held in these systems.

When I was younger, I believed that the goal of occult groups, including the one I was raised in, was to create a "better world" through the coming New World Order. I truly believed, in my cult host, that I was serving mankind by preparing to help usher in the time of "he who is to come" (link) who after his birth was known as "he who as come" as well as by other names.

I worked hard to improve things, and dedicated to my life to what I believed would be the betterment of mankind. What I had not remembered at that time was the secret held by my core (Chi) system, which was wholly dedicated to Satan: that the group I was in, while publicly stating their desire to bring in new world order filled with joy and peace, was actually committed to the complete destruction of mankind.

The reason for this is simple: they serve Satan, and that is his agenda; he wants mankind destroyed because he hates all men, who created by God, who loves them. The chi system parts were programmed since they were in the womb to absolutely hate God and all men (mankind was labled as "mortals" who were a fallen, descended state) and to desire the destruction of all mortals so that the immortal, or ascended, could reign.

This, in a nutshell, was the theology I was taught while in the group. This knowledge was hidden from my conscous awareness until late in my own healing journey. it was terrible to remember that I participated in meetings with others who were planning and looking forward to the destruction of mortal mankind; or the programming and torture in the womb of my and I by actors who stated scripts such as "we are mortal men, and cannot help ourselves from hurting you" and other similar ones. Later, these fetal parts were "rescued" by Satan, who then whispered "one day, you will be able to take revenge for what men have done to you."

Follow •••

Even most of my cult parts were completely unaware of this programmed, hidden (to myself) agenda. Many cult loyal parts thought we were working to create a better, kinder world and it caused deep distress to realize that the real agenda of the group I was raised in was quite different.

What comforts me is the realization that while those in occultic groups are planning these things, their agenda will fail. The Bible has already described what will happen: Satan will make his play for power, using men and hybrids who serve him, and he will not win. It won't even be a contest, because the God of the Christian Bible is the creator, not the created; and will bring about the real new creation and reign on earth that mankind is looking towards.

The difference? The Christian God truly loves His creation, while Satan despises it. I am thankful that the One who loves me and all mankind, the true God, is the One who will win. Satan's time is limited; he knows this, so he will attempt to draw men into his plans and schemes. My prayer is that those who have believed himi will become aware that Satan is a liar; and the Christian God tells the truth.

Share this:

Twitter Facebook

Loading...

Related

The Occultic Agenda	The different types of SRA and Mind Control	The Real Anthony Fauci
April 3, 2021	January 29, 2019	October 20, 2022
In "healing"	In "mind control"	In "healing"

H S 3:33 pm on April 30, 2019

I love your articles because by revealing the evil, it makes the good contrast with the evil which in the end makes light reveal its brightness even more! Especially for the fortunate ones like me who has been taking the blessed environment for granted, your articles provide an eye-opening realization… to be honost, I couldn't sleep for days after reading your stories…However I came to know that the bible is not a fairy tale and that there really are enemies in this world, working very very hard.. However we are not frightened because we know that the true victory is with our Creator! Glory to the Lord! I pray for all the survivors and victims of the occultic groups… I know that our savior Jesus weeps for them… and loves them and is more than willing to give them the complete healing…! Ms. Svali You are such an important witness. I pray that you will stay strong and wise, God bless you!

★ Liked by 3 people

John 4:37 am on July 22, 2020

How are you still alive? And how yiu left the group.. is that even possible to leave a secret organization.. can you explain that?…. why they didnt or Not tracking you by now

★ Liked by 1 person

Leave a Reply

Enter your comment here

← Mother Programming

Processing Mind Control Trauma →

Create a free website or blog at WordPress.com.

THE OCTOPUS

THE OCTOPUS © 2004 by Kenn Thomas and Jim Keith and Feral House

ISBN 0-922915-91-1
All Rights Reserved.

Feral House
PO Box 39910
Los Angeles, CA 90039

www.feralhouse.com
info@feralhouse.com

Author Kenn Thomas' Steamshovel Press can be accessed at www.steamshovelpress.com

Designed by Hedi El Kholti

THE OCTOPUS

Secret Government and the Death of Danny Casolaro

Kenn Thomas and Jim Keith

Feral House

"Facts are but the Play-things of lawyers—Tops and Hoops, forever a-spin.... Alas, the Historian may indulge no such idle Rotating. History is not Chronology, for that is left to lawyers, —nor is Remembrance, for Remembrance belongs to the People. History can as little pretend to the Veracity of the one, as claim the Power of the other—her Practitioners, to survive, must soon learn the arts of the quidnunc, spy and Taproom Wit—that there may ever continue more than one life-line back into a Past we risk, each day, losing our forbears in forever—not a Chain of single Links, for one broken Link could lose us All—rather, a great disorderly Tangle of Lines, long and short, weak and strong, vanishing into the Mnemonick Deep, with only their Destination in common."

—The Revd Wicks Cherrycoke, Christ and History[1]

---

[1] From Mason & Dixon by Thomas Pynchon.

Contents

iv Acknowledgements
viii A Note on Sources
xi Prologue: A Death in Martinsburg
1 Chapter 1: Danny Casolaro
5 Chapter 2: PROMIS Breaking
10 Chapter 3: Michael Riconosciuto
15 Chapter 4: "Danger Man"
18 Chapter 5: Earl Brian
30 Chapter 6: Indio
41 Chapter 7: Behold, a Pale Horse
43 Chapter 8: Wild Rumors
47 Chapter 9: Pursuit of the Tape
54 Chapter 10: Mysterious Deaths
59 Chapter 11: Robert Booth Nichols
64 Chapter 12: A Sea Creature Surfaces
66 Chapter 13: The Octopus
69 Chapter 14: Tracking the Octopus
72 Chapter 15: Tentacles (an Octopus hagiography)
102 Chapter 16: Bringing Back the Head of the Octopus
109 Chapter 17: Final Hours
114 Chapter 18: Rippling Waves
120 Chapter 19: Inslaw and the Law
132 Chapter 20: Whitewater Currents
140 Chapter 21: Diana
150 Chapter 22: Jim Keith
158 Chapter 23: September 11 Epilogue
163 Appendix 1: An Interview with the Hamiltons
180 Appendix 2: Casolaro's Newsclippings File
220 Appendix 3: An Interview with Michael Riconosciuto
230 Index

Dedicated to Jim Keith, 1949–1999

Acknowledgements

Danny Casolaro developed a body of research that inspired and affirmed the work of many researchers and writers in the last decade of the twentieth century. The author would like to acknowledge that community and salute its continued growth.

Many of its members can be found in the footnotes of this book. All deserve great credit for saving and furthering the shattered remains of Casolaro's research. Special lifetime thanks go to my late partner Jim Keith, co-author of the original edition of this book and the great popularizer of conspiracy culture critique, and our mutual late comrade, Ron Bonds of IllumiNet Press. Connected now by their suspicious early deaths to the Octopus mystery, their spirits no doubt reside now with Danny Casolaro, the great conspiracy writer that neither met.

X. Sharks DeSpot and Judy Miller also deserve credit for their research help. Credit for the original edition also still goes to Raleigh Muns, for that last little bibliographic note, and to Jim Martin of Flatland Books for his continued support. A nod for the subsequent help, support and promotional favors goes to Greg Bishop, Rob Sterling and Acharya S, and readers of my magazine, Steamshovel Press. The great psychogeographer, extranationalist, Guy Debord biographer and novelist Len Bracken contributed the most to the revised edition of this book.

Timothy Leary's dissipated structure, as always, has an ongoing impact. Outside of all that, I have had as inspiration two of the finest children in the world, Sara and Simon, and my beautiful companion, Jennifer Crets.

Jim Keith's acknowledgements, from the first edition:

This book is for Verity and Aerika, and for the Keith and Angell clans.

Great thanks to Bob Sonderfan for kindnesses too numerous; for the Saturday night spetznaz; and to Ron and Nancy Bonds.

The authors would particularly like to express their gratitude for the patience of publisher Adam Parfrey, who has Satan's patience for contracts.

A Note on Sources

The surviving notes of Danny Casolaro provide part of the basis for this book's examination of his research. After Casolaro's death, his brother, Dr. Anthony Casolaro, originally gave the notes to ABC's Nightline program in order to allow six journalist acquaintances of his brother a chance to review his leads. Tony Casolaro then turned the papers over to Investigative Reporters and Editors (IRE), an office in the University of Missouri School of Journalism in Columbia, Missouri. That office still makes the papers available to researchers.[1] The collection includes court documents, a newsclipping file, tour guides and annual business reports that pertain to Casolaro's investigations, and what remained of his handwritten notes. These did not include any papers that Casolaro had with him the night he died.

Wide-ranging sources of information supplement this scarce record of the life, investigative work, and death of Danny Casolaro. These include: affidavits filed by arms merchants and convicted felons; mainstream and non-mainstream periodical sources, including some that publish messages received from channeled aliens, others notorious for their far-right connections, lite-left leanings, and radical chic pose; unattributed sources on the Internet; anonymous samizdat; participants in Casolaro's investigation; peripheral players; researchers who knew Casolaro; and researchers whose work expanded on the Octopus thesis. While some might question the credibility of some of these sources—as, indeed, some questioned the credibility of Casolaro's own sources—the authors include them here because they illuminate the research in obvious ways.

Chapters in this book have been footnoted to encourage readers to track these sources and make their own judgments concerning credibility. Any readers with new information, corrections, or supplemental sources are encouraged to contact the author.

---

[1] Griffin, Michael, "Key To Death, Mystery May Be Among Casolaro's Documents," St. Louis Journalism Review, Volume 22, Number 180, October 1992.

A good story allows a writer to go into himself and see how deep the place is from which his life flows. A great story, though, is as natural a possession as our lungs and spreads its roots into the depths of everything we love and everything we hate.

—J. Daniel Casolaro

Fifth-floor room at the former Sheraton Inn where Casolaro died.

PROLOGUE:

A Death in Martinsburg

Saturday, August 10, 1991, shortly after 12:30 p.m., a housecleaner working at the Sheraton Inn near Highway 81 in sleepy Martinsburg, West Virginia, knocked on the door of room 517. No answer. She slid her passkey into the hole and opened the door.

The bed was turned down, but looked unrumpled, as if it had not been slept in. A man's clothing rested on the bed's foot. Glancing into the bathroom, the housecleaner spied blood smeared on the floor. She hurriedly called the main desk and told the assistant head housekeeper, Barbara Bittinger, to rush to the room.

Bittinger arrived quickly and ventured into the bathroom. The door and the shower curtain partially obscured her view, but she saw a half-empty bottle of red wine by the toilet, a cigarette ashtray by the tub, and then a piece of broken glass and gouts of blood splashed onto the wall.

A pair of pale, bony knees stuck out from the tub. She noticed two towels drenched in blood under the sink. Bittinger recalled, "It looked like someone had thrown the towels on the floor and tried to wipe the blood up with their foot, but they didn't get the blood, they just smeared the floor."[1]

The blood-filled bathtub contained the nude body of a blond man. Bittinger called 911.

---

[1] Connolly, John, "Dead Right," Spy, January 1993.

J. Daniel Casolaro

CHAPTER 1.

Danny Casolaro

Minutes after Bittinger's call, Martinsburg city police and paramedics arrived. They determined that the dead man in the tub was a white male in his early 40s. They found a dozen deep gashes in his wrists, a shoelace around his neck, and two plastic wastepaper basket liners floating in the tub, as if someone had tried to asphyxiate him. When the paramedics lifted the body from the tub, a single-edged razor blade appeared, along with an Old Milwaukee beer can and a paper coaster.

On the bedroom desk sat an empty composition notebook, a legal pad with one page removed, and a Bic pen. The page from the legal pad lay nearby with a note written on it:

> To those who I love the most,
> Please forgive me for the worst > possible thing I could have done.
> Most of all I'm sorry to my son.
> I know deep down inside that God will let me in.

If these were the dead man's words, they were the last of his obscure writing career. A wallet found at the scene, filled with credit cards and a driver's license, identified the man as Joseph Daniel Casolaro of Fairfax, Virginia.

Danny Casolaro had published three books, and worked as a journalist of sorts, writing for tabloids and trade magazines. Now his work would be distinguished by a book he never finished, the ultimate political conspiracy thriller based on documentable fact, which he had started to call The Octopus.

The Octopus was Casolaro's name for a handful of spooks and power brokers in the intelligence community who manipulated public events as wide-ranging as the 1980 October Surprise that may have cost Jimmy Carter the presidency, and the BCCI bank scandal in the early 1990s. Like the tentacles of his metaphoric sea creature, the slashes in both wrists—eight on one side, four on the other—pulled Casolaro down into oblivion, ending his investigation into a power cabal whose involvement in a list of notorious contemporary political crimes he had documented in his book. Perhaps Casolaro erred in changing the book's title from Behold, a Pale Horse, taken from the Biblical admonition from Revelation 6: "Behold a pale horse and its rider's name was death."

Even as Casolaro focused his investigation on tracking software, his manuscript dealt with many connected crimes. It included contra war chemical and biowarfare weapons developed on the tribal lands of the Cabazon Indians of Indio, California, weapons possibly used in the October 23, 1983 blast at a compound in Beirut that left over 300 American and French military personnel dead. His research also looked at bizarre murders among the Cabazon Indians involving administrators of the tribal land; the privatization of CIA dirty tricks through the notorious Wackenhut security firm, the policemen for both the Cabazons and the mysterious Area 51, home of secret spy planes and rumored UFOs; Vietnam MIAs; corruption at Hughes Aircraft; the human genome project; even the Illuminati secret societies of the 18th century.

To his friends, Danny Casolaro was, above all else, the ultimate "nice guy." He came from a well-to-do background in McLean, Virginia, the hub of the intelligence community that preoccupied his adult attention. His father had been a successful obstetrician. Although his Catholic Italian family had experienced its share of tragedies—a congenital heart defect took one of Danny's five siblings, an infant, and an older sister died of a drug overdose in Haight-Ashbury—Danny grew up with the good things in life. By all reports, he was a congenial, open-minded and trusting soul with few serious worries. At age 20, he left Provident College to search for treasures of the Incas in Ecuador. When he returned, he settled into a marriage that lasted thirteen years and produced one son, Trey (J. Daniel Casolaro III). He lived in a $400,000 home on three acres in Fairfax City, Virginia, where he kept horses. He played the piano. His literary tastes ran along the lines of Jack Kerouac and the Beats; he was an Elvis Costello fan.

Danny Casolaro had achieved only modest success in his chosen profession of writing. The magazines and tabloids he wrote for were as varied as his research: Washington Crime News Service, Home and Auto, Providence Journal, Washington Star, The National Enquirer, and the Globe. His published books, seemingly towering triumphs to a novice writer, did not provide him much in the way of financial rewards. His novel, The Ice King, a Hemingway-like novel about mountain climbing, had been published by a vanity press. He also published a short story collection, Makes Me Think of Tall Green Grass, and worked on two films, Rain For A Dusty Summer and To Fly Without Wings, the latter narrated by Orson Welles. According to one source, "Danny wasn't an investigative reporter. He was a poet."[1]

The first piece of Casolaro's life to pass into conspiracy lore was that a mysterious informant may have supplied him with the last bit of evidence he needed to prove the existence of his Octopus cabal. Just prior to leaving for Martinsburg, Casolaro warned his brother, "If anything happens to me, don't believe it's an accident."[2] According to friends and family, little in Casolaro's disposition or behavior could have led to suicide. The gashes in his wrists were too deep to be self-inflicted. The suicide note was unconvincing. The discovery of his body, the rush to autopsy—without the consent of family—and the quick cleaning of the murder site increased suspicions.

Something in Casolaro's Octopus research quite likely led to his murder.

---

1. James Ridgeway and Dough Vaughan, "The Last Days of Danny Casolaro," Village Voice, October 15, 1991.

2. Ridgeway and Vaughan, p. 33.

PROMIS
INSLAW, Inc.
PROMIS

The Promis software made by Inslaw, the Institute for Law and Social Research.

CHAPTER 2.

PROMIS Breaking

After a brief return to college, Danny Casolaro picked up stringer work for various tabloids and magazines. He eventually found his way to Computer Age Publications, which reported daily on the personal computer trade. Casolaro stayed there for ten years, eventually becoming part-owner. He sold his stake in the company in 1990. Unfortunately, friends said Casolaro had vastly underestimated the value of the newsletter, and had sold it for far less than it was worth.[1]

In early 1990, Danny Casolaro was on the make for a new beginning. He was looking for a great story, something he could sink his teeth into, something that would catapult him toward the monetary rewards he desired. A friend and fellow worker in the computer magazine business, Terry Miller, suggested that Casolaro look into a developing scandal involving software made by a company called Inslaw, the Institute for Law and Social Research. After discussing the case with one of the company's founders, William Hamilton, Casolaro felt like this might just be the right project.

The Inslaw case began in 1982, when the US Justice Department granted Hamilton's company ten million dollars over three years to adapt a computer program to the needs of US attorneys in tracking criminal cases from office to office. The program was called Prosecutor's Management Information System, or PROMIS. Hamilton explained that, as a former member of the super secret National Security Agency (NSA), he and his wife Nancy developed PROMIS with funding from the government's Law Enforcement Assistance Administration (LEAA).

After the LEAA funding was phased out at the end of the Carter administration, the Hamiltons converted Inslaw into a for-profit business, with the government's knowledge and approval. Hamilton had sent a letter to the Department of Justice requesting they waive any rights to the enhanced version of PROMIS, and on August 11, 1982, a lawyer for the Department responded, ver-

Bill and Nancy Hamilton

Elliot Richardson

ifying that Inslaw had the rights to any privately funded enhancements added to the public domain version of PROMIS.

The PROMIS program was developed for the purpose of tracking individuals pursued or prosecuted by the Justice Department, and included the vital capability of interfacing with other databases.

As Hamilton explained his situation, Casolaro must have grown increasingly aware of the pot-boiler possibilities inherent in this story. PROMIS was the Maltese Falcon of a conspiracy web into which Hamilton had fallen. Hamilton made it clear to the computer-savvy Casolaro that the enhancements he had made to PROMIS were not minor. Early enhancements enabled the software to be run on other, less-powerful computer systems than the original, including IBM, Wang, Burroughs, and Prime; later enhancements—the ones taken by Justice—allowed it to run on a DEC VAX minicomputer.[2]

If Hamilton sounded bitter when he talked about the deal he had struck with the government, he had his reasons. The 1982 agreement with the Justice Department, through which Inslaw was to be paid $10 million for placement in US prosecutor offices and enhancements for seventy-four smaller department offices, would have been just the beginning of PROMIS' applications. Hamilton estimated that the demand for the software might eventually exceed five billion dollars. In place of that watershed business, Hamilton received a decade-long legal battle.

The problems began after Inslaw delivered the modified PROMIS to the Justice Department. First, payments to the Hamiltons were suspended. Next, the Department accused Inslaw of overcharging. By February of 1985, the Justice Department had withheld almost two million dollars from Inslaw. When it became obvious that the Justice Department was not going to honor its contract, the company's attorney, former US Attorney General Elliot Richardson, renowned for his role in the Watergate scandal, advised the Hamiltons to sue. In June 1986, the Hamiltons took Richardson's advice and filed suit.[3]

As the lawsuit progressed, the Hamiltons learned about secret dealings behind the scenes at the Justice Department relating to Inslaw. On St. Patrick's Day, 1987, the first of several whistleblowers stepped forward. Anthony Pasciuto, the deputy director of the Justice Department's Executive Office for United States Trustees, secretly met with the Hamiltons, and told of pressure from Thomas Stanton, the director of his office, to get Trustee officer William White and others to liquidate Inslaw. Pasciuto also said that Cornelius Blackshear, the US trustee in New York, knew what Stanton was doing, and that he had talked about the pressure on Inslaw to US Court of Appeals Judge Lawrence Pierce. Blackshear, under a deposition by Inslaw's lawyers, confirmed his statements to Pasciuto, but the following day met with a representative of the Justice Department and recanted in a sworn affidavit, saying that Pasciuto had confused the Inslaw case with another one. After offering his testimony, Pasciuto listened while White, his superior in the Department, denied the statements that Pasciuto said had been made to him. In anger and frustration, Pasciuto also recanted. Despite this, Pasciuto lost his job two days after he testified. A Justice Department memo recommended his dismissal, saying, "...but for Mr. Pasciuto's highly irresponsible actions, the Department would be in a much better litigation posture than it presently finds itself in."[4]

Even though Pasciuto had changed his story, the federal bankruptcy judge hearing the case, Judge George F. Bason, accepted Pasciuto's original testimony. The judge also noted that White had recently joined a law firm practicing in bankruptcy matters, and that his future with the firm might have been jeopardized if he had muddied the water with the US Trustee's Office. Bason made the observation that Cornelius Blackshear had also offered "two different versions of the same event," and that the first version, which confirmed Pasciuto's original testimony, was the most credible. In September, 1987, Judge Bason ruled on Inslaw vs. the United States of America, finding the government guilty of trickery, deceit and fraud. He ruled that that the US Department of Justice had stolen the PROMIS software.

Judge Bason stated that officials of the Justice Department had attempted to bankrupt Inslaw through an "outrageous, deceitful, fraudulent game of cat and mouse, demonstrating contempt for both the law and any principle of fair dealing." Judge Bason also wrote to Attorney General Edwin Meese, suggesting that an outside official be appointed to review the evidence because of evidence of perjury by officials in the Justice Department. Meese did not answer the letter.[5]

Attorney General Richard Thornburgh

Attorney General Edwin Meese

On February 2, 1988, Judge Bason ordered the Justice Department to pay Inslaw approximately $6.8 million in licensing fees, and an additional near $1 million in legal expenses. Bason postponed his assessment of punitive damages. An appeal was upheld by US District Court Judge William B. Bryant.[6] Judge Bason's assessment of punitive damages against the Justice Department never came.

In November, 1987, Judge Bason threw out a motion by the Justice Department for the liquidation of Inslaw. A month later, Bason received word that he would be denied reappointment to the bench. The judge became one of four out of 136 federal bankruptcy judges to have been denied reappointment in the previous four years. The decision was made by a four-person merit selection panel that had been appointed, in obvious conflict of interest, by Judge Patricia Wald, who had previously been employed by the Justice Department. Outrageously, Bason's position was filled by S. Martin Teel, Jr., a Department of Justice lawyer who had represented the IRS in its audits of Inslaw and had recommended liquidation of the company.[7]

In March, 1988, Pasciuto, the man who had recanted his earlier testimony about Department corruption, decided to come clean. In a letter from his attorney, Pasciuto described Justice Department actions designed to destroy Inslaw, quoting a statement by Robert Hunneycutt of the Department's finance offices, that "people in the US Attorney's offices don't like Inslaw," and that invoices from the company were among those designated never to be paid.[8]

In August, 1989, the behavior of the Justice Department with regard to

Inslaw had gained such infamy that the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Jack Brooks of Texas, began an investigation with a letter to Attorney General Richard Thornburgh. Thornburgh questioned the need to reinvestigate, but promised full cooperation. As the investigation proceeded, however, he seemed to do all in his power to thwart it. At first Thornburgh refused to appear before the committee or to surrender Justice Department files relating to the case. This forced the Judiciary Committee to subpoena almost five hundred documents. Thornburgh finally relented and released the files, although one source in the House of Representatives alleged that approximately twenty of the files were missing.[9]

In December, 1989, Inslaw attorney Richardson submitted a writ of mandamus to the US District Court in Washington, D.C. asking for the government to intervene with the appointment of an independent investigator to further pursue Inslaw's allegations, now supported by a court ruling, about the theft of PROMIS by the Justice Department. Richardson stated that, "Attempts to acquire control of PROMIS were linked by a conspiracy among friends of Attorney General Meese to take advantage of their relationship with him for the purpose of obtaining a lucrative contract for the automation of the Department's litigating divisions."[10]

This was where the case stood when William Hamilton and Danny Casolaro talked on the phone. Casolaro found Hamilton's story interesting, particularly since it dealt with one of his interests, computers. Casolaro took the bait, but only when Hamilton started telling him about Michael Riconosciuto.

---

1. "Autopsy Backs Suicide Ruling," Washington Times, Aug. 16, 1991.

2. "Area Writer Investigating...," Washington Post, 8/13/91; Fricker, Richard L., "The Inslaw Octopus," Wired 1.1, premiere issue, 1993 p. 80.

3. Mahar, Maggie, "Beneath Contempt: Did the Justice Department Deliberately Bankrupt Inslaw?," Barron's National Business and Financial Weekly, March 21, 1988.

4. Martin, Harry, "Federal Corruption," Napa Sentinel, March 12, 1991.

5. Martin.

6. Martin.

7. Mahar.

8. Mahar.

9. "Was Writer the Victim of a DC Conspiracy?," The Boston Globe, August 14, 1991.

10. Bleifuss, Joel, "Software Pirates," In These Times, May 29–June 11, 1991.

CHAPTER 3:

Michael Riconosciuto

Jeff Steinberg worked as an aide to Lyndon Larouche, the perennial presidential candidate notorious for conspiracy views about the English empire. Steinberg had put Bill Hamilton in touch with Michael James Riconosciuto, a 44-year-old denizen of the shadowy world of covert operatives. Riconosciuto first called Hamilton on May 18, 1990, and talked with him for two and a half hours, spinning a gossamer of connections that added startling new dimensions to the Inslaw case.[1] Riconosciuto, in hundreds of collect telephone calls to Hamilton, revealed inside knowledge of the government conspiracy to steal PROMIS from the Hamiltons. He stunned Hamilton further when he told him that he had personally modified the PROMIS software as research director of a joint venture of the Cabazon Indian tribe of Indio, California, and the nation's third largest private security firm, Wackenhut.

Riconosciuto revealed that part of his job in the modification of the software had been to create a "back door access" for spying into the files of its users.[2] These users included Great Britain, South Korea, Japan, Jordan, Canada, Israel, Egypt, Canada, and Iraq—Bill Hamilton tallied the figure at "as many as eighty-eight countries"—for use in such activities as the tracking of terrorists.[3]

According to Riconosciuto, Attorney General Edwin Meese had provided PROMIS to Dr. Earl Brian and Peter Videnieks from the Department of Justice, who had then supervised the Wackenhut/Cabazon project to copy the program.[4]

Riconosciuto initially had been excited by the software. He told one interviewer: "...this package worked, OK? I mean it really and truly worked. And when I got my first copies of it and ran it up, I was dumbfounded. I have a statistical exercising package where I can put computer software and/or hardware, and/or hardware/software systems through their paces, and I can determine at which point it will become unreliable... And here again, you have to realize that we were on the threshold of a whole new era with bio-technology and with information technology. Earl Brian had some backing, and he was going to buy out some well placed start-up companies that already had a running start, and then he was going to pump money and talent and the right connections into them, and make them go…"[5]

Riconosciuto was not the only one to extol the virtues of PROMIS. Harry Martin of the Napa Valley Sentinel, while editing several defense publications, believed that an Israeli software package which he tested utilized PROMIS, and had the capability to "[deal] with the complete military structure, and who's who and what's what. I mean, it even got down almost to the number of shoelaces: how many handguns—everything... It gets into numbers and details. And that's what this software has this tremendous power to do."[6]

The theft of PROMIS, according to Riconosciuto, wasn't all that was going on at the Cabazon Indian Reservation. The Cabazon/Wackenhut venture included the production of advanced weaponry, including biological weapons, and fuel-air explosives (FAX), a new technology supposedly the equal of some nuclear weapons in explosive power. Riconosciuto claimed to have been involved in the production of the fuel-air explosives in collaboration with Gerald Bull of Space Research Corporation, an arms dealer who designed the "supergun," and was murdered in Brussels, Belgium in 1990.[7]

Riconosciuto dropped additional bombshells on Hamilton. He maintained that Meese had provided Brian with PROMIS as a pay-off on a favor. Riconosciuto made the dramatic allegation that William Casey, outside counsel to Wackenhut prior to his work in the Reagan administration, had hired him and Brian in 1980 to facilitate the now infamous "October Surprise," in which the Reagan administration allegedly paid the Iranians not to release American hostages until after his election. Riconosciuto claimed that he and Brian had paid the Iranians forty million dollars in bribes. The PROMIS software, so Riconosciuto said, was Brian's payment for his participation.[8] Riconosciuto also claimed that he had been instrumental in exposing the Nugan Hand bank scandal; that he had met "the Jackal," the famed international terrorist; and that he had made a tape recording of a clandestine meeting with William Casey that he was holding as an "insurance policy" on his life.

Could he be believed? At least some of what Riconosciuto said could be corroborated. The Cabazon-Wackenhut joint venture did exist from 1981 to 1983, and Riconosciuto was involved with it, at least in some capacity.[9] A report from a task force of the Riverside County, California Sheriff's Office also placed Earl Brian ("with the CIA") and Riconosciuto at a weapons demonstration put on by the Cabazons and Wackenhut.[10]

Amazingly, even Riconosciuto's allegations about Brian's involvement in the so-called October Surprise could also be verified, at least to a degree. Brian had told several persons that he planned a visit to Paris the weekend of the October

SHERIFF DEPT
PIERCE COUNTY
B

Michael Riconosciuto

OU'RE FREE
FTER ALL, WE ARE AMERI

The October Surprise hostage.

Surprise meeting(s), and Ari Ben-Menasche, who claimed to be present at the Paris meeting(s) said "I saw Brian in Paris."[11]

Shortly after Hamilton was contacted by Riconosciuto, Hamilton told Casolaro about his new source. By late 1990, according to his friends, Casolaro spoke of little else. He immediately set about investigating this new informant's background. What he learned only complicated the matter.[12]

Casolaro discovered that Riconosciuto had been a gifted child whose science projects, including the construction of an argon laser, had enabled him to work as a research assistant to Dr. Arthur Schalow, the Nobel laureate. Other things in Riconosciuto's past had a shadier aspect. After leaving Stanford University, Riconosciuto migrated to Haight-Ashbury in San Francisco, where he went to work on an underground newspaper. Riconosciuto told Casolaro that he had acquired some photos that the newspaper had published which showed a narcotics agent having sex with an underage girl, and because of this the narc had framed Riconosciuto on drug charges. In 1973 Riconosciuto was sent to prison for two years for manufacturing psychedelic drugs.

Casolaro didn't buy Riconosciuto's statement that he was innocent of the drug charges. His notes stated flatly that "Mike sold dope through Phyllis." (Phyllis remains unidentified.) Casolaro told Bill Hamilton he didn't totally buy into Riconosciuto's wild stories. Nonetheless, Risconosciuto provided leads Casolaro was determined to follow.

Casolaro ran down the leads, phoning person after person around the country, spreading his net further as he developed new contacts. A complicated case of computer thievery was turning into something closer to a Robert Ludlum thriller. Casolaro started to spend a lot of his professional life on the telephone. Each of Riconosciuto's leads seemed to connect to another. Danny Casolaro began to sense that he was on the trail of the conspiracy story of the century.

By the beginning of 1991, Casolaro was heavily involved with the Inslaw case. One contact supplied by Riconosciuto was a man named Alan Standorf, who worked at the secret military electronic listening post at Vint Hill Farm, near Manassas, Virginia. Standorf supplied Casolaro with classified information and, in order to quickly return the materials to avoid detection, Casolaro set up high-speed commercial duplicating and collating equipment in room 900 at the nearby Hilton Hotel.

Danny Casolaro may not have known what he was getting into when he began the investigation of PROMIS and the conspiracy tributaries that ran from it. But the truth was brought home to him on January 31, 1991, when Alan Standorf's body was found on the back floor of his car at the Washington National Airport. Standorf had been murdered by a blow to the back of his head.[13]

---

1. Corn, David, "The Dark World of Danny Casolaro," The Nation, Oct. 28, 1991, pp. 511–516.

2. Corn, p. 513.

3. Broadcast on WBAI-FM, New York, Pacifica Radio Network, September 20, 1991.

4. "The Com-12 Briefing," Phoenix Liberator, March 23, 1993, p.17.

5. WBAI Broadcast.

6. WBAI Broadcast.

7. "CIA Computer Genius Alleges Massive Conspiracy," Technical Consultant, Dec/Jan 1991, p. 7.

8. Corn, p. 512.

9. "Worldwide Conspiracy or Fantasy?" Seattle Times, August 29, 1991.

10. Stich, Rodney, Defrauding America, Diablo Western Press, Alamo, California, 1993, p. 83.

11. Fricker, Richard L., "The Inslaw Octopus," Wired, premiere issue, 1993.

12. James Ridgeway and Dough Vaughan, "Worldwide Conspiracy or Fantasy?" Seattle Times, August 29, 1991, p. 34.

13. Stich, p. 407; Contact, May 10, 1994, p. 19.

US Justice Department agent Peter Videnieks.

CHAPTER 4:

“Danger Man”

Bill Hamilton convinced Michael Riconosciuto to tell his story on the record. On March 21, 1991 Michael Riconosciuto filed a sworn affidavit on the Inslaw case. He began by stating that US Justice Department agent Peter Videnieks had threatened him if he cooperated with a House Judiciary Committee investigation of Inslaw.[1] The following text of the affidavit provides a toe-hold for Danny Casolaro’s research:

> I, MICHAEL J. RICONOSCIUTO, being duly sworn, do hereby state as follows:
>
> 1. During the early 1980s, I served as the Director of Research for a joint venture between the Wackenhut corporation of Coral Gables, Florida, and the Cabazon Band of Indians of Indio, California. The joint venture was located on the Cabazon Reservation.
>
> 2. The Wackenhut-Cabazon joint venture sought to develop and/or manufacture certain materials that are used in military and national security operations, including night vision goggles, machine guns, fuel-air explosives, and biological and chemical warfare weapons.
>
> 3. The Cabazon Band of Indians are a sovereign nation. The sovereign immunity that is accorded the Cabazons as a consequence of this fact made it feasible to pursue on the reservation the development and/or manufacture of materials whose development or manufacture would be subject to stringent controls off the reservation. As a minority group, the Cabazon Indians also provided the Wackenhut Corporation with an enhanced ability to obtain federal contracts through the 8A Set Aside Program, and in connection with Government-owned contractor-operated (GOCO) facilities.

4. The Wackenhut-Cabazon joint venture was intended to support the needs of a number of foreign governments and forces, including forces and governments in Central America and the Middle East. The contras in Nicaragua represented one of the most important priorities for the joint venture.

5. The Wackenhut-Cabazon joint venture maintained close liaison with certain elements of the United States Government, including representatives of intelligence, military and law enforcement agencies.

6. Among the frequent visitors to the Wackenhut-Cabazon joint venture were Peter Videnieks of the US Department of Justice in Washington, D.C., and a close associate of Videnieks by the name of Earl W. Brian. Brian is a private businessman who lives in Maryland and who has maintained close business ties with the US intelligence community for many years.

7. In connection with my work for Wackenhut, I engaged in some software development and modification work in 1983 and 1984 on the proprietary PROMIS computer software product. The copy of PROMIS on which I worked came from the US Department of Justice. Earl W. Brian made it available to me through Wackenhut after acquiring it from Peter Videnieks, who was then a Department of Justice contracting official with responsibility for the PROMIS software. I performed the modifications to PROMIS in Indio, California; Silver Springs, Maryland; and Miami, Florida.

8. The purpose of the PROMIS software modifications that I made in 1983 and 1984 was to support a plan for the implementation of PROMIS in law enforcement and intelligence agencies worldwide. Earl W. Brian was spearheading the plan for this worldwide use of the PROMIS computer software.

9. Some of the modifications that I made were specifically designed to facilitate the implementation of PROMIS within two agencies of the Government of Canada; the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP) and the Canadian Security and Intelligence Service (CSIS). Earl W. Brian would check with me from time to time to make certain that the work would be completed in time to satisfy the schedule for the RCMP and the CSIS implementations of PROMIS.

10. The proprietary version of PROMIS, as modified by me, was, in fact, implemented in both the RCMP and the CSIS in Canada. It was my understanding that Earl W. Brian had sold this version of PROMIS to the Government of Canada.

11. In February 1991, I had a telephone conversation with Peter Videnieks, then still employed by the US Department of Justice. Videnieks attempted during this telephone conversation to persuade me not to cooperate with an independent investigation of the government's piracy of Inslaw's proprietary PROMIS software being conducted by the Committee on the Judiciary of the US House of Representatives.

12. Videnieks stated that I would be rewarded for a decision not to cooperate with the House Judiciary Committee investigation. Videnieks forecasted an immediate and favorable resolution of a protracted child custody dispute being prosecuted against my wife by her former husband, if I were to decide not to cooperate with the House Judiciary Committee investigation.

13. Videnieks also outlined specific punishments that I could expect to receive from the US Department of Justice if I cooperated with the House Judiciary Committee's investigation.

14. One punishment that Videnieks outlined was the future inclusion of me and my father in a criminal prosecution of certain business associates of mine in Orange County, California, in connection with the operation of a Savings and Loan institution in Orange County. By way of underscoring his power to influence such decisions at the US Department of Justice, Videnieks informed me of the indictment of these business associates prior to the time when that indictment was unsealed and made public.

15. Another punishment that Videnieks threatened against me if I cooperated with the House Judiciary committee is prosecution by the US Department of Justice for perjury. Videnieks warned me that credible witnesses would come forward to contradict any damaging claims that I made in testimony before the House Judiciary Committee, and that I would subsequently be prosecuted for perjury by the US Department of Justice for my testimony before the House Judiciary Committee.

FURTHER AFFIANT SAYETH NOT.

Michael J. Riconosciuto
(Signed and sworn to before me this 21st day of March 1991—Notary Public)

---

1. Ridgeway and Vaughan, p. 38.

CHAPTER 5:

Earl Brian

Following the lead of Riconosciuto's revelations, Danny Casolaro took a long look at a man named Dr. Earl Brian. Riconosciuto claimed that this man, along with Peter Videnieks, had headed the alleged Wackenhut/Cabazon project to alter the PROMIS software. Casolaro eventually developed a dossier on Brian.

Brian was a high-profile individual who had been a combat physician during the Vietnam War. He reportedly worked in an air support unit for the Operation Phoenix political assassination program, a well-known covert action program to wipe out the Viet Cong in Vietnam. After his return to the States, Brian became Secretary of Health and Welfare in California, under Governor Ronald Reagan. In 1974, Brian had resigned his cabinet position to go into private business, which Casolaro learned had allegedly included arms deals with the Shah of Iran. Brian's company Xonics had been cited by the Security and Exchange Commission for illegal commissions and for issuing press releases with bogus information meant to boost stock prices.

Brian also was involved in a scandal involving the confiscation of computer tapes with the records of 70,000 California state welfare files. These tapes were later discovered at the University of Southern California. After an unsuccessful campaign for a Senate seat, Brian joined the USC faculty.[1]

During the Reagan administration, Brian served as an unpaid chairman of a Reagan task force on health care cost reduction, reporting directly to Attorney General Ed Meese. Brian also served with Meese on a "pro-competition" committee.[2] Further associations of Brian and Ed Meese had come out during Meese's confirmation hearings, when Meese had admitted that his wife had borrowed $15,000 from an advisor, Edwin Thomas, to buy stock in Brian's company. Meese had not listed the transaction in his financial disclosures. Brian headed Infotechnology, Inc., a powerful New York holding company which controlled UPI, the Financial News Network, and the Learning Channel.[3] If these connections led far afield from Inslaw, others dovetailed neatly. Hadron, Inc. was also controlled by Brian. Hadron, Inc. had suddenly taken an affluent turn—after being $12 million in the red—upon Meese's ascendancy to the office of Attorney General. The company now subsisted on government revenues, including a $40 million contract with the US Department of Justice.

The name Hadron, Inc. rang a bell with Bill Hamilton. Hamilton eventually realized that Inslaw's difficulties may have begun as early as April 1983. Hamilton had been in his office when he received a telephone call from Dominic Laiti, the chairman of Hadron, Inc. Hamilton recalled Laiti telling him that Hadron, Inc. was trying to corner the market on law enforcement software, and that "they had purchased Simcon, a manufacturer of police department software—and Acumedics, a company that provides computer-based litigation support services for courts." Now Laiti was offering to buy Inslaw from Hamilton in order for Hadron, Inc. to obtain the PROMIS software. According to Hamilton, when he turned down the alleged offer, Laiti bragged of his powerful contacts in the Reagan administration, and told him "we have ways of making you sell."[4]

Within 90 days of the date of the alleged Laiti call the deal between Inslaw and the Justice department began to unravel.[5] A little research also showed that Peter Videnieks, prior to overseeing the PROMIS contract for the Justice Department in 1981, had been in charge of three contracts between the US Customs Service and Hadron, Inc.[6] In light of the links between Earl Brian, Peter Videnieks, and Hadron, Inc., suddenly Dominic Laiti's "ways of making you sell" threat took on more substance.

Many of Riconosciuto's claims about Brian were backed up by information in the following March 21, 1991 affidavit filed on behalf of Inslaw by Ari Ben-Menasche.[7]

> I, ARI BEN-MENASHE, being duly sworn, do hereby state as follows:
>
> 1. Between August 1977 and September 1987, I was employed by the Israel Defense Forces (IDF)/Military Intelligence External Relations Department.
>
> 2. In my above capacity, I had contacts with the Office of the Israeli Prime Minister's Anti-Terrorism Advisor.
>
> 3. In 1982, the Israeli Prime Minister's Anti-Terrorism Advisor was Rafael Eitan.
>
> 4. In a meeting that took place in December 1982 in Mr. Eitan's office in the Kirya in Tel Aviv, Israel, Mr. Eitan told me that he had received earlier that year in the United States, from Mr. Earl Brian and Mr. Robert McFarlane, PROMIS computer software for the limited use of the IDF's Signals Intelligence Unit for intelligence purposes only. Mr. Eitan stated on this occasion, and on earlier occasions as well, that he had special relationships with both Mr. Brian and Mr. McFarlane.

Earl Brian

Ari Ben-Menashe

> 5. This meeting took place in the context of a visit by a foreign dignitary. During a break in the meeting, Mr. Eitan took me aside and gave me the above facts to relate to my superiors so that Mr. Eitan's office could take credit for the introduction of the PROMIS computer software into IDF's Signals Intelligence Unit.
>
> 6. I hereby certify that the facts set forth in this Affidavit are true and correct to the best of my knowledge.
>
> FURTHER AFFIANT SAYETH NOT
>
> Ari Ben-Menashe
> Signed and sworn to before me this 21st day of March, 1991.

Lexington, Kentucky, was the temporary home of Ari Ben-Menashe, a former Israeli intelligence officer who had moved there after his acquittal in New York on arms trading charges. The federal government had accused Ben-Menashe of conspiring to sell three transport planes to an undercover federal agent. He spent a year in prison awaiting trial, but when he finally came to trial, the jury acquitted him after he brandished a diplomatic passport as evidence that his activities had been sanctioned by Israel, and documents showing that the planes in question actually belonged to the Israeli government.

Ben-Menashe became talkative when he left prison. He claimed to have been personally involved in billion-dollar weapons deals between Iran and Israel, part of the latter's plan to exacerbate Iran/Iraq tensions. He verified Riconosciuto's assertions that PROMIS had been sold to foreign intelligence agencies and traded through back-channels that developed over the October Surprise and Iran-contra operations, and that Earl Brian had been involved. As a special intelligence consultant to the Israeli prime minister in 1989, Ben-Menasche maintained that a Chilean arms manufacturer told him that he had been a go-between in Brian's deal to sell PROMIS to Iraqi intelligence. Two years prior to that, according to Ben-Menasche, he attended a meeting in Tel Aviv where Brian claimed that the Central Intelligence Agency, the National Security Agency and the Defense Intelligence Agency all used PROMIS, and then gave the software to Israeli intelligence.

Even with this independent corroboration, Earl Brian continued to deny any connection with Riconosciuto and Ari Ben-Menasche. He insisted that he had only read about Inslaw in the papers, although the company's founders continued to insist that Brian's company had tried to acquire it in 1983.[8]

Then Richard Babayan, an Iranian arms dealer in prison awaiting trial on securities fraud, corroborated Ben-Menasche's statements, connecting Brian to the sale of the software to Iraq and South Korea. In an affidavit dated March 22, 1991, Babayan swore:

> I, RICHARD H. BABAYAN, being duly sworn, do hereby state as follows:
>
> 1. During the past several years, I have acted as a broker of sales of materials and equipment used by foreign governments in their armed forces, intelligence and security organizations.
>
> 2. In the capacity described in paragraph #1, I attended a meeting in Baghdad, Iraq, in October or November, 1987, with Mr. Abu Mohammed of Entezamat, an intelligence and security organ of the Government of Iraq. Mr. Abu Mohammed is a senior ranking official of Entezamat and a person with whom I had extensive dealings over the previous three years.
>
> 3. During the aforementioned meeting with Mr. Abu Mohammed, I was informed that Dr. Earl W. Brian of the United States had recently completed a sales presentation to the Government of Iraq regarding the PROMIS computer software. Furthermore, it is my understanding that others present at Dr. Brian's PROMIS sales presentation were General Richard Secord, of the United States, and Mr. Abu Mohammed.
>
> 4. In early to mid-1988, in the course of subsequent visits to Baghdad, Iraq, I was informed that Dr. Earl W. Brian had, in fact, provided the PROMIS computer software to the Government of Iraq through a transaction that took place under the umbrella of Mr. Sarkis Saghanollan, an individual who has had extensive business dealings with the Government of Iraq since the late 1970s in the fields of military hardware and software. I was also informed that the Government of Iraq acquired the PROMIS software for use primarily in intelligence services, and secondarily in police and law enforcement agencies.

5. During the course of the visits described in paragraph #4, I also learned from Mr. Abu Mohammed that the Government of Libya had acquired the PROMIS computer software prior to its acquisition by the Government of Iraq; that the Government of Libya had by then made extensive use of PROMIS, and that the Government of Libya was highly recommending the PROMIS software to other countries. I was informed that the high quality of the reference for the PROMIS software from the Government of Libya was one of the principle reasons for the decision of the Government of Iraq to acquire PROMIS.

6. In the capacity described in paragraph #1, I attended a meeting in early 1988 in Singapore with Mr. Y.H. Nam of the Korea Development Corporation.

7. The Korea Development Corporation is known to be a cutout for the Korean Central Intelligence Agency (KCIA).

8. I learned from Mr. Y.H. Nam during the meeting described in paragraph #6 that the KCIA had acquired the PROMIS computer software, and that Dr. Earl W. Brian of the United States had been instrumental in the acquisition and implementation of PROMIS by the KCIA.

9. In the capacity described in paragraph #1, I attended a meeting in Santiago, Chile, in December, 1988, with Mr. Carlos Cardoen of Cardoen Industries. During this meeting, I was informed by Mr. Cardoen that Dr. Earl W. Brian of the United States and Mr. Robert Gates, a senior American intelligence and national security official, had just completed a meeting in Santiago, Chile, with Mr. Carlos Cardoen.

10. I hereby certify that the facts set forth in this Affidavit are true and correct to the best of my knowledge.

FURTHER AFFIANT SAYETH NOT.
Richard A. Babayan

Further corroboration for the illegal sale of PROMIS would come from former agent of the United States' Defense Intelligence Agency, Lester Knox Coleman III. In Trail of the Octopus, an examination of his work in the DIA, Coleman claimed that as a surveillance consultant to the Cypriot Police Force Narcotics Squad (CPFNS), he witnessed CPFNS officers unpacking software from boxes marked "PROMIS Ltd, Toronto, Canada," for use in the police agency's recently centralized database. Although it seemed unlikely that such secret dealings would be so trumpeted, the story supported Riconosciuto's allegations that Earl Brian had sold it to the Canadians.

According to Coleman, the database had been installed by Link Systems, Ltd., described by Coleman as a US government "cut-out," established to fulfill a contract with the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control. Further investigation by Coleman revealed that these were bootleg copies of PROMIS, "made without the knowledge of Inslaw, to which a 'backdoor' software routine had been added. No matter how securely the front door might be barred with entry codes and passwords, American operators, holding the key to the secret back door, could break into the PROMIS systems operated by Cyprus, Egypt, Syria, Pakistan, Turkey, Kuwait, Israel, Jordan, Iran and Iraq whenever they wished, access the data stored there and get out again without arousing the slightest suspicion that the security of those systems had been breached..."[9]

In 1992, Ari Ben-Menasche published a memoir of his career in international arms trading called Profits of War. In it, he explained his understanding of William Hamilton's NSA background in establishing spy posts against the North in Vietnam, where he computerized a Vietnamese-English dictionary and began developing early versions of PROMIS, according to Ben-Menashe.[10] "The program he was developing would have the ability to track the movements of vast numbers of people around the world. Dissidents or citizens who needed to be kept under watch would be hard put to move freely again without Big Brother keeping an eye on their activities." [11] Elaborating on his sworn statement, Ben-Menasche explained that some officials working for the Reagan administration had hoped to use the Israelis to sell PROMIS to intelligence and police agencies throughout the world. Ben-Menasche quoted Rafi Eitan, the anti-terrorism advisor to the Israeli PM mentioned in the affidavit, as saying "We can use this program to stamp out terrorism by keeping track of everyone. But not only that, we can find out what our enemies know, too."[12]

Ben-Menashe also gave some description of how he envisioned the PROMIS software might work: "Using a modem, the spy network would then tap into the computers of such services as the telephone company, the water board, other utility commissions, credit card companies, etc. PROMIS would then search for specific information. For example, if a person suddenly started using more water and more electricity and making more phone calls than usual, it might be suspected he had guests staying with him. PROMIS would then start searching for the records of his friends and associates, and if it was found that one had stopped using electricity and water, it might be assumed, based on other records stored in PROMIS, that the missing person was staying with the subject of the investigation. This would be enough to have him watched..." Ben-Menashe also detailed PROMIS' notorious "back door," which allowed Israeli access, via modem and coded passwords, to the files of any foreign intelligence service using PROMIS.

Details about how PROMIS works, why it made such a prize for Earl Brian, were and remain sparse and vague. In a newsletter produced as part of a database on intelligence literature and personalities called Namebase, author Daniel Brandt argues that Ben-Menashe's chapter on PROMIS compromised an otherwise "frequently believable" book and should have been deleted. Brandt states that "a 'back door' to get around password protection is easy for any programmer,"[13] and it explained why the intelligence community might be interested in peddling it to foreign governments. "Please note, however, that you still need physical access to the computer, either through a direct-connect terminal or a remote terminal through the phone lines, in order to utilize a back door. Ari Ben-Menashe wants us to believe that foreigners allow technicians from another country to install new computer systems in the heart of their intelligence establishments, and don't even think to secure physical access to the system before they start entering their precious data.

"Then he claims that PROMIS ... can suck in every other database on earth, such as those used by utility companies, and correlate everything automatically...I don't like to see whistleblowers like Ben-Menashe needlessly discredited by their own high-tech gullibility."[14]

One person who might have had a view of how PROMIS works was Charles Hayes. Newspapers identified Hayes as a salvage dealer in Pulaski County, Kentucky, near the temporary home of Ari Ben-Menashe in Lexington, who purchased $45 worth of surplus computer equipment from the government in July 1990. The equipment included 13 terminals, nine printers, two cartridge module drives, 19 backup cartridges and two central memory units—equipment that had been used by the US Attorney's office since 1983 to maintain information via PROMIS on the witness protection program, informants, office employees, and outstanding grand jury cases. In August, when federal officials discovered that a weak magnetic screwdriver had failed to purge this information from the equipment adequately, two FBI agents dispatched to make inquiries of Hayes were kicked out.[15] Three days later, Hayes began to cooperate with the US Attorney's office, denied that he had possession of any information that might have been on the equipment, and invited an inspection. Inspectors discovered that the serial numbers of the two cartridge modules that Hayes claimed were the ones he bought did not match the numbers of the modules the Justice Department had sold.[16] Hayes then claimed he had sold the modules, but did not name the purchasers until after federal officials filed a lawsuit.[17] Justice Department attorneys later claimed that Hayes had indeed tried to sell the secret information to an undercover informant, but criminal charges were never filed.[18] The case led to a congressional investigation of computer security; the Justice Department now tosses rather than sells its extra data storage devices.

Even Bill Hamilton did not have a firm grasp on the workings of the full, modified PROMIS system. In a 1992 interview, he maintained that it could run on "any UNIX machine, Hewlett Packard UNIX, RISC 6000, AT&T, AS400 under its own operating system and on mainframes under MVS," that it was comprised of 88 program modules and that the source code—replete with the Inslaw name throughout the code commentary— was kept by any government that had it. When asked how a foreign country could modify the source code without discovering the back door, Hamilton was cryptic: "I don't know what's meant by the back door. What we've been told is that not only the software was sold, but computers with extra chips...What the chips do, we've been told, the extra chips, is to broadcast the data inside PROMIS to satellites owned by the NSA ... but we don't know enough about it as they've never shared anything with us."[19] This possibility neatly bypasses objections that physical access is required for a back door to work.

Ari Ben-Menashe claimed that Earl Brian's company Hadron sold PROMIS to Jordan as a test for the back door. Hadron technicians installed PROMIS for Jordanian intelligence in Amman, connecting it also to the computers of the city's public utilities, IBMs sold to Jordan in the late 1970s. From a small apartment in Amman, a Mossad-connected importer/exporter used PROMIS "to find out everything about everybody—as well as to tap into Jordan's military secrets," downloading it all to disks and passing it on to his contacts whenever he left the country.

With the help of Wackenhut and the Cabazons, according to Ben-Menashe, the US developed its own version of the back-door and the US and Israel began looking for a neutral company through which it could sell the program to foreign intelligence services. The company chosen for the task was Degem, a computer firm with offices in Israel, Guatemala and the South African Bantustan homeland. It had been taken over for the purpose by Robert Maxwell, the publishing mogul who drowned under mysterious circumstances in 1991.[20] Through Maxwell's Degem, working in tandem with Brian's Hadron, the software found a home with the military regime in Guatemala, where it tracked leftist insurgents. "Even if they traveled under a false name, various characteristics, such as height, hair color, age, were fed into roadside terminals and PROMIS searched through its database looking for a common denominator. It would be able to tell an army commander that a certain dissident who was in the north three days before had caught a train, then a bus, stayed at a friend's house, and was now on the road under a different name. That's how frightening the system was." According to Ben-Menashe, PROMIS was used in South Africa to track and squelch the organizers of a strike among the black coal miners via their mandatory identity cards.[21] Degem also sold PROMIS to the Soviet Union and the system was utilized by its GRU intelligence service at least until the coup against Mikhail Gorbachev.[22]

Ben-Menashe had one more footnote to add to the PROMIS story in his memoir. He claimed that because of Inslaw, an attorney, Leigh Ratiner of the Washington law firm Dickstein and Shapiro, was forced into early retirement in an agreement that forbade him to practice law for five years. This happened shortly after Ratiner began representing Inslaw for the firm. According to Ben-Menashe, this also happened after Dickstein and Shapiro received a $600,000 transfer from a CIA-Israeli slush fund for the purpose of getting Ratiner off the case, via Earl Brian.[23]

---

1. Fricker, p. 79, 80; Linsalata, Phil, "The Octopus File," Columbia Journalism Review, Nov–Dec 1991, p. 76.

2. Fricker, p. 78. Earl Brian's role in the PROMIS theft was spelled out explicitly by Inslaw lawyer Elliot Richardson in the New York Times in 1992. Richardson was the attorney general who actually stood up to Richard Nixon's corruption during the Saturday Night massacre. Brian sued over the New York Times article and lost. Richardson had written the article to encourage investigation of the case, but Brian used the opportunity to start a nuisance libel suit. On November 29, 1995, the New York Court of Appeals dismissed Brian's claim and declared that Richardson's assertions came under free speech protections.

Although never prosecuted over the PROMIS allegations, Brian survived only one more year after the libel suit before other past shady deals began to catch up with him. In October 1996 a California jury convicted him of Federal bank fraud, conspiracy and lying to auditors. Prosecutors charged that Brian had drafted documents to conceal losses of the Financial News Network and United Press International, for whom he served as chief executive, in order to obtain $70 million in bank loans for his other concern, a biotechnology firm called Infotechnology.

3. Mahar.

4. Mahar.

5. Bleifuss, Joel, "Scandal Gates," In These Times, September 18–24, 1991.

6. Bleifuss.

7. Linsalata.

8. Goddard, Donald, with Lester Coleman, Trail of the Octopus: From Beirut to Lockerbie, London: Bloomsbury, 1993, p. 198.

9. Valentine, Douglas, The Phoenix Program, New York: Avon Books, 1990. Valentine notes that the Phoenix program of assassination and torture utilized a "Big Mack" computer system to develop documentation "that directs the territorial intelligence system to quantitatively and qualitatively evaluate" the Viet Cong infrastructure (VCI)—in other words, tally body counts. "Statistical evidence of success so pleased the Washington brain trust," according to Valentine, "that additional computer systems were quickly introduced. In March 1969 the National Police Evaluation System went on line, recording 'police assignment data' for analysis and 'counter-measures.'" In 1970 Big Mack's bilingual replacement, the Big Mack Special Collection Program, shifted the burden of reporting and accountability to the RVN Territorial Intelligence System. In January 1970 the VCI Neutralization Information System was inaugurated to record all anti-VCI operations. The National Police Criminal Information System (NPCIS) was implemented in April 1970 to track VCI who were held beyond 'statutory limitations.' Designed to 'interface' with a Chieu Hoi [amnesty program] 'tracking system,' which aided province security committees in the 'post-apprehension monitoring of released VCI,' NPCIS was also compatible with theVCI Neutralization and Identification System, which stored in its classified files 'a history of the VCI member from the time of his identification to his neutralization.'"

Phoenix program police system upgrades happened at roughly the same time that the St. Louis Police Commission upgraded to the REJIS system at the behest of Bill Hamilton's older brother Alan. According to researcher C. D. Stelzer, Alan Hamilton held the position of secretary of the St. Louis Board of Police Commissioners from 1967 to 1970 and had worked for the city police computer system since 1964. Like his brother, he had also worked with the NSA. After his service as secretary to the St. Louis Police Commissioners, Alan Hamilton worked for an information system tied to the FBI's mainframe, where he lobbied hard for the use of the first public version of PROMIS.

10. Ben-Menashe, Ari, Profits of War, Sheridan Square, New York, 1992, p. 130.

11. Ben-Menashe, p. 131.

12. In 1995 Microsoft announced that the new version of its Windows software, Windows '95, would include an Internet interface with the capability of reading the user's hard-drive directory and reporting it to Microsoft. Eerily reminiscent of the PROMIS back door, such transmissions ostensibly could only happen voluntarily when the user registered the software electronically.

13. Brandt, Daniel, "Cyberspace Wars," Namebase Newsline No. 2, July–September 1993.

14. Baker, David L., "Computer Records Accidentally Sold," Lexington Herald-Leader, September 1, 1990.

15. Baker, David L., "Buyer Says Agents Didn't Find Computer With Secrets," Lexington Herald-Leader, September 5, 1990.

16. "Buyer of US Computer Files To Be Disclosed," Lexington Herald-Leader, September 6, 1990.

17. Baker, David L., "US Says Pulaski Man Tried To Sell Secrets," Lexington Herald-Leader, September 22, 1990.

18. Interview with Bill Hamilton, Technical Consultant, Volume 2, Issue 2, August–September, 1992.

19. Maxwell's body was found floating in the ocean near his yacht, the Lady Ghislaine, off the Canary Islands on November 5, 1991. He had not been seen for hours preceding his death. These types of rumors, of connections to Mossad and other international spy groups, had long circulated about Maxwell, and his publishing empire's finances had come under official review. Nevertheless, Spanish authorities concluded that Maxwell died of a heart attack, although he had no history of heart disease. Maxwell's daughter Ghislaine said the family was satisfied with the investigation, but his sons, widows and lawyers insisted that the death was accidental, perhaps with an eye toward Maxwell's $35.8 million insurance against accidental death. ("Maxwell's Mysterious Death Raises More Questions," MIN Media Industry Newsletter, No. 47, Vol. 44, November 25, 1991.)

One of the forensic specialists who worked on the autopsy later noted that a perforation under Maxwell's left ear could have been caused by an injection of a lethal substance. Labor Party MP George Galloway openly speculated in the British House of Commons that Maxwell was murdered because "dead men tell no tales." Britain's PM John Major was even moved to deny publicly that British intelligence was investigating Maxwell's finances after his death. By 1995, however, Britain's Serious Fraud Office had spent $13.9 million tracing Maxwell's web of over 400 companies (Reuters, 2/15/95), resulting in charges against Maxwell's financial advisors, Larry Trachtenberg and Robert Bunn, and his two sons, Ian and Kevin, for defrauding pensioners. A second charge of conspiring with his father was brought against Kevin Maxwell, age 36. The charge claimed that months before the elder Maxwell's death, he and his son used other pension assets and shares in another Israeli company, Scitex Corporation, to illegally raise money for other Maxwell companies (Reuters, 5/26/95). The collapse of Maxwell's empire—which ultimately led to son Kevin standing in the unemployment line and widow Elisabeth unsuccessfully fishing for a publisher to handle her memoir—began well before he died, lending credence to the suicide theory.

20. Oddly, Charles Hayes of Chicago, a member of a congressional delegation, was sent on a fact-finding tour to Johannesburg at the exact moment the world's second largest platinum mine fired 20,000 black workers to end a walk-out in January 1986. The mine was located in the homeland of Bophuthatswana, northwest of Johannesburg ("South African Platinum Mine Fires 20,000 Blacks Over Strike," Lexington Herald Leader, January 7, 1986.) In December of that year, attorney Charles Hayes, who would later buy the loaded Justice Department computers, was involved with a gemstone smuggling operation in Brazil with links to Kentucky. He represented one of the Brazilian corporations indicted by the US over the smuggling. (White, Jim, Courier-Journal, September 6, 1990.)

21. Ben-Menashe, p. 141.

22. Ibid.

The body of Alfred Alvarez, shot in the head with a .38 caliber bullet, burned in the desert heat for a day. It sat in a wooden chair behind Alvarez's house in a yard on Bob Hope Drive in Rancho Mirage, located in Riverside County. Police discovered the body along with those of two others, friends of Alvarez. Six months later, police broke open a door to a condo on Kearny Street and discovered the dead body of Paul Morasca, hog-tied by a telephone cord noosed around his neck and his curled legs. Morasca had strangled slowly as his legs uncurled. Three days later, Mary Quick, a 63-year-old school-teacher and head of the Women's auxiliary of American Legion Post 509 in Fresno, was killed by a shot to the head as she approached the Legion Hall. Investigators came to believe that all three murders were connected.[1]

---

[1] Littman, Jonathan and Taylor, Michael, "Bizarre Murders Puzzle Cops," San Francisco Chronicle, December 30, 1991.

CHAPTER 6:

Indio

For a time, Danny Casolaro focused his investigation on the collaboration between Wackenhut Corporation and the Cabazon Indian tribe. The clues provided by Riconosciuto, Casolaro looked deep into the Cabazon angle and watched the connections branch out. From the theft of the PROMIS software, the trail led to the October Surprise, to Ed Meese and Earl Brian, to the Cabazon reservation and to points beyond. The connections kept multiplying. Casolaro made plans to visit the reservation, but never did.[1]

The Cabazon tribe has only thirty members, making it one of the country's smallest tribes. Its desolate, three-and-a-half mile desert reservation is located near Indio, California, in the Coachella Valley outside of Los Angeles, to the Salton Sea's north. The tribe was as destitute as the land it owned until the arrival from Florida in 1978 of Dr. John P. Nichols, a white-haired and bearded Burl Ives lookalike. By the early 1980s, Nichols had transformed the Cabazon landscape into an enormous casino operation, replete with a power plant and housing developments. It became a center for international business, particularly in the weapons and security trade. In his notes, Casolaro calls John Philip Nichols "flaky—beyond a reasonable scope of achievement." He also calls him "a dangerous man." Nichols had been described by others variously as a charlatan and a spook, but a man with an obvious talent for writing successful grants. A Cabazon chairman, Art Welmus, described the tribe's predicament when Nichols came on the scene: "When you don't have nothing and you can't get grants, you're last on the totem pole. Where can you get a start?"[2] After Nichols had taken control, Welman remarked, "It's all controlled by outside forces. These poor Indians are brainwashed. They don't want to lose the money they're getting."[3]

The origins of grantsman Nichols' Svengali-like hold over the Cabazons remain as obscure as the job history on his résumé. Nichols depicted himself as an expert in "socio-health and economic-development planning" with twenty-five years experience. He also cited credentials as an ordained minister and Ph.D., with twenty years of employment by Pro Plan International, a company involved in economic development. Other jobs listed on Nichols' résumé included stints as a Milwaukee brewer and labor organizer, a mental health program director in Kentucky, Wisconsin and Michigan, and manager of a Coca-Cola plant in Sao Paulo, Brazil. The résumé included a number of falsifications and items conveniently left out. According to his claimed alma mater, the Philatea Theological Seminary of the Free Protestant Episcopal Church in London, Ontario, Nichols never earned a doctorate in theology. As a labor organizer, he had been arrested for mishandling union funds and was later picked up on a fugitive warrant.

Other facets of Nichols' life also resisted a narrow reading of his background in "socio-health and economic-development planning." Although he left the bottling plant after a year, Nichols spent ten more years in Chile, Bolivia, and Brazil. Although he played a significant role in organizing two million Marxist and Catholic voters into the leftist Chilean Evangelical Church,[4] he later bragged about his involvement in the murder of democratically-elected President Carlos Allende, as well as the attempted murder of Castro, under the orders of the CIA.[5] Later, Nichols denied that he ever made such statements. He characterized himself as "a simple social worker."

Nichols also worked at one time as business partners with G. Wayne Reeder, an alleged CIA operative. Reeder was partners with Neal Bush, brother of George W. Bush, and defaulted on over fourteen million dollars debt to the failed Silverado Savings and Loan and San Marino Savings and Loan companies. During their association, Reeder was one of many people who provided Nichols the commodity he needed to succeed as a grantsman: contacts. Among many others, Uganda's Idi Amin and Chilean president Eduardo Frei made the list, and police reports indicated that Nichols had business contacts in sixteen foreign countries.[6]

Whatever Nichols was, social worker, big money shmoozer or something else, he quickly took over the management of the Cabazon tribe and began building his empire in the desert. Benefits accrued to an operation based on Indian lands. The sovereign status of Indian lands grants certain advantages to investors, including tax advantages, relative freedom from government scrutiny, and the bypassing of legal regulations—such as environmental impact statements—which would be required on non-reservation lands. One of the first schemes Nichols put into action was the mail order sale of tax-free cigarettes from the reservation. This operation employed about ten Cabazon Indians in a non-air conditioned trailer. The Indians reportedly made about one hundred dollars a week for their work. The cigarette sales succeeded, and within two years the tribe branched out into the sale of tax-free liquor. The state of California stepped in this time, however, and sued and won for unpaid taxes on the liquor. From available records, it appears the back taxes were never paid. Similarly, Nichols' plans for a telethon, an Indian Olympics, the processing of coal and the importations of gold, and the development of a pharmaceutical firm all fell through—rankling tribal members, who charged that Nichols had manipulated tribal factions and brought in non-Cabazons to vote on these operations.[7] Nichols had bigger plans. In 1979 he put together the arms-manufacturing partnership between the Cabazon tribe and the Wackenhut Corporation, called Cabazon Arms. Wackenhut remains one of the world's largest private security operations and the third largest private prison contractor in the United States. Among numerous other operations, Wackenhut has supplied guards for US embassies worldwide, security for nuclear installations and test sites in the United States, and security-related enterprises in thirty nine countries around the world.

John Philip Nichols.

Alfred Alvarez.

Wackenhut is a private detective agency founded in 1954 by former FBI man George Wackenhut and three ex-FBI friends in Miami, a hotbed of rightist political activity at the time. George Wackenhut had important political connections—Florida governor Claude Kirk and Senator George Smathers among them—and shared a predilection with J. Edgar Hoover for acquiring files on people. His connections helped build his agency into a powerful private police force with huge government contracts. Senator Smather's law firm hired guards from a Wackenhut subsidiary to work nuclear bomb test sites in Nevada and Cape Canaveral, a workaround to the federal law forbidding private detectives from working for the government. George Wackenhut's preoccupation with compiling files made the agency an extraordinary intelligence resource as well. Investigator John Connolly noted that "By 1965, Wackenhut was boasting to potential investors that the company maintained files on two and a half million suspected dissidents—one in forty-six American adults then living. In 1966, after acquiring the private files of Karl Barslaag, a former staff member of the House Committee on Un-American Activities, Wackenhut could confidently maintain that with more than four million names, it had the largest privately held file on suspected dissidents in America."[8]

George Wackenhut and wife Ruth.

Former Florida governor Claude Kirk George Wackenhut (center) and Grace Kelly's brother, Jack (right).

By then, almost half of Wackenhut's executive staff were former FBI members, two of whom had been senior officers of the division in charge of domestic intelligence. Current and past members of the Wackenhut board of directors included former CIA Deputy Director Frank Carlucci, former Deputy CIA Director Bobby Inman, former CIA Director Admiral William Raborn, and former FBI Director Clarence Kelly.

Michael Riconosciuto provided more names in the cast of characters that made up the history of Wackenhut: "Robert Jason, who is the group vice president of Wackenhut, has an interesting history. Robert Jason was vice president of International Telegraph and Telephone [ITT] … During the Allende situation in Chile, he was the CIA station boss as well as vice president of ITT for Chilean operations. And his deputy station boss was Dino Pianzio. And John Philip Nichols was working under Dino John Pianzio at that time. Jason goes from ITT to Wackenhut. During the Carter administration, Robert E. Jason is Commissioner of US Customs for the entire Carter administration. As Commissioner of Customs, he has some interesting projects directly out of his office. One of them was Fat Albert, the drug interdiction surveillance balloons ... the big balloons with radar and other sensors that were doing the aerial surveillance for drug smugglers flying in ... vendors supporting that project were wholly owned by Earl W. Brian. The contracting officer handling all of those companies was Peter Videnieks, out of the Bureau of Customs.... And this was a very large procurement. And Videnieks' job, as contracting officer, was to deal with industry."[9]

To assist in the administration of Cabazon Arms, John Philip Nichols recruited Peter Zokosky, husband to the Mayor of Indio and the previous head of an ammunitions manufacturing company called Armtech. Under the impression that Nichols intended to start a similar arms manufacturing operation on the Cabazon land, Zokosky soon discovered himself "involved with drug dealers, schemers, contras and murderers."[10]

In 1981, Nichols, Zokosky, and A. Robert Frye, a vice president of Wackenhut, travelled to Quebec in an attempted $18 million dollar purchase of Valleyfield Chemical Products Corporation, a weapons propellant manufacturer. The deal went bust due to Canadian government objections. The trio then went to Indiana, New Jersey, and Washington, D.C., setting up the manufacturing of combustible cartridge cases and three hundred pairs of night vision goggles. Zokosky recalls that the goggles, at least, were intended to be sold to the Nicaraguan contras, and recalls a demonstration of the equipment for contra Eden Pastora (aka Commander Zero) at a police weapons range in Lake Cahuilla, California.[11] Powerful men were creating powerful schemes on the Cabazon Reservation, and that power could be used to stop those who might interfere with those schemes.

In 1982, Fred Alvarez, a Cabazon tribal leader, and two companions, were found murdered on the Indio reservation. Alvarez had been critical of Nichols' and Wackenhut's dealings with the Cabazon tribe,[12] and he had mentioned to friends that he had received death threats. Investigative reporter Virginia McCullough later came to believe that Alvarez had discovered that monies rightfully belonging to the Indians were being embezzled by the partnership called Bingo Palace Inc.[13] Alvarez knew what he was getting into, however. He had told the Indio Daily News, "My life is on the line.There are people out there [on the reservation] that want to kill me."

According to Riconosciuto, "Alvarez was present at all the meetings, and he was gung-ho behind Nichols, and everything that was going on there. OK? We were all red-blooded Americans, and we believed in the things that were going on! The way things were shaping up with the Reagan Election Committee and the things that were being orchestrated made us all concerned. And Alvarez wrote a detailed letter to Ronald Reagan expressing his concern. All the details of the October Surprise hostage issue were outlined in the letter. I mean, in specifics."

Linda Streeter-Dukic, Alvarez' sister, described early relations of Alvarez and the inner circle around Nichols as being amicable, but said that when he started objecting to some of the schemes coming down from Nichols and the other tribe leaders, they began to send him on business trips. One trip was to Denver, in June 1981, to attend a conference. Streeter says that, while in Denver, Alvarez was offered a large amount of money to carry drugs back to Indio, but had turned the offer down.

"When he got off the plane," she said, "the police grabbed him, threw him spread-eagle against a car and searched him and his bags." Alvarez's mother said that only Nichols and his son were aware of Alvarez's trip to Denver.[14]

On the morning of July 1, 1981, a meeting was scheduled by Alvarez with attorney and former Cabazon chairman Joe Benitez. The intended topic of discussion was how to oust Cabazon control from Nichols. When Benitez arrived at Alvarez's home in Rancho Mirage he found Fred Alvarez shot through the head as he sat in a chair. Alvarez's girlfriend and another friend were also nearby, shot dead.[15] [16]

The murder of Alvarez and his friends took place during a period when Nichols, Zokosky, and a Wackenhut associate named Bob Frye were travelling around the country on munitions business. Zokosky told reporter John Connolly, "I felt like they were stalling. We had no meetings scheduled." [17] Zokosky returned to Indio, and the following day the bodies of Alvarez and his companions were found. The day after that, Nichols returned to Indio. When Zokosky told Nichols about the murders, "Nichols seemed unaffected, like he already knew." Zokosky stated that Nichols, "... dialed a number and asked for Bob Frye. 'Alvarez has been murdered,' he said into the phone a few seconds later. After another few seconds, Nichols said, 'Okay, so long,' and hung up."[18]

The investigation of the deaths by the police was slipshod and hurried. Police familiar with the case note the friendship of Nichols with one of the investigating detectives. One police investigator believed he was removed from the case because of pressure put on his superiors from the outside. When the investigator pursued further on his own, he received death threats, one from a crossbow-wielding man. Fearing for his family, the man gave up and moved out of town.[19] In any case, the investigation languished until the appearance of Jimmy Hughes. Hughes had been Nichols' Wackenhut bodyguard, and he reported to Indio police officials that he was Nichols' bagman for the murders of Fred Alvarez and his friends. Hughes described Nichols and two of his sons, Mark and John Paul, as having doled out $5,000 in cash in front of him, with orders to deliver the money to two men in the nearby town of Idyllwild. Hughes stated that, "Nichols admitted to me the ordering of the Alvarez murder. He stated there was a US-government covert action... Pressures from unknown Washington, D.C. government agencies have caused a possible shutdown of this case."[20]

According to Hughes, the murderers included several ex-Green Berets employed as firemen in Chicago. Hughes went into hiding in Sonoma and Lake counties after the murders, under the protection of the Riverside county District Attorney's office and the California Department of Justice. The FBI offered Hughes protection under a witness protection program, but he turned it down, fearing "Nichols has made a deal with the FBI through the Wackenhut Corporation. Possibly ... he himself has been protected by the FBI."[21] Hughes also stated that the Alvarez investigation had been interfered with by "an agency out of Washington, D.C." Offering no other specifics, he said, "The FBI is small potatoes compared to the agency."

NAPA Sentinel editor Harry Martin detailed curiosities about the investigation that followed Hughes' revelations: "The chief investigator for the Riverside County District Attorney's Office was later taken off the case and transferred to the Juvenile division and then given early retirement. Shortly after his retirement, the DA investigator states that he was pulled off the road one day by a CIA agent and told to forget all about the 'desert' if he wanted to enjoy his retirement."[22]

After Jimmy Hughes came forward with information he left the country, reportedly traveling to Guatemala. Hughes was said to be in possession of documentation linking the men at Cabazon to a hit list of political targets including Swedish Prime Minister Olof Palme, who was murdered in 1986; Israeli intelligence agent Amiran Nir, who died in a mysterious plane crash; and Cyrus Hashemi, a key player in the events of October Surprise, also murdered in 1986.

The expansion of Cabazon enterprises continued after the murder of Alvarez. In 1983 the Department of Defense gave the Cabazons authorization to manufacture weaponry. At that time Nichols also engaged in discussions with Stormont Laboratories, a genetics lab, about the possibility of manufacturing a bio-weapons detector. In March 1983, a casino and bingo parlor appeared on the reservation—visible on the left side of Highway 10 driving in to Palm Springs. Part of the funding for the bingo parlor came from a $90,000 HUD grant, given ostensibly to the Cabazons for the construction of a museum.

In 1983, the Cabazons contacted La France Specialties, another weapons manufacturer, to seek assistance in building a weapons factory on the Indian lands. A letter to La France said that the weapons intended to be manufactured included assault rifles with laser sights, sniper rifles with one mile-plus range, 9mm machine pistols, rocket systems, night vision scopes, and battle communications systems.[23]

Danny Casolaro focused on the most grisly of the Cabazon murders in his notes, that of Riconosciuto associate Paul Morasca: "In 1982, the body of thirty-year-old Paul Morasca was found hog-tied and fatally strangled in his condominium on San Francisco's Telegraph Hill. Morasca, who had been working among the Cabazon Arms confidantes, reportedly had the access codes for offshore accounts containing hundreds of millions of dollars in drug money ostensibly for covert operations."[24]

Michael Riconosciuto said of Morasca's death, "And then my associate Paul Morasca was found murdered. I was the one who found him. And Nichols and others tried to keep me away from our condominium office in San Francisco. It was suspicious to me. And after almost fourteen days of not seeing Paul—and then a day after he missed a critical meeting that there's no way he would have missed—that's when I went looking for him. And Nichols tried to get me down to the desert on an emergency basis to work on some project so that I'd be otherwise occupied. And I said that I'd be down there as soon as I found out what happened to Paul. And he was really pushy and really stressed out. When he came across to me on this, it made me even more suspicious. And other people that I talked to tried to dissuade me, and it was just not normal, the amount of pressure and emphasis they were putting on this situation. I knew in my gut ... Paul was dead! He'd been slowly strangled to death."[25]

Three days after Paul Morasca's murder, a woman named Mary Quick—63 years old, a school teacher and Women's Auxiliary president of Fresno's American Legion—was headed toward Legion Post 509 when she was killed by a single gunshot to the head in an apparently unrelated mugging. A year after the murder, however, police learned that Riconosciuto claimed a business association with Mary Quick's nephew, Brian Weiss. Police sources told the San Francisco Examiner that Weiss gave his aunt a bank card with secret account numbers, perhaps the same access codes that may have led to Paul Morasca's murder. According to the police, "She had no connection (to any of the principals) and could be trusted. Mary Quick was to be instructed to give information only to Paul (Morasca) or Michael Riconosciuto. She was not aware of what the computer card was for and had never received the card." Riconosciuto claimed that Mary Quick's murderers were probably trying to recover the card.[26]

After the death of his wife, John Philip Nichols became involved with a twenty-seven-year-old heroin addict. Nichols attempted to hire a hitman to kill his girlfriend's alleged suppliers, but made the mistake of soliciting the hit through a police informant. On tape Nichols can be heard saying, "I'll pay five hundred and five hundred," for two murders. Nichols also made clear that there would be additional work for the proposed hitman: "I need some work done in Latin America. I do a lot of business down there." Nichols proposed that the murderer move to Las Vegas, and "not freelance, but work out a guaranteed income."

In January of 1985 John P. Nichols was arrested on charges of soliciting the murder of five persons. The case never came to trial. Nichols pleaded no contest and was sentenced to prison for four years, although he served only nineteen months. The felony conviction forced Nichols' official removal from his job running the Cabazon reservation. The elder Nichols continued as "mental health counselor" to employees and the Indians on the reservation, however, while his son, John Paul Nichols, became tribal administrator. A thirty thousand square foot casino and bingo hall were soon under construction, and a deal was cut with Colmac Corporation to construct a $150 million power generating plant on the reservation. Other business dealings by the Cabazon tribe included plans for a thirteen hundred luxury housing project to take advantage of HUD funding, and an industrial incinerator for medical wastes. Both proposals would have taken advantage of the fact that environmental impact statements would not be required because of the land's sovereign status—a legalism pointed out by Michael Riconosciuto in his affidavit of March 21, 1991. An extensive Southern California Edison electrical facility has also been developed on Cabazon land.[27]

In 1990, control of the Cabazon reservation was turned over to John Paul's younger brother, Mark. Mark had served six months in jail in Florida for possession and sale of cocaine and LSD in 1978. Also in 1990, a pari-mutuel offtrack betting parlor was opened, courtesy of a grant from HUD. The Indian Gaming Regulatory Act of 1988 made the practice of Indians opening betting parlors and casinos commonplace by the early 1990s. In fact, the act allowed tribes like the Cabazons to buy property outside the reservation but regulate it under the same rules of sovereignty that protected the industrial incinerator and Riconosciuto's manufacture of chemical weapons from federal control, creating great potential growth for such enterprises.[28]

Casolaro began looking into illegal operations connected to other Indian reservations in the United States. He found connections to the Papago Indian reservation and the alleged shipment of drugs by the CIA and the criminal underground. In his notes on Cabazon, Casolaro remarked: "Guns to Iraq—Missiles to Iran—Dope—for money" with arrows showing that dope money funds the above.[29]

Casolaro had a hard time trying to come up with a title for his unfolding story. He listed several alternates for his manuscript: "On the Trail of the Moneycatchers," "On the Trail of an Unlikely Alliance," "On the Trail of an Alliance Gone Awry," "Rogue Spies, Big Oil, Organized Crime and Secret Empires," and the prophetic "Death of the Poet." Each suggested some connection to what he had learned in his research on the Cabazons, struck as he was with its importance to the Inslaw case. At one point he considered simply calling the book Indio.[30]

---

1. "Inslaw," Leading Edge, p. 48; "The Family That Preys Together," Covert Action 41.

2. Littman, Jonathan, “Mystery Man Who Transformed a Tribe,” San Francisco Chronicle, September 5, 1991.

3. Littman, Jonathan, “Tiny California Tribe’s Huge Clout,” San Francisco Chronicle, September 4, 1991.

4. Littman, “Mystery Man.”

5. “The Com-12 Briefing,” Phoenix Liberator, March 23, 1993, p. 16.

6. Littman, “Mystery Man.”

7. Littman, “Mystery Man.”

8. Connolly, John, “Inside the Shadow CIA,” Spy, September 1992.

9. Mahar.

10. Connolly, John, “Badland,” Spy, April 1992.

11. Ibid.

12. From US News & World Report, August 23, 1993: “In 1980, California’s Cabazon Indian tribe hired as their poker-room manager one Rocco Zangari, identified as a mobster in Senate testimony. He was subsequently fired. Later, after tribal Vice Chairman Alfred Alvarez complained to local newspapers about poker-room skimming, Alvarez and two others were shot dead; the case has never been solved.”

13. McCullough, Virginia, Interview with Kenn Thomas, January 27, 1994.

14. Connolly, “Badland.”

15. Littman and Taylor, “Bizarre Murders.”

16. In the spring of 1991, Linda Streeter-Duvic and former tribal chairman Art Welmus attempted again to organize the Cabazon tribe to oust John Philip Nichols and clan as administrators of the Cabazons. They were kept from assembling in the tribal hall by eleven guards, but held their meetings instead in a nearby mobile home. In response, the Nicholses initiated expulsion proceedings, and flew in a parliamentarian from Wisconsin to conduct hearings. Armed guards took twenty Cabazons to a trailer next to a bingo hall, where they witnessed the parliamentarian accuse Welmus of the theft of a cheesecake, the attempt to use the tribal hall, and of maligning the Nichols management in the local press. The vote to banish Welmus and Streeter-Duvic was deadlocked until votes were received from five Nichols supporters recently registered as voters. The new voters were non-Cabazon, distant relatives (stepchildren) of the Nichols faction. The final vote expelled Welmus, age sixty, from the tribe and Streeter-Dukic, age 44, for twenty years, and fined them $50,000. (Littman, Jonathan, “Tribal Managers Tough To Challenge,” San Francisco Chronicle, September 4, 1991; a letter from counsel to the Cabazons to the San Francisco Chronicle dated Sept. 19, 1991 challenged the details of this report and Jonathan Littman’s entire series on the Cabazons and demanded a retraction, which it did not receive.)

17. Connolly, “Badland.”

18. Ibid.

19. Littman and Taylor.

20. Connolly, "Badland."

21. Ibid.

22. Martin, Harry, NAPA Sentinel.

23. Connolly, "Badland."

24. Casolaro's Notes, p. 88.

25. Casolaro's Notes, p. 104.

26. Littman and Taylor.

27. Connolly, "Badland."

28. Malone, Roy, "Edgar Opposes Indians' Plan for Casino," St. Louis Post-Dispatch, October 14, 1992. Interestingly, in March 1995, Bill Hamilton's brother Lou gathered together investors from the St. Louis, Missouri area for a riverboat gambling site in Lemay, Missouri. The effort gained news attention because some the investors were longtime donors to the political campaigns of the St. Louis County Executive George R. "Buzz" Westfall. Lou Hamilton's company, Futuresouth, was the St. Louis partner to the Showboat casino chain based in Nevada. (Schlinkmann, Mark "Casinos Enlist Westfall Backers," St. Louis Post-Dispatch, March 30, 1995.)

29. Casolaro, p. 359.

30. Jonathan Littman, "Tiny California Tribe's Huge Clout," San Francisco Chronicle, 9/4/91.

CHAPTER 7:

Behold, a Pale Horse

Danny Casolaro pulled the various threads he had uncovered together into a book proposal for submission to publishers, entitled, Behold, a Pale Horse. He didn't realize at the time, but he was describing a part of the interlinking cabal he would later call "The Octopus." The following excerpt is from the book proposal.

> Behold, a Pale Horse will be a haunting odyssey that depicts a manifesto of deceit, decisions of conscience, good and evil, intrigue and betrayal.
>
> John Philip Nichols found his promised land just north of Mexicali on the wild grasses above the Salton Sea.
>
> He was sixty-years-old then and the Cabazon Indian reservation on the edge of Sonora was an ideal place for him to nurse his secret self. This is vast desert emptiness where the yucca reaches nearly forty feet high, where the Mormons saw it as a symbol pointing to the promised land and they called it the Joshua Tree. But the Joshua Tree is an ugly, unsymmetrical lily with burly arms crooked at the elbow and it points everywhere, not unlike John Philip Nichols, as if asking itself "what shall I do next?"
>
> There is a point on the ridge of the Little San Bernardino mountains known as Salton View where you are more than five thousand feet above the desert and where, to the north, you can see the great escarpment of Mount San Jacinto and, to the south, the man-made Salton Sea, the orchards of the Coachella valley and, on a clear day, old Mexico.
>
> It is always clear in Indio and with the clarity of the warbler in the cottonwood grove, John Philip Nichols knew that he could bring his box office charity and all his earthly possessions into the reservation of the Cabazon Band of Mission Indians. With no more than two dozen Indians and nearly > two thousand acres of desert solitaire, cactus and cotton grove, the Cabazon reservation was a suitable home for gambling, dope, dirty money and gun running and all the fugitive visions that line the edge of oppression.

>
> John Philip Nichols didn't howl under twelve full moons before the gambling was underway and, in the desert night, people flocked from all over to Indio Bingo and to the poker casino at the fork of Highway 10 and Highway 86. Under a major corporation's umbrella subsidiary, later to be named Cabazon Arms, the gun runners and the money traders soon arrived, the weapon makers and the generals from Babylon, contra resuppliers, covert operatives from both the East and West and, in what one source calls "a marriage of necessity," the dope dealers, the mobsters and the murderers.
>
> Whatever John Philip Nichols saw in the dark cathedral of those desert nights in silence and certainty cracked and came unglued. After a number of still-unsolved execution-style murders and solicitation-for-murder charge for which he was jailed, the dark vision of John Philip Nichols eroded. Although he's been released from a short stint in prison, he's a one-eyed Jack now since only Indio Bingo gambling—managed by his sons, the Las Vegas-managed poker casino, the Indians and the most formidable creatures of the desert remain.

Several of the Cabazon Arms associates during the 1980s are coming out of the shadows to take top billing for the actual participation in the multi-million dollar laundered payment to the Iranians to delay the release of the hostages, in shutting down the dope and dirty money schemes of Nugan Hand and resurfacing its activities, in assisting Gerald Bull in the refinements and distribution of his weapon arsenal including his Super Gun and in the development of the Fuel Air Explosive technologies—thought to be responsible for the Beirut bomb which killed two hundred forty-one US servicemen.

An international cabal whose services cover parochial political intrigue, espionage, the trade of weapon technologies, biotoxins, drug trafficking, money laundering and murder has emerged from an isolated desert Indian reservation just north of Mexicali. While this cabal continues, its origins were spawned thirty years ago in the shadow of the Cold War. In recent months, however, several of its members have gratuitously taken credit for the purposeful delay of the release of the hostages until after the 1980 election, scuttling and resettling the schemes of the Australian-based Nugan Hand bank, their involvement with Gerald Bull, assassinated last spring in Brussels and the development and distribution of fuel air explosive technologies.

CHAPTER 8:

Wild Rumors

The facts that Danny investigated astounded him, but the rumors were out of this world, some of them quite literally.

Rumor had it, for instance, that the Cabazons belonged to worldwide “Reservation Operations” run on Indian lands by the “Enterprise” and Wackenhut under the project name “Yellow Lodge.”[1] Yellow Lodge allegedly produced advanced warfare projects, including parthenogenic viruses co-engineered with Stormont Labs in Woodland, California. Stormont Labs later acknowledged that it had discussions with Wackenhut concerning biological weapons.[2]

Yellow Lodge ran operations on Jicarilla Apache lands and other Indian reservations, including a center called “D6” located in Dulce, New Mexico. Danny learned that some UFO enthusiasts identify this location as the site of a huge underground joint human/alien base. Others believe the alien base to be government disinformation intended to confuse the real nature of the Dulce operation.[3]

In his notes Danny mentions “MJ 12—extraterrestrial,” alleged by the more excitable end of the UFO research spectrum to be a super-secret US military group charged with signing a non-aggression pact with space aliens.[4] He also mentions “Area #51,” and “Pine Gap.” Area 51 is a military test site in Nevada for advanced aerial weaponry. Although only through a recent job-hazards lawsuit has the Air Force begun to admit to the existence of the base, Area 51 has long been known as the staging ground for the U2 spy plane, the SR17 Blackbird, and is much-rumored as the home of the post-Stealth marvel called the Aurora. In 1989, a man named Bob Lazar went public with claims that he had worked at Area 51, taking apart and reverse-engineering alien space craft. Although even UFO skeptics acknowledge some consistencies in Lazar’s stories, his efforts at documenting his credentials and work history have met with some doubt.[5]

Pine Gap is the top secret underground American base located near Alice Springs in Australia, officially known as the Joint Defense Space Research Facility.[6] Pine Gap allegedly serves as the central American base for the monitoring of spy satellites and interception and decoding of various forms of broadcast communications between foreign powers unfriendly to the US. Pine Gap was built in 1968, ostensibly as a means of sharing space program data with the Australians. Opposition to the base grew as it became clearer that it had a more prosaic purpose—espionage. In his 1987 book The Crimes of Patriots, author Jonathan Kwitny demonstrated that CIA manipulation led to the early end in Australia of the administration of Labor Party PM Gough Whitlam, in part because of his opposition to Pine Gap. Indeed, Whitlam was rousted after his public complaints about intelligence agency deceptions over the tragic US policy in East Timor, and the CIA's funding of Australia's right-wing Country Party. By a quirk of Australia's constitution, Whitlam was not driven from office by an election, but was removed by a governor-general he had appointed, one who had strong ties to the CIA.[7] No doubt the paranoia about this destabilization of the US ally down under fueled other rumors among locals about the underground Pine Gap base involving alien/government collaboration.[8]

One early page of Danny's notes seemingly ties together Area 51, Pine Gap, a small Pennsylvania town called Tonoma, and possibly one of its citizens, someone named Fred Dick. Perhaps tracing one of many convoluted dead ends that Danny traced, the authors of this book dispatched an investigator to the "Tonoma, PA" in the notes, but failed to find Dick, even after placing a classified in the local newspaper, or any indication of what may have linked him to the two mysterious military bases.[9] Buried in notes written much later, however, were references to Tonomopah, Nevada, near Area 51. Fred Dick, however, remains a mystery.

Although he had an interest in computers and science, Casolaro's interest in the UFO world began with Michael Riconosciuto. Riconosciuto had a proclivity for flights of flying saucer fancy going back at least a generation. After Casolaro's death, he told one computer magazine that Danny had learned nothing more than what one of two intelligence agency factions wanted him to know in order to embarrass the other faction. One faction was called Aquarius and had a leadership sub-group called MJ-12.[10] Riconosciuto even told one writer that he had witnessed the autopsy of an alien body. The writer concluded that Riconosciuto "would have told anyone anything to get out of prison."[11]

Rumors also had it that Riconosciuto had worked for Lear Aircraft in Reno, Nevada. This connected him to both John Lear, Sr., creator of the Lear jet, and often claimed by UFO buffs as having done research on anti-gravity for the government, as well as John Lear, Jr., a former CIA pilot who also hit the UFO circuit with tales of saucers and aliens in cahoots with the US government. Lear

Jr. and Bob Lazar comprise a faction within the UFO sub-culture that maintains a regular presence at its gatherings. Other members of this nexus have included the redoubtable William Cooper, whose 1991 book, Behold a Pale Horse, shared the title of the first draft proposal of Casolaro's manuscript and became notorious for its examination of Area 51, its reprinting of the anti-Semitic Protocols of the Elders of Zion, and its claim that JFK was shot by the driver of his car in the presidential motorcade. To a lesser extent this nexus also included Gordon Novel, by rumor and confession a minor player in the Kennedy assassination and the Watergate scandal. Some have suggested that the bizarre tales of extraterrestrials coming from this nexus serve as disinformation to deflect attention away from serious issues such as gun-running and black project weapons development.[12]

Riconosciuto had his own inter-generational connection to the UFO lore, and his own link to the Kennedy assassination. His father Marshall had been a business associate of Fred Crisman, a man involved in the Maury Island incident, one of the earliest UFO incidents to follow pilot Kenneth Arnold's famed flying discs over Mt. Rainier in 1947.[13] Arnold, in fact, investigated claims by Crisman and Harold Dahl that Dahl, his son, his dog and two others witnessed six saucers as the crew boated in Puget Sound along the shore of Maury Island. Dahl's child was burned and his dog killed when one of the saucers spewed metallic debris on the boat. Crisman and Dahl mailed metal fragments of the debris to Amazing Stories editor Ray Palmer, who hired Kenneth Arnold himself to investigate. Confused by what he was hearing from Crisman and Dahl, Arnold called in two Air Force Intelligence officers. They conducted some interviews, collected some of the debris, and were headed back to home base on a B-25 when an explosion on their early morning flight killed them both. The Maury Island incident was written off for years as a hoax,[14] but recent research has brought up the possibility that Crisman used his possession of the saucer debris as a means to a career among the spooks.[15]

Flying saucer crash retrieval rumors mounted in 1947 near the Riconosciuto stomping ground in Tacoma, Washington. The Tacoma News Tribune reported upon a retrieval by William Guy Bannister, the FBI Special Agent in Charge of the area at the time.[16] Bannister became famous much later in life when he shared office space with the Fair Play for Cuba Committee in New Orleans, possibly employing Lee Harvey Oswald as an agent provocateur. Crisman, too, had been connected to Oswald via a subpoena from the investigation of JFK's death by New Orleans District Attorney Jim Garrison. Some alleged that Crisman was one of the three hoboes photographed after their arrest in the railroad yard behind the infamous grassy knoll on November 22, 1963. Crisman was notably silent about both Maury Island and JFK in his 1970 memoir of life in Tacoma, entitled Murder of a City, written under the pseudonym of Jon Gold.[17] He did have warm comments about Marshall Riconosciuto, however, and recounted that the young Michael "had discovered several electronic bugs" at his father's office.

---

1. "The Com-12 Briefing," Phoenix Liberator, March 23, 1993, p. 16.

2. Cockburn, Alexander, "Meters and Mortars," New Statesman, March 27, 1992.

3. "Com-12," p. 23.

4. Blum, Howard, Out There, Simon and Schuster, New York, 1990. Sources for the history of MJ12 abound in the rumor mill. This book, written by a two-time Pulitzer Prize nominee and former New York Times investigative reporter, discusses without dismissing the prospect of secret US government investigations of extraterrestrials. It also reproduces the infamous MJ-12 documents, from which lore about this unholy alliance has arisen.

5. "A Lineman For Lincoln County: Area 51's Glenn Campbell Interviewed," Steamshovel Press #12, 1995.

6. Sauder, Richard, Underground Bases and Tunnels, Dracon Press, 1995. Although this book does not mention Pine Gap, it documents similar underground bases around the world and provides a credible view of the tunneling technology.

7. Kwitny, Jonathan, The Crimes of Patriots, Touchstone, New York, 1987. Casolaro took extensive notes from this book primarily for its main subject, the Nugan Hand bank scandal, which began to figure prominently in the Octopus theory.

8. "The Mysterious US Base of Pine Gap," Notes From the Hangar, 3rd Quarter, 1991.

9. Correspondence with investigator G. J. Krupey, September 8, 1993.

10. Brown, Colin, "CIA Computer Genius Alleges Massive Conspiracy," Technical Consultant, December–January 1991.

11. Ecker, Don, "Inslaw: Was Wackenhut a Player?" UFO Magazine, Vol. 8, No. 1, 1993.

12. Hansson, Lars, UFOs, Aliens and 'Ex'-Intelligence Agents: Who's Fooling Whom? The Inside Story of John Lear, Bill Cooper and the Greatest Cover Up in History, Paragon Research, Orlando, Florida, 1991.

13. According to researcher Virginia McCullough, Marshall Riconosciuto also had associations to Nixon crony Pat Moriarty, and references to both appear in Casolaro's notes. McCullough noted that Moriarty helped arranged Nixon's first trip to China and was later connected to another conspiracy potentate, Bo Gritz. Michael Riconosciuto mentioned his father in point 14 of his March 1991 affidavit for the House Judiciary Committee.

14. Ruppelt, Edward J., The Report On Unidentified Flying Objects, Doubleday, Garden City, NY, 1956, pp. 26–27; Menzel, Donald H. and Boyd, Lyle G., The World of Flying Saucers, Doubleday, Garden City, NY, 1963, pp. 21–23.

15. Flammonde, Paris, The Age of Flying Saucers, Hawthorne Books, New York, 1971, p. 13–17; Halbritter, Ron, "The Hoax On You," Steamshovel Press #12, 1995, p. 23.

16. Halbritter, p. 24.

17 Gold, Jon, Murder of A City, Tacoma, WA, 1970, p. 78.

CHAPTER 9:

Pursuit of the Tape

One of the incidents Danny Casolaro wrote about in his manuscript was the attempted retrieval of an important tape that Michael Riconosciuto, "Danger Man," had stashed away. Here is Danny's account of this episode, from his Octopus manuscript:

> It is a pale moon that illuminates the characters in this story. With chords of fear and longing, it is a world of darkness and betrayal that everyone thinks they know but few have seen. The real faces in this world are all too human. Danger Man's mind is as balkanized[1] as the script he lives and the land he travels. Perhaps betrayal becomes a way of life.[2] The background music no longer echoes national anthems[3] but T. S. Eliot's Gerontion: "Think/neither fear nor courage saves us. Unnatural vices/are fathered by our heroism. Virtues/are forced upon us by our impudent crimes."
>
> These impudent[4] crimes are the subject of this update and a brief capsule seems as hopeless as carving the Lord's Prayer[5] on the head of a secret agent. For, like the enormous Danger Man himself, this story will resist[6] shrinkage. Its events are too febrile, its local color too relentless.[7]
>
> The sun had burned away the morning fog when I arrived in Seattle on Easter Sunday, bound for Everett, some thirty miles away. I had come to visit and retrieve a tape recording from the intriguing Danger Man himself, forty-three-year-old Michael J. Riconosciuto, whom lawmen had deposited in the Snohomish County jail in Everett, Washington.
>
> The tape Danger Man has recorded a month earlier, he alleged, was a direct threat from a former Justice Department official describing two legal entanglements that were about to befall him if he cooperated with a mushrooming Capitol Hill inquiry. If this tape was retrievable, I knew this scandal was about to be publicly born.

It was during the last year that I began calling Michael "Danger Man." During hours of telephone calls from him, he had told me in exotic detail of his participation in "an enterprise" that worked its way around the world, trading in dope, dirty money, weapons, biotoxins and murder for the secrets of the temple. I had been able to unearth some documentation and a number of other people who were willing to provide a rich array of detail regarding Danger Man, his former associates and the underground empire he described.

But now he had become a key witness in the eight-year-old legal battle between the Justice Department and Inslaw, a District of Columbia computer company whose software tracking system called PROMIS has been used by law enforcement to track cases and criminals. "but it will track anything once its provided with the rules," Inslaw's founder says.

Inslaw charged, and two courts have agreed, that the software—selling for $150,000 per user—had been stolen by a handful of people in the Justice Department in the course of a contract dispute. Now, Inslaw charges, the software has been distributed by profiteers to intelligence and military agencies in, among other countries, Iraq, Libya, South Korea, Israel and Canada. Inslaw's William Hamilton had independently learned from a Canadian official that PROMIS was being used in nine hundred different locations in Canada.

A little more than a week before his arrest, Danger Man had filed an affidavit in the case on behalf of Inslaw saying that private interests had hired him in the early 1980s to modify the software for Canadian distribution. Those private interests, he told me, represented tentacles of the underground cabal that made its home on an Indian reservation just north of Mexicali. In the affidavit, Danger Man said he was called in February by a former Justice Department official and warned against cooperating with an investigation into the case by the House Judiciary committee. He added that the former Justice official told him that if he talked to investigators he would be implicated in an unrelated criminal case and would lose another ongoing child custody case.

Late Friday evening on March 29, on the Key peninsula off Puget Sound, Danger Man was arrested for distribution of methamphetamine.

I arrived in Snohomish County two days later on March 31. This is ponderosa pine and giant fir country flanked by the Cascade Mountain range to the east, Port Gardner Bay and the Olympic Mountains to the west with the Snohomish River snaking through the north end of the city of Everett, the county seat. By late evening, I had been to the jail a number of times and each time Danger Man was refused visitors on the orders of the U. S. Marshall in Seattle. Still, Danger Man was able to find me at a nearby motel and call several times from the jail with cryptic directions for the retrieval of the tape, his expected movement the following day to a federal magistrate in Tacoma and more details about how dangerous he was becoming to the enterprise.

That enterprise moved drugs, guns and money to the ever changing temples of power in different parts of the world, the geography changing with the political climate unless the political climate could be changed to suit the enterprise, according to Danger Man, two other "agents of influence," and a former Israeli agent.

But no one is supposed to talk about it and Danger Man told me again of his best friend Paul who had been murdered in San Francisco almost ten years earlier. "Paul was the best there was as a money mover. The access codes he maneuvered were offshore accounts amounting to over a billion dollars," Danger Man said. "They don't play around. You're just found dead one day."

Traveling to Tacoma with Danger Man's lawyer, I saw seals basking in the only shaft of sun I had seen so far in the Northwest—fat with their catch of steelhead trout moving to freshwater spawning. We talked of Danger Man's allegations, some documentable, and the tape that both of us had been promised.

"Michael sure called this one," the lawyer said. We arrived in Tacoma just before the 3 PM hearing. Danger Man filled the courtroom with his presence. Under six feet tall, he was immense in frame but agile and graceful in movement like some giant white rabbit or perhaps some hybrid fugitive creature related to a fox.

A former Air America pilot who says he may know Danger Man under a name other than Michael Riconosciuto says, "He was called 'the Fat Man' in Asia." Richard Brenneke won't even talk about Danger Man over the telephone. (Brenneke's claims through the years regarding his role in an "October Surprise" plot to delay American hostages in Ran until after the 1980 election have been bouncing around for some time.)

The hearing before a federal magistrate in Tacoma concerned bail for Danger Man which was refused. While the complaint charged an isolated incident of distributing drugs on March 29, there were four other dates mentioned in which confidential informants with audio and video recordings were used as well.

The next day—April 2—I was driven from Gig Harbor to a patch of bog in the peninsula on the reaches of Puget Sound. This is where, I was told, Danger Man had thrown a copy of the tape from a car on the night of his arrest. I was driven up into the hills on the peninsula. Here the high pine trees, mostly wolf pine, and the red cedar stay in the rain shadow. The ground is mostly scrubland and skunk cabbage heavy with the scent of wild herbs and flowers, especially in the pouring rain. Many of the people live in huts, some attached to mobile homes, in the backwater of the peninsula. The first man I was to meet on this far end of nowhere was an old, grey-bearded Swede in a wide-brimmed leather hat. He came out of his hut talking in staccato rhythms and reciting broken poetry. He appeared somewhere between sixty and seventy years of age. “Can you cry?” he asked me. “Then prepare to shed a tear and shed them now,” he said. He hardly paused on the hillside in the pouring rain before advising that “The fault is not in the stars. The fault is in ourselves.”

When he stopped talking, he started singing and finally I was able to ask if he had a tape for me.

My driver said, “No. He doesn’t have the tape. We just wanted you to meet some of Michael’s old friends.”

Sitting side by side under a tarp, the bearded old Swede took me on a compulsory guided tour of Danger Man from the time he was a child winning science fairs to now. Prior to working with the Nobel Laureate at Stanford’s Physics Lab at sixteen and seventeen years of age, he had suddenly already distinguished himself in mining, sonar, lasers and communications. Much of that I had heard before. Nobel laureate Dr. Arthur Schalow, in a lengthy interview months before, remembered Danger Man well. “You don’t forget a sixteen-year-old youngster who shows up with his own Argonne laser,” Dr. Schalow had told me. There was an old article about Danger Man when he was ten-years-old after he strung up an alternative telephone service in his neighborhood.

The old Swede, Danger Man’s father and my driver wanted to make it very clear that this was a person who made very powerful people take notice of him when he was a boy. But why, I asked, would this group pursue him. Everyone, including Danger Man’s father, would tell me “To control him.” He had been running from that, I was told, since the mid-‘80s when he left the Indian reservation. And now he was regarded as a rogue always presenting a moving target having been harassed through the years by brigades of law enforcement for one charge or another. I had even found an old letter of his dating back to 1982 in which he described having “to present a periscopic image to the public.” The rain did not let up as the old Swede danced in the brush. I watched a big jack rabbit dart under and then away from the old Swede’s tarp before it limped trembling and hidden in the grass. While some creatures are born to hunt, other are born to flee. These are nature’s fugitives, and, like the fox, have a curious freedom in the masks they wear and access to obscure regions where no one will follow. Sometimes they have the protective coloring of the hunter but that is the ruse of the fox. They learn that instinctively.

By the end of the week I had trucked back and forth across Puget Sound by daylight and nightfall in an odyssey of pursuit for the tape. I would meet Danger Man in jail and talk with him many times from the Kitsap County jail to which he had been moved on the peninsula.

I had also been placated, I presumed, with documents concerned mostly with weapons, fuel air explosives, documents relating to Gerald Bull, assassinated the previous spring in Brussels, Carlos Cardoen in Chile, mining papers, lab papers relating to scientific experiments with lasers, and letters regarding the return of that mysterious billion dollars which Danger Man said had come from the Nugan Hand bank in Australia. I had already seen some of these documents in the months before but now it looks as though the gumshoes from the House Judiciary Committee would also see them.

Two Capitol Hill investigators had arrived on my heels to interview Danger Man. By the end of the week they had arrived in Seattle, had discussions with the U. S. Attorney, and made arrangements to have Danger Man moved.

"I'm screwed," Danger Man said, "don't you see. These guys are my only hope. I've come up with the cheapest way to refine platinum there is. But I'm screwed because they'll try to show that the chemicals I use at the mine are precursor ingredients to making methamphetamine." The chemicals at one of his labs included, he said, chloracetone, sodium cianide, nitric acid, ammonium chloride and bags of platinum dust.

If I received the tape, the original, I was to give it to the investigators, he said. I could make a copy, he added, to bring back to Washington, DC.

The next morning, Danger Man was moved from his cell on the Kitsap peninsula to Seattle where the Judiciary Committee investigators and their stenographer would be interviewing him. I arrived in Seattle and met both investigators. Despite their refusal to let me accompany them on their interview with Danger Man, we reached an agreement to engage in dialogue back in the nation's capitol. They spent all day with Danger Man and then, I learned, provided documents from another repository which I had not seen in Bremerton at the southern tip of the inlet. Having arrived on the 3rd of April, both investigators left on the 5th.

By the tail end of the week, I had learned that federal agents had raided one of Danger Man's labs in the mountainous Pine Creek area west of Tonasket still high in rain and snowmelt as well as his place in Aberdeen, a coastal strip town and still another place in Anaheim, California.

I had previously talked to a Denver businessman about Danger Man and his elusiveness. "I watched Mike demonstrate a new laser weapon he had created," the Denver man said, "a wand that blew whatever he pointed it at straight up in the air. I had called a number of high ranking military people and Michael was scheduled to demonstrate this new creation at Fort Hood, Texas. When the time came and we gathered at Fort Hood, Michael just didn't show. That's the way he was then and I don't expect he's any different now."

The beginning of spring always has its moody, bad tempered transitions but with the tape never emerging, I was more than a little frustrated and more than doubtful in the tape's existence. "I hope, for your sake, I'm wrong," I told him when he was back in the jail at Kitsap County.

He was unhappy I was leaving. I could sense his feelings grow mute in embarrassment, everything in him withdrew, a silence arose. I was going to be indulgent with whatever he said which I knew would still leave both of us empty handed; for ultimately, and precisely in the deepest and most important matters, especially if he was telling the truth, he was unspeakably alone.

I returned home the next day.

---

1. Danger Man's mind is "willful and fragmented" in an earlier draft.

2. This sentence added to earlier draft.

3. "keeps a tune to the oath of patriots "

4. "impudent" added

5. "the Bill of Rights"

6. "resists"

7. "Its events are too current, its local color too feverish."

"Arriving just a few minutes before his flight, [Abbie] called me and started talking in a stream as soon as I picked up the phone: "This fucking truck, this fucking truck swerved; fucking truck." I didn't get a chance to ask him what truck. Then, just as suddenly as he'd began, his tone changed, grew quieter and conspiratorial: "Jack, don't believe anything you might hear on the radio or see in the newspapers tonight. Whatever it is, it's not true."[1]

---

[1] Hoffman, Jack and Simon, Daniel, Run, Run, Run, The Lives of Abbie Hoffman, A Jeremy Tarcher/Putnam Book (G.P. Putnam's Sons), New York, 1994, p. 336.

CHAPTER 10:

Mysterious Deaths

Riconosciuto could claim a dark credibility derived from the fact that colleagues in his shadowy world continued to fall. An attorney from Philadelphia, Dennis Eisman, known as the "Fatal Vision lawyer" because of his involvement in the Jeffrey McDonald case, was in touch with Casolaro and was scheduled to travel to Washington to defend Riconosciuto, planning also to meet with a woman who had evidence of threat to his client. In April, Eisman was shot and killed in his car in Philadelphia. According to one source, just prior to Eisman's death, indictments were pending against him and other attorneys for narcotics trafficking and money laundering. The indictments never appeared.

As soon as Michael Riconosciuto found out that Eisman was dead, he called Virginia McCullough. McCullough said that he was "absolutely panicky in jail." Riconosciuto told her, "They've killed my attorney," and asked her to telephone another attorney working on his case, James Guthrie, to warn him. McCullough did, and Guthrie told McCullough, "I'm out of here."[1]

Nine days after Michael Riconosciuto issued his affidavit in the Inslaw case, he was arrested. In April 1991, police arrested Riconosciuto on one count of distributing methamphetamine manufacture at Lakebay in Washington state.

Investigators for the Intelligence Committee of the House of Representatives met with Riconosciuto in Tacoma, spent six hours taking depositions from him, and asked him for proof for his statements by way of legal documents. According to one report, Riconosciuto asked for clear "Lawyer-Client Privilege" labeling on documents when he called them in from his attorney, as a precaution against search and seizure by government agencies. Nevertheless, Riconosciuto's jailers opened the privileged packages and refused to forward them. Instead, the report goes on, they contacted the NSA, which sent a team to review the material. By the end of December 1991, the agency had not commented on when the documents would be returned to Riconosciuto.[2]

Casolaro conferred with Riconosciuto regularly in late 1989, and flew to Tacoma for the trial and to act as a legal investigator for ten days.[3] Their meeting and the fruitless search for the alleged tape recording of Videnieks may have contributed to a certain disillusionment that Danny felt about "Danger Man" by the time he returned home. "That guy is nuts," he told a journalist after his Washington trip.[4] No such assessment of Riconosciuto's sanity was needed to determine that his statements were suspect. In addition to life among the ufonauts, Riconosciuto failed to produce an oft-requested passport to corroborate his claimed trips to Iran. When asked by the CNN Moneyline program to describe Peter Videnieks, whom he claimed to have met on several occasions and who threatened him on the lost tape, Riconosciuto was unable to do so.[5]

Four days after interviewing Danger Man on June 19, 1991, former Nixon campaign aide Alan Michael May died in his home in San Francisco. During the interview, Riconosciuto had talked about May's involvement in the October Surprise. The initial coroner's report attributed May's death to heart attack, but an autopsy showed the presence of polypharmaceuticals in his body.

Anson Ng, a reporter for the Financial Times of London, pursued Jimmy Hughes, the Wackenhut security guard central to the Alvarez murder case, to South America in an attempt to get an interview. While in Guatemala during July 1991, Ng was murdered by a single bullet to the chest. His death was ruled a suicide. The Guatemalan government was asked to retrieve Ng's floppy discs and personal papers regarding his investigation. It did so and turned them over to a US intelligence agency. In a press conference a few weeks later, Senator Alan Cranston requested that these items be returned, but they never were.[6]

More than a year earlier, on March 31, 1990, a British journalist named Jonathan Moyle was found dead, hung in a hotel room closet in Santiago, Chile. "Although Casolaro and Moyle were probing different leads, their investigations involved some of the same people," said columnist Jack Anderson.[7] Moyle, an editor at London's Defense Helicopter World, had been investigating the weapons trade, specifically the alleged sale of non-military US helicopters to Iraq for refitting as attack choppers. The notes Moyle left behind contained reference to a sophisticated missile guidance system that held Iraqi interest, although whether or not it used the system in its disastrous SCUD attacks during the Persian Gulf War is unknown. Instrumental in the arms-dealing Moyle had investigated was Carlos Cardoen, the same man Ari Ben-Menashe identified as the intermediary between Iraq and Earl Brian for the PROMIS software deal.[8] Initial reports called Moyle's death a suicide, but evidence, including the presence of a strong sedative in his system and possible asphyxiation, suggested otherwise.[9]

It is unclear whether or not Moyle kept contact with Danny Casolaro, although his notes include references to Carlos Cardoen and the Iraqi missile deal. Casolaro knew about Alan May and had also learned about Anson Ng's death shortly after it took place. He also remembered the January murder of Alan Standorf. Riconosciuto had introduced Casolaro to Standorf as an electronic intelligence operative of the NSA, working at the Vint Hill military installation in Virginia that gathered information from espionage satellites and other sources throughout the world. Casolaro agreed that Standorf had important information linking the Justice Department to parts of the various scandals he had researched. After Standorf's death, Danny mentioned to a friend, Bill Turner, that a key source had vanished.[10]

Did Danny feel the tentacles tightening? If so, it was not reflected in his research notes. He collected information on vicious killers and power brokers, but gave no clue that he thought they were coming after him.

Over time, Michael Riconosciuto lost three lawyers and an investigator under what could be construed as mysterious circumstances. In February 1987 Larry Guerrin, a private investigator conducting Inslaw-connected work for Riconosciuto, was killed in Mason County, Washington. After Eisman's death, in April 1993, another attorney who worked with Riconosciuto, John Crawford, died suddenly from a heart attack in Tacoma.[11] The decomposed body of a third Riconosciuto lawyer, Paul Wilcher, was found in Wilcher's Washington, DC apartment on June 23, 1993. Wilcher also had been an attorney for the pilot Gunther Russbacher, who claimed to have videotape proof and sixteen witnesses to his having flown George H. W. Bush to one of the October Surprise meetings.[12] Wilcher belonged to the American Patriot Fax Network and had recently prepared an ambitious fifty-five page fax summarizing information on circumstances leading to the fiery deaths of David Koresh and his followers in April 1993 that he sent as a challenge to Attorney General Janet Reno. The fax included details of the story of his client, Russbacher, concerning the October Surprise, and a page of information on the Inslaw case, pointing out that an executive assistant to Senator Robert Byrd, Democrat from West Virginia, was the wife of Peter Videnieks, who had threatened Riconosciuto.[13]

The mysterious death list came also to include the execution-styled slaying of Ian Spiro and his family, a wife and three daughters, in San Diego on November 1, 1992. Spiro reportedly worked for US and British intelligence agencies on operations that included the October Surprise, Iran-contra and the hostage crisis in Lebanon. Spiro spoke with Riconosciuto, for whom he was helping collect documents to present to a grand jury, only a few days before his death.[14]

Later, others would begin to develop lists of significant deaths related to the Inslaw case in much the same way many began making connections between the deaths of witnesses and others associated to the JFK assassination twenty five years earlier. In addition to the Riconosciuto lawyers, the list included Vali

Delahanty, whose knowledge of a DEA plan to set up Riconosciuto on a drug charge would have made her an important witness for Riconosciuto. She disappeared on Aug 18, 1992 but her body was not discovered until the following April, in a ravine near Lake Bay, Washington.[15] Another Riconosciuto ally, Pete Sandvigen, who was working to help Riconosciuto defend himself from the drug charges, died the following December, an ammo clip from the gun he carried mysteriously missing.[16]

Barry Kusnick, a computer engineer who had worked on PROMIS enhancements, also made the list. According to one report, Kusnick's enhancement was called Brainstorm, an artificially intelligent program that applied the prognosticating ability of PROMIS to individual thought patterns. It ostensibly allowed PROMIS to deduce from personality characteristics the potential action of the person being traced. As in the Inslaw case, Kusnick apparently had made the modifications under a government contract that the government failed to pay, attempting to drive Kusnick into bankruptcy. Kusnick had previously done communications and intelligence work for Northrop Corporation and the US military. His body had not been found, and nine months after he was reported missing family members were unable to get known business partners to acknowledge knowing him. Five boxes of his belongings were found in a lock-up facility[17]

Sherman Skolnick, long-time chairman of Chicago's Citizen's Committee to Clean Up the Courts, charged that nearly forty witnesses in the Inslaw case had been murdered and complained that a federal judge appointed to review the case failed to show concern over the safety of other witnesses. He also claimed that a Special Federal Grand Jury in Chicago planned to do an end-run around the judge and issue high-level indictments. Skolnick also reported that three of the grand jury witnesses joined with Riconosciuto to file suit against the judge for obstructing the indictments, and that the judge had an FBI agent interrogating witnesses who was himself suspected of murdering Casolaro.[18]

Most interesting of all the mysterious deaths connected to Inslaw, however, was that of 1960s political activist Abbie Hoffman. Hoffman wrote an early piece on the October Surprise for Playboy magazine and shortly thereafter was involved in a suspicious automobile accident. Most regarded his death on April 12, 1989 as the suicide it was reported as, caused perhaps in part due to depression he suffered from the continued pain resulting from that accident. Others, however, suspected foul play in Hoffman's death, notably David Dellinger, a fellow member of the Chicago 8. Dellinger's suspicions even led him to attempt to retrieve the coroner's report for examination, but he was stopped by a threatened court battle. "They basically would not allow that to go to court," Dellinger concluded, "but [Abbie's] son Andrew and Abbie's first wife Sheila, are convinced he was killed."[19]

---

1. McCullough interview.

2. "Com-12," p. 20.

3. Ridgeway and Vaughan, p. 34; "Worldwide Conspiracy, or Fantasy?" Seattle Times, August 29, 1991.

4. Ridgeway and Vaughan, p. 35; Linsalata.

5. Brown, p. 7.

6. Anderson, Jack and Van Atta, Dale, "Another Casualty in the 'Octopus Case," Washington Post, August 28, 1991.

7. Anderson.

8. Ben-Menashe, p. 239 passim.

9. "The Riddle of Room 1406," The Sunday Times.

10. Stich, Contact, p. 407.

11. Ibid.

12. Russbacher, Guenther, Interviewed by Alex Horvat and Joe Palermo, March 17, 1993.

13. Wilcher, Paul, American Patriot Fax Network Fax, May 21, 1993, p. 69.

14. Thomas, Kenn, "Inslaw Revisited," Steamshovel Press #9, Fall 1993, p. 44.

15. Stich, Contact, p. 407.

16. Ibid.

17. "Inslaw," Leading Edge, p. 48.

18. Skolnick, Sherman, "Obstruction of Justice Charged in Inslaw Special Grand Jury in Chicago," privately published paper, 1993.

19. "King Co-Opted; Abbie Assassinated," Steamshovel Press #9, Fall 1993, p. 7.

CHAPTER 11:

Robert Booth Nichols

The Hamiltons acquired another important informant and introduced him to Danny Casolaro: Robert Booth Nichols, not to be confused with John Phillip Nichols.[1] Casolaro wrote in his notes that Robert Nichols "looks like Clark Gable."[2] Nichols presented himself as a dashing, spy-like figure with connections to both the legal and illegal underworld, including the infamous Gambino crime family. He had worked at the Cabazon reservation with Riconosciuto. Riconosciuto and Nichols formed a business partnership in the 1970s to manufacture fertilizer, pesticide, and weaponry, including fuel air explosives and the G-77—an inexpensive sub-machine gun invented by Nichols—but the two had argued in 1984 and had not spoken since.[3]

Casolaro and Nichols spoke on the phone fifteen times in July, calls which lasted as long as two hours. They met at the Four Seasons Hotel in Washington, D.C. on July 10, 1991. Casolaro was so impressed with the sophistication and "insider" knowledge his new friend Nichols had that he came to consider him a mentor. At one point, Casolaro spoke to him about his money troubles and Nichols offered financial assistance—in exchange for a twenty-five percent interest in Casolaro's home and right of first refusal if he sold it.[4]

To tempt his girlfriend, Wendy Weaver, into accompanying him to his meeting with Nichols at the Four Seasons, Casolaro described Nichols as the president of the Bechtel corporation, just arrived from Kuwait. Nichols intimated at the dinner party that he was going to be named state security minister of the Caribbean island of Dominica, which would become a center for rebuilding Kuwait. Nichols repeatedly warned Casolaro that what he was researching was dangerous. Nichols warned Casolaro at least five times about the danger of associating with Riconosciuto. He warned that if Casolaro said anything that went against Nichols' former partner Riconosciuto, he would be killed. At one point during the evening, responding to a slight from another patron at the bar that

Robert Booth Nichols

Clyde's in Tyson Corner, meeting place of Danny Casolaro and Robert B. Nichols.

Weaver later described as imagined, Nichols grabed the man, slamed him against the wall and declared that he would kill him. Later that evening, Casolaro confided to Weaver that Nichols "really scared him." In his notes, Danny Casolaro characterized Nichols as "very powerful."[5]

On another night, Casolaro and a different friend met Nichols at Clyde's in Tyson's Corner. Nichols again talked about Dominica, saying he had just done a radio broadcast in his new position as minister of state security, and he also said that he was part of a planned CIA coup that was going to happen there. Casolaro's friend claimed that Nichols "had this story that they were going to turn Dominica into a CIA base, had plans for a desalination program and pulled out this design drawn by a French architect of a dome the size of Texas Stadium that was half under water. Really, the whole thing reminded me of Ernst Stavro Blofeld..." After lunch, Danny took his friend aside and showed him what he alleged was a summary of an FBI wiretap on Nichols that linked him to the Yakuza and the Gambino family. The friend was shocked. "I said, 'Danny, I'm gonna take you out back and whip your ass! You just put me in a meeting with this man and didn't tell me what the hell—why didn't you tell me before?'" Casolora explained he just wanted to see how Nichols would react.[6]

Casolora related Nichols' stories about Dominica in his Notes "Before the reins of the Octopus are turned over to several younger players, the game continues now—July, 1991—on the tiny Caribbean island nation of Dominica. Possessing the largest boiling deep water lake in the world, Dominica's geothermal potential is unmatched. It is here that the Octopus may be making its boldest and most dangerous move yet."[7]

In 1976, Nichols represented a Saudi company, Ali & Fahd, in a failed attempt to acquire Howard Hughes' Summa Corporation, after the death of the reclusive magnate. Joseph Cicippio, later taken as a hostage in Lebanon, was an employee of Ali & Fahd at the time, and stated that Nichols represented himself as an agent for the US government in the takeover bid. Cicippio said that Nichols showed him Justice Department identification, and had information which he assumed could only have been acquired through government contacts.[8]

Casolaro learned more about Nichols from Richard Stavin, formerly a special prosecutor for the Justice Department's Organized Crime Strike Force, who had some familiarity with Nichols' attachment to the mob end of the entertainment industry. On July 31, 1991 Stavin explained to Danny about Nichols' connections to the Gambinos and the Yakuza, which the FBI had investigated in 1987 as part of its probe of Mafia presence in Hollywood. Stavin also mentioned that Nichols had at one time offered to become an informant for the Justice Department, although he did not know whether anyone had taken him up on the offer. Stavin felt that passing this information on may have contributed to Danny's death.[9]

The FBI's focus in 1987 was on Mob influence in the motion picture industry. They took particular interest in Eugene Giaquinto, a member of the board of directors of Nichols' Meridian Arms, a firm that was to manufacture the G-77 gun in South Korea. At that time, Giaquinto also served as president of the home entertainment sector of MCA, which owned Universal Pictures. In his application to wiretap Giaquinto, agent Thomas G. Gates, who later supplied information to Casolaro, suggested that FBI investigative files indicated that in 1978, Nichols had been "an international money launderer for money generated through narcotics trafficking and organized crime activities." [10] The wiretaps caught Giaquinto and Nichols discussing a takeover of MCA, and revealed Giaquinto's connection to renowned mobster John Gotti. Although the investigation was derailed by members of the Reagan administration, Giaquinto left both MCA and Meridian, but not before unsuccessfully trying to secure an appointment for Nichols to head an industry anti-video piracy operation in Asia. Nichols denied any involvement with the Yakuza or the Mafia. Ron Rosenbaum wrote in Vanity Fair that Nichols traced "the trouble to an FBI misunderstanding of his screenplay career. He says he was introduced to a high level executive of MCA several years ago at a coffeeshop. When the MCA man encouraged him to turn some tales he'd told him into screenplays, they became friends, and briefly, business associates. Unknown to him, the MCA man was the subject of a full-court-press FBI investigation for being a key organized-crime link to the entertainment industry. And so, Gable [Nichols] says his voice was picked up by taps on the MCA man's phone. The bureau misinterpreted their conversations as containing code words for illegal activities, turned around, targeted him, and slandered him to his business associates. In fact, Gable's company is suing an FBI man for libel and slander. He says that the wiretap summary was part of the FBI man's affidavit in the Gable slander suit."[11]

Steven Seagal sporting somebody else's military-issue beret and insignia.

Steven Seagal and ex-CIA operative Robert Strickland.

Nichols' response to Gates' affidavit linking him to John Gotti and the Gambino family through Giaquinto was to sue Gates and the US Government for libel. However, the federal district courts dismissed Nichols' suits twice. Gates, believing Nichols to be undeterred in his attempt at retribution, said in testimony before the House Judiciary Committee that informants had twice told him that Nichols had placed a contract on his life.

The other high point of Nichols' movie career came with his cameo appearance as a terrorist in the 1992 Steven Seagal movie, Under Siege. Perhaps not coincidentally, Seagal became embroiled in controversy when a writer, Alan Richman, claimed in GQ magazine that Seagal had appropriated details of the biographies of former associates Robert Strickland and Gary Goldman and passed them off as incidents in his own life. When investigator John Connolly later repeated the charges in Spy and made further claims that Seagal tried to set up Richman in a fake homosexual tryst and tried to have Goldman killed, Seagal sued unsuccessfully.

In 1993 Nichols sought damages against the Los Angeles Police Department over an incident that caused the revocation of his concealed weapons permit and, consequently, a cancellation of the money for the manufacture of the G-77 by Swiss financiers. According to his testimony, Nichols had been thrown to the floor, disarmed, handcuffed and carted off to a North Hollywood jail by LAPD officers responding to a disturbance complaint at a club called The Palomino.[12] Nichols said he was not involved with any disturbance but had only stopped in at the club for a couple of beers. Further testimony and legal documents reflected an impressive list of former business partners, including Howard Hughes cohort Robert Maheu and Texas oil magnate Clint Murchison.[13]

Casolaro may not have understood the possible danger of possessing the information he had learned from Richard Stavin, that Nichols may have offered himself as a government stool pigeon. Casolaro may have worried that if he let slip his knowledge of Nichols' association with the Mafia and the Yakuza during a conversation, Nichols might turn dangerous. Six days after talking to Stavin, Casolaro spoke again to his mentor. The following day Casolaro informed Stavin that Nichols had warned him off the investigation. At about the same time, Casolaro called FBI agent Thomas Gates and asked whether he should take seriously Nichols' warnings that, "If you continue this investigation, you will die." Gates later commented that Casolaro was "upbeat, not like a person contemplating suicide."[14]

---

1. In January 1993, writer John Connolly cast suspicion on the relationship between Bill Hamilton and Robert Booth Nichols: "... despite Hamilton's reservations about Nichols' character, the man who designed a program for tracking criminals and the man who has been linked by the FBI to two crime organizations communicate with surprising frequency. Last summer I visited Hamilton's office in Washington to get a copy of the phone records that would show his call to Nichols on August 9, 1991. He seemed reluctant. It took a fair amount of persuasion to convince him to turn it over—and what he gave me was a photocopy with all but that call blocked out. Shortly after leaving, I remembered that I had wanted to ask him something else and returned to his office. While I was waiting in the reception area, the phone rang. The receptionist buzzed Hamilton: 'Robert Booth Nichols, returning your call.' When I asked Hamilton about the call, he replied, 'I call Nichols all the time. It was just a coincidence that it was right after you left.'" (Connolly, John, "Dead Right," Spy, January 1993.)

2. "Without the ears," Ridgeway and Vaughan, p. 35.

3. Corn.

4. Linsalata; Ridgeway and Vaughan, p. 36.

5. Connolly, "Dead Right"; Ridgeway and Vaughan, p. 36.

6. Ron Rosenbaum, "The Strange Death of Danny Casolaro," Vanity Fair, Vol. 54, December 1991.

7. Casolaro's Notes, pp. 1–7.

8. From Casolaro's Notes "Sworn affidavit alleges that Nichols gets word from Justice department."

9. "Unanswered Questions on Casolaro," The Spotlight, September 28, 1992.

10. Corn.

11. Rosenbaum, p. 96.

12. From Casolaro's notes, "A Palomino is a Pale Horse."

13. Weinstein, Henry and Feldman, Paul, "Trial Offers Murky Peek Into World of Intrigue," Los Angeles Times, March 21, 1993

14. "Unanswered Questions on Casolaro," The Spotlight, September 28, 1992.

CHAPTER 12:

A Sea Creature Surfaces

On May 8, 1991, the Inslaw case was overturned on second appeal, on the technicality that it should not have been tried in bankruptcy court. The ruling came on the day before the Justice Department would have had to release all of its software to the Hamiltons.[1] The Hamiltons asked the Supreme Court to hear the case in October.[2]

In mid-June 1991, Danny Casolaro met with Jeff Steinberg, the Lyndon Larouche aide. Steinberg, who had earlier arranged the contact between the Hamiltons and Michael Riconosciuto, arranged for Casolaro to talk to an informant who went by the odd name of CHIPS, a former Customs agent who was now assisting the Treasury Department. Steinberg believes that CHIPS turned Casolaro's investigations further in the direction of Robert Booth Nichols, toward the Gambino Mafia family and drug trafficking.

Shortly thereafter, Casolaro made phone contact with E. Howard Hunt,[3] a name that appeares on the "A" list of many conspiracy researchers. Of late, Hunt had made a career writing spy fiction, but his infamy stretched back to his role as one of the Watergate burglars and before. Hunt had lost a defamation case against accusations that he had been involved in the JFK assassination.[4] Hunt had been active in many spook projects of the Kennedy era, most notably in the failed Bay of Pigs invasion. Even as Casolaro developed a "cordial, even effusive" relationship with Hunt,[5] he kept taking notes.

In a memo, Steinberg observed that by this time, Casolaro was on the trail of Inslaw and related stories "back to a dirty CIA 'Old Boy' network" that had begun working together in the 1950s around covert operations in Albania. These men had gotten into the illegal gun and drug trade back then and had continued in that business ever since. Martin Killian, a Washington correspondent for Der Spiegel, also spoke to Casolaro about the conspiratorial entity Casolaro was by now calling "the Octopus," a cabal which Casolaro believed had been started by CIA superspook James Jesus Angleton. Casolaro believed that the motive for creating the Octopus had been revenge for the notorious Albanian operation which had been compromised by Soviet mole Kim Philby.[6]

According to Tony Casolaro, Danny's brother, Danny did not see the Octopus as a tightly-structured organization. "He didn't envision them as a group like the Mafia. More as a network. They would overlap when their needs coincided." The view reflected in Casolaro's notes was that "This is the Octopus whose defensive posture could reap havoc anywhere in the world. Indeed, what you will learn in this true crime narrative is a massive unraveling of modern history's most incredible puzzles."[7]

---

1. DiRienzo, p. 8; "Shadow Justice," Unclassified, Vol. 3, No. 3, 1991.

2. Linsalata.

3. Ridgeway and Vaughan, p. 35.

4. Lane, Mark, Plausible Denial, New York: Thunder's Mouth, 1992.

5. Ridgeway and Vaughan, p. 35.

6. Ibid.

7. Casolaro's notes.

CHAPTER 13:

The Octopus

Danny Casolaro never lived to tell the full story of the Octopus. He left us with only drafts and notes for his proposed project. Nonetheless, the story he was outlining is compelling and credible. Here are Casolaro's notes on his Octopus:

> This is the story of eight men whose real life "impossible mission" intrigues have dominated key events that span the globe for nearly a half-century. They are the men who make up THE OCTOPUS.
>
> They are not government officials but their tentacles can reach into any part of government in almost any country including legitimate and rogue spy networks. They are not notable industrialists but they can pull the strings of the oil and banking empires at will. They are not known criminals but they have successfully penetrated all factions of organized crime including the Mafia, the Japanese Yakuza, the secret Chinese Triads and the terrorist underground.
>
> With its tag team compartments, its exploitation of hundreds of people and formidable stealth, THE OCTOPUS will help to unravel the most compelling puzzles of the twentieth century. What may have begun for these few learned men as a utopian response to harsh post-war realities quickly gave way to what simple men have always known as the real enemy which is selfishness and its allied forces of fear, greed, and power. While a few of these eight men came together to insure the failure of an initiate in Albania in the fifties, almost every one of them helped to frustrate the Cuban Bay of Pigs invasion. What did the fiasco at the Bay of Pigs accomplish? President Nixon and Attorney General John Mitchell were becoming impossible as far as the Octopus was concerned. Even Kissinger was being difficult in bypassing normal circles of intelligence with Vietnamization and the China card. Since this was the mission that reaped a windfall, how did all the pieces come together for the snowballing of Watergate? What mistakes, though, were made?

A different, marginally more officious costume was worn in Chile with Salvado Allende. Since this operation provided accumulated debt for favors performed, the Octopus was now mature enough to know how to collect those debts.

What were the favors performed, and what was the due bill? It didn't take many people to design the apparatus that would insure the renewal of the lease for the Pine Gap installation near Alice Springs, Australia. After all, how could a democracy spit up a Prime Minister that could sack the security of the Western Alliance? What about tentacle operations of the Octopus in Angola, Rhodesia, Mozambique and Nigeria? Was this another case of wearing the right costume again, as in Chile. Politically correct assistance can cover the cover of the Octopus for anything—drug trafficking, throughout Asia and the Mideast, arms dealing and murder. But what happened to the money—nearly a billion dollars?

Who drove the Shah out of power? Can best friends do this to each other? What role did the Octopus play and for what reason? Who lit the fire for the war between Iran and Iraq? What part did the Octopus play? What was its purpose in the big picture? Is any picture that big?

Jimmy Carter had bruised the Octopus as badly as Nixon did with focus. Why did the Octopus come off the ocean floor for this to make sure no rescue was possible? What happened to those Sea Stallion helicopters, the most dependable helicopter in aviation history? Everyone knows that hostages equal money but why is it that no one has asked what happened to the billions of dollars in frozen assets? Since Reagan was not a favored son of the Octopus, why did it work so hard to insure his election in 1980? Even if the participation by campaign officials in holding the hostages until the election was limited to just the acquiescence of smiling gentlemen who knew better, why was the veil removed when it could have been so absolutely secret?

Exploiting foreign policy objectives with the contras in Nicaragua is one thing, but why was the creation of a Latin American equivalent to the Golden Triangle so irresistable? A huge amount of money—several billion dollars—was raised for the Afghan freedom fighters. The freedom fighters didn't get it and even the Octopus had to fight for it. Who else started to play the game in earnest? How did the Octopus stop it?

Was it just a clever hand that the Octopus played with Kuwait and Iraq? What about Kuwait's OPEC decisions which goaded Saddam Hussein into his takeover? What roles did the Octopus play? Why was the Bank of Credit and Commerce International [BCCI] suddenly a sacrificial lamb?

Before the reins of the Octopus are turned over to several younger players, the game continues now—July, 1991—on the tiny Caribbean island nation of Dominica.

Possessing the largest boiling deep water lake in the world, Dominica's geothermal potential is unmatched. It is here that the Octopus may be making its boldest and most dangerous move yet. THE OCTOPUS is a story about eight people who have been able to penetrate and exploit the secret empires of spy networks around the world, big oil and organized crime.

Since it spans the globe and in its compartmentalized penetration in such disparate secret societies has enabled it to control—through access—government around the [world]. This penetration by such a small group of people in such seemingly disparate and secret empires has enabled this group to develop compartmented tentacles that control governmental institutions in the US and abroad.

Indeed, the Octopus is less than a dozen people who have changed the course of history the world over. This completed project will rewrite history at the Bay of Pigs, in Allende's Chile, Watergate, Australia, Iran, Iraq, the 1980 election, the drug/gun running in Latin America, and most recently the war in Iraq. In events that span the globe nations know how to use this Octopus and acquiesce in its designs. I will show you how these eight people caused the US to turn its back on Fidel Castro after supporting him in the mountains of the Sierra Maestra.

CHAPTER 14:

Tracking The Octopus

Danny Casolaro believed the Octopus responsible for criminal conspiracies which, linked, formed a virtual history of intelligence double dealing from 1950 to the present. These events, in Casolaro's view, included the ousters of US President Richard Nixon, Australian Prime Minister Gough Whitlam, the Shah of Iran, and the murders of Chilean President Allende, and, of course, of President John F. Kennedy. Casolaro saw the Octopus' tentacles entwined throughout the creation of the Golden Triangle and Latin America drug trade, the Cuban Bay of Pigs debacle, the October Surprise, the BCCI banking scandal, and, almost as an afterthought, the theft of PROMIS software.

Casolaro found a "Secret Team," a high cabal of players operating a clandestine, parallel government, identified previously by other writers.[1] The cabal had operated beyond the control or scrutiny of the elected government, financed by drug-running from Southeast Asia and the Americas.

Other researchers tended to see the Octopus as a fog of political crimes ascribed to the alphabet soup of intelligence agencies, institutions or even the natural dialectic of the modern terrorist state and its citizenry. Casolaro's Octopus, however, was no grand, unified mega-conspiracy theory. Casolaro believed the crimes could best be identified by linking them to a small network of named individuals that made up his Octopus. He outlined their hierarchy and provided specific detail about their behind-the-scenes role in contemporary political history.

Casolaro named people both familiar and unfamiliar to other researchers. He deemed the "first level" operatives to be Richard Helms, George Pender, John Philip Nichols, and Ray Cline. The second level included Robert Chasen, E. Howard Hunt, Edwin Wilson, Thomas Clines, and Ted Shackley. Working backward from the PROMIS theft, Casolaro saw them in new relationship, a nearly organic entity that impacted on both past and then current events.

Casolaro's proposed chapter titles for The Octopus provide a glimpse into the trajectory of his research:

Chapter 1: 1980—The Most Dangerous Year. Casolaro's notes include sub-divisions entitled "Death of Paul Morasca, Death of Fred Alvarez," "Resupply of Contras," "Casey," "Vesco," "John Nichols," and "Transition—Mideast."

Chapter 2: Backing up: The Post War Years. 1944-1950. When they met. Kim Philby.

Chapter 3: Tag Team Compartments. 1959: Patrice Lumumba, Fidel Castro, Europe, Albania, Golden Triangle, China, Formosa. He also brackets "Moriarty, [Marshall] Riconosciuto, Fat Tony."

Chapter 4: 1966: Making Friends With the Terrorist Underground. Dealers, Drugs & Money [additional unreadable line].

Chapter 5: What Went Wrong With Nixon and the Windfall/Surprise.

Chapter 6: 1975: Australia With PM Houghton.

Chapter 7: The Asian Underground.

Chapter 8: Oil [unreadable] Controlling Countries.

Chapter 9: The Big Crime—ICN, Yakuza & Terrorists, Triads.

Chapter 10: 1980.

Chapter 11: The role of Mossad.

Chapter 12: KGB Underground.

Chapter 13: Wackenhut.

Chapter 14: Mideast—Beirut.

Chapter 15: Iran Shah, Helms.

Chapter 16: Iran & Iraq.

Even as he sketched this outline, Casolaro continued making phone calls, and connections that brought the Octopus closer to the surface for a clearer view. Whether he approached his work as a student of history or as fodder for fiction, some of his realizations were not easy for him to face. According to Virginia McCullough, "Danny would say that he couldn't believe the government would do drugs for arms. He was God, motherhood, and apple pie. I would say, 'Look Danny, let's get real, we're living in the 20th century.'"[2]

One new contact, William Turner, had been an aerospace engineer at Honeywell in Virginia until Hughes Aircraft bought his division. Turner, who lived a short distance from Casolaro, contacted him and furnished him with details of an alleged fraud by Hughes Aircraft. Turner claimed that when he reported the fraud to his seniors they began a cover-up. Turner had left Hughes in April 1991. In August, Turner and Casolaro met in Martinsburg, and Turner handed over documents which he said proved a "vast government conspiracy."[3] Casolaro met with Turner again on February 21, at the Sheraton. The two discussed Casolaro's concept of the Octopus with Casolaro making further connections between Oliver North and BCCI. In May or June they met again in Inwood, West Virginia, drinking and bar-hopping. Casolaro was effusive over his book-in-progress, and promised Turner he would personally autograph a copy for him once it was in print.[4]

McCullough at this time also noticed Casolaro's research taking on more focus and intensity. "In the middle of May he became very centered about what he wanted from me. What he wanted from me was everything I knew Riconosciuto was involved with, with the Iran-contra, with the Cabazon Indian reservation, and how that pertained to the PROMIS software."

"It began to come home to me loud and clear that there was a real danger here."[5]

---

1. Prouty, L. Fletcher, The Secret Team, Prentice-Hall, Englewood Cliffs, NJ, 1973.

2. Virginia McCullough interview.

3. Ridgeway and Vaughan, p. 36.

4. Ridgeway and Vaughan, p. 40.

5. McCullough.

CHAPTER 15:

Tentacles

The following material, labeled a "hagiography" in the original edition of this book, was assembled from Danny Casolaro's notes by researcher/writer Jim Keith.

The following chronology lists some of the events and people that Casolaro believed involved the alleged super-cabal, "the Octopus." It has been developed from Casolaro's notes but expanded upon with additional research; Casolaro did not mention many of the internal connections documented here.

OSS in China

Casolaro's Octopus may have begun earlier than he thought. During World War II the OSS chapter in China, Detachment 202, included in its memberships alleged Octopi Ray Cline (later station chief in Nationalist China between 1958 to 1962), E. Howard Hunt, and Richard Helms, as well as such future covert ops luminaries as Mitchell WerBell III (arms dealer, trainer of terrorists, and on-and-off employee of the CIA) and Major General John Singlaub. Singlaub later commanded the CIA's infamous Operation Phoenix assassination program in Vietnam, which provided yet another link to other alleged Octopus personnel. China has historically had substantial involvement in opium production and trade, although it is not known whether the Octopus took much notice of the commodity at this time. In his notes, Casolaro lists Helms, Hunt, Shackley, Pender, Clines, Nichols as being "OSS."[1]

The Albanian Operation

The history of the Octopus as delineated by Danny Casolaro begins with the OSS/British intelligence Albanian operation, which took place after World War

II. The Americans and British set upon a plan to try to dislodge a Soviet bloc country from Moscow's influence, believing that this might lead to the shattering of the Soviet bloc. Albania was chosen because of its political instability, and because of the belief that a large number of Albanian dissidents were waiting for the opportunity to revolt. According to the CIA's Frank Wisner, it was "a clinical experiment to see whether larger rollback operations [by the OSS] would be feasible elsewhere."[2]

Using bases in Malta and Libya, joint commanders James McCargar and Kim Philby (the head of MI6 division in charge of Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union, liasing between British and American intelligence) supervised the landing of hundreds of agents into Albania via parachute or across the border of Greece. Almost all of these operatives were killed or captured. Kim Philby was an agent in the KGB's British "ring of five," and was run by Yuri Moldin, whose specialty was recruiting and wielding homosexual agents. Philby defected to Moscow, and later admitted that he had betrayed the Albanian mission to Soviet intelligence. E. Howard Hunt played a subordinate role in the Albanian operation, working out of Washington, D.C.[3]

Although Danny Casolaro does not state it explicitly in his notes, he apparently conceived the Octopus starting as an anti-Communist response to Philby's betrayal; a conclave of OSS/CIA veterans, dispersing and coalescing in what Casolaro called "tag team compartments" and reaping huge profits through assassination, arms sales, the control of governments, international drug trafficking, and the promotion of international fascism.[4]

Coup d'Etat in Guatemala

The Octopus soon surfaced again. E. Howard Hunt played an important role in the 1954 overthrow of Jacobo Arbenz' Communist-inclined (but not Communist) government in Guatemala, which had been democratically elected. Arbenz made the mistake of appropriating 225,000 acres of land from the United Fruit Company (later renamed United Brands), an organization alleged to have been established by the Mafia and deeply involved in international drug shipping since the early 1900s. John Foster Dulles and the State Department lined up behind United Fruit, which was not unusual since Dulles' law firm represented the company, and his brother Allen (at that time the director of the CIA) had earlier been the president of United Fruit. Allen Dulles also shepherded an extensive postwar collaboration with the Nazis, most notably with Project Paperclip in which hundreds of Nazi scientists and soldiers were brought to the United States. Allen Dulles served as the international lawyer for George Bush, and on the Warren Commission, ostensibly investigating the death of John F. Kennedy.

Guatemala was prevented from buying arms from the US or its allies, forcing Arbenz to purchase arms from the Czechs, which in turn confirmed American suspicions that Guatemala had gone Communist. The Guatemalan operation was part and parcel of the activities of the CIA in combatting revolutionary activity and industrial nationalization in the Caribbean, Mexico, and Central America, later echoed in the CIA's attempts to invade Cuba and assassinate Cuban premier Fidel Castro.[5]

The American invasion of Guatemala was assisted by the Anti-Communist League of the Caribbean (ACLC), a group started by ex-FBI, possibly CIA, Minuteman, and alleged Kennedy assassination conspirator Guy Banister in the same year as the takeover. Lee Oswald purportedly knew Banister, used his office, and was alleged by private detective Jack Martin to have been one of Banister's agents.[6] Banister and Michael Riconosciuto's father Marshall have been connected to UFO activity—hoaxed or otherwise—in the Tacoma, Washington region. (See Chapter 8.)

Significant in understanding the purpose and the reach of the Octopus is that the ACLC comprised a portion of what evolved into the World Anti-Communist League, with preparatory meetings beginning in 1958, although the group was not officially founded until 1966. Funding for the WACL was alleged to have been funnelled through alleged Octopus member Ray Cline, who had been a member of the OSS in China, and station chief for the CIA in Taiwan between 1958 and 1962. Researcher John Judge has stated that the WACL was financed by Nationalist Chinese opium money.[7]

The chairman for the WACL was at one time Major General John Singlaub, linked closely and repeatedly to alleged Octopus personnel. The WACL has over time included in its membership Nazi SS, Solidarists, mercenaries, death squad members, and other fascist elements.

Ray Cline had also been influential in furthering the purposes of the international right wing in collaboration with Chaing Ching-kuo, the son of Chiang Kai-shek. In the late 1950s they formed the Political Warfare Cadres Academy, with recruiting managed by the WACL. The Academy has been responsible for training many of the men involved in death squads, terrorism, and "unconventional warfare" throughout Latin America.[8]

Cuba

When Fidel Castro—who initially was anti-American, but not Communist—came to power in Cuba in 1959, he was rebuffed and diplomatically snubbed in his appeals for aid from the US. He nationalized the country's oil and gas resources and other industries, cutting American companies out when they had only begun to access Cuban resources. Castro also took over the lucrative Mafia-owned casinos on the island, incurring the wrath of that group. President Eisenhower subsequently approved $13 million for a covert war against Castro, whuch included sabotage missions and at least eight attempts on the Cuban leader's life by the CIA (following plans drafted by E. Howard Hunt).

A possibly significant factor in the war against Cuba was that, prior to Castro's 1959 revolution, the island had been a major center for the Mafia for heroin and cocaine processing and shipping from Marseilles. A drying-up of this important drug conduit greatly concerned the Mafia and its long-term partner, the CIA, which had used the island's casinos to launder payments to mobsters. The OSS/CIA's partnership with the Mafia had begun with Operation Underworld in 1936.[9]

CIA operations targeted against Cuba were run by Theodore Shackley and Thomas Clines out of the JM/WAVE CIA office in Miami, which grew into the largest CIA station in the world, employing over 3,000 agents and operating through at least 55 dummy corporations.[10] According to a statement by E. Howard Hunt, Richard Nixon was the White House "secret action officer" in charge of the 53/12 Group of the National Security Council, which ran the Bay of Pigs fiasco.[11] The Mafia supplied intelligence reports on Cuban troops and ships and recruited men for the CIA invasion force. Mafia don Santos Trafficante, later implicated by some researchers in the JFK assassination, worked through Frank Sturgis (aka Frank Fiorini), who engaged in pre-invasion raids and was a member of the Operation 40 hit squad to assassinate Cuban leaders. Richard Whattley, a mercenary involved in this operation, stated of the Bay of Pigs operation that "Trafficante would order Sturgis to move his men and he'd do it. Our ultimate conclusion was that Trafficante was our backer. He was our money man."[12]

Other members of assassination teams included Cubans Felix Rodriguez, and Rafael "Chi Chi" Quintero, and Mitchell WerBell III,[13] under the supervision of E. Howard Hunt, whose boss was station chief Theodore G. Shackley. Quintero appeared frequently in important covert operations, including as a Special Forces training advisor in Vietnam, doing jobs for the CIA's Task Force 157, and as supply officer for weapons shipments to the contras, working with Shackley, Clines, Hakim, and Secord. Also alleged to have been involved in assassination attempts on Castro is Dr. John P. Nichols, the administrator in the Cabazon/Wackenhut venture which Danny Casolaro investigated. Edwin Wilson is said to have been a "junior officer" in the attempts to assassinate Castro and his supporters.[14]

The Bay of Pigs operation, in which 1,400 CIA trained and armed anti-Castro Cubans invaded Cuba, was led by Theodore Shackley, and took place on April 15-19, 1961. The operation was a miserable rout for the anti-Castro forces, and Kennedy was blamed by many of the involved JM/Wave operatives for the defeat, for withdrawing logistical support.[15] A sense of the importance ascribed to the Bay of Pigs operation is provided by E. Howard Hunt in his autobiography, Give Us This Day:

> No event since the communization of China in 1949 has had such a profound effect on the United States and its allies as the defeat of the US-trained Cuban invasion brigade at the Bay of Pigs in April 1961.
>
> Out of that humiliation grew the Berlin Wall, the missile crisis, guerrilla warfare throughout Latin America and Africa, and our Dominican Republic intervention. Castro's beachhead triumph opened a bottomless Pandora's box of difficulties that affected not only the United States, but most of its allies in the free world.
>
> These bloody and subversive events would not have taken place had Castro been toppled. Instead of standing firm, our government pyramided crucially wrong decisions and allowed [Cuban unit] Brigade 2506 to be destroyed. The Kennedy administration yielded Castro all the excuse he needed to gain a tighter grip on the island of Jose Marti, then moved shamefacedly into the shadows and hoped the Cuban issue would simply melt away.

Although not specifically named as a member of the Octopus by Casolaro, there is much to suggest that George H. W. Bush was part of the management of the Bay of Pigs invasion. This evidence includes the code name of the operation, Operation Zapata, reflecting the name of Bush's oil drilling company. At the time of the Bay of Pigs invasion, Bush had oil rigs located thirty miles north of Cuba near Cay Sal, an important CIA operations base. Former members of the CIA have alleged that Bush allowed the CIA to use Zapata as a front for its operations, and that Bush also functioned in disbursing CIA monies to agents in the area.[16]

In Casolaro's notes he makes the following connections: "Zapata—1953—Narcotics Smuggling—Shadow govt."[17] There are other speculative links between Bush and Casolaro's Octopus, including the fact that the Bush family fortune was secured in large part through the rise of Hitler, through his father's Union Banking Corporation, which acted as a front for the Nazis, specifically the major German financier Fritz Thyssen. To this day, George Bush retains many connections linked to the Nazis and fascists. George Bush is also a member of the Yale Skull and Bones secret society. Founded by General George Russell in the early 1800's, Skull and Bones has long been a recruiting ground for the CIA.

General Russell was the anglophile Boston Brahmin said to have dominated the opium trade in the 1800s as successor to the Perkins opium syndicate. Skull and Bones recruited from other Boston Brahmin families—such as the Bundys, Coffins, Paynes, Sloanes, Tafts, and Whitneys—also alleged to have been involved in the opium markets, with the Bush family historically serving as operatives for these Eastern Establishment interests. The current Russell Trust organization also has been connected to Wackenhut. Another connection of George Bush to the Octopus is his acquaintance with George DeMohrenshildt. DeMohrenshildt apparently worked as an agent of the CIA, had Nazi connections, may also have been a Soviet agent, and, events suggest, may have been Lee Harvey Oswald's handler. According to one source, Bush's connection to De Mohrenshildt went back to the late 1940s. Bush's name and address were found in De Mohrenshildt's address book after the latter's death, which took place shortly before he was supposed to testify before the Warren Commission.[18]

The anonymous Com-12 briefing refers to the Black Rose Organization, which runs a "Black World Order" using drug monies from the Golden Triangle and the Golden Crescent. According to this anonymous but intriguing report, the current chairman and co-founder of the Black Rose is alleged to be George Bush (known in underworld circles as the White Rose). Bush is alleged to have developed a heroin shipment ring while Ambassador in China, and to run cocaine from Panama through his offshore oil rigs.[19]

Although not noted in this samizdat document, Theodore Shackley (linked to drug trafficking in Southeast Asia) was the head of the CIA's Far East Division during the time that Bush was the American ambassador to China. When Bush became CIA director in 1976 he made Shackley Associate Deputy Director of Operations, the third most important position in the CIA. One anti-Castro group in Miami at the time of the Bay of Pigs was called the White Rose.

The ultimate significance of the White Rose—perhaps leading back to the real power behind international drug running—may reside in George Bush's association with Boston Anglophile interests and his claimed connection to British royalty; the white rose is the symbol of the House of York, which fought the War of the Roses against the House of Lancaster. Many researchers have noted British aristocratic and banking interests behind world drug trafficking.

An anonymous informant stated to Barbara Honegger that George Bush was elected an honorary (i.e. non-Italian) member of the Italian Masonic (and CIA and Mafia and Vatican-supported) cabal Propaganda Due ("P2") in 1976. His induction coincided with his appointment as director of the CIA. P2 is an influential secret society, hardwired into major clandestine networks, and known to have chapters around the world. The terrorism cell within P2, it was discovered by Italian police, was called "the Rose of Twenty."[20]

David Yallop, in his book In God's Name, states that, "On the surface P2 was and still is a fanatical insurance policy against potential Communist governments. Excluding Italy, there are still branches functioning in Argentina, Venezuela, Paraguay, Bolivia, France, Portugal, and Nicaragua. Members are even active in Switzerland and the United States. Moreover, P2 interlocks with the Mafia in Italy, Cuba, and the United States. It interlocks with a number of the military regimes of Latin America and with a variety of groups of neo-Fascists. It also interlocks very closely with the CIA. It reaches right into the heart of the Vatican. Apparently the common interest of all these elements is a hatred and fear of communism."[21] Note the parallel with the anti-Communist purpose of the Octopus, as viewed by Danny Casolaro.

Kennedy Assassination

After the Bay of Pigs invasion, John F. Kennedy promised "to splinter the CIA into a thousand pieces and scatter it to the winds."[22] He did not carry out his threat, however, beyond dismissing Allen Dulles in July 1961, and his cohort Charles Pearre Cabell in December 1961. Richard Helms, as CIA Deputy Director of Plans, remained. Richard Helms also had the dubious distinction of suggesting to Allen Dulles the creation of the CIA's infamous MK-ULTRA program in 1953.[23] Helms became the director of the CIA in 1966. Shortly thereafter, at the time of New Orleans District Attorney Jim Garrison's prosecution of Clay Shaw, former CIA agent Victor Marchetti overheard Helms during staff meetings repeatedly ask an assistant "Are we giving Shaw all the help we can?"[24] Still on board at CIA after Kennedy's "purge" was E. Howard Hunt, an Octo-spook that Casolaro met on the phone. Hunt had helped set up the Bay of Pigs, was one of the Watergate "plumbers," and was alleged by one Lee Harvey Oswald familiar to have involved him in a mind-control operation.[25] While Kennedy stated to aides that "the CIA will have to be dealt with" before travelling to Dallas, the opposite apparently came true. Persistent allegations placed Hunt and another Watergate burglar, Frank Sturgis, in Dallas on the day of the assassination. Some researchers have also alleged that Sturgis and Hunt were two of the three "hobos" on the railroad tracks behind the grassy knoll who were arrested by Dallas police.[26] Mark Lane, one of the earliest critics of the Warren Commission, documented Hunt's inability to defend himself in court against accusations of his presence in Dallas in his book, Plausible Denial.[27] One of Lane's key witnesses in that trial, Marita Lorenz, named E. Howard Hunt, Frank Sturgis, Orlando Bosch, Lee Harvey Oswald, the Novo Brothers, Gerry Patrick Hemming and Pedro Diaz Lanz as part of a convoy that traveled from Miami to Dallas for the JFK hit. The Novos were later held for the Letelier murders; Bosch was imprisoned for bombing a Cubana Airlines jet in October 1976, killing seventy-three people. Were these more Octopus hits?[28]

And what of the George Bush address found in the address book of CIA agent George DeMohrenschildt, a close associate of Lee Harvey Oswald's? DeMohrenschildt had been a spy for the OSS in German intelligence, and some have speculated that he also may have been Bush's CIA "handler."[29] Jeanne DeMohrenschildt alleged that her husband had been a Nazi spy,[30] and J. Edgar Hoover had written a memo concerning "Mr. George Bush of the CIA," who had been briefed on November 23, 1963, about the reaction to Kennedy's assassination by anti-Castro Cuban exiles in Miami.

Bush, Helms and Hunt held keys to answers behind the mother of all assassination conspiracy tales, as well as the strings to an Octopus puppet who may have had special knowledge regarding JFK's death: Richard Nixon. The Watergate tapes of June 23, 1972 have Nixon and H. R. Haldeman, his chief of staff, scheming to put a halt to the FBI investigating Watergate because it might expose "the Bay of Pigs thing." Later, Haldeman said that he believed that the "Bay of Pigs" phrase was code for JFK's assassination.[31]

Researcher Paul Kangas points out that the tape reveals "Nixon discussing the role of Bush's partner, Robert Mosbacher, as one of the 'Texas fundraisers for Nixon.' On the tapes Nixon keeps referring to the 'Cubans' and the 'Texans.' The 'Texans' were Bush, Mosbacher and Baker. This is another direct link between Bush and evidence linking Nixon and Bush to the Kennedy assassination... In the same discussion Nixon links 'the Cubans,' 'the Texans,' Helms, Hunt, Bernard Barker, Robert Mosbacher and 'the Bay of Pigs.' Over and over on the Watergate tapes, these names come up around the discussion of the photos from Dallas that Nixon was trying to obtain when he ordered the CIA to burglarize the Watergate."[32] Frank Sturgis told the San Francisco Chronicle that "the reason we burglarized the Watergate was because Nixon was interested in stopping news leaking relating to the photos of our role in the assassination of President John F. Kennedy."[33]

In 1976 it was revealed that Richard Helms had lied to the Warren Commission when he said that the CIA had not made contact with Lee Harvey Oswald (Freedom of Information Act documents showed otherwise), but George Bush used Agency pressure through a call to Associated Press to prevent the story from surfacing.[34]

The career movements of alleged Octopus member Ted Shackley also illuminate Bush's secret life: from 1952 to 1959 and 1965 to 1966 Shackley worked in Germany; in the 1962 to 1964 period he was Station Chief in Miami; Shackley became station chief in Saigon and Vientiane from 1964 to 1974 and chief of the CIA's Far East Division thereafter, while George Bush served as the Ambassador to China. After Bush's ascension to CIA director, Shackley was promoted to Associate Deputy Director of Operations, considered the agency's third most powerful job. Shackley was put in charge of Central American operations.[35]

Another nexus between Casolaro's research and the JFK assassination concerns the Banca del Lavoro, a state-owned Italian bank that he was investigating as part of the BCCI tentacle of the Octopus. According to the Torbitt Document, an unpublished report of some controversy among researchers (although there does not seem to be an indication that Casolaro had a copy), the Banca del Lavoro financed the training of an assassination team in Mexico, some of whose members wound up in Dealey Plaza on November 22, 1963.[36] The bank's branch in Atlanta came under investigation for five billion dollars in loans it made to Saddam Hussein prior to the Gulf War, the so-called Iraqgate scandal, with George Bush at its center.

Southeast Asia

The main sources of the heroin supply shipped to America since the 1930s were established through the actions of the US intelligence agencies, particularly the OSS/CIA. Beginning in the mid-'30s, through a collaboration with the Sicilian-American Mafia and the Corsican underworld, the OSS helped create "the French Connection" in Marseilles, France. The CIA, in the early 1950s, also supported the opium-growing Chinese nationalist Kuomintang in the Burmese Shan states. This was accomplished through two dummy corporations, Civil Air Transport (later named Air America) and Sea Supply Corporation, flying in weapons and cash, and flying out raw opium. Sea Supply had been founded by CIA man Paul Helliwell, who later played a prominent role in the Bay of Pigs and other CIA operations against Castro. Other airlines were partially or wholly owned by the CIA, and were considered part of "Air America." For a sense of the extent of the CIA's power, it should be noted that Air America was the largest airline in the world at the time of the Bay of Pigs.[37]

Beginning in 1954, the US began its war against Southeast Asian revolutionary movements. This meant collaboration with men like Ngo dinh Nhu, the rich drug dealer who was the brother of South Vietnam's President Ngo dinh Diem, and tribes like the Montagnards (or Hmong, whose opium the CIA's Air America regularly transported). The Montagnard tribesmen assassinated an estimated 100,000 non-combatants in Cambodia, Laos, and Thailand. Among the Montagnards in Laos could be found alleged Octopi and CIA Saigon station chief Shackley, with Thomas Clines working in support of drug lord Vang Pao and his Meo tribes, with opium being shipped to Mafia lord Santos Trafficante. The Phoenix Project, run by Shackley and Clines (with alleged participation by another supposed Octopus operative, Dr. Earl Brian, as well as Major General John Singlaub) in South Vietnam in 1974-5, was responsible for killing approximately 60,000 civilian Vietnamese, financing said to have been provided by Vang Pao drug monies. It was during this period in Vietnam that Clines and Shackley met arms dealer and rogue-CIA man Edwin Wilson, with whom they were later to become close friends. Wilson is another person alleged by Casolaro to be a member of the Octopus.[38]

Shackley is mentioned in a letter from the drug lord Khun Sa to the US government dated 28 June 1987: "During the period 1965 to 1975 CIA Chief in Laos Theodore Shackley was in the drug business." The letter also says: "Santos Trafficante acted as his buying and transporting agent while Richard Armitage handled the financial section with banks in Australia."[39]

Watergate

Danny Casolaro's investigation of the Octopus continued to note many of the same individuals appearing and re-appearing in the major conspiratorial scandals of the era. Casolaro attributed Watergate to the Octopus.

Watergate and the fall of the Mafia-funded politician Richard Nixon arguably began in April 1971, on the tenth anniversary of the Bay of Pigs debacle. E. Howard Hunt, allegedly retired from the CIA although still working for the CIA front Robert Mullen & Co., travelled to Miami, Florida to recruit agents for the White House Special Investigations Unit (the Plumbers) from Bay of Pigs veterans. Richard Helms, an alleged Octopus member and DCI of the CIA at the time, was informed of the formation of the Plumbers on the first day of its operation.

The personnel employed in the Watergate burglary were all veterans of the Bay of Pigs, but more importantly, all of them also were closely linked to the CIA, either as officials or contract agents. These were E. Howard Hunt, G. Gordon Liddy, Bernard Barker (E. Howard Hunt's lieutenant during the Bay of Pigs operation), Agency security specialist James McCord, Eugenio Martinez (who had been involved in three hundred fifty-four anti-Cuban forays, only to find himself arrested at Watergate), and Frank Sturgis. The CIA furnished psychological profiles to the team, and also provided material assistance to Hunt.[40]

On June 17, 1972, the Plumbers were caught in the Democratic National Committee's offices at the Watergate complex in Washington, D.C. Theories as to what the Plumbers were doing in the Democratic headquarters vary from planting or removing an electronic bug, to the theft of a secret file of information on a prostitution ring which implicated Democratic party figures, or, in another version, John Dean. White House aide Chuck Colson came to view the Plumbers as a team whose first purpose was to spy on Richard Nixon, owing their allegiance only to the CIA. Richard Nixon also believed, according to his autobiography, RN: The Memoirs of Richard Nixon, that he had been trapped: "The whole thing was so senseless and bungled that it almost looked like some kind of setup."[41]

Casolaro noted: "President Nixon and Attorney General John Mitchell were becoming impossible as far as the Octopus was concerned. Even Kissinger was being difficult in bypassing normal circles of intelligence with Vietnamization and the China card. Since this was the mission that reaped a windfall, how did all the pieces come together for the snowballing of..." [Notes end.] Casolaro undoubtedly was referring to the distrust that had developed by 1972 between Richard Helms' CIA and the Nixon White House. Helms believed that Nixon was trying to co-opt the power of the CIA, and undermine its strength with plans for a domestic intelligence agency. Apparently Casolaro believed that the Watergate debacle was a CIA (or Octopus) operation meant to destroy Nixon and his administration.

Assassination in Chile

The Octopus thrashed again in 1973 in Chile. Shackley and Clines headed up the "Track II" CIA strategy in Chile, acting in support of DCI Helms and Henry Kissinger in the assassination of democratically-elected President Salvador Allende Gossens (the hit allegedly performed by two Cubans) and eight other assassination attempts against Chilean officials. By his own admission, John P. Nichols, who later ran the Wackenhut/Cabazon enterprise, was involved in the Allende assassination plot. As Casolaro wrote in his notes, "A different, marginally more officious costume was worn in Chile. Since this operation provided accumulated debt for favors performed, the Octopus was now mature enough to know how to collect those debts. What were the favors performed, and what was the due bill?"[42]

Iran, Iraq, Libya, and the "October Surprise"

CIA presence in Iran began circa 1953 with Operation Ajax, launched to defend British oil interests in the country against nationalist interests led by Dr. Mohammad Mossadegh. With CIA assistance, the Shah retained control in the country.[43] In 1965, Henry Kissinger masterminded a secret war employing the Kurds, supporting the Shah against Iraq. Additional support to the Kurds was provided by the Israelis. After the Iraqis launched a major attack against Kurdistan, Henry Kissinger washed his hands of the matter, and suspended support. Starting in 1975, Kissinger, CIA Director William Colby, and Shackley intervened in Iran in support of governments friendly to the US. By 1980, however, the United States had switched its support to Iraq, in opposition to Iran.

In Libya, Edwin Wilson, along with friend and former CIA man Frank Terpil, worked for Qaddafi, training his air force, providing airplanes, weapons, and mercenaries, as well as a laboratory for the manufacture of assassination equipment and plastic explosives bombs that could be carried through airport metal detectors. Wilson also offered training of Qaddafi's forces in "espionage, sabotage, and general psychological warfare." During this period Wilson supplied reports on his activities to Theodore Shackley at the Agency, and federal court testimony suggests that Wilson was acting through an arrangement with the CIA. Wilson also hired Cuban Bay of Pigs veterans like Rafael "Chi Chi" Quintero, whom he had met in 1967, through Thomas Clines. Wilson is said to have made $15 million from this Libyan operation, but it was hardly the only moneymaking scheme that he was involved in at the time.[44]

Casolaro wondered outloud about the actions of the Octopus: "Who drove the Shah out of power? Can best friends do this to each other? [Casolaro may have been referring to the relationship between Helms and the Shah dating from their childhood time together in a Swiss boarding school.] What role did the Octopus play and for what reasons? Who lit the fires for the war between Iran and Iraq?"[45] Casolaro asked, "What part did the Octopus play? What was its purpose in the big picture? Is any picture that big? Jimmy Carter had bruised the Octopus as badly as Nixon did with more directed focus. Why did the Octopus come off the ocean floor for this to make sure no rescue was possible? What happened to those Sea Stallion helicopters, the most dependable helicopter in aviation history? [This refers to the Carter Administration's aborted attempt at rescuing the Americans held in Iran.] Everyone knows that hostages equals money but why is it that no one has asked what happened to the billions of dollars in frozen assets?" One of the ways in which Jimmy Carter may have "bruised the Octopus," as Casolaro noted, was through the imposition of a 1979 embargo on the shipment of arms to Iran.

Certainly that bruise healed quickly. Octopus familiar Ted Shackley appeared, after his alleged retirement from the CIA in 1979, in 1984 negotiations for the shipment of arms to Iran by the Reagan administration. Shackley passed information from Iranians General Manucher Hashemi and Manucher Ghorbanifar (who had held influential positions in the SAVAK secret police under the Shah and were close to the Ayatollah Khomeini) to Oliver North and alleged P2 member Michael Ledeen in the White House. The Iranians suggested that arms shipments to "moderates" such as themselves in Iran could do much to prevent the Ayatollah from taking sides with the Soviets, and could speed the release of the American hostages. The billions of dollars of arms shipments began, using Israel, Taiwan, and South Korea as middlemen, as early as 1981, with some of the profits from the Iranian shipments being diverted to help the contra cause in Nicaragua.

Nicaragua

During the Reagan administration the holy banner of a war on drugs was used to create a war in Nicaragua against the Sandinistas, funded in part by illegal drug trafficking. Prior to the arrival of guns from the CIA in 1982, the contras were a rag-tag band, by reports engaging in more cattle rustling than fighting against the Sandinistas. After small success initially against the Sandinistas, in 1983 the CIA redoubled its aid to the contras with additional aid, air support, and through the mining of Nicaraguan ports. At the same time, contra leaders were negotiating weapons shipments through the Wackenhut/Cabazon arrangement in Indio, California.

While the CIA was engaging in its merry little war, Congress was initiating legislation to halt the funding of the contras, and by 1983 the Boland Amendment restricted above-board funding of the contras. In violation of this Congressional statute as well as international law, the CIA went ahead with covert funding and support. After a series of revelations about US involvement in Nicaragua, however, the contras found that their CIA supplies were beginning to dry up. Private donations were sought, and channelled to the contras through the NSC, with Marine Lieutenant Colonel Oliver L. North as the official contact point for the contras.

According to a report of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence released in 1987, North worked through at least three accounts at the Geneva branch of Credit Suisse, with monies being channelled to the contras, as well as the Mossad and the Afghan rebels. Albert Hakim and General Richard Secord were signatories on the account. The same branch of Credit Suisse was used by Manucher Gorbanifar—alleged by the CIA to be a shared agent of the Mossad and the Iranian Savama intelligence agency (successor agency to SAVAK)—as well as Mossad agent Yacov Nimrodi in the purchase of US armaments for Iran.[46] Bush, Shackley, Clines, Singlaub, Hakim, Felix Rodriguez, and Rafael "Chi Chi" Quintero, pop up again in various capacities providing arms to the contras. Another major participant in the contra supply operation was retired General John Singlaub, who had been spotted in alleged Octopus circles since China during World War II.[47]

Did drug running have anything to do with the secret government's war in Nicaragua? Casolaro thought so. In his notes he wrote: "Exploiting foreign policy objectives with the contras in Nicaragua is one thing but why was the creation of a Latin American equivalent to the Golden Triangle so irresistable?"[48]

Lieutenant Colonel Oliver North's contra supply operation used known drug traffickers in the transport of weapons to the contras, and those same traffickers shipped drugs bought from the contras into the United States, via military bases which included Homestead Air Force Base near Miami. Major shipments of drugs were flown out of the ranch of CIA operative John Hull, who met on several occasions with Oliver North. Jack Blum, Special Prosecutor for Senator John Kerry's Subcommittee on Terrorism, Narcotics and International Operations, said in interview, "There is no doubt in my mind that Oliver North knew about narcotics trafficking...."[49]

Blum is not the only one who linked North to drug trafficking. According to Tim Ross, a veteran BBC broadcaster in Columbia, "In late '84, early '85, North brought five Afghani military advisers to Columbia on a speaking tour, three left, two stayed. The two that stayed were chemists who introduced heroin manufacturing to Columbia. He also brought in an Israeli agronomist who helped to cultivate opium poppies."[50]

Although North has denied any involvement in drug trafficking, some entries in his diaries are difficult to explain. July 9, 1984: "... wanted aircraft to go to Bolivia to pick up paste, want aircraft to pick up 1,500 kilos." July 12, 1985: "$14 million to finance Supermarket came from drugs." The term "Supermarket" refers to a Honduran weapons depot which was used for contra re-supply.[51]

After North left the National Security Council due to his part in the Iran-contra affair, a handwritten flowchart of some of his covert network (which he labeled "Project Democracy") was discovered in his safe. Project Democracy had been authorized by Reagan's National Security Decision Directive 77, while North had been appointed by NSC director Robert McFarlane to head up the covert networks. North's flowchart lists approximately twenty "Resource Development" and "Financial Management" companies as well as gun-running operations (including Amalgamated Commercial Enterprises, Southern Air Transport, Trans World Arms, Defex-Portugal, and Udall Research Corporation) linked to the CIA's General Secord, Albert Hakim, Ted Shackley, and Thomas Clines.

One factor links the majority of these companies: funding from the National Endowment for Democracy.[52] NED includes in its management Henry Kissinger, Sally Shelton Colby (the wife of ex-CIA director William Colby), Barbara Haig (Alexander Haig's daughter), John Richardson (of the CIA, a former law partner in Allen Dulles' Nazi-linked firm, Sullivan and Cromwell), Carl Gershman (former head of Social Democrats, USA and the Young People's Socialist Alliance), and Jay Lovestone (founder of the Communist Party, USA). Links lead from Gershman and Lovestone to the Trust, the Bolshevik group led by Trotsky and Bukharin and financed by the Morgan Guaranty Trust (a company run almost entirely by Skull and Bones members), and associated with Dulles' Sullivan and Cromwell law firm. When Dulles formed the CIA, Lovestone's Socialist labor operations were merged with it, forming the American Institute for Free Labor Development. Strange bedfellows, indeed, in certain cases both literally and figuratively.[53]

Some Pentagon officials have privately (and rightly or not) stated that Kissinger (as well as Brzezinski) are KGB "moles." Brzezinski was allegedly recruited during the time he was part of a study group of New World Order Round Tabler William Yandell Elliot, which included Kissinger as a member. Kissinger is alleged to have joined a KGB homosexual spy ring which had penetrated EUCOM G-2 headquarters in Oberammergau, Germany at World War II's end. Kissinger is also closely connected to the Chatham House British intelligence think tank, the nexus of post-Round Table New World Order influence.[54]

In 1983, the NED was organized as a "private foundation," although financed by Congress to the tune of eighty million dollars. Its "private" status kept it safe from Freedom of Information requests as well as governmental audits. NED has been involved in hundreds of programs as a "private CIA," including destabilizations of President Marcos of the Philippines and the Panamanian government, support for the Nazi PAN party in Mexico, channeling of money to the contras, and support for operatives of the Medellin drug cartel. Some observers have stated that the NED's operations are more extensive and more effective than those of the CIA.[55]

The NED has been alleged to be a private intelligence network with the purpose of establishing a fascist, corporatist world state, a theme which also seems to inform the movements of Casolaro's Octopus. The model of this state can be observed in Michael Ledeen's book, Universal Fascism, in which he extolls a fascist state based upon the ideals of Gabriele d'Annunzio, Mussolini's predecessor. Ledeen was connected to P-2, which was in turn connected to the NSC.[56]

Reporting directly to North (as well as being a consultant in the Pentagon and State Department) was Michael Ledeen. Ledeen was responsible for obtaining Israeli Mossad spy Jonathan Pollard his job in the Department of the Navy, for establishing a line of Israeli influence into the NSC, and is known in Italy to have been a member of the Propaganda Due (P2) Masonic lodge. P2, with a membership believed to include Henry Kissinger and Alexander Haig, is the organization known to have taken over the highest levels of Italian government and responsible during the '70s and '80s for an attempted bankrupting of the Vatican, in an alliance that linked the P2, the KGB, and major networks of drug trade.

The Wall Street Journal detailed a meeting between Alexander Haig, Michael Ledeen, and high-ranking P2 member and number two man in Italian intelligence Francesco Pazienza. Pazienza is said to have been involved in shipments of US arms to Iran arranged by the Reagan administration.[57]

The direct historical antecedent of P2 was the Propaganda Uno lodge of Freemasons Giacomo Mazzini and Albert Pike. In the 19th century P1 was directly involved in the creation of Marxism, anarchism, and syndicalism; in programs sponsoring both fascism and communism; and in a plan reportedly launched at the 1815 Congress of Vienna designed to combat the spread of the democratic movement of the United States. At the Congress of Vienna it is alleged that a program to institute a "New Age" was concocted, and that Italian Fascism, German Nazism, and the Bolshevik revolution were variant attempts at international political disruption. Is this the essence of the philosophy of the men in Casolaro's Octopus?[58]

The October Surprise

The October Surprise, if factual, can be viewed as yet another stunning coup d'etat, like the assassination of Kennedy and the ouster of Nixon. The October Surprise is the persistent allegation that individuals high in the administration of Ronald Reagan had, with or without the president's knowledge, arranged for fifty-two American hostages held in Iran to be detained until after his election, thus stealing the thunder (and a landslide of votes) from his opponent, Jimmy Carter, derailing his reelection. Casolaro on the October Surprise (as well as the Inslaw case), excerpted from his Behold, a Pale Horse book proposal:

"While rumors of the hostage release delay circulated for years after the election of Ronald Reagan, it wasn't until 1988 that testimony [was] offered by two covert operatives in two different courts regarding their knowledge and participation of a hostage-release stall managed by then Reagan campaign chief William Casey. But now, two more covert operatives have emerged from that desert reservation in the journey of this story effort to confirm that previous testimony and provide richer details regarding the laundered payment by the Saudis and other particularities in order to prevent what Casey feared the most, a surprise release of the hostages before the election almost guaranteeing windfall votes for President Jimmy Carter. The alleged reward to another Reagan insider for that mission to Iran in the summer of 1980 has been almost wholly responsible for the leaks leading to this odyssey. For it was in that reward in the form of a multimillion dollar government contract that technologies were found to have been stolen by the government from another company. In that other company's recovery from bankruptcy, its CEO has been the real life star and gumshoe in this drama that continues to unfold each day."[59]

Casolaro also wrote:

"Since Reagan was not a favored son of the octopus, why did it work so hard to insure his selection in 1980? Even if the participation by campaign officials in holding the hostages until the election was limited to just the acquiescence of smiling gentlemen who knew better, why was the veil removed when it could have been so absolutely secret?"[60]

Casolaro obviously believed in stories that a deal had been struck by George Bush and other members of the Reagan administration with the Ayatollah Khomeini to detain the hostages. That arms shipments to "moderate factions" in Iran had begun shortly after the deposing of the Shah, as early as 1980, is fact. The evidence for the "October Surprise" begins with statements of Abolhassan Bani-Sadr, the former president of Iran, who claimed after-the-fact knowledge of the event. Another source backing up the Bani-Sadr story was Ari Ben-Menashe, a member of Israeli intelligence, who corroborated Bani-Sadr and also offered insider knowledge about the Inslaw case.

Other sources varied in terms of their credibility. Additionally suggestive is that there is a twenty-one hour gap in George Bush's schedule corresponding to the time he is supposed to have been in Paris negotiating the hostage detainment, and conflicting stories from Bush and his staff about what he was doing when the alleged negotiation with the Iranians took place. In an affidavit Attorney Paul D. Wilcher sent to Attorney General Janet Reno, he too detailed the existence of a "Shadow Government," parallelling in precise terms the Casolaro Octopus, and their participation in the October Surprise: "The October Surprise treason refers to the top secret trip then-Vice Presidential candidate and former CIA Director George Bush (along with a planeful of some twenty-five to thirty other top CIA covert operatives—including a handful of prominent Republican and Democratic Senators and Congressmen) took to Paris on the weekend of October 18th and 19th, 1980.

While in Paris, Bush secretly met with representatives of the Ayatollah Khomeini, paid them bribes in the amount of $40 million, and pomised to deliver to the man additional $5 billion in arms (the shipments of these arms began flowing even before the election), in exchange for the Iranians' agreement NOT to release the fifty-two American hostages they held in Tehran until after the November 4th, 1980, US Presidential elections—in order to guarantee the humiliation and defeat of President Jimmy Carter in that election—and in order to cement the CIA's lock on the White House for the next twelve years under George Bush. The Reagan and Bush Administrations—and Congress, in separate House and Senate October Surprise investigations in 1992 —have tried to tell us that the October Surprise never happened—that Bush and his CIA cronies never made this secret trip to Paris on October 18th and 19th, and that no secret deal with the Iranians was ever struck. But that simply is not true—as the sixteen covert operatives referred to below will demonstrate in their forthcoming testimony. They will even produce a video tape to prove both the "October Surprise" treason, and George Bush's participation in it—beyond all shadow of any doubt."

Mr. Wilcher, age forty-six, was later found in his apartment dead from unknown causes.[61]

Also involved in shipments of arms to Iran was the Italian Masonic P-2 lodge, according to the sources of researcher Barbara Honegger. The grandmaster of the P-2 was Licio Gelli, who allegedly was closely linked to Theodore Shackley when the latter was stationed in Rome.[62]

Cabazon/Wackenhut

Alleged Octopus member John P. Nichols arrived at the Cabazon reservation in 1978. One former CIA man, however, who chooses to remain anonymous, said in an interview that Wackenhut had a presence on the Cabazon reservation since at least 1959, and that, "Guys have disappeared down there [at the Cabazon reservation] for a long time."

The Wackenhut/Cabazon connection includes a number of players pivotal in Casolaro's Octopus investigation. Here, in an endeavor run by one of the largest private police forces in the world, contras and criminals bargained for arms shipments, and met with CIA operatives. Here, testing of fuel-air explosives were allegedly performed, a technology said to have been used later by extremist Islamic groups against the US military in Iran. Here, the voicing of an unwanted opinion, as in the case of Fred Alvarez, might leave your life forfeit. With his investigation of the Cabazon reservation, Danny Casolaro was treading on dangerous ground, indeed.

Many of the events that took place in the final days of Danny Casolaro's life are connected to Wackenhut. Casolaro was investigating the unsolved murders of Alvarez and his friends on the Cabazon reservation—and planned to visit the reservation. Casolaro's death is alleged to have occurred shortly after he had requested an interview with John Philip Nichols about the Cabazon/Wackenhut collaboration. Casolaro's contact with two women who looked " too good to be true," may have been just that. Wackenhut has been shown to use women to compromise their targets, as in Wackenhut covert operations connected to the Alaskan pipeline. Is it possible that these women were pumping Casolaro for information, to find out just what he knew and just what leads he was following? Some of the figures with whom Casolaro was associating with were connected to Wackenhut, including Nichols and Riconosciuto. Finally, the Com-12 briefing alleges that the Wackenhut Special Services Team and the NSA contacted the Martinsburg Police and told them that they would investigate the Casolaro death, and that the police should keep this secret.

Nugan Hand Bank

"It didn't take many people to design the apparatus that would insure the renewal of the lease for the Pine Gap installation near Alice Springs, Australia. After all, how could a democracy spit up a Prime Minister that could sack the security of the Western Alliance? What about tentacle operations of the Octopus in Angola, Rhodesia, Zimbabwe, Mozambique and Nigeria? Was this another case of wearing the right costume again, as in Chile? Politically correct assistance can cover the cover of the Octopus for anything—drug trafficking, throughout Asia and the Mideast, arms dealing and murder. But what happened to the money—nearly a billion dollars?" [63]

The functions of the American Pine Gap installation in Australia include the receipt and transferral of information from spy satellites, the interception of phone calls from Europe, and the relaying of messages to the American nuclear submarine fleet. Gough Whitlam, the Labor Party candidate elected prime minister of Australia in 1972, was concerned about the cozy relationship between the ASIO, the Australian Security Intelligence Organization, and the CIA, and that ASIO had gone rogue. This in turn caused concern at the CIA. Ted Shackley is said to have gone "paranoid" and to have ordered a dimunition of the information made available to them, while Ray Cline mentions " a period of turbulence to do with Alice Springs."

Fearing the curtailment of their Australian operations due to an approaching renewal date for the Pine Gap base, the CIA flexed their muscles, and perhaps a couple of tentacles. On November 8, 1975, a message of protest about Prime Minister Whitlam was sent by Theodore Shackley to the head of ASIO. On May 11, 1975, the CIA and OSS-connected Governor General of Australia John Kerr removed Whitlam as the head of government, using constitutional pretext. According to CIA analyst Kevin Mulcahy, the CIA effort was headed by Milton Wonus, a friend of Nugan Hand Bank's (and possibly the CIA's) Bernie Houghton.[64]

After removing Whitlam from office, the Octopus was still not finished with Australia. At 4 A.M. on January 27, 1980, the body of banker Frank Nugan was found in his Mercedes in Lithgow, Australia. He had died from a single gunshot from the .30 caliber rifle which lay on the seat beside him. Nugan had been half owner, with partner Michael Jon Hand, in Nuhan Ltd., a group of banks founded in 1973, whose most visible subsidiary was Nugan Hand bank in Australia (and whose name is usually applied to the enterprise). Hand had been a Green Beret in Vietnam, working closely with Air America, his commanding officer at the time being William Colby.

Hand is also alleged by former associates to have been a drug-runner. The deceased Frank Nugan had been a lawyer in Australia. Others connected to Nugan Hand included the president of the bank, US Rear Admiral Earl P. "Buddy" Yates; the president of Nugan Hand Inc., Hawaii, Brigadier General Edwin F. Black; and a number of other senior CIA officials. Black had served in the OSS, been a member of the National Security Council, and had commanded all US troops in Thailand during the Vietnam War. The company also retained as a lawyer William Colby, former head of the CIA. Black had been Colby's OSS commander. Inquiries additionally showed that the majority of shareholders in Nuhand, Ltd. were connected to the CIA in some capacity.[65]

According to former CIA man Vincent Marchetti, the author of the classic The CIA and the Cult of Intelligence, speaking on Australian radio in October of 1980, Nugan Hand "...doesn't seem to be a [CIA] proprietary in the full sense of the word, that is, owned and controlled by the agency, nor does it seem to be a simple front organization. It seems to be more of an independent organization with former CIA people connected with it, and they're in business to make money, but because of their close personal relationship with the agency they will do favors for the Agency.

"This would include providing cover in some instances for operators, it would include laundering of money, it would include cutouts for any sort of highly clandestine activity the Agency is involved in but does not want to be any way directly connected with. When these organizations cooperate with the agency, the Agency uses its influence, both directly within the government and indirectly through other proprietaries and through other friendly organizations within the establishment, to throw business the company's way because they want the company to flower and succeed because it provides good cover for them."[66]

Shortly after the death of Nugan, Michael Hand, Yates, and CIA-connected alleged drug-runner Bernie Houghton led a group of former Southeast Asia military operatives in several ransackings of Nugan Hand files. A roomful of documents were shredded in the process.[67]

Inquiries following the death of Nugan found that Nuhan Ltd., which had been claimed to have moved one billion dollars through its channels each year, was flat broke. The company was placed under the control of a bankruptcy court.

With prosecution of the bank pending, in June, 1980, Michael Hand and Bernie Houghton fled Australia and vanished. The only lead about the current whereabouts of Michael Hand is offered by the anonymous Com-12 document: "Hand is currently the most wanted individual the Australian government has its sights on. He is living in the Middle East under the protection of an Islamic group by the name of the 'Grey Wolves.'"[68]

The business of Nugan Hand was laundering money, particularly money connected to illegal activities, including the sale of drugs. Neil Evans, who was the chief representative for Nugan Hand in the major Bangkok drug terminus Chiang Mai has stated that Nugan Hand was an intermediary between the CIA and Southeast Asian drug rings. Nugan Hand, however, was also engaged in activities that have very little to do with moving money. The letters of John Owen, hired as a representative of Nugan Hand in Southeast Asia, sent in the course of his daily operations to the bank, are filled with reports on troop movements and military activities in Cambodia and other areas.[69]

Nugan Hand was also involved in the financing of a number of CIA-connected operations in Africa, with Hand and Houghton dealing with friends like Major

General Richard Secord, Rafael "Chi Chi" Quintero, and alleged Octopus stalwart Theodore Shackley. The Com-12 document links another alleged member of the Octopus to Nugan Hand: "The drug-proceeds ... wound up deposited in Nugan-Hand Bank in Australia after Dr. Earl Brian carried the bank codes out of Southeast Asia using formal diplomatic immunity."[70]

Casolaro noted several Octopus/Nugan Hand forays in his papers, including the propping up of tiny minority white governments in Rhodesia (now Zimbabwe) and Angola. Millions of blacks in these countries were not allowed to vote, and their efforts to take control of their homelands were characterized by the CIA and Establishment press as Communist. Arms sales to these white minority governments were engineered by Edwin Wilson with Bernie Houghton and Michael Hand representing Nugan Hand, which provided financing.[71]

An anonymous but intriguing document is the Kiwi Gemstone, alternately known as the Opal File, provided a great deal of additional information about Nugan Hand, placing the operation within a greater international Mafia context.[72]

Egypt

In 1979 Edwin Wilson and Theodore Shackley formed EATSCO, the Egyptian American Transport and Services Corporation, which, according to some sources, obtained an exclusive and highly lucrative Pentagon contract to ship US arms to Egypt. Wilson also included in the partnership Richard Secord, Thomas Clines, Hussein K. Salem, and Erich von Marbod (at the time Deputy Director of the Defense Security Assistance Agency in the Pentagon). Secord and his partners were indicted in 1983 for $8 million in "billing abuses" to the government. Michael Ledeen, at the time a State Department advisor, stepped in, suggesting to US Attorney E. Lawrence Barcella that the overcharged funds may have been used for the funding of black operations (thus rendering them a "hands-off" proposition for prosecution). Secord retired from the Pentagon in 1983, after the EATSCO scandal, then started another company, IRANSCO, with Albert Hakim, in order to ship arms to Iran.[73]

Bombing of Pan Am 103

The anonymous Com-12 briefing provided a CIA connection to the bombing of Pan Am Flight 103. The following excerpt describes this connection:

> One of Casolaro's many mistakes was his sudden interest, shortly before his death, in the bombing of Pan Am Flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland. Killed on board the flight, among many others, were Ron Laviviere, Bill Leyere and Dan O'Connor—all CIA operatives from the Beirut station. Also killed was > Matthew Gannon, the Chief of Station, CIA, Beirut office. The Toronto Star did a story by John Pictton which was right in every aspect.

>
> The commander in charge of their team was a US Army intelligence officer by the name of Charles McKee, one of the individuals in charge of counter-terrorist operations in the Middle East. Part of the information that was in transit with these now-deceased individuals was material which could be used to destroy the "Enterprise." Included was the connection to the Syrian drug smuggling ring and the man by the name of Manozar Al-Kassar. Kassar was deeply involved in the drugs and arms for hostages deal with Secord, North, Poindexter, Hakim, and all the others of the Black Rose Group.
>
> McKee's operation uncovered an Aqua-Tech group (CIA deep cover operatives) which was actually the team the CIA employed to help provide cover protection, safe routing and screening procedures for the Middle East drug-running operations. Part of their duties was to cover and deflect interest from other intelligence offices from Europe and other countries, especially US agencies and, in particular, another deep cover operation working somewhere within the Office of Naval Intelligence.
>
> The ONI [Office of Naval Intelligence] Group is working currently to topple the "Enterprise" and restore the intelligence community to fall back within the guidelines of their original intent. The most pertinent of their motives is a salvage operation on the US Constitution and the prevention of an extreme right-wing, fascist wing within the US government and intelligence communities (known to many as Aquarius or the Fourth Reich [Order of the Rose]).
>
> West German intelligence and Mossad uncovered the fact that a bomb had been placed on board PanAm Flight 103 by detecting a different briefcase than the one regularly used by the drug smuggler. As mentioned, McKee's team was on board the same flight with key evidence which would be devastating to the "Enterprise." When the bomb information was relayed to the proper sources, the reporting agencies were ordered by the CIA Cover Operations Group to "Disregard."
>
> The parameters of this operation reach to the highest levels of many world governments. The Gander, Newfoundland crash is also linked, as well as the bombing of the Marine barracks in Beirut.[74]

The S & L Crisis and BCCI:

During the Reagan administration, rules regulating the practices of Savings and Loan institutions were relaxed, creating an influx of speculation—not to mention outright thievery—in a normally conservative financial zone. Vice President Bush took the helm of a Task Force on Financial Regulation in charge of this area of financial investment, and may also have been in charge of a systematic looting of the nation's Savings and Loan associations by the intelligence community and associated organized crime elements. Research into twenty-seven Savings and Loans "failures" during the 1990s evidence showed that a large percentage of these businesses had been owned by individuals with ties to the CIA, and that many of these institutions had made large (and often unsecured) loans to individuals linked to the CIA and organized crime. Profits accrued from the looting of the S&Ls were sometimes used in the financing of the contra movement. Predictably, the CIA moved to block the investigation of operatives connected to the S & L and bank failures.

One case of an S&L nosedive is instructive. Stefan Halper and Harvey D. McClean, Jr. were co-workers on the 1980 Bush campaign. Halper had also been the son-in-law of alleged Octopus member Ray Cline. McClean was connected to organized crime figure Herman K. Beebe, an associate of Mafia don Carlos Marcello. Beebe provided funding for the Palmer National Bank, which Halper and McClean founded in 1983. Palmer Bank engaged in lending to persons and organizations providing aid to the contras, funds which included money sent to Oliver North's Swiss bank accounts. Halper later set up the legal defense fund for North.

Another bank failure was Vision Banc Savings, owned by Robert I. Corson, identified as a money launderer by federal sources, and also reputed to be a CIA operative. Corson's bank was involved in a number of highly lucrative land purchases and resales in 1986. These transactions, according to the Christic Institute, were made by buyers connected to the CIA and the Mafia, using a portion of Manuel Noriega's cocaine profits. After the funds were transferred to Vision Banc, they were transferred as unsecured loans to a number of companies involved in the funding of the contras and run by Richard Secord. Secord and Theodore Shackley were both on the receiving end of funds in the collapse of several S&Ls.

The George Bush family also took advantage of the virtually unregulated state of the industry. Bush sons Jeb and Neil both made out like bandits from the collapse of S&Ls. The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) absorbed a $4.6 million loan that Jeb Bush and Armando Codina (the leader of the right-wing Cuban American National Foundation) had defaulted on to the Broward Federal Savings and Loan in Sunrise, Florida, despite the partners' possession of posh real estate holdings in Miami. Neil Bush and two partners in Good International, Inc. defaulted on $132 million in loans from Silverado Banking Savings and Loan, for which Bush had served on the Board of Directors from 1985 to 1988. Bush had not disclosed his connections to the firm when arranging the loan.

Neil Bush is also connected, through the receipt of an $86 million dollar loan to his company, to Robert Corson and Herman Beebe, Sr., the figures mentioned above in the collapse of S&Ls. Brother Jeb Bush is also connected to Wayne Reeder, an associate of Beebe, who defaulted on a $14 million loan from Silverado. Reeder was a partner of John Philip Nichols of alleged Octopus infamy, and was present at meetings at the Cabazon reservation attended by contra leaders—bringing full circle to the odyssey of the Octopus that Casolaro tracked.[75]

The most prominent of dominoes in the collapse of CIA-linked banks was the Pakistani-owned Bank of Credit & Commerce International, its four hundred subsidiaries shut down in sixty-two countries in 1991. BCCI was engaged in laundering money from drug profits and arms-trade, providing banking for known international terrorists, and the razing of national treasuries. BCCI was also at hand for the National Security Council when it needed a conduit for contra money or for other covert measures.

An informant stated to Time magazine that, "BCCI was a full-service bank. They not only financed arms deals that one government or another wanted to keep secret, they shipped the goods in their own ships, insured them with their own agency and provided manpower and security. They worked with intelligence agencies from all the Western countries and did a lot of business with East bloc countries."[76] Time quoted an unnamed American State Department official who said, "when you look at the Saudi support of the contras, ask yourself who the middleman was: there was no government-to-government connection between the Saudis and Nicaragua...

"It was BCCI that financed and brokered [Chinese] Silkworm missiles that went to Saudi Arabia, and those were equipped with sophisticated Israeli guidance systems. When you couldn't sue direct government transfers or national banks, BCCI was there to hot-wire the connections between Saudi Arabia, China, and Israel."[77]

Drugs were a major part of the revenues of the bank. According to a US intelligence officer quoted by Time, "If BCCI is such an embarrassment to the US that forthright investigations are not being pursued, it has a lot to do with the blind eye the US turned to the heroin trafficking in Pakistan."[78]

Among the clients of BCCI were Manuel Noriega, Ferdinand Marcos, Saddam Hussein, and the Palestinian terrorist Abu Nidal. When BCCI went belly-up, investigators estimated that $10 billion or more was missing from the bank's coffers.[79]

According to US investigators, the US Justice Department acted to interfere in probes of bank illegalities, including the blocking of a deposition by a key witness. Manhattan District Attorney Robert Morgenthau stated, "We have had no cooperation from the Justice Department since we first asked for records in March 1990. In fact they are impeding our investigation, and Justice Department representatives are asking witnesses not to cooperate with us." [80]

Researcher Sherman Skolnick discussed BCCI and the October Surprise:

"A source on the committee recently told me that the committee wanted to bring out the fact that there are large private business deals—not government to government, but private business deals—between George Bush and former Panamanian dictator General Manuel Noriega and between Bush and Iraqi dictator Saddam Hussein.

"These deals went through BCCI and through another bank which interfaces with BCCI, the Banca Nazionale del Lavoro (BNL). However, there's great pressure not to bring that out at the hearings.

"So can we have confidence in Kerry's committee? You can judge for yourself. Kerry is, along with President Bush, a member of the Skull & Bones Society at Yale University... Kerry is also chairman of the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee, which has received campaign contributions from BCCI. Kerry himself received a $5,000 contribution from BCCI officials."[81]

The connection of BCCI to President Bill Clinton was discussed in an interview with Tom Brown, who investigated both the Mena, Arkansas drug and arms transshipment point (See Chapter 20), as well as the "Bank of Crooks and Criminals, International." Brown mentioned Stephens Inc., stating that, "This company is one of the biggest bond sales and investment banking firms in the country. It's located right in Little Rock, Arkansas and has a disproportionate influence on the government of the state of Arkansas. Back in 1977, Stephens Inc. invited some people from BCCI to come into this country, and they set up the purchase of what has now become First American Bankshares in Washington. Now in December of 1991 the Arkansas Democrat had a report entitled 'Reports Link Stephens to BCCI.' The story was written by Hal Brown and identifies the same Curt Bradbury not only as a former Stephens employee, but as chairman, president and chief executive officer of Worthen National Bank. Bradbury is quoted as saying, 'First of all, I don't know anything about any BCCI ties, and neither do you.' This is in December of 1991. Remember, it was in 1977 that Stephens, Inc. invited BCCI into this country and organized the whole BCCI takeover of Clark Clifford's First American Bankshares. It just so happens Stephens Inc. owns 38 percent of Worthen National Bank. Now we go back to August of 1991. At that time there was another article in the now-defunct Arkansas Gazette. This article was entitled 'Little Rock on the BCCI route to power.' The article was written by Paul Barton. I quote this article: 'Curt Bradbury, then a financial analyst for Stephens Inc., and now chairman and chief executive officer of Worthen National Bank of Arkansas provided [a BCCI officer] research about Financial General, including a copy of its latest report. Financial General was the parent company of the National Bank of Georgia, the bank run by Bert Lance [longtime crony of former President Jimmy Carter].'

"That purchase of Financial General and the National Bank of Georgia is what evolved into First American Bankshares, the Clark Clifford bank in Washington. What is the Clinton connection? Worthen National Bank (headed by the aforementioned Bradbury) gave Clinton a $2.5 million line of credit for his presidential campaign."[82]

No less of an Establishment mouthpiece than Time magazine has talked about the connections of BCCI to an organization called "the black network," which "functions as a global intelligence operation and a Mafia-like enforcement squad. Operating primarily out of the bank's offices in Karachi, Pakistan, the 1,500-employee black network has used sophisticated spy equipment and techniques, along with bribery, extortion, kidnapping and even, by some accounts, murder." One wonders if this "black network" might not be identical to George Bush's Black Rose, and a controlling tentacle of Casolaro's Octopus.[83]

An Arab operative of the Black Network states, "I was recruited by the black network in the early 1980s. They came to me while I was in school in the US; they spoke my language, knew all my friends and gave me money. They told me they wanted me to join the organization, and described its wealth and political power, but at first they never said exactly what the organization did."[84]

Summary

What Danny Casolaro had come to see was a collusion of international crime and political power focused around a handful of men, primarily CIA operatives, who had banded together after World War II. Following the associations that Casolaro made, starting with the OSS in Albania, the trail of murder and conspiracy led from this tight net of good old boys in US intelligence to a complex weave of major international criminals and power brokers; to Nazis and fascists at least sometimes wearing the uniform of the US military, to drug trafficking networks melding seamlessly into international banking; to private armies and death squads; to secret societies such as Skull & Bones and P2; to men busily engaged in looting banking institutions and national treasuries; and to the presidents and potentates of the world. These men reaped and are still reaping staggering profit while at the same time constructing omnipresent world criminal and fascist networks—and all in the name of anti-Communism.

What Danny Casolaro planned to expose was an Octopus indeed, and certainly no figment of his imagination.

---

1. Prados, John, Presidents' Secret Wars, William Morrow and Company, New York, 1986, p. 155.

2. Prados, p. 46.

3. Prados, p. 51.

4. Casolaro notes; Ridgeway & Vaughan, pp. 37-38.

5. Swomley, John M., American Empire, Macmillan Company, New York, pp. 153-157.

6. Kangas, Paul, "The Role of Richard Nixon and George Bush in the Assassination of President Kennedy," The Realist 117; Kohn, Howard, "The Secret Alliances of the CIA from World War II to Watergate," Rolling Stone, May 20, 1976; Russell, Dick, The Man Who Knew Too Much, Carrol & Graf, 1994.

7. Judge, John, "Nazis in the White House."

8. Anderson, Scott, and Anderson, Jon Lee. Inside the League. Dodd, Mead & Company, New York 1986. pp. 55-56, 58.

9. Kohn.

10. Swomley, p. 168-177; Kimery, Anthony, L. "In the Company of Friends," Covert Action Information Bulletin #41.

11. Kohn.

12. Ibid.

13. Kwitny, p. 277.

14. Prados, p. 366.

15. Kohn; O'Toole, G.J.A. The Encyclopedia of American Intelligence and Espionage. Facts On File, New York, 1988, p. 49.

16. Kimery.

17. Casolaro notes; "Last Days," Ridgeway & Vaughan, p. 37.

18. Russell, Dick, The Man Who Knew Too Much, Carrol & Graf, 1994, p. 272.

19. Com-12.

20. Honnegger, Barbara, October Surprise, New York: Tudor Publishing Company,, 1989. pp. 240-242.

21. David Yallop, In God's Name .

22. Summers, Anthony, Conspiracy, New York: Paragon House, 1989, p. 226; Hurt, Henry, Reasonable Doubt, New York: Henry Holt and Company, 1985, p. 283.

23. Russell, p. 381.

24. "Secret Alliances of the CIA," Matrix III, p. 659.

25. See Chapter 12: Interview with Kerry Thornley, Steamshovel Press #5, Summer 1992, p. 17.

26. The charges were first made in the 1975 book Coup D'Etat In America by Alan J. Weberman and Michael Canfield (The Third Press, 1975); and were offered again as recently as Robert Groden's excellent photo study of the assassination, The Killing Of A President, New York: Viking Studio Books, 1993.

27. Lane, Mark, Plausible Denial, New York: Thunder's Mouth, 1991.

28. "JFK's Killers Apprehended," Yipster Times.

29. Kimery, Anthony L., "In The Company of Friends," Covert Action #41; "Secret Alliance," Matrix III.

30. Brussell, Mae, "Nazi Connection to JFK Assassination."

31. Haldeman, H. R., The Ends of Power, with Joseph DiMona, New York: Times Books, 1978, p. 39. In later years, Haldeman reached the disingenuous conclusion that Nixon was referring to the CIA cover-up of Fidel Castro's involvement in the JFK assassination. As new files on the assassination are released, the CIA continues to hint at this as an explanation for its obvious moves at cover-up. The heroic motivation for protecting Castro, according to this scenario, was to avoid a nuclear confrontation with his sponsors in his Soviet Union. In Ends of Power, however, the information is being used to blackmail Helms—had the agency indeed acted so heroically to save the world from nuclear conflagration, blackmail would not have been much of a prospect.

32. Kangas.

33. San Francisco Chronicle, May 7, 1977.

34. Matrix III.

35. Kimery.

36. Torbitt, William, Nomenclature of an Assassination Cabal, 1970.

37. Kohn.

38. "Behind the Iran/contra Affair," Christic Institute pamphlet.

39. Bleifuss, Joel, "Scandal Gates," In These Times, Sept. 18-24, 1991.

40. Kohn; Prados, pp. 324-325.

41. Kohn.

42. Casolaro notes.

43. Prados, pp. 94-97.

44. Kwitny, p. 102-103

45. Casolaro notes.

46. Brewda, Joseph. "Senate Report Attacks 'Parallel Government,'" Executive Intelligence Review, Feb 13, 1987.

47. Prados, p. 382; Kimery; "Behind the Iran/contra Affair," Christic Institute pamphlet.

48. Casolaro notes.

49. Shadow, Feb/May, 1995, pg. 21.

50. Ibid.

51. Ibid.

52. Zoakos, Criton. "Tower Commission Covers up for 'Project Democracy,'" Executive Intelligence Review, March 13, 1987.

53. Ibid.

54. Thompson, Scott. "Project Democracy: 'Glasnost' Submarine in US Intelligence," Executive Intelligence Review, Mar 13, 1987.

55. Ibid.

56. Benton, Nicholas F. "'Parallel Government' Exposed by EIR Report," Executive Intelligence Review, April 17, 1987.

57. Honegger, p. 124; Servadio, Leonardo, "Ledeen's Spanish Connection," Executive Intelligence Review, March 20, 1987.

58. Ibid.

59. Casolaro notes.

60. Casolaro notes.

61. Wilcher, Paul, American Patriot Fax Network Fax, May 21, 1993.

62. Honegger, p. 238.

63. Casolaro notes.

64. Kwitny.

65. Ibid.

66. Ibid.

67. Ibid.

68. Com-12.

69. Kwitny.

70. Ibid.

71. Ibid.

72. Keith, Jim, The Gemstone File, IllumiNet Press, Atlanta, Georgia, 1992.

73. Honegger, p. 81-82.

74. Com-12.

75. Calhoun, Jack. "The Family That Preys Together," Covert Action Information Bulletin, Summer 1992.

76. Beatty, Jonathan and Gwynne, S.C., "The Dirtiest Bank of All," Time, July 29, 1991. 77-80.

77. Ibid.

78. Ibid.

79. Ibid.

80. Ibid.

81. Skolnick, Sherman, "Bush-Saddam-BCCI Oil Kickback Scandal Can't Be Buried," Spotlight, August 26, 1991.

82. Spotlight, Nov 23, 1992.

83. Beatty.

84. Beatty.

"In the middle of the journey of our life, I found myself in a dark wood, having lost the straight path."

—quote from Dante's Inferno in Danny Casolaro's notebook[1]

---

[1] Rosenbaum, Ron, "The Strange Death of Danny Casolaro," Vanity Fair, Vol. 54, December 1991.

CHAPTER 16:

Bringing Back the Head of the Octopus

Danny Casolaro was warned from all sides to back off his investigation. Bill Hamilton noted that a number of Casolaro's contacts involved in US intelligence warned him that some of the leads he was following could be fatal.[1] Hamilton also claimed that, "Danny was planning to go to a particular facility in the Washington, DC area, owned by the United States government, a facility with connections to one or more of the people who run 'the Octopus.' I think you can assume it's a covert intelligence facility, from the way that it's presented. And just going to this facility, I was warned, could get him killed. The other thing that he was doing was making inquiries, over the telephone, to the Syndicate in Los Angeles. And those inquiries had rattled the cages of some people out there. And there was some concern that they might respond to the rattling by killing Danny. The claim that I have heard from some sources is that someone with mob responsibilities (I guess you'd call it)—some person in the mob—is a member of the leadership of 'the Octopus' and it's someone from the Los Angeles mob. And Danny was on to it." The whereabouts of this security installation was communicated to Danny Casolaro by Robert Nichols.[2] Casolaro had also received threats from a man associated with the matters he was investigating among the Cabazons. "Now that you know this stuff you will have to die," he quoted to a friend as one threat against his life that he linked to his investigations of Indian reservations.[3]

As Robert Booth Nichols passed warnings to Casolaro about Michael Riconosciuto, Riconosciuto was warning him about Nichols. Riconosciuto said that he mentioned to Nichols an attempt by the Cali cocaine cartel to stop the extradition of an alleged Columbian drug-runner named Gilberto Rodriquez Orejuela and Nichols, "went ballistic." Riconosciuto later implied that Casolaro may have died for the sake of this information, "But by the time I heard about it, there was nothing I could do, you know, except to warn Danny. And I called from that day on—it was on a later Monday—Tuesday, Wednesday, all the way through the weekend when they found Danny. Every day I was calling the Hamiltons, asking if anybody had heard from Danny. And I was frantic."[4]

Toward the end, coincidences began to enshroud Casolaro. A woman he picked up at a party surprised him with the depth of her knowledge about his research and the claim that she knew someone connected to the Octopus. He ran into a friend of Peter Videnieks, the Justice Department official Riconosciuto accused of threatening him, at a restaurant. The man claimed to have served in Special Forces and had previously worked for a company connected to Inslaw. He had been so forthcoming with information that he alarmed Casolaro's companions. Casolaro experienced "queer coincidences that would feed anyone's paranoia."[5] The Hamiltons believed that in the last days of his life Danny Casolaro was being tailed by a man named Joseph Cuellar, an Army special services officer and friend of Peter Videnieks.[6]

On Sunday, August 4, Casolaro attended a pool party at real estate agent and close friend Danielle Stalling. Stalling had attempted to subdivide Casolaro's property for sale to provide him with badly needed funds. Stalling noticed Casolaro's concern over threats to his life. He convinced his brother John, who had been staying with him, to move to other quarters.[7] On Monday, August 5, Casolaro's housekeeper, Olga, came by his home to find Casolaro conferring with a man in the kitchen. Olga described the man as heavy and possibly East Indian.[8] That same day, Casolaro telephoned Bill McCoy, a retired Army CID officer living in Fairfax. They discussed the Octopus and Casolaro claimed that Time has given him the go-ahead for an article about it. He also told McCoy that Time-Warner had agreed to finance his work. Both claims were later denied by the Time-Warner group. Casolaro also described to McCoy a round-the-world excursion in which he planned to investigate the Octopus, financed by the advance money. Casolaro wanted to visit thirteen countries in two months, finishing the trip off with a visit to arms merchant Edwin Wilson at an Illinois prison. Casolaro noted in his papers: "When the Advance Comes, ROAST PIG—SUMMER PARTY." He feels that he has his quarry in his literary sights and saw the main dish as an ironic statement.[9]

Tony Casolaro saw his brother on Monday, August 5, and thought he looked tired. Danny said he'd been getting threatening calls in the middle of the night, ruining his sleep, adding that the calls had been going on for about three months.[10] A close friend, Ben Mason, appeared at Casolaro's house around 3:30 PM, and although Mason was anxious to go to a restaurant to eat, Casolaro retrieved five pages of material from a box and showed it to Mason. The first page had information on contra arms transfers, allegedly involving Adman Khashoggi. Two more pages were photocopies of BCCI checks for one million and four million dollars, drawn on Adman Khashoggi and Manucher Ghorbanifar accounts.

These checks had been known to researchers since 1987 or earlier. Another page contained a passport photo of Hassan Ali Ibrahim Ali, said to be the manager of Sitico, allegedly a front for Iraqi arms deals. From the way Casolaro spoke to Mason, it seemed that he had met Ibrahim. Doug Vaughan's research determined that the pages had come from Bob Bickel, who had gotten them from Richard Brenneke, another figure prominent in Casolaro's research, someone who had provided testimony about the October Surprise. Casolaro had Mason look at an outline for the Octopus book, and mentioned that he was discouraged about his agent's inability to sell the book. He said that he dreaded the idea of obtaining a new agent.[11] In contrast to what he said to McCoy, he had received his third rejection, this one from Little, Brown and Company. Casolaro knew that there was a $178,000 balloon payment due on his home Mortgage. He had taken at least two loans.[12]

Did Casolaro have a reasonable expectation that he would sell the book and receive the elusive advance? Some critics, notably David Corn in the Nation, commented on the "overly dramatic, purplish prose" evidenced by Casolaro's notes (James Kilpatrick said associates had considered his style "florid"), and his other works were virtually self-published. In his notes and drafts, however, the published fiction shows professionally spare work, suggesting that Casolaro began with rough, almost stream-of-consciousness drafts that he subsequently polished into something tighter. His finished prose was certainly not worse than much that is published by mainstream book publishers. While he knew that conspiratorial fiction a la Robert Ludlum could be lucrative for publishers, that Casolaro planned to fictionalize his view of the Octopus was at odds with his eagerness to prove the truth of the sea-beast's existence. Perhaps he had plans beyond the single manuscript.

Danny Casolaro's investigations were never less than far-reaching. Harry V. Martin, reporting later in the Napa Sentinel, listed some of the subjects Casolaro was gathering information on during this period: Dominic and Bob Bolsano; Gemini Industries; the Papago Indian tribe; the Menominee Indian tribe; gold and platinum smuggling from Southeast Asia, via Mexico, through the Papago reservation in New Mexico, and gold smuggling from South Vietnam; the Cabazon Indian tribe, the murders and political intrigue connected to it, as well as the attendant issues regarding sovereign tribal land and the weapons/gun traffic; the Primerit Bank of Nevada; BCCI and other related institutions; Dr. Earl Brian; Peter Videnieks; Community Banking of Southern California; Home Savings of Seattle; Theodore Strand; Robert Booth Nichols; Department of Commerce EDA funds; the Wackenhut Corporation; former Bank of America director Bill Jenson; the death of journalist Don Bolles; a corridor between Mexico and New Mexico which the Drug Enforcement Agency refused to patrol; an IBM-Tel Aviv connection linking the PROMIS software to Israeli intelligence. Casolaro had also developed arcane avenues of research into Nevada's mysterious Area 51, the human genome project,[13] and even, his notes reflected (perhaps as background on Michael Riconosciuto), psychedelic history, specifically Ken Kesey and Billy Hitchcock, who helped fund Timothy Leary's Millbrook commune.

These topics have preoccupied the computer nets and writings of those interested in conspiracy theories before and since Casolaro became their cyber-folk hero. They certainly could have been fodder for a writing career. The volume of the accumulation alone suggested that Casolaro had plans for the future with or without the magical advance. In fact, he had cast his original proposal as a series of articles and a book. Casolaro did have a mild form of multiple sclerosis, an often debilitating disease fatal to a small percentage of its sufferers. It may have caused him moments of disorientation, but he did not feel strongly enough about it to have it treated and he did not discuss it with people close to him. In fact, most did not know about it until after Casolaro's autopsy. The one talk he did have about MS, with friend and nursing teacher Ann Marie Winfield, ended with an assurance from her that it probably was not serious and her observance that Casolaro did not seem concerned or suicidal over it.[14]

If he was suicidal, his behavior contradicted it. He visited the office of his insurance agent and made a payment on his house insurance.[15] According to one report, "A review of his financial records indicated that he had made a July mortgage payment of about $2000, and still had $2,700 in his bank account. [16]

On Tuesday, August 6, Casolaro finished what he was working on, having working steadily at the typewriter since the previous day. His housekeeper Olga assisted him in packing a black leather bag, and watched him pack papers into a briefcase. When she lifted the briefcase, she found it heavy. Casolaro told her, "I have all my papers...Wish me luck. I'll see you in a couple of days." He hugged Olga and she crossed her fingers for good luck.

Suicide? "Not in a million years!" his cousin and sometimes drinking partner Jim Gualteri would later insist, "Danny wasn't a coward. He wasn't afraid. He would have never done that. Danny had a regular girlfriend. He was a good person. He was a sweetheart who liked to laugh a lot. Danny was a pretty happy-go-lucky guy. He was very happy with his life. I would call Danny very inquisitive. Writing was a great passion in his life. He was writing a book that would blow everybody's mind away in terms of revelations about the government and all the sinister things that were going on."[17]

Before leaving the house, Casolaro received a call from Ben Mason. "Danny was upbeat," Mason said. "He was enthusiastic about his source in West Virginia."[18] Mason had called to discuss Casolaro's financial situation—a topic

Casolaro had also discussed with another friend, Art Weinfield. Both Mason and Weinfield had concurred with Casolaro on the importance of getting that advance, and Casolaro told Mason that if it were not forthcoming he would have had to borrow from his family, as he had done many times in the past.[19] Jim Gualteri affirmed this last point: "Knowing how close the family was, they would have never left Danny in the lurch for money. Very close-knit family."[20]

Shortly before his trip to Martinsburg, Casolaro called Virginia McCullough. They had often discussed the idea that members of the government might have been engaging in drug running in order to fund guns. Casolaro told McCullough, "You know, Virginia, I'm becoming a believer." McCullough said that Casolaro sounded "distressed, but distressed ... because he had to face the truth." At the same time, McCullough recalled, "he sounded very upbeat. When he came back he would have Justice right where he wanted them in the Inslaw matter."[21]

Casolaro had also called Albro Lundy Jr. of Beverly Hills approximately a week before his death. Lundy recounted that Casolaro related that he was close to finding out who was in control of the Octopus, and made a new connection: to the issue of missing Vietnam POWs and MIAs.[22]

One of the reasons Casolaro went to Martinsburg was to interview for a second time one or more members of the staff of Senator Robert Byrd. The interview had been planned for Friday night, August 9, 1991. Casolaro had mentioned to the Hamiltons that one chapter of the Octopus book would be about Senator Byrd. He believed the secrets that would crack the Inslaw case resided with members of Byrd's staff. He also told Bill Turner that he was going to meet with two of Byrd's staff, one of whom was related to Mrs. Peter Videnieks. Reporter Sarah McClendon said that Casolaro had spoken with Mr. and Mrs. Peter Videnieks. Mrs. Videnieks is Byrd's chief of staff in his Washington office, and had two relatives working on Byrd's staff.[23] Bill Hamilton also claimed that the Martinsburg stay was supposed to involve a meeting with Videnieks and Earl Brian.[24] "He had been researching this thing for a long time and was very excited about the information he was finally getting," said Ben Mason. "He was in good spirits and very excited about the source he was going to see in West Virginia. There is no way in the world that he would have killed himself."[25] "He had been digging into stuff for months and getting no where," Casolaro's brother Tony said in a telephone interview. "Then, suddenly, he said he had this big breakthrough, some source he had." Danny had also told his brother that if an "accident" befell him, not to believe it. According to Bill McCoy, Casolaro made one more call on August 5, to Bob Bickel, a Texas oil engineer and former Customs Bureau informant, and told him that he was going to bring back the head of the Octopus.

Then Danny departed for Martinsburg.[26]

---

1. Interview with Bill Hamilton by Paul DeRienzo, WBAI-FM Radio, September 20, 1991.

2. Hamilton interview; Corn, p. 514.

3. Contact, May 10, 1994, p. 19.

4. Rosenbaum, p. 98.

5. Corn, p. 515.

6. The Hotline, March 11, 1993; Sarah McClendon's Washington Report, January 6, 1994.

7. Ridgeway and Vaughan, p. 36-37.

8. Ibid.

9. Ibid.

10. Ibid.

11. Connolly, "Dead Right."

12. "Unanswered Questions on Casolaro," Spotlight, September 28, 1992.

13. A note from Arthur Pallotta to Casolaro attached to an unidentified article in Casolaro's newsclippings file on the human genome project and its first director, James Watson, read: "Danny—Cannot think of one project so massive and comparable to the 'Man In The Moon.'" The $3 billion Human Genome Organization (HUGO) worked to decode the human genetic structure. Its director, James Watson, co-discoverer with Francis Crick of DNA, resigned over conflict of interest questions regarding his stock ownership in companies like Eli Lilly, Angen, Inc., and Ongene Science, Inc., charges that Watson bitterly denied. Moral and ethical issues of genetic testing and genetic degradation haunt genome research, but its potential to cure disease is enormous—as is the potential for profit for medical treatments resulting from it. Casolaro's clippings collection included stories on the European Economic Community's delay of the start of its own human genome project for the sake of the ethics issues. It also included an article on research at Howard Hughes Medical Institute that gave symptoms of arthritis to a rat through the insertion on a human gene, and the isolation of cancer and gender identification genes. The Human Genome Project also discovered genes for cystic fibrosis and fragile X syndrome, responsible for many forms of mental retardation. Casolaro's interest along these lines may have coincided with an interest in Creutzfeldt-Jakob, or Mad Cow, Disease and other bacterial research work done by subcontractors to Wackenhut like the Stormont Laboratories of Woodbine, California.

In October 1992, HUGO issued a report recommending the collection of genetic material from 722 "Isolates of Historic Interest" (IHIs), or indegenous ethnic people whose numbers are diminishing and leave sample DNA of each community with its regional institution or a national government. Another purpose was to locate and secure patents on unique genes that could be used to fight disease. "Access to an IHI's complete genetic make-up means it's theoretically possible to devise cheap and targeted biological weapons trained solely on that community," reported the northern California independent newspaper Community Endeavor (6/15/93), "Human rights violations against indigenous people, by their own governments and/or governments within their regions, is a major cause of their physical extinction." This and similar issues may have attracted Casolaro's interest to the Human Genome Project, but he may also have been more interested in possible treatment for his own undiagnosed case of multiple sclerosis.

14. Connolly, "Dead Right"; Ron Rosenbaum noted in Vanity Fair that "... Not long before his death Danny had approached a nurse he knew and questioned her closely about the symptoms of multiple sclerosis and brain diseases. This was particularly pertinent to the murder-or-suicide question, because an autopsy examination of Danny's brain revealed possible symptoms of M.S. Initially, his friends and family had dismissed this as irrelevant—it couldn't be a motive for suicide, because Danny had never complained of symptoms, or, to their knowledge known of the disease. Then I mentioned to Ann the cryptic notes I'd found in Danny's files on germ warfare, on slow-acting brain viruses like Mad Cow Disease, about targeting people with them by slipping them into meat pies ... maybe he thought he'd been targeted."

15. Ridgeway and Vaughn, p. 37.

16. "Inslaw Prober Had Financial Worries," Washington Post, 8/17/91.

17. Interview with Jim Gualteri by Kenn Thomas, January 20, 1994.

18-19. Ridgeway and Vaughan, p. 37.

20. Gualteri interview.

21. Virginia McCullough interview.

22. A posting on the alt.conspiracy newsgroup from March 11, 1992 included the story of Albro Lundry III, who testified before a congressional committee on Vietnam POWs and MIAs that his father, an MIA airman, was pictured in photographs that the committee sought to authenticate. Lundry claimed to have received a call from Casolaro in August, a week prior to his death, in which Casolaro claimed to be "only one or two steps away from uncovering the men in charge." According to this account, Casolaro had said that "BCCI, Inslaw, Iran-contra, and the cover-up of POW-MIA was all related."

23. The Hotline, March 11, 1993.

24. Hamilton interview.

25. "Area Writer Investigating," Washington Post, August 13, 1991.

26. Connolly, John, "Dead Right"; Ridgeway and Vaughan, "Last Days."

CHAPTER 17:

Final Hours

The last hours or Danny Casolaro's life were set in the little town of Martinsburg, West Virginia. In Martinsburg, witnesses saw Casolaro sitting in his car behind the IRS building, apparently waiting for a contact. Michael Riconosciuto later told NBC's Unsolved Mysteries series that "Danny had a source there inside the IRS' computer data center that was giving him hard copy printouts of IRS information on certain specific targets that Danny was after."[1]

Shortly before noon, on Thursday, August 8, Casolaro checked into room 517 of the Sheraton Hotel in Martinsburg. A few minutes later he went to the Stone Crab Inn, a restaurant located near an exit north on Interstate 81. He drank a bottle of wine during his nearly three hours there. Around 3 PM, Casolaro left for a Pizza Hut located within a block of the Sheraton. He ordered a pitcher of beer, but after being told by the waitress she could not serve him alcohol without food, he also ordered pizza.[2] Casolaro flirted with her, saying he was member of the Edgar Allen Poe Society, and quoting from the poem epigraph to Fitzgerald's The Great Gatsby. This was not out of character for Casoloro. Wendy Weaver, an old girlfriend, remembered when Casolaro once greeted her at a restaurant with roses, in a tuxedo, and wearing a tin hat he had painted gold.[3]

He sat alone for about half an hour, then left. Around 5 PM, Casolaro went into the lounge at the Sheraton, Heatherfield's, with a man described by a waitress as "maybe Arab or Iranian." The man complained about slow service to the waitress, but Danny apologized for him, saying he had had a hard day. They drink about four beers apiece, and then left the cocktail lounge.

Casolaro returned to the lounge for a bucket of ice about 5:30 PM. On the way back to his room, Casolaro ran into Mike Looney, the hotel guest who was staying next door to him. Looney noticed the ice bucket Casolaro was carrying and commented, "It's a hell of a note when you have to walk all the way to Virginia to get a bucket of ice." Looney encountered Casolaro again around 8 PM in the bar. Casolaro was talking with two blonde women in tights. After the women left, Looney commented to Casolaro, "It looked too good to be true." Danny had been drinking imported bottled beer, but switched to less expensive glasses of draft beer during happy hour. He and Looney struck up a conversation about the Octopus research, and Casolaro told him he was going to meet a contact—an Arab, Looney thought he remembered—whose information would crack the case.

Sheraton Inn.

The appointed time came, but no contact appeared. Casolaro left, possibly to make a phone call or to relieve himself. When he returned, he told Looney that the source was only going to furnish some travel documents, and so he didn't mind getting drunk.

Casolaro and Looney remained in the bar until last call, around 11:30 PM. Looney later recalled, "He was excited about what he was doing. He thought he was onto something big. He was convinced that there was a conspiracy. I was taking a kind of devil's advocate position."[4]

Casolaro's next known movement was 2 PM, Friday, August 9, when he met with informant Bill Turner in Turner's car in the lot of the Sheraton (to avoid what Casolaro assumed was his bugged room). Turner said, "[Danny] came bouncing up with that famous old smile of his and opened the car door and got in..."[5] Turner said Casolaro was carrying a cardboard accordion file, and that he gave Casolaro some papers regarding mismanagement at Hughes and the Pentagon. Turner also told Casolaro about problems he was having with the Veteran's

Inside The Stone Crab Inn.

Administration over charges that he had received improper benefits. The meeting lasted approximately forty-five minutes. Turner described Casoloro as enthusiastic, saying that Casolaro was excited about wrapping things up over the weekend, and that Casolaro told Turner he'd be back in touch. Casolaro's last words to Turner were, "Bill old buddy, got to watch your p's and q's and look over your shoulder."[6]

Casolaro returned to the Stone Crab Inn Friday at about 2:30 PM, where he had a shrimp cocktail and began drinking bottles of Bud Lite. He paid with a credit card at 5:12 PM and told the bartender that he had "a rough night." The bartender thought Danny looked lonely and introspective. The bartender remembered him as "a man with something to say. He was just like this, 'Take a minute and talk to me.' He told me to keep smiling."

After leaving the Stone Crab Inn sometime before 6 PM, Casolaro made a pay phone call on Interstate 81 and a collect call to his mother's home. He spoke with his niece and said he'd be late and might not make it all to the family dinner. This was hardly unusual. When his brother Tony recalled the incident, he noted that "When the phone rang, we knew it would be Danny. It was like him to show up late or not at all."[7]

Casolaro's whereabouts from that point are unknown until around 10 PM, when he entered a convenience store located near the Sheraton and waited while the clerk brewed fresh coffee. The last time any one saw Casolaro alive, he was walking back to the Sheraton with his coffee.[8]

View from the fifth floor of the former Sheraton Inn.

While Casolaro had been in Martinsburg, some of his friends become concerned about not hearing from him. Bill Hamilton called Robert Booth Nichols in Los Angeles on Friday, August 9, worried about not having heard from Casolaro and asked if Nichols had. According to Hamilton, Nichols said: "Yes, he called late Monday night. Danny sounded like the cat who had swallowed the canary. He was euphoric. I have probably had fifty hours of telephone conversations with him in the last year; he always plays chess with me on the phone. Danny told me he had just come back from meeting with a source, and he now knew everything about Inslaw and PROMIS, and the Hamiltons were going to be very excited." Nichols also informed Hamilton that he, Nichols, was travelling to Europe that same evening.[9] Ann Klenk, a CNBC producer who sometimes had dinner with Danny,[10] worried when he made no inquiries to her about a program she had just finished that she knew would intrigue him. She went by his house, and, finding it empty, scribbled a note to him: "Danny—where the hell are you?"[11] Bill Hamilton called the house as well and received no answer.[12]

Casolaro's housekeeper, Olga, received four or five strange phone calls that day. At 9 AM a man called and said, "I will cut his body and throw it to the sharks." Approximately thirty minutes later, a man who Olga believed was different from the first caller said, "Drop dead," and then hung up. When Olga answered a third call, there was no voice, only music playing in the background. A fourth call again had music playing. At 10 PM there was another call. This time, the other end was completely silent.[13]

The Village Voice's national affairs editor, Dan Bischoff, took a call from an anonymous man who said the paper should "look into the disappearance of a reporter investigating the October Surprise in West Virginia." This happened sometime after 4 PM on Sunday August 11. He passed the word on via e-mail to Jonathan Larsen, Village Voice editor-in-chief.[14]

The housecleaner discovered Danny Casolaro's body on Saturday, August 10, 1991, just before 12:51 PM. Shortly thereafter, police called family members, and reports of Danny's death began to appear in the media.

---

1. Connolly, John, "Dead Right."

2. The Hotline, March 11, 1993.

3. Ridgeway and Vaughan, "Last Days," p. 39; Rosenbaum, Ron, "Strange Death of Danny Casolaro," Vanity Fair, p. 83.

4. The Hotline.

5. Ridgeway and Vaughan, p. 39.

6. The Hotline.

7. "Frequent Drinking Marked Writer Casolaro's Final Days," Washington Post, August 25, 1991, A 19; Ridgeway and Vaughan, pp. 39-40; The Hotline.

8. Ridgeway and Vaughan, "Last Days," pp. 39-40.

9. Ridgeway and Vaughan, pp. 37-38.

10. Rosenbaum also reported in Vanity Fair that three weeks before he died, Casolaro asked Ann Klenk "Will you kiss me when I'm dead?" Klenk remarked that "He'd told me several times that summer that if I heard he met with an accident make sure I got that shit [meaning his notes] out of there." The program Klenk had been working on was a live interview with Richard Secord, a key figure behind Iran/contra operations. According to a pamphlet published by Christic Institute, a group whose research had greatly interested Danny, Secord flew missions "during CIA's covert air war in Laos in 1960s," embezzled "millions of dollars as a top Pentagon official overseeing Middle East arms sales in late 1970s," and was a par ter with Shackley, Clines, Hakim and convicted terrorist supplier Edwin Wilson in the Egyptian Air Transport and Service Corporation (EATSCO), an arms dealing entity.

11. Ridgeway and Vaughan, pp. 38.

12. Ibid.

13. Ibid.

14. Ibid.

CHAPTER 18:

Rippling Waves

The police had no idea that Danny Casolaro had been investigating malevolent and murderous forces. When Danny's brother Tony spoke with detective Sergeant George Swartwood, the one who first informed the family of Danny's apparent suicide, Tony received a contradictory description of the body's wounds—cuts on both the wrists and the arms.Tony then told Swartwood about Danny's investigative work. Research papers and notes, other than the terse suicide message, were nowhere in evidence at the murder scene; the detective did not know they should have been. No autopsy had been planned. Swartwood directed Tony Casolaro to the medical examiner's office, where coroner Sandra Bining in turn refered him to the West Virginia medical examiner, a man with the coldly appropriate name of James "Jack" Frost. On late Monday, Frost agreed with Tony about the suspicious circumstances of Danny's death and scheduled an autopsy for the following Wednesday. He observed to the incredulous Tony Casolaro that the body had already been embalmed. Because of the hastily drawn conclusion of suicide, Sandra Brining had turned Casolaro's body over to the funeral home. Because the family had not received prior notification, the embalming had violated the law—and had made the autopsy that much more difficult.

After being brought up to speed by Tony Casolaro, Swartwood's people backpedaled as quickly and as thoroughly as possible to investigate the death. They went back to the Sheraton and searched for indications of a break-in—fingerprints, even footprints on the roof in case someone had scaled the walls and entered through a window. One detective took a dog onto the local highway to look for the papers Tony Casolaro had mentioned—Danny's papers as well as those he had just received from Bill Turner. The effort was too late in many respects. The coroner's husband David, a fire department lieutenant, had the bathroom door removed less than a half-hour after the body was found. The coroner herself—also an emergency room nurse—drained the bathtub without a filter. The body had been moved to the Brown Funeral Home and its director, Charles Brown, had done the embalming.[1]

Sandra Brining performed a brief medical examination before the autopsy. She took a blood sample from the heart, noted old scars on the right leg and scalp, and an old bruise inside the upper, right arm. She also counted the slash scars on his wrists. The right wrist had seven or eight slashes;[2] the right had three or four, all of them deep, strongly inflicted cuts. It was then that Brining determined that the death was a suicide.

Dr. James Frost's autopsy agreed with Brining's conclusion that Danny Casolaro's life spilled out through the cuts on his wrists. Frost determined that there were no signs of struggle and not enough drug residue in blood and urine samples to indicate an artificial inhibition of any such struggle. He reported, "no alcohol found in body ... traces of codeine from Tylenol III and an anti-depressant drug were found."[3] Toxicological tissue tests also indicate the presence of hydrocone, used in the painkiller Vicodin, six tablets of which Casolaro's dentist had prescribed for him three years previously, but the quantity of the anti-depressant was too minute to identify. "Of the five or six things that bothered me the most, this is one of them," Tony Casolaro commented later, "Because they found no pill bottle, no written prescription at any pharmacy."[4]

This was only the beginning of the suspicions that spread out like ripples behind an octopus swimming off after an attack. The first involved the recent death of Alan Standorf, the electronic intelligence specialist whom, according to Rodney Stich, Casolaro had met through Michael Riconosciuto. Casolaro had called Standorf a key source. After Casolaro's death, when Art Weinfield accompanied Casolaro's sister Mary Ellen and son Trey to the Martinsburg police station to recover Danny's car, they ran into detectives who identified themselves as working for the National Airport Authority in DC.[5] The detectives explained that they were looking into possible connections between Danny's death and Standorf's, a "low-level" civilian NSA employee at the restricted Vint Hill military facility. Standorf was killed by a blow to the head in early January. If he was not killed for the $500 he had just retrieved from an ATM, then his body was made to look that way. It had been discovered at National Airport in late January, wrapped in his coat in the back seat of his car, money missing. The detectives explained that Army intelligence officers joined their investigation of the case twice before an anonymous caller mentioned the link to Casolaro. While the detectives never came up with evidence connecting the two cases, according to Ridgeway and Vaughan, they did discover that their anonymous tip came from one of Casolaro's last informants, Bill Turner.[6]

Fearful that he might be the next target of the Octopus, Bill Turner got himself arrested in late September on a bank robbery charge. A similar strategy had been used by a spook named Richard Case Nagell when he realized he was entangled in the conspiracy to kill JFK. In September 1963 Nagell shot up a bank in San Antonio, was arrested and thereby removed as a participant.[7] Less than an hour and a half after a bank robbery in the rural town of Gore, police picked up Turner and matched him with images from the bank's security camera. Was Turner justifed in such actions, steering the police to connect Danny's death with Standorf's and fleeing into police custody? Turner failed to make two appointments to discuss this with the authors of the original edition of this book and thereafter his telephone number became unlisted. One person who would support Turner's fears was Harry Martin of the NAPA Sentinel. "Basically what we're dealing with is Air Force counterintelligence," said Martin in an interview, "What Casolaro was finding was procurement fraud, manufacturing fraud and kickbacks. He didn't start out in that direction, but that's what he stumbled across. And, of course, that is what did him in... One of my contacts in the Air Force came back from Virginia the same weekend as Casolaro's death. Of course, it hadn't quite been reported. He came back and his knuckles were raw and he had scratches on them and he talked about beating up this guy in a hotel inWest Virginia." "Again," Martin adds, "I didn't have Casolaro on my mind at the time... At the same time the contact indicated that he had gotten ahold of all these papers from this guy and that he destroyed those papers. When you put two and two together—the contact had these papers and he dealt with Hughes Aircraft—-and the fact that the guy had been in West Virginia for two days and came back like he had been in a fight..."[8] Martin declined to give the name of his contact.

One report had Bill Hamilton providing some support for the scenario: "We had one meeting with an FBI agent and the First Assistant US Attorney from Los Angeles on our February submission. And they had questions principally about material in that submission about the death of the journalist Danny Casolaro. During the meeting they confirmed to us that something we had heard from a confidential source was true. And that was, a maid at the hotel in Martinsburg, West Virginia had seen a man coming out of Danny Casolaro's hotel room the morning he was found dead, but before his body was discovered. Then, subsequent to that meeting, the Justice Department attempted to deny that they had, in fact, confirmed that during the meeting with us. And that effort to deny it makes you very uncomfortable, you know?"[9]

Perhaps Bob Bickell also felt some of that discomfort. On August 5, Casolaro had called Texas oil engineer Bickell, who at one time worked as a Customs Bureau informant, apparently to talk about Robert Booth Nichols and his association with a former Justice official named Michael Abbell and Columbian drug lord Gilberto Rodriquez, both of whom were being investigated for their connections to the Cali drug cartel. Bickel previously had aspired to blow the whistle on CIA chief Robert Gates' role in shipping weapons to Iraq in the late 1980s. He had given Casolaro photocopies of one million and four million dollar checks drawn on the BCCI accounts of Iran-contra go-betweens Khashoggi and Ghorbanifar. He also gave him the passport photograph of Hassan Ali Ibrahim Ali, a front man for Iraqi weapons sales. (Doug Vaughan traced these papers back to Richard Brenneke.) The check photocopies had circulated among researchers for years but when matched with the passport it seemed to represent a great breakthrough to Danny. Was Hassan Ali Ibrahim Ali the "maybe Arab or Iranian" man that a waitress saw Casolaro with at the Sheridan that night?

Bickell had told Bob McCoy that Casolaro was trolling for the head of the Octopus on his final night, and he later told a writer that "Danny had confronted Robert Booth Nichols about his relationship with Mike Abbell."[10] Writer Chris Seymour, whose unpublished six hundred page manuscript in part explored the drug traffic angle of Casolaro's work, suggested that the drug angle pre-occupied the fifteen phone calls to Nichols found on Casolaro's phone bill the month prior to his death. This view supported the report that Casolaro had been collecting information about Nichols' various connections to the Gambino family and the Yakuza from former Justice Department prosecutor Richard Stavin. Stavin's report emphasized that names found in Casolaro's notes included members of FIDCO, the First Intercontinental Development Corporation, a group in California created to re-construct bombed-out Beirut in Lebanon. The FIDCO board member list contained the names of Texas oilman Clint Murchison, Jr. and Howard Hughes crony Robert Maheu, names that also had emerged during Nichols' pursuit of damages against the LAPD for revocation of his concealed weapons permit in 1993. The list also included Nichols as a senior vice-president of FIDCO's Investment Committee.[11]

Seymour claimed that FIDCO was set up in 1983 to take advantage of financial aid then being offered to Lebanese president Amin Gemayel, aid that helped smooth out drug traffic avenues. Correspondence from former Reagan aide Michael McManus to engineering executive George Pender, both FIDCO board members, and to Gemayel, established the influx of over three billion dollars in money and assets into the Lebanese ruins. According to Seymour, the US Senate Judiciary Committee determined in 1985 that Gemayel's finance minister supervised the importation of Turkish opium into Lebanon, where it was processed into heroin, sent to Italy and eventually exported for sale in the US. A report in High Times named Gemayel's brother as an asset to the CIA.[12] "Of note also is the fact that Bekaa (Valley) in Lebanon later became a center for processing Columbian Cartel cocaine for re-export to European markets."[13] In one proposal for the Octopus manuscript, Casolaro had indeed asserted that the fuel-air explosive Michael Riconosciuto developed on Cabazon land was used in the bomb that killed over three hundred US Marines in Lebanon in October 1983. Could it have been research along these lines that led to his death?

For his part, Ari Ben-Menashe gave Bill Hamilton another hint about Casolaro's company on the night of his death. Ben-Menashe claimed that two FBI agents from Lexington, Kentucky had scheduled a meeting with Casolaro in Martinsburg with proof of the illegal sale of PROMIS to the FBI and Mossad. One of the agents, E. B. Cartinhour, had a grudge about the fact that Reagan teflon had protected administration officials from indictments over the October Surprise. Ridgeway and Vaughan could not get a response from Cartinhour, but a colleague insisted that he had never heard of Casolaro and could not discuss Ben-Menashe because it involved classified information.[14]

Lester Knox Coleman III, the former Defense Intelligence Agency operative who swore in an affidavit about seeing bootleg PROMIS software at Cypriot Police headquarters, had yet another theory. On August 3, Casolaro called him after reading the affidavit and asked if he could help on the Octopus project with more information. That Casolaro could track him so easily impressed Coleman—it actually upset him a bit—so he took the opportunity to strike up a deal. He would tell Casolaro more of what he knew if Casolaro helped him find information on John McCloskey, a divorce lawyer who had recruited him into the DIA. The lawyer had links to the intelligence community and BCCI, and so was ripe for Casolaro's interest as well. The phone call ended with a promise to exchange information.

In nine days, news of Casolaro's death after a meeting with an unknown informant reached Coleman. Was that final meeting with McCloskey? Coleman later discovered that McCloskey owned a horse farm down the road from where Casolaro died, although he had not been seen in the area for a couple of years. When he called McCloskey's telephone number in Martinsburg, he reached the Shenandoah Women's Center and the people there had never heard of McCloskey. Coleman called William Hamilton about his suspicions only to learn about threats Hamilton had received because of PROMIS. The thought of how quickly Casolaro had tracked him added to Coleman's fear that he may be the next target for "sanctions" because of his involvement with the PROMIS affair. He explained as much to Swedish authorities when he petitioned for asylum.[15]

Coleman and Bickell's stories came together in an odd way. Coleman's book also gave the particulars of a sting operation called "Khourah," involving heroin shipments from the Bekaa Valley to the US. Seymour notes that two years previously Michael Riconosciuto tried to trade details of the DEA sting to the FBI.

Notable among Riconosciuto's claims was that the operation's head, DEA man Fred Ghanem, was related to FIDCO participant Maurice Ghanem.[16]

The veracity of these contradictory conspiracy scenarios about Danny Casolaro's death must be measured against attempts by the various authors and characters to associate their research and experience with this famous case. Casolaro primarily worked by phone (Ridgeway and Vaughan noted that his "professional life existed on the telephone"), and the tributaries of his research were labyrinthine. His Octopus metaphor was proved apt before and after his death.

---

1. Ridgeway and Vaughan, "Last Days."

2. One researcher even suggested that Casolaro sent a final pointer to the presence of the Octopus by cutting eight slashes—one for each tentacle—to indicate its involvement in his murder.

3. "Frequent Drinking Marked Writer Casolaro's Final Days," Washington Post, August 25, 1991, A 19.

4. Ridgeway and Vaughan, p. 41.

5. Ridgeway and Vaughan described the authorities in charge of the investigation of Casolaro's death as nothing more than "aggressive, professional suburban public servants." The Com-12 Briefing suggested, however, that "Wackenhut Special Services Teams, along with NSA officials, informed the Martinsburg Police Department that they would secretly conduct the investigation of Casolaro's death and the police were to maintain this cover," and that "Casolaro had received 60 pages of whistle-blowing documentation on a major defense contractor. The material was repossessed that night by the assignment team from NSA and Wackenhut."

6. Ridgeway and Vaughan, "Last Days," p. 42.

7. Russell, Dick, The Man Who Knew Too Much, Carrol & Graf, 1994.

8. Interview with Harry Martin by Kenn Thomas, October 25, 1994.

9. Contact, May 17, 1994.

10. Seymour, Cheri, "Curiosity Killed Freelance Writer," Spotlight, March 20, 1995.

11. Ibid.

12. Weinberg, Bill, "The Syrian Connection," High Times, March 1993.

13. Seymour, Cheri, "Drugs, Politics, Foreign Intrigue," Spotlight, March 27 1995.

14. Ridgeway and Vaughan, "Last Days," p. 42.

15. Goddard, Donald, with Lester Coleman, Trail of the Octopus: From Beirut to Lockerbie, Bloomsbury, London, 1993, pp. 247-251 (326 pp.).

16. Seymour, Cheri, "Massive Government Coverup Exposed," Spotlight, April 3, 1995; the Com-12 Briefing also supports these stories in their broad strokes. See Chapter 15, "The Bombing of Pan Am 103."

CHAPTER 19:

Inslaw and the Law

Danny Casolaro had been pulled under by the Octopus of his imagining or his investigations, perhaps both. In nearby waters, however, other behemoths thrashed about for supremacy in an even larger conspiratorial sea—the law. The legal forces lined up against Inslaw became visible when the Hamiltons discovered that Associate Attorney General D. Lowell Jensen had, as District Attorney in Alameda County, California, promoted DALITE, a rival management software, to fifty-eight county California district attorney offices. Larry Donoghue, the man responsible for selecting software used by the Los Angeles office and later named deputy district attorney for Los Angeles County, recalled that, "Jensen called me into his office and I went away feeling what I regarded to be unusual and significant pressure to select the DALITE system." PROMIS, however, had won the Los Angeles County office and, as Bill Hamilton later remarked, "... evidently Jensen bore a grudge." Hamilton added, "Jensen was promoted to associate Attorney General in May or June of '83—and that's when all the contract disputes came up." Jensen served as chairman of the oversight committee in charge of PROMIS. Additionally, Jensen had served with Ed Meese for twelve years in Alameda County while Meese had been a deputy district attorney. In 1985, Meese promoted Jensen to Deputy Attorney General. Jensen also came under scrutiny during the Senate's Iran-contra investigations when a memo was discovered from him tipping off Oliver North that the federal prosecutors were aware of his actions. This from a Justice Department official charged with prosecuting the matter.[1]

There was no misunderstanding in the government's handling of PROMIS. The government, or at least a particular segment of it, was out to get Inslaw, according to Frank Mallgrave, as quoted in Wired:

> On a gorgeous spring morning in 1981, Lawrence McWhorter, director of the Executive Office for USA attorneys, put his feet on his desk, lit an Italian cigar, eyed his subordinate Frank Mallgrave and said through a haze of blue smoke: "We're out to get Inslaw."
>
> McWhorter had just asked Mallgrave to oversee the pilot installation of PROMIS, a job Mallgrave refused, unaware at the time that he was being asked to participate in Inslaw's deliberate destruction.
>
> "We were just in his office for what I call a BS type discussion," Mallgrave told Wired. "I remember it was a bright sunny morning... (McWhorter) asked me if I would be interested in assuming the position of Assistant Director for Data Processing... basically working with Inslaw. I told him... I just had no interest in that job. And then, almost as an afterthought, he said 'We're out to get Inslaw.' I remember it to this day."[2]

The position eventually went to C. Madison "Brick" Brewer. Bill Hamilton had previously fired Brewer for poor job performance. Hamilton originally thought Brewer's actions against Inslaw were due to Brewer's personal vendetta, but that was before revelations concerning Earl Brian, the October Surprise payoff and the rest of the sordid mess surfaced.[3] The Justice Department determined that no conflict of interest existed for Brewer in his new assignment. Brewer testified in federal court that he received approval from Deputy Attorney General Lowell Jensen, whose vested interest in the rival DALITE software had been damaged by the contract award to Inslaw in the 1970s, for all of his actions regarding Inslaw. Perhaps revenge had transformed Inslaw's contract disputes into a legalistic attempt to trash the company.

Things could never be that simple in Inslaw's case, however. Joined with Brewer's at Justice was Peter Videniecks, the man who, according to Michael Riconosciuto, had threatened him to discourage him from testifying before the House Judiciary Committee. Videniecks had his own incestuous connection to Inslaw: he had worked in the Customs office maintaining its contracts with Earl Brian's Hadron, Inc. systems consulting group. Videniecks and Brewer led Justice to demand that Inslaw turn over PROMIS just in case an alleged impending bankruptcy made it impossible for the company to live up to its contracts. Inslaw agreed, but with the stipulation that Inslaw retain all rights to enhancements to the program and that Justice only provide it to the US Attorney's office. Justice, predictably, reneged, and made no effort to determine the validity of Inslaw's claims of ownership to PROMIS enhancements. The Justice Department began to withhold payments, making Inslaw's subsequent forced march into bankruptcy court a self-fulfilling prophecy, and beginning the process that originally had attracted Casolaro's attention. As Inslaw's problems mounted, Earl Brian's Hadron, Inc. made a play to take over the company through Dominic "We have ways of making you sell" Laiti. Another company, SCT, financed by investment bankers linked to Brian, also attempted a buy-out.

Inslaw ultimately hired Leigh Ratiner of Dickstein, Shapiro and Morin, to file suit against Justice to the tune of $30 million. Ratiner established the bankruptcy court as having jurisdiction in the dispute with the unique argument that Justice had seized control of PROMIS. As Inslaw's creditor, this violated a tenet of the Bankruptcy Act forbidding creditors from controlling the property of debtors.[4] The strategy led to Judge George Bason's favorable ruling for Inslaw in 1987, which also led to Bason's early removal from the bench and, according to Ari Ben-Menashe, possibly also to Leigh Ratiner's early retirement by a pay-off to his law firm.[5] Federal district court judge William Bryant upheld Bason's decision after an appeal by the Justice Department, and the Supreme Court denied review in October 1991. A separate appeals court, however, deciding on an appeal made by the Justice Department, ultimately overturned Bryant on the basis of the jurisdictional argument. A three member panel of judges determined that federal bankruptcy court had no jurisdiction in the case. No judgement was ever issued exonerating the Justice Department from its actions in the Inslaw matter.

Casolaro had given some thought to other legal dimensions of the Inslaw predicament. In undated notes, he made an extensive study of computer software and hardware case law, from the point of view of trade secret protection, trademark protection, contract law and patent law and copyright law. From that perspective, he underlined the concept of "a reverse engineering approach" that he felt was applicable to the legal status of PROMIS. Called the "clean room technique," it is used as a method of avoiding copyright infringement in the developing of software products of similar functions. The clean room uses two teams, one receiving and decompiling the protected work legally and "producing a document setting forth ideas and specifications that are in the unprotected idea domain." The second team takes the document and, with no further communication with team one, creates a new product without infringing on the protected aspect of the original software. Casolaro noted that such reverse engineering had been used by many computer manufacturers to clone Apple and IBM computers. Apple and IBM never pursued legal action against the clean room technique because they feared an unfavorable legal action.[6] Perhaps for similar reasons, the PROMIS problems were never played out in the copyright arena.

During these legal maneuvers, information concerning the illegal distribution of PROMIS on the international market continued to come in. On January 8, 1991, Communications Canada (AKA the Canadian Workplace Automation Research Centre, or CWARC) wrote a letter to Inslaw requesting information on the program, stating that "CWARC is aware that your company's software products are being used in federal departments and agencies." Inslaw, however, had never authorized a Canadian sale of PROMIS. The Hamiltons' daughter Patricia also swore in an affidavit that an official of the Canadian Department of Communications informed her that the RCMP were using PROMIS in 900 offices in Canada.[7]

In November 1992, Bill Hamilton learned the identity of a potential client for PROMIS. A man had come to Hamilton in February 1983, was wowed by the presentation of the software, but never came back to purchase. The customer had identified himself as Dr. Ben Orr. Through a photograph identification, Hamilton discovered that Dr. Ben Orr was the chief of Israel's anti-terrorist intelligence division under Menachem Begin, and director of LAKAM, the scientific intelligence gathering unit of the defense ministry in Israel. He had no doubt been sent by the Justice Department to look at wares promised.[8] Ari Ben-Menashe verified the pseudonym.[9]

On June 9, 1993 two plaintiffs, Brenda James-Soulliere and Virginia Welmas-Nichols, filed a slander suit against enterprises and individuals that had worked to bring one portion of Casolaro's research—the murder and malfeasance among the Cabazons—to a broader audience through broadcast and print media. The court filing described the plaintiffs as members of the Cabazon tribe and residents of Riverside County. The defendants included several well-known researchers, notably Virginia McCullough, Harry Martin and Dave Emory, radio stations KPFK and KFJC, and Dave Emory's tape service, Archives on Audio. The complaint also listed 600 unidentified "Does" as responsible for the slander as well.

Since 1980, Emory had broadcast commentary on the influence of fascism on contemporary life through various radio programs in the San Francisco Bay area. Beginning in April, 1991, Emory began broadcasting some of the earliest and most in-depth reporting about Casolaro, the Cabazons, and the Inslaw scandal. The court filing listed his November 15 and 17, 1992 shows as the offending programs, along with one from November 22, 1993. The November 15 show had featured a discussion with NAPA Sentinel editor Harry Martin about the Cabazon involvement with Wackenhut, the modification of PROMIS, and the development of biological and chemical weapons; the November '93 broadcast included comments by Virginia McCullough regarding the Cabazon/Wackenhut venture, tribal gambling operations, and connections to the mob. Emory made tapes of the program available through his tape service, Archives on Audio.

Several interesting documents surfaced as court exhibits for the trial, including correspondence between John Philip Nichols and Robert Booth Nichols, a long letter from John Nichols detailing weapons research development by Cabazon Arms, and inter-office memoranda from Wackenhut. A defendant's motion for dismissal was granted by the court on October 29, 1993.[10]

Jack Brooks

William Barr.

The first congressional investigation of the Inslaw matter came from the Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations, headed by Sam Nunn. During the course of that inquiry, its chief investigator, Ronald LeGrand, quoted a senior officer at Justice that he refused to name as saying the Inslaw case "was a lot dirtier for the Department of Justice than Watergate had been, both in its breadth and its depth." Although Inslaw lawyer Elliot Richardson later pointed out that LeGrand "now says he and his friend were only discussing rumors," he concurred with the sentiment. Richardson was one of the few people to emerge from the Watergate days as a man of integrity, having lost his job for refusing to fire special prosecutor Archibald Cox at Richard Nixon's direction. Richardson would ultimately call for a special prosecutor for the Inslaw case. "When the Watergate special prosecutor began his inquiry," Richardson remarked, "indications of the President's involvement were not as strong as those that now point to a widespread conspiracy implicating lesser government officials in the theft of Inslaw's technology."[11]

The Nunn Committee issued a report concluding that the Justice Department had victimized Inslaw and, in addition, had intimidated witnesses before the committee—some of them into silence for fear of their jobs; others into being advised by the litigation division before testifying. Justice also refused access to any records whatsoever, a precursor to the treatment the department would give the next inquiry into Inslaw—the House Judiciary Committee, headed by Jack Brooks.[12]

Brooks' committee concluded that "The history of the Department's behavior in the Inslaw case dramatically illustrates its 1. reflexive hostility and 'circle the wagons' approach toward outside investigations; 2. inability or unwillingness to look objectively at charges of wrongdoing by high level Justice officials, particularly when the agency itself is a defendant in litigation; and 3. belligerence toward Justice employees with views that run counter to those of the agency's upper management. The fact that the Department failed to recognize a need for an independent investigation of the Inslaw matter for more than seven years is remarkable. Failure to do so has effectively shielded officials who may have committed wrongdoing from investigation and prosecution."

Despite the stone walling by the Justice Department—in fact, with special mention of it—Brooks' committee reached conclusions favorable to Inslaw. It had reviewed the volume of legal material and history of PROMIS and Inslaw, the Cabazons and Wackenhut, and their relationships to Michael Riconosciuto, Robert Booth Nichols, John Philip Nichols and Earl Brian; the sworn statements of Riconosciuto; the allegations of Ari Ben-Menashe, Charles Hayes, and Lester Coleman; Richardson's 1989 writ of mandamus filing request for independent investigative counsel; and various soft-pedalings and interference by Justice. Although the committee did not include Danny Casolaro's death as part of its formal investigation, it did note the irregular circumstance of his death:

"Mr. Casolaro died on August 10, 1991, and his death was officially ruled a suicide on January 5, 1992, over five months later. The criticism of the investigation of Casolaro's death by the Martinsburg, WV, police center on the following areas: Prior to any coroners' investigation and before his family was notified, Mr. Casolaro's body was embalmed, which may have limited the effectiveness of autopsies or toxicological examinations. Some evidence has also surfaced indicating that immediately following the discovery of the body, the room was not sealed by the Martinsburg authorities, potentially allowing for the contamination of the possible crime scene. Additionally, it was reported that the room in which Mr. Casolaro was found was cleaned before a thorough criminal investigation could be conducted."

The committee took a statement from Richard Stavin about the nature of Casolaro's Octopus research and the involvement of Robert Nichols and John Philip Nichols; and another from FBI field agent Thomas Gates. Gates mentioned that Casolaro's phone book, containing Gates' number had not been located during the police investigation. He also mentioned that Martinsburg police had found "hacking" wounds on Casolaro's arms not consistent with them being self-inflicted. Gates had concluded this was cause to suspect murder.

The House Judiciary Committee reached three conclusions: that the current attorney general, William Barr—who had succeeded Richard Thornburgh the day Casolaro's autopsy report was released—should immediately settle Inslaw's claims in a fair and equitable manner; that Justice department officials with any prior participation in the Inslaw litigation be excluded from further involvement except as needed to supply information to future investigations as needed; and that the Justice Department appoint and independently conduct "a full, open investigation of the Inslaw allegations of a high level conspiracy within the Department to steal enhanced PROMIS software to benefit friends and associates of former Attorney General Meese, including Dr. Earl Brian." Ancillary to this last conclusion was a recommendation for an investigation into Danny Casolaro's death.[13]

Thornburgh had ostensibly regarded the Inslaw affair as a simple contract dispute. Faced with intense criticism from the Justice Department, however, Thornburgh's successor Barr acceded to the request for a special prosecutor. He appointed a retired federal judge, Nicholas J. Bua, in November, 1991. Unfortunately, and despite the tremendous momentum to decide things in a way satisfactory to Inslaw, Bua's report, filed in March 1993 with Janet Reno as attorney general, did to the case's legal standing what had been done to Casolaro.

Incredibly, Bua cleared the Justice Department, the office for which he worked, of wrongdoing in the affair.[14] News of the report did not surface until late May because it was being edited to take out information supposedly relevant to national security.[15] According to Bua, the evidence was not sufficient to support the claim that the Justice Department, specifically Ed Meese and crony Earl Brian, stole PROMIS from the Hamiltons and sold it illegally to police agencies around the world. Bua also apparently complimented Michael Riconosciuto's story-telling abilities ("a historical novel; a tale of total fiction woven against the background of historical facts") but pooh-poohed his contention that he modified the software to give it back door access. Bua also maintained that the removal from the bench of judge George Bason, who had originally ruled in favor of Inslaw, was only a coincidence. According to Bua, Bason had not been re-appointed because he was an inefficient administrator. Bua added two final insults to his list of appalling conclusions: Danny Casolaro had committed suicide and there was no evidence that the Justice Department attempted to influence the investigation of his death.

Not mentioned in the report was the $25 million Bua had offered Elliot Richardson to settle the case—more than triple the amount awarded in the first federal ruling for Inslaw. Bua made the offer in a December 1992 phone call to Richardson and, according to Richardson, they had at least two follow up calls about it.[16]

Bua's report was deficient in many obvious ways, and Inslaw filed a report on July 12, 1993 to point them out. For instance, Bua failed to do a basic code comparison between PROMIS and the software currently being used by the FBI, instead relying on the expertise of a Georgetown University professor that such a comparison would be a waste of time. Bua also was selective in his choice of interviewees from Justice Department who had knowledge of the case, neglecting to talk to them all. The Inslaw rebuttal also maintained that Bua's information on George Bason came in large part from Judge Roger Whelan, the judge from whom administrative problems were inherited by Bason, or so went the House Judiciary Committee Testimony of U. S. District Chief Judge Aubrey Robinson. Whelan at the time also worked for AT&T, an Inslaw creditor.[17]

The July 12 rebuttal contained eighty pages and ten attachments, expanding the particulars and adding to the documentation perhaps more than any other legal document,[18] especially factoring in the twenty-nine page addendum Inslaw released on February 14, 1994. The last items in this chapter highlight some of its many revelations.

Robert Maxwell

> [Robert] Maxwell's role as a cutout for a foreign nation's sale of computer software has been implicitly acknowledged by the actions of the FBI. Robert Maxwell's dissemination of computer software was the subject of an FBI foreign counterintelligence investigation in 1984. Ten years later, in January 1994, Inslaw obtained, under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), eighteen pages relating to an investigation on this subject in New Mexico in June 1984. The FBI furnished the documents to Inslaw in response to a FOIA request for documents relating to Maxwell's involvement in the 'dissemination, marketing or sale of computer software systems, including but not limited to the PROMIS computer software product, between 1983 and 1992.' The FBI heavily redacted the eighteen pages and ascribed the redactions to the secrecy requirements of national security. One month before the FBI released the documents to Inslaw, it partially reclassified two of the pages that had been officially declassified in their entirety one year earlier. The FBU redacted the newly reclassified portions in the copies given to Inslaw.
>
> Robert Maxwell also developed a business relationship during the latter half of the 1980s with two computer systems executives from the Meese Justice Department, at least one of whom had responsibilities relating to the proprietary version of PROMIS. Robert Maxwell set up a tiny publishing company in McLean, Virginia, in August 1985. That company then hired two senior computing systems executives from a unit of the Meese Justice Department that operated the proprietary version of PROMIS. One was the Director of the Justice Data Center, the Justice Department's own internal computer time-sharing facility where the proprietary IBM version of PROMIS was operating for one of the legal divisions under license from Inslaw. the Director of the Justice Data Center resigned his estimated $90,000-a-year Senior Executive Service position to become Vice President for Technical Services at the six-employee start-up national defense company owned by Robert Maxwell.

Submarines

The Navy confirmed to a reporter for Navy Times that it has a PROMIS software system and that it operates its PROMIS on a VAX computer in support of its nuclear submarines. The Navy's Undersea Systems Center in Portsmouth, Rhode Island, furthermore, notified the reporter in writing that its engineers had locally developed this VAX version of PROMIS; that its PROMIS is installed only at its land-based facility at Newport, Rhode Island; and that its PROMIS has never been installed on board any nuclear submarine. Inslaw has, however, obtained a document published by the same Undersea Systems Center in 1987 that reveals its PROMIS is not only operating at the land-based 'test facility' in Newport, but it is also operational on board both attack class and 'boomer' class submarines. The Navy, like the CIA and the NSA, clearly has difficulty in giving a credible accounting of its PROMIS software.

Danny Casolaro

According to written statements of which Inslaw has obtained copies, another undeclared mission of the Justice Department's covert agents was to insure that investigative journalist Danny Casolaro remained silent about the role of the Justice Department in the Inslaw scandal by murdering him in West Virginia in August 1991. Inslaw has acquired copies of two relevant written statements furnished to a veteran investigative journalist by a national security operative of the US government, several months after Casolaro's death. The individual who reportedly transmitted these written statements to the journalist by fax has testified under oath to being a national security operative for the FBI and CIA. Partial corroboration for his claimed work for the FBI is reportedly available in the sworn testimony of several FBI agents during a recent criminal prosecution. One statement purportedly reflects the operative's personal knowledge and belief that Casolaro was killed by agents of the Justice Department and is allegedly written in the operative's own hand. The other statement is an excerpt from a typewritten set of questions and answers. The questions were posed to a senior CIA official by the investigative journalist; the answers, purportedly from the senior CIA official, were reportedly sent by fax to the journalist by the national security operative, who was acting as an intermediary. The following is the pertinent questions and answer:

> Q: Do you have any information for [San Francisco-based investigative journalist] George Williamson yet regarding the Danny Casolaro matter?*
>
> A: Yes. Casolaro appears to have been working as a freelance writer at the time of his death and was gathering material for a book. He was investigating the Inslaw case. He was on the trail of information that could have made the whole matter public and led to exposure of the Justice Department and their involvement in the matter. Apparently he was very close to obtaining that information.

> We do not agree with the consensus of opinion among the reporters who looked into this matter, that Casolaro committed suicide. Casolaro was murdered by agents of the Justice department to insure his silence. The entire matter was handled internally by Justice, and our agency was not involved.[19]

---

1. Mahar, Maggie, "What Really Sparked the Vendetta Against Inslaw?," Barron's National Business and Financial Weekly, April 4, 1988.

2. Fricker, Richard L., "The Inslaw Octopus," Wired 1.1, Premiere Issue, 1993, p 80.

3. Richardson, Elliot, L., "A High-Tech Watergate," New York Times, October 21, 1991.

4. Fricker, p. 101.

5. Ben-Menashe, Profits of War, p. 141.

6. Casolaro's notes.

7. Martin, Harry V., "Canadians Begin Probe On Pirated Software From Justice Department," NAPA Sentinel, April 12, 1991.

8. Wired, p. 77.

9. Bleifuss, Joel, "The Inslaw Affair Continued," In These Times, December 14, 1992.

10. Brenda James-Soulliere and Virginia Welmas-Nichols, Plaintiffs v. KPFK, Archives on Audio, A California Business Organization, Dave Emory, An Individual, Harry Martin, An Individual, KFJC, A California Corporation, Virginia McCullough, An Individual, and Does 1 through 600, Inclusive, Defendants, Los Angeles Superior Court, June 9, 1993.

On other broadcasts, Emory outlined a larger context for the "October Surprise," and thereby Earl Brian's involvement with the PROMIS software. In the 1995 Archives on Audio catalog (POB 170023, San Francisco, CA 94117-0023), Emory explained that, "by 1976, George Bush's CIA was actively supporting and grooming the Khomeini forces. The subsequent takeover of the US embassy in Teheran, the withholding of the US hostages until after President Carter's defeat was assured, the Khomeini government itself and the Iran-contra scandal proper were all outgrowths of this profound and long-standing relationship. It should be noted that parts of this relationship have been misunderstood as what has become known as the 'October Surprise.' Although there was massive collusion between the Reagan-Bush campaign and the Khomeini forces during the 1980 election campaign, there was no 'deal' cut during the campaign. Rather, the 'deal' was part of a covert operation begun years before and the collusion during the campaign was an outgrowth of it."

11. Richardson.

12. Martin, Harry V., "Federal Corruption," Napa Sentinel, March 12, 1991.

13. The Inslaw Affair, Investigative Report By The Committee On The Judiciary, 102nd Congress, 2nd Session, House Report 102-857, U. S. Government Printing Office, Washington, September 10, 1992.

14. Frievogel, William and Casmier, Stephen, St. Louis Post-Dispatch, June 18, 1993

15. Washington Post, May 29, 1993.

16. Bleifuss, Joel, "Inslaw Breakers," In These Times, August 9, 1993.

17. Bleifuss, p. 12.

18. Richardson, Elliot L., et. al., Inslaw's Analysis and Rebuttal of the Bua Report, July 12, 1993.

19. Richardson, Elliot L., et. al., Addendum to Inslaw's Analysis and Rebuttal of the Bua Report, February 14, 1994.

At the funeral: Danny Casolaro's sister Linda (far left), Friend Wendy Weaver, brother John, mother Frances and brother Tony.

Close family and friends attended Danny Casolaro's funeral service: his mom, Frances; his brothers, Tony and John; sister Linda; and girlfriend Wendy Weaver. All of them were no doubt preoccupied with their grief and with the unsettled question of his murder or suicide. Maybe they even thought of the dozens of questions Danny had raised about complex conspiracies and mysterious people.

None of them, however, recognized two other figures in attendance: a man in a tan overcoat and an African-American in Army uniform and regalia. As the casket was lowered into the earth, the soldier placed a medal on it and gave a salute. Then both strangers left in a hurry. Since Danny had never served in the military and never researched or wrote about it, his life had wrought one final mystery.[1]

---

[1] Ridgeway and Vaughan, "Last Days"; Bischoff, Dan, "One More Dead Man," Village Voice, August 27, 1991; Danny's cousin, Jim Gualteri pointed out that the family made a videotape of the funeral, but he could not track it down.

CHAPTER 20:

Whitewater Currents

Octopus tentacles arose briefly from under the relatively calm waters of a new administration's first year in office. Danny Casolaro had been dead for two years and the key players in the investigation he began had ostensibly left power after the 1992 election.

Columnist William Safire reported that Bill Clinton and George Bush struck a secret deal after Clinton's election that the former president would withhold criticism of the new administration for one year in exchange for Clinton's soft-pedaling of the Iran-contra investigations.[1] A month before the end of that deal, a month before the former Arkansas governor's first anniversary as president, the Clinton administration reopened the Inslaw investigation. In December 1993, the FBI began again to interview Casolaro's close associates and friends with an eye toward resolving the question of his death—was it a suicide or murder?

Under the new administration, the FBI was not satisfied with the determination of Judge Bua's report. It was still concerned with "Danny's state of mind at the time of his death," Casolaro girlfriend Wendy Weaver told the San Francisco Chronicle. "They said they were going to interview all these people and then bring the findings back to their experts to determine if he was suicidal... I told them I thought it was murder."[2] Press reports were silent as to why the case was being reopened at this time; indeed, few papers other than the Chronicle reported on it at all. Only the dim political purpose of the coming end to Bush's year of silence even suggested an answer. Did the new administration take interest in this high profile case, touching as it did on the intelligence backgrounds of prominent Republican personalities, as protection against Clinton-bashing from the Bush camp? Or was there more to it?

The review of the case had been ordered by Associate Attorney General Webster "Webb" Hubbell, then the third-ranking official at the Justice Department (seen by some as the Department's de facto head), a Clinton family friend. In noting that Hubbell had been assigned to review the Inslaw case, long-time Washington watcher Sarah McClendon also noted that Casolaro had maintained that additional details about the Inslaw relationship with the Justice Department could be had from employees in the office of Senator Robert Byrd.[3] McClendon affirmed Casolaro's story that he had scheduled an interview with these employees for the Friday preceding his death. Senator Byrd's chief of staff was the wife of Peter Videniecks, contracting officer at the Justice Department during the Inslaw period. McClendon quoted Bill Turner as saying that Casolaro told him that he planned to meet with two members of Robert Byrd's staff. McClendon also noted the Hamilton's complaints that Hubbell and FBI investigator Scott Erskine had plans to release a report without having talked to important Casolaro associates or investigating curious incidents, including a threat against Casolaro made by a friend of Videnieks, Joseph Cuellar, who apparently was also trailing the writer.[4]

Hubbell himself had already been connected to the Inslaw case through the confessions of Danger Man. In April, 1992, Michael Riconosciuto told Village Voice's Frank Snepp of the link between guns-and-drugs operations at an airstrip in Mena, Arkansas—a story that already loomed as a major Clinton-era scandal because of Clinton's failure to investigate the situation as governor[5]—and Park-On-Meter (POM), a parking meter manufacturer in Russellville, Arkansas, that figured prominently in making Webb Hubbell one of the early victims of another Clinton debacle, the Whitewater affair.[6] Riconosciuto claimed to have worked with Terry Reed, the Mena pilot whose revelations first brought the Oliver North-styled smuggling operation to national attention.

Riconosciuto also told Mark Swaney, the head of a University of Arkansas student group responsible for a petition drive to investigate Mena, that he had been involved in developing chemical and biological weapons in a project connected to POM—apparently never explicitly that this was also connected to the work he did on Cabazon tribal lands—and that the company also manufactured external fuel tanks for C-130 transport planes. Riconosciuto had already confided to Alexander Cockburn that he had supervised high-tech equipment transfers and developed software to help launder money at Mena[7] and explained that POM, in conjunction with the infamous Wackenhut and Stormont Labs in Woodland, California, began production of the delivery system for the new chemical and bio warfare weaponry for use in the contra war in 1983. Long-range transport missions require the use of external fuel tanks, but again Riconosciuto was not explicit in connecting this with his tales of space aliens or the bizarre aircraft at Area 51 that had attracted Casolaro's attention.[8]

Riconosciuto told Cockburn that Park-On-Meter made the tanks for unconventional guerilla warfare against the contras. POM was to receive chemical agents from the 354th Chemical Company of the Army Reserve, located on property across from the barn housing the POM facilities, for use in explosive devices made with the same equipment POM used to produce parking meters.[9]

Stormont Labs acknowledged only discussions with Wackenhut regarding biological weapons, and Wackenhut denied working with POM. POM president, Seth "Skeeter" Ward III, also Webster Hubbell's brother-in-law, admitted that the company had some Pentagon contracts, but only for "re-entry nose cones for the nuclear warheads on the MX missile and nozzles for rocket engines," not chemical or biological weapons delivery systems, although he confessed to not knowing what kind of aircraft parts POM made for one of its contracts with McDonnell Douglas.[10] Ward also denied another central charge made by Danger Man: that POM received the first industrial development loan made by the Arkansas Development Finance Authority (ADFA), a controversial state authority co-written by Webster Hubbell in 1985. Bill Clinton appointed every member of the ADFA's governing board and was required to approve its every bond issue, apparently with no other legislative means of guaranteeing that the money would be spent as intended.

The ADFA primarily served two masters: the Stephens, Inc., investment bank that received seventy-eight percent of ADFA's underwriting fees and sales of housing and industrial bonds (Clinton had appointed two Stephens associates to the ADFA board);[11] and Clinton crony Dan Lasater, whose Lasater and Company firm underwrote $664 million in municipal bond issues after the creation of the ADFA.[12] Lasater was a party animal renowned for cocaine soirees at his Arkansas mansion, who claimed to have paid off drug debts of the President's brother Roger. Even after a police investigation of Lasater in 1985 for drugs, Clinton approved a $30.2 million bond issue to overhaul the state police radio system. In 1986, Lasater was sentenced to thirty months in prison for the distribution of cocaine (Roger Clinton was an unindicted co-conspirator) and was pardoned for it by Clinton. He remained connected to the White House through White House official Patsy Thomasson, manager of Lasater and Company, while Lasater was in jail. In this murky financial atmosphere, and despite Ward's denials, it is probable that the ADFA did issue one of its first bond issues to POM—with Clinton's required approval.

Mena did not provide the only evidence that the Octopus swam in Whitewater currents, however. Its tentacles also stretched toward the most infamous scandal of the Clinton era: the Vincent Foster death. POM's admitted jobs for the Pentagon and the funny finances of the ADFA remained obscure for the most part in the media. Webster Hubbell's representation of POM became the official reason for his resignation from Clinton's Justice Department, one month after his reopening of the Inslaw investigation. The Rose Law Firm declared that Hubbell had failed to provide documentation for expenses he had charged to the firm and that POM lost $1 million in litigation expenses when Hubbell unsuccessfully pursued a patent infringement case he took on a contingency basis for his brother-in-law "Skeeter" Ward. "Unfortunately, because of public speculation about me and my former law firm," Hubbell said in his resignation letter, "I will have to spend a significant amount of time on an internal matter with my former partners."[13]

In addition to bringing POM out of the Washington spotlight, the resignation shielded Hubbell from other accusations regarding the Whitewater Development Corporation real estate investments. Specifically, Hubbell served on the Resolution Trust Corporation during its takeover of the Madison Savings and Loan, owned by Whitewater partner James McDougal and previously represented by Hubbell. Hubbell failed to inform the RTC of the potential conflict.[14] Unofficially, Hubbell was the second victim of Whitewater, following White House counsel Bernard Nussbaum's forced resignation for questionable meetings with federal regulators looking into the Whitewater Development Corporation real estate investments. Nussbaum had been responsible for removing Whitewater files and a diary from the office of White House aide Vincent Foster less than three hours after Foster's death from a gunshot wound. He was accompanied on that visit by Patsy Thomasson. Foster's last weekend had been spent in the company of Webster Hubbell, his wife and another couple—White House counsel Michael Cardozo and his wife. Hubbell joined the group in Maryland after leaving the meeting that informed William Sessions of his dismissal as FBI director. After returning from a Hawaiian vacation, Bill Clinton spent the weekend in Arkansas dining with David Edwards, a former Stephens Inc. employee and conduit for $23 million from the king of Saudi Arabia for the Middle Eastern studies program at the University of Arkansas. Clinton had one last twenty minute conversation with Foster the Monday night before his death.[15] Oddly, one of Foster's last phone conversations on the morning of his death was with Brantley Buck, the Rose Law Firm partner assigned to investigate Webster Hubbell and POM.[16]

In 1995, new suspicions arose concerning the use of PROMIS in the world banking system. One post on the Internet charged (or, rather, sarcastically reported the "false" charge) that Systematics, a subsidiary of Alltech Corporation comprised of Systematics Financial Services Inc., Systematics Information Services Inc. of Little Rock, Arkansas, and Systematics Telecommunications Services Inc. of Dallas, Pennsylvania, had modified the PROMIS software for sale to private banks, with the attendant back-doors to allow the NSA to spy on banking operations. The post went on to charge that Webster Hubbell had "helped work out strategies to use Systematics software to spy on commercial and central banks." The anonymous source encouraged Internet readers to verify the charge (or "the utter falsehood of these malicious lies"), and attached a long list of bank and financial service addresses, executive names and capsule histories of their conversion to Systematics software, replete with citations in American Banker.[17]

The Systematics information and Vince Foster's last weekend with Webster Hubbell and Michael Cordoza came together to float the last odd rumors about the PROMIS program. Instead of the recreational affair it was described as during the Congressional Whitewater hearings, the source of this new speculation suggested that the Clinton cronies met to plot damage control over a burgeoning scandal involving PROMIS. Nearly $3 billion had been emptied out of Swiss bank accounts belonging to dozens of high-powered political types—both Democrats and Republicans—by a CIA faction known during this period as "the Fifth Column." The Fifth Column group served as expert hackers, collecting routine foreign intelligence data, presumably through the PROMIS back-door, when they encountered Vince Foster's name in the Mossad system. From there, they tracked Foster's bank trail to the Banca Della Svizzera Italiana, a small Italian border bank, where the Israelis deposited $2.73 million. The rumors only speculated about what Foster gave the Israelis: high level intelligence information; encryption codes; data on black operations subcontractors—he was dead before it could be figured out. Whatever it was, the Fifth Column tipped its hand to Foster that he was under investigation by removing the money, although according to the story his was not the only account raided. Making another apparently regular one-day trips to Geneva, Foster discovered the missing money, and later perhaps someone mentioned to him that he was under investigation for espionage, and thereafter he became suicidal.[18]

---

1. Safire, William, "No Wonder Bush Is Quiet About Clinton," Houston Chronicle, September 10, 1993.

2. Taylor, Michael and Littman, Jonathan, "Death of Conspiracy Investigator Probed," San Francisco Chronicle, February 12, 1994.

3. Sarah McClendon's Washington Report, January 6, 1994.

4. McClendon.

5. The Mena story begins with a drug dealer named Barry Seal who apparently began smuggling drugs through the airstrip in 1982. The operation continued past Seal's 1984 drug conviction in Miami. As Seal began working deals with the Drug Enforcement Agency and Ollie North's network after that conviction—trading undercover work against the Sandinistas for leniency—a second wave of questionable businesses descended upon Mena. These businesses described themselves variously as aircraft and parts delivery services, but stories of drug traffic continued.

In 1989, new allegations were made by a former investigator for the US military, Gene Wheaton, that the airfield was also used for commando training. The Arkansas state police investigated and reported to the US attorney, but expected indictments were never returned, leading to the suspicion that the Reagan administration could add one more small cover-up to its tally. Apparently, Bill Clinton did not become involved with the story until a pair of students at the University of Arkansas—Mark Swaney and Tom Brown—appealed directly to their then-governor to investigate. The appeal, and another call for a state grand jury from Arkansas' deputy state prosecuting attorney, was stone walled. When Arkansas representative Bill Alexander met with Governor Clinton, he was told that $25,000 in state money had been set aside to investigate Mena. The amount was too slight for an effective investigation but even that was never delivered. The prosecuting attorney in Mena's Polk County at the time said he never received the offer from the then-governor's office.

The IRS began an investigation of Barry Seals' operation in Mena after Seal was murdered in Baton Rouge, Louisiana by Columbian drug traffickers, but according to Bill Duncan, a former IRS investigator, the investigators were warned off, causing Duncan to quit and testify before a House committee about all he had learned of money laundering, covert operations and drug smuggling in Mena.

The claim that Clinton was remiss in not investigating Mena was first made public by Larry Nichols in a defamation suit against the governor. Clinton had hired Nichols as marketing director for the Arkansas Development Finance Authority but fired him when his alleged contacts with the contras became too apparent, citing the charge that Nichols had made unauthorized phone calls to Central America as a reason for the firing. In Nichols' subsequent lawsuit contesting that charge, he also first publicized the claims of Gennifer Flowers.

The court case of Terry Reed also added much to the Mena story. In 1988, Reed was charged with postal fraud for receiving insurance money on a false claim. Reed claimed that his airplane had been stolen as part of an Ollie North-styled project called "Project Donation," wherein "donations" to the contra cause were filed as lost or stolen with insurance companies and then reimbursed. According to Reed, he had no awareness of "Project Donation" at the time of his plane's disappearance, and so reported it as a legitimate loss. The plane reappeared after Reed learned of the Donation project and warned his contacts in the Ollie North network that he would have no part of it. Reed told his story with co-author John Cummings in Compromised: Clinton, Bush and the CIA, published by SPI Books/Shapolsky.

The person who first reported the discovery of what turned out to be Reed's plane to the National Crime Information Center was Raymond L. "Buddy" Young, then working for Bill Clinton as security chief and since chosen by Clinton to head the Dallas regional office of the Federal Emergency Management Agency. Federal Judge Frank Theis later said that Young and an associate "acted with reckless disregard for the truth" in their version of how they came to realize the plane was not stolen. Charges against Reed were dropped.

6. Snepp, Frank, "Clinton and the Smuggler's Airport," Village Voice, April 14, 1992.

7. Cockburn, Alexander, "Meters and Mortars," New Statesman, March 27, 1992.

8. In "The Crimes of Mena," an article published in the July 1995 issue of Penthouse, authors Sally Denton and Roger Morris report that logs found in the plane flown by Eugene Hasenfus—shot down over Nicaragua in October 1986, beginning the Iran-contra scandal—linked it to Area 51. The plane was owned by Barry Seal. The Denton/Morris article does much to document the Mena episode. It was commissioned and later rejected by the Washington Post.

9. Cockburn.

10. Cockburn.

11. Davis, L. J., "The Name of the Rose," The New Republic, April 4, 1994.

12. "The Lasater Affair, Ghosts of Carelessness Past," The Economist, May 7, 1994.

13. Davis.

14. Davidson, Joe, "Hubbell Resigns Key Justice Post In Surprise Move," Wall Street Journal, March 15, 1994.

15. "The Foster Death," Washington Post, January 14, 1994.

16. Isikoff, Michael, "Conspiracy Theorists Find Foster Case Hard To Resist," Washington Post, March 13, 1994.

17. Grabbe, J. Orlin, "Allegations Regarding Vince Foster, the NSA and Banking Transactions," published on the Internet and via fax network, March 1995.

18. Norman, James, R., "Fostergate," Media Bypass, Vol. 3, #8, August 1995. Additional details for this particular addenda to the PROMIS story appeared in The Spotlight, August 7, 1995 edition, which printed a contemporaneous transcript of an interview with James Norman on Tom Valentine's Radio Free America program. The transcript was posted to Brian Redman's Conspiracy Nation electronic newsletter (bigxc@prairienet.org), August 2, 1995.

By August, 1993, Danny Casolaro had been dead for two years. A man named Gary Eitel testified before a Congressional committee headed by Rep. Charles Rose (D-NC), which examined the misuse of an "historic aircraft exchange program."

As early as 1991, Eitel learned that private air-cargo companies that contracted with the US Forest Service were using aircraft intended for firefighting duty on unauthorized overseas missions, some allegedly for the CIA. The mastermind of this scheme was a former Air Force pilot named Roy Reagan. After leaving the service, Reagan made a career brokering aircraft deals, and one former military C-130 he had brokered later crashed and burned on a CIA mission in Angola.

In an interview with the Portland Free Press, Gary Eitel described his May 23 deposition in federal court as more like an interrogation. Present were an obviously hostile group of powerful attorneys, including Stuart M. Gerson, appointed to the Justice Department by George Bush. Gerson was held over as acting Attorney General in the early Clinton Administration, and later represented defendant Roy Reagan.

As Mr. Eitel prepared to testify before Rep. Rose's congressional committee, a shocking and suspicious turn of events occurred. Eitel's friend and associate from T&G Aviation, Jack Chisum, was run down and killed by an automobile while walking along a roadside.

As the May 23 deposition progressed in federal court, attorneys for the companies made repeated references to the fate of Jack Chisum, and clearly made attempts to reveal Mr. Eitel's unlisted home address.

Under questioning by former acting US Attorney General, Stuart Gerson, Mr. Eitel discussed the fact that public service aircraft require no certification, when Gerson suddenly blurted out a totally unrelated question: "Do you know who killed Danny Casolaro?"

Apparently, Gerson believed that Casolaro was murdered. Mr. Eitel believed that Gerson's totally incongruous question was a direct threat.[1]

---

[1] Titus, John, "CIA Airlines Never Die," Portland Free Press, July/August 1995, pp. 4–5.

CHAPTER 21:

Diana

August 31, 1997: intoxicated to some degree with alcohol, Prozac and the sedative Tiapridal, chauffeur Henri Paul took two famous charges, Dodi Al Fayed and Diana, Princess of Wales, on a ride into the Pont D'Alma tunnel underneath the streets of Paris. The only person in the S280 Mercedes sedan to emerge alive from the other end of the tunnel was the accompanying bodyguard, Trevor Rees-Jones. The sedan had passed a white Fiat and, after a blinding flash,[1] it crashed into a concrete tunnel pillar at somewhere between 90 and 110 miles per hour. The car ricocheted and then smashed into the opposite tunnel wall. Paul and the 42-year-old Dodi Al Fayad died instantly. Paramedics gave 34-year-old Diana a blood transfusion at the scene, but her heart stopped in the ambulance en route to the hospital and she died four hours after the crash.

Diana's death made an impact in world history similar only to the Kennedy assassination, which occurred in the year of Diana's birth. Just like that event, the details of how she died became a matter of great debate and conspiratorial theorizing.[2] Just as JFK's death was officially investigated and declared the result of a single gunman acting alone, the official investigation of Diana's death concluded that it was a simple automobile accident. And just as with JFK, a preponderance of unlikely coincidences and unanswered questions left many people suspicious that the crash in the Pont D'Alma tunnel was an orchestrated assassination, done for the sake of keeping Diana from pursuing her relationship with Dodi Al Fayad, an Egyptian, a Muslim and the son of powerful businessman, Mohamed Al Fayed.[3] Some even suggested that Diana was pregnant with Dodi Al Fayed's child at the time of her death.

While such speculation has become not at all unusual in the affairs of public figures, underneath the layers of various competing theories about the death of Diana lie facts, rumors and arcane connections that relate it directly to

Danny Casolaro's Octopus research. Three years after Diana's still unsettled death, which occurred six years after Casolaro's, the disaster in the Pont D'Alma tunnel brought the story of the Octopus, PROMIS software, and Casolaro's world of Iran-contra spies, arms merchants and corrupt politicos back in the news. As noted, the shadowy presence of Adnan Khashoggi once again emerged in the background of Diana's death. Khashoggi was Dodi Fayed's uncle and a well-known broker of military hardware deals involving Saudi Arabia stretching back to the 1970s.[4] Recall that Casolaro had only days left to live when he took his friend Ben Mason down into his basement and proudly showed him several photocopied pages documenting contra arms transfers involving Khashoggi and a partner, Manucher Ghorbanifar, as well as the copies of BCCI checks drawn on Khashoggi's accounts. Mason later reported that Casolaro was elated over a source he was about to meet in West Virginia, someone Casolaro described to Virginia McCullough as being involved in guns-and-drugs transfers. And, of course, Casolaro had told his fellow hotel guest, Mike Looney, that he was meeting with an Arab.

No one has suggested that Casolaro planned to meet Khashoggi or even a compatriot, but he was investigating Iran-contra arms dealings and he did place great importance on that final meeting, and called it something that would wrap up his Octopus research. As with all of his research, however, this tributary led to others involving Octopus entanglements beyond Iran-contra and beyond PROMIS and Inslaw. Casolaro's focus on the Khashoggi documents almost certainly involved knowledge of Khashoggi's April 1986 meeting with Tony Rowland, Australian tycoon, publisher of The Observer newspaper and an adversary of Mohammad Al Fayed's attempt to gain British citizenship.[5] Khashoggi, Gorbanifar and journalist/Israeli foreign adviser Amiram Nir attempted to persuade Rowland to join the Iran-contra effort by helping sell arms to Iran. The attempted alliance bogged down after the meeting, when Rowland inquired into US circles about covert support for such an effort. It seems very likely that Casolaro knew about this alliance between Dodi Fayed's maternal uncle, Khashoggi, and his father's bitter enemy, Rowland. The deeper significance, of course, became clear after Casolaro's death, and after Diana's.[6]

Although Casolaro had apparently wrapped up, or was going to wrap up after that final meeting, his research into Iran-contra, he no doubt also took a strong interest in possible Octopus involvement in other covert arms deals involving Khashoggi. That was no small list. It included such little and well known brouhahas in the world of international arms traffic as the Petromonde scandal, the Litton scandal, the Westland Scandal, the Lockheed scandal, the Northrop scandal, the Lina Al-Bassam scandal and, most importantly, the corruption involving the Al Yamamah contracts and Iran-contra.

The amount of attention and detail Casolaro brought to all this parahistory remains lost in the accordion file that disappeared at his death. Adnan Khashoggi's role in the Northrop scandal of the early 1970s was well known to him, however. In 1972 and 1973 Khashoggi had served as the middle man in corruption pay-offs ("commissions" for various arms-deals, often involving the sale of sub-standard equipment to the Saudis) by the aerospace firm Northrop to the head of the Saudi Air Force, General Hashim M. Hashim and to his successor, General Asad Zuhair. Northrop, which also made illegal campaign contributions to Richard Nixon, paid Saudi prince Khaled bin Abdullah over $500,000 in bribes, after Abdullah's public complaint that "If I get nothing, then I will make sure Adnan gets nothing." A Security Exchange Commission investigation of the situation led only to Northrop's signing a pledge to no longer conceal the bribes.

The Saudi royal family outlawed the commissions, but with laws that were ill-defined and never enforced. Extra-contractual "commission" payments continued to maintain the wealth of the Saudi royals. Khashoggi continued as the sole House of Saud contact for arms dealers, through a front company incorporated in Luxembourg, Triad America Corporation, with funds Northrop deposited into a Swiss bank for Khashoggi, who continued to funnel much of it to the Saudi royals. Although the Northrop deal eventually did fall apart, Khashoggi continued to use his connections to King Fahd and Prince Sultan to broker arms deals.[7]

Not the least of these deals was the Al Yamamah contract umbrella, a central contractual arrangement signed in Riyadh in February 1986, that supported both the British aerospace industry and the corrupt wealth of the Saudi royal family. Through this series of contracts, the Saudis turned over oil to the Bank of England, which allowed for its sale through Shell Oil and British petroleum. Profits from that were turned over to the UK's defense ministry, which paid the British Aerospace corporation when it provided military hardware to Saudi Arabia. Like the Northrop arrangements, the Al Yamamah umbrella comes replete with "commissions" and bribes, and involves the delivery of substandard military hardware.[8]

In a search for justice in what he regarded as the murder of his son and Princess Diana, Mohammad Al Fayed returned to the history and speculation about the multinational Octopus cabal. In the early fall of 2000, Al Fayed filed a Freedom of Information Act suit against the CIA and several other US intelligence services. He declared his intent to recover documents originally surfaced by a self-proclaimed CIA agent named Oswald LeWinter. LeWinter previously had tried to sell documents to an Al Fayed cohort in Austria, documents purportedly implicating the British government in the Diana crash. LeWinter was arrested as a fraud, however, and sentenced in Vienna to four years in 1998.

LeWinter apparently still holds to the authenticity of the doucments, stating that "I had a choice at my arrest to identify the documents as genuine or as fakes. If I said genuine, I would face charges in the US of high treason ... so I said they were forgeries and was arrested for fraud."

Only one of LeWinter's documents surfaced in the British press after being seized by police in Vienna, the document below.

DOMESTIC COLLECTION DIVISION
Foreign Intelligence Information Report
Directorate of Intelligence

WARNING NOTICE—INTELLIGENCE SOURCES AND METHODS INVOLVED FURTHER DISSEMINATION AND USE OF THE INFORMATION SUBJECT TO CONTROLS STATED IN BEGINNING AND END OF REPORT

REPORT CLASS: TOP SECRET
REPORT NO: 00.D 831/173466-97
COUNTRY: France
DATE DISTR: 17 June 1997
SUBJECT: File Overview: Diana Princess of Wales-Dodi
REFERENCES DCI Case 64376
SOURCE: CASParis/CASLondon/COSGeneva/CASKingston/ UK citizen Ken Etheridge.

1. Relationship initiated between Diana POW and Dodi aF according to reliable intel sources in November 1996. Intimacy begins shortly after they meet. (Report filed)

2. Reliable source reports Palace seriously disturbed by liaison. PM considers any al Fayed relationship politically disastrous. Edinburgh sees serious threat to dynasty should relationship endure. Quote reported: "Such an affair is racially and morally repugnant and no son of a bedouin camel trader is fit for the mother of a future king," Edinburgh. (Report filed)

3. Request from highest circles to DEA attache UK for 6 on Dodi re: Cocaine. See file forwarded to UK embassy DC. (Copy filed)

4. US liaison to MI6 requested by David Spedding for assistance in providing permanent solution to Dodi problem. Blessing of the Palace secured. (Twiz filed)

5. WHuse denies Spedding request. Harrison authorized only to arrange meeting for MI6 representative with K-Team Geneva. (Twiz on file)

6. Meeting in Geneva reportedly successful. (Report filed)

> 7. Al Fayed Mercedes Limo stolen and returned with electronics missing. Reliable intel source confirms K-Team involved. Source reports car rebuilt to respond to external radio controls. (Report filed.)"[9]

Writer Rayelan Allan[10] made the following correlation between the LeWinter document and many of the figures Casloaro had followed as part of the Octopus involvement in Iran-contra:

The connection between Al Fayed and the Iran/contra scandal was difficult to prove, but Richard Taus, former FBI agent states that Al Fayed and Khashoggi were connected to the Iran/contra scandal through Castle Securities. Castle Securities was formerly Drexel Company, which was connected to Drexel, Burnham, Lambert and the junk bonds scandal. Taus states that many people who were involved in Castle Securities part of a group out of Freeport, Long Island known as the K-Team. Most if not all K-Team members were part of the Iran/contra scandal. Taus reported that the K-Team was a CIA operation which included many infamous names such as Oliver North, Admiral John Poindexter, Richard Secord, and Adnan Khashoggi...

Lord Earl Spencer (Diana's father) was the best friend of Adnan Khashoggi's brother-in-law, Mohammad Al Fayed. Al Fayed was connected to the K-Team and its enterprises through Castle Securities. The ten year friendship between Lord Spencer and Al Fayed eventually lad to the introduction of Al Fayed's 40-year-old son, Emad 'Dodi' Fayed, to Princess Diana. Mohammad El Fayed and Adnan Khashoggi had been connected to the K-team through their business deals. The K-team was/is made up of CIA operatives who were/are members of Faction 1—the New World Order, and Faction 2—the opposition to the NWO. Al Fayed and Khashoggi were connected to the men who make up Faction 2.[11]

The idea of the factional split in the global police intelligence community had a long life in the Casolaro saga. Danger Man Riconosciuto previously maintained that two factions, COM-12 and Aquarius, had leaked information to Casolaro in order to embarass and manipulate each other.

As the accumulation of rumor and speculation continued to move Diana and the Octopus closer together in the thinking of conspiracy students, Riconsociuto emerged again to make a connecting link. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police, key players in the original tale of the PROMIS software piracy, reopened its investigation into the affair in 1999/2000 when it conducted a series of interviews with a former stockbroker in Ontario named John Belton. Reporters from the Toronto Star discovered from Belton that the RCMP had reopened its investigation into the Canadian role in the Inslaw affair and the possible threat it represented to Canadian security. "Belton said RCMP officers have already confirmed to him that they do use the PROMIS software [and the security of the RCMP has been compromised as a result of trap doors in the software]....The chainsmoking Belton unraveled his story at the kitchen table of his sprawling, ramshackle house near Ottawa. The table is stacked with thick binders jammed with documents detailing his allegations. Court documents, detailed notes of telephone conversations and newspaper clippings are marked up with highlighter and neatly organized." The Star quoted Belton as saying, "You're not dealing with paranoid crazies, or the UFO guys. I'm very serious about this."[12]

Belton's story affirms details that have long been supplied by arms merchant and former Israeli spy Ari Ben-Menasche, who went on to work as a security consultant in Montreal. At the time of Belton's revelations to the Canadian press, Ben-Menasche reported that renewed interest in the case had led two Scotland Yard detectives to fly over and interview him. Their purpose: to discuss meetings Ben-Menasche had with none other than Mohammad Al Fayed. Details of that contact have yet to surface, but the Scotland Yard investigators were inexplicably accompanied by the two RCMP officers working on the (unofficially) reopened PROMIS case, Sean McDade and Randy Buffam.[13]

Investigators also spoke with Riconosciuto's lawyer, Louis Buffardi, and Riconosciuto himself repeated the details of his involvement with PROMIS, but both made another unexpected connection of it all to a 1997 Octopus-style double homicide in Hercules, California. Like members of the Cabazon tribe before them, the bodies of 12-year-old Brendan Abernathy and his 43-year-old father Neal, who owned a car repair shop, were found bound in their living room, wrapped in electrical cable and shot execution style. Acquaintance with Riconosciuto may have been among the motives for their murder. Mountie McDade joined Hercules police detective Sue Todd in a prison interview of Riconosciuto, but the details of how the Canadian case related to the California murder, as well as its connection to Ari Ben-Menasche and Mohammad El Fayed, and to the death of Diana, remains unclear.

---

1. An internet posting to the Conspiracy Theory Research List (CTRL) from September 11, 1997 echoed reports that photographs from the scene at one point reveal a motorcyclist ahead of the Mercedes popping flashbulbs into the eyes of driver Henri Paul. The motorcyclist/photographer was not among the paparazzi arrested at the scene. The report of the flash persisted three years later, as a former MI6 agent named Richard Tomlinsin reported that "Henri Paul was an MI6 informer paid to spy on Diana and Dodi. The Diana crash was chillingly similar to a previous MI6 plot. That plot was to assassinate the Serbian leader Slobodon Milosevic in Geneva using a powerful laser strobe light—similar to that described by witnesses to the Paris crash—to blind the driver." The laser strobe, publicized greatly in an English documentary entitled Diana: Secrets Behind The Crash, was mentioned again by Dodi Al Fayed's father Mohammed Al Fayed during a press conference announcing his Freedom of Information Act suit against the CIA and other US intelligence agencies for documents pertaining to the crash. One witness, secretary Brenda Wells, made statements strongly discriminating the strobe flash from the paparazzi flashbulbs.

2. The following list outlines some suspicious details about the car crash:

- It took an hour and forty minutes to get Diana to the Pitie Salpetiere hospital. Four other hospitals were closer. The White House, and consequently the US intelligence community, regards the Pitie Salpetriere as the official hospital of choice for officials visiting Paris. (This slowness has been described as part of the French inclination to stabilize a vicitm before proceding to hospital and as an attempt by the ambulance to not aggravate Diana's injuries.)

- Early news reports had Diana up and walking around immediately after the crash. She also supposedly was able to speak some words, and reportedly one photograph of the scene showed her utterly unbloodied.

- A few weeks prior to the accident, the Mercedes had been stolen from the garage of the Ritz hotel, where the fatal ride began. Police recovered the car but found that its instrumentation had been tampered with. Shortly thereafter, the car was reinspected and reconditioned.

- Contrary to normal procedures for bodyguards, guard Trevor Rees-Jones fastened his seatbelt before the ride. The others did not. Rees-Jones later claimed amnesia about the event, not due to trauma but to the drugs he recieved in the hospital for his severe facial injuries.

- Henri Paul appears sober in video footage taken at the Ritz Hotel just before the fatal ride. The notion that Paul was severely alcoholic has been challenged by friends and family.

- A mysterious $200,000 had been deposited in Henri Paul's bank account just prior to the wreck. Former MI6 agent Richard Tomlinson claims the money came from MI6.

- The French opened up the tunnel roadway only hours after the crash and neglected to collect important evidence. Even establishment apologist Gerald Posner acknowledged the incompetence of the French investigation.

- Seventeen cameras inside the tunnel failed to operate at the time of the crash.

- The papparazzi photographer who may have owned the white Fiat encountered by the death car, James Andanson, died under questionable circumstances in May 2000. Police discovered Adnandson's burned body in a charred BMW in the Aveyron woodland, near the village of Nant in Southwestern France. Previously, Andanson's Paris office had been burglarized by three masked and well-trained men who wounded a security guard and for a while kept the office staff hostage. It took four weeks for police to identify Andanson's remains from DNA tests. Official investigators claim that the white paint of Andanson's Fiat did not match that recovered from scrape marks on the Merecedes, and consider Andanson's death a suicide, despite the bizarre circumstances.

3. Mohammed Al Fayed owns the posh Harrod's department store in London. He has worked hard to ferret out government documents held in secret and other information concerning possible plots in the death of his son Dodi and his son's lover Diana. The UK government has long denied Mohammed Fayed's application for British citizenship and has looked askance at the impact his wealth and influence have had on politics in England. The UK government has also deferred his request for a full inquiry into the crash to the official French investigation most people find seriously flawed. Mohammed Al Fayed holds the view that Queen Elizabeth's husband, Prince Philip, the Duke of Edinburgh, ordered the deaths of his son and Diana and is now using the CIA, MI5 and MI6 to cover it up. He has, of course, been dismissed as a conspiracy theory nutter. The status of his lawsuit and any new information about his investigative effort can be found at his website, www.alfayed.com.

4. Khashoggi spent three semesters studying economics at Chico State University in California before starting a business renting his truck to companies doing business in Saudi Arabia. After college, he developed those contacts into a role as a liaison between US and Saudi corporations and the Saudi military, primarily under Sultan bin Abdul Aziz. That role, in its various legal and extra-legal dimensions, brought Adnan Khashoggi to great wealth as a broker of long-term deals involving military hardware. In the transformation from renting out his truck to shepherding arrangements for tanks and jet fighters, Khashoggi came to own a dozen estates and a $70 million yacht docked at Porto Banus, Spain. The yacht, called the Nabila, appears in the James Bond movie Never Say Never Again. Khashoggi later sold it to his friend, Donald Trump. The 1987 biography of Adnan Khashoggi, published by Warner Books and written by Ronald Kessler, is entitled The Richest Man In The World.

5. Alex Constantine notes, "Tiny Rowland was the publisher of London's Observer until reporter Tom Bower researched the financier's past a few years ago and discovered him to be a former Hitler Youth Corps leader. Rowland served a spell in an allied detainment camp toward the end of the war, then migrated to South Africa and found enormous wealth there in the mining industry. Thereupon he relocated to the UK to purchase the Observer and rub shoulders with some of the most notorious movers in the world business community, including Daniel Ludwig, a hotel magnate who retains a PR agency solely to keep his name out of the newspapers." (10/13/97)

6. Peter Rushton claimed on the alt.politics.org.cia internet list that he had been given "a large file of allegations against Rowland" by Francesca Pollard as part of a counter-offensive launched by Mohammad Al Fayed against intrique by Arab industrialist Ashraf Marwan, working as a front for Tiny Rowland, to secure a large number of shares in the House of Fraser, the company that owns Fayed's Harrod's.

The battle between Roland and Mohammad Al Fayed was fought in part with the help of Nemi Chand Jain, known also as Chandraswami. The followers of Chandraswami, one of India's swarm of gurus for the jet-setting elite, include Indian Prime Minister Narasimha, Tiny Rowland and Adnan Khashoggi. At one point Chandraswami circulated a faked tape of Mohammad Al Fayed admitting that he acquired Harrod's with the help of the Sultan of Brunei. He also introduced to Khashoggi a woman named Pamela Bordes, whose wile apparently helped Khashoggi seal deals. Bordes was quoted as saying she was physically afraid of Khashoggi but mentally afraid of Chandraswami.

7. In 1996, the Committee Against Corruption in Saudi Arabia (CACSA) reported, "The reverberations of Saudi Arabia's procurement of over eighty Northrop F-SE/F's are still being felt today, even as the kingdom seeks to replace the top heavy aircraft with newer, sleeker trainer-fighter models. Saudi Arabia also bought F-SNB's from Northrop in 1971, the first phase of the contract, a few years before they bought the F-5EIF's. The deal was worth $4.2 billion before they bought the F-5EIF's.

"The F-5's still have to be maintained until they are replaced. Three years ago, the Minister of Defense, Prince Sultan bin Abdul Aziz, pressured Northrop to award the maintenance contract to the Al Salam Aircraft Company, which was described as 'poorly managed.' (Mednews—Middle East Defense News, April 19, 1993). The joint venture company was established to handle the overhaul of both Royal Saudi Air Force and Saudia, the commercial carrier aircraft. Al Salam's facilities at the Riyadh airport are inadequate because its overhaul hangars are not connected to the runway, rendering them inaccessible to planes, and because the hangars do not have an adequate power supply for the maintenance and repair work Al Salam was set up to do."

Khashoggi's talent at brokering deals emerged again in 2003. In the New Yorker ("Annals of National Security, Lunch with the Chairman," March 17, 2003), Seymour Hersh reported that Khashoggi arranged meetings between a wealthy Saudi industrialist named Harb Saleh al-Zuhair and Richard Perle, who served in the Bush administration as chairman of the Defense Policy Board, an advisory group to the Pentagon. Perle was also one of the neoconservative architects of the administration's "pax Americana" foreign policy and a strident advocate of invading Iraq. It was his role as a partner in a venture capital firm that caught Hersh's attention, however. The company, Trireme Partners L.P., produced defense and anti-terrorist technologies. It had sent a letter to Khashoggi stating that war and the fears of terrorism would greatly increase the demand for Trireme's services. Boeing had already contributed twenty million dollars in an attempt to attract investors like Khashoggi and his friends, according to the letter. It was a shameless attempt at war profiteering, but also a clear conflict of interest because of Perle's government position. After the Hersh article, Perle was forced to resign as Defense Policy Board chairman, although he continued to serve on the board (along with the likes of Henry Kissinger). He even threatened to sue Hersh over the controversy.

8. Information about Al Yamamah comes largely from the dissident group within Saudi Arabia, since British Aerospace does not reveal terms of the contract and the British press has been slow to investigate. The Committee reported that "The Saudi Arabian government has British Aerospace wrapped around its finger because revenues from the al-Yamamah deal saved the company from going under. In the early 1990s, it was losing as much as $1.8 billion dollars a year... British Aerospace agreed to supply Saudi Arabia with forty-eight Tornadoes, thirty Hawks, thirty Pilatus PC 9s, two Jetstream trainers, and a variety of missiles and ground based equipment in exchange for oil. Two years later, under Al-Yamamah, the Saudi government ordered forty-eight more Tornados.

In January 1993, immediately after the company reported one of the worst annual losses of any British company ever, Saudi Arabia ordered more Tornados. The focus of the Al-Yamamah contract is money, not weapons. In the words of George Galloway, the Saudi govervnemt has ordered "vast amounts of unusable weapons" which were worth millions of pounds to British aerospace. The Saudi government does not care whether the weapons work. The royal family is using the al-Yamamah deal as a cover." (Internet posting, September 19, 1997.)

Researcher DasGoat summarized, "It was in the context of the joint US-British trade in arms in the Middle East, camouflaged by Operation Desert Storm—that Khashoggi's brother-in-law Mohammad Al Fayed apparently managed somehow to bring down the British government, or rather the conservatives around Thatcher (and her protege John Major) who, indistinquishable from Republicans around Reagan and Bush, turned their nation's treasury into a personal slush fund, making their fortunes from investing in corrupt and criminal activities (whitewashed as covert operations or wars) in the arms and drugs market." (To CTRL list, 9/11/97.)

9. "Edinburgh" here refers to Prince Phillip; "WHuse" refers to the White House; and David Spedding is the head of MI6.

10. In 1997, Rayelan Allan provided a fanciful but fascinating discussion of the history behind the fateful crash site, under the psuedonym "Ru Mills" via Brian Redman's Conspiracy Nation:

> Princess Diana and her soon-to-be husband, Dodi Fayed, were fatally injured in the Pont de l'Alma tunnel. The site is ancient, dating back to the time of the Merovingian kings (ca. 500—751 A.D.), and before. In pre-Christian times, the Pont de l'Alma was a pagan sacrificial site. Note that in the pagan connotation, at least, sacrifice is not to be confused with murder: the sacrificial victim had to be a willing participant.

> In the time of the Merovingian kings, the Pont de l'Alma was an underground chamber. Founder of the Merovingian dynasty was Merovaeus, said to be descended from the union of a sea creature and a French queen. Merovaeus followed the pagan cult of Diana. In Middle English, "soul" (Alma) has as etymology "descended from the sea." "Pont" has as a Latin root "pontifex," meaning a Roman high priest. (See also pons, pontis—bridge; passage.) "Alma" comes from the Latin "almus," meaning nourishing. One translation of Pont de l'Alma would be "bridge of the soul." Another would be "passage of nourishment." All true European royalty is descended from the Merovingians, which are believed to be descendants of Jesus Christ.
>
> During the Merovingian era, if two kings had a dispute over property, it was settled in combat at Pont de l'alma. According to legend, anyone killed there goes straight to Heaven and sits at the right hand of God, watching over all his foe was to do. The person killed in combat was actually considered to be the "winner," since he became God's eyes on earth and could even manipulate events.
>
> The current British royal family are imposters. The House of Windsor is a fraud. But the lineage of Lady Diana Spencer goes back to Charles II House of Stewart. The House of Stewart is of "true" royal blood. Diana's sons, William and Harry, have three quarters true nobility in their blood.

Rayelan Allan developed her thesis that Diana's death was arranged in order to use her image to create a world-controlling religion in the book, Diana, Queen of Heaven, available at the web site www.dianaqueenofheaven.com.

11. Allan, Rayelan, "Diana Was Not The Target," Paranoia Magazine, Issue 24, Fall 2000.

12. Lawton, Valerie and Thompson, Allan, "Rigged Software Claimed To Hack Intelligence Files," Toronto Star, August 28, 2000.

13. Lawton, Valerie, "Spy Trap Probe Now Tied To US and Britain," Toronto Star, August 29, 2000.

CHAPTER 22:

Jim Keith

Jim Keith often sat at a Reno bar, drinking Coronas with lime served by his friend, the bartender Seth Jameson. Some nights he also met with a person Seth knew as Keith's Sufi contact.

Seth knew Keith well;[1] he knew little of the Sufis. Sufism has origins in the early Islam of the desert nomads, although the Sufi Order of the West was founded in London in 1910 for the "transmission of spiritual truth in a manner that is consistent with modern, Western culture."[2] For years, Jim Keith collected obscure bits of information for various zines[3] and books that featured his writing. Unlike Danny Casolaro, whose story so intrigued Keith that he helped write this book on Casolaro, Keith did not operate in total obscurity. He was well-known, practically a celebrity in the world of marginals publishing. He lectured regularly at conspiracy and UFO conferences and had several acclaimed titles to his credit.[4] Keith regaled conspiracy theorists for many years. He was pleased that he had found such an obscure source from a mysterious, religious/mystical background, the Sufis. He had a second column due for a new online newsletter called Nitro News.

Keith's Sufi friend told him of returning from a trip to London for Dhikr, a celebration of Allah that often involved ecstatic trance states. He told Keith that the ceremony was attended by the personal physician of Dodi Fayed, the man who died with Diana on the fateful day of the Pont D'Alma tunnel crash. The doctor, a non-Sufi Muslim, privately revealed a great secret to Keith's Sufi friend: Diana was pregnant when she died. The doctor had personally made the examination and verified the pregnancy.

Keith felt that this was just the thing to follow the Nitro News column he had written on the possible conspiracy in the plane crash that killed JFK, Jr. A question remained, however. What was that physician's name? Keith hoped he could get two columns out of this, one asserting the idea of the pregnancy, another giving the name of the physician. Nitro News had been slow in paying, so he wanted to stretch out the writing chores. The Sufi provided him with the name after another assurance that his own name would be kept anonymous.

Perhaps Keith thought of Casolaro as he parted company with the Sufi and determined to go home and knock out that column. Home those days was a trailer outside of Reno. Keith returned to it and wrote this column:

> PRINCESS DIANA WAS PREGNANT; FAYED'S PHYSICIAN EXAMINED HER
>
> Recent French findings have not put to rest the suspicion that a conspiracy was responsible for the death of Diana, Princess of Wales, millionaire Dodi Fayed, and driver, Henri Paul, in Paris on August 31, 1997. The case for conspiracy is familiar enough to those who delve into the hidden side of world politics.
>
> Diana had crossed the reigning House of Windsor, and had taken on the color of an enemy to the throne of Great Britain. Born of competing Stuart Royal line, she had been a thorn in the side of the British Monarchy virtually from the beginning of her marriage to Prince Charles. She was far more popular than the aloof Charles, and a perception of unfair treatment by the Royal Family only added to already numerous calls for the abolition of the Monarchy.
>
> It is fair to think that the House of Windsor may have seen Diana as becoming dangerously powerful, and as a threat to its future. She was also viewed as a threat to other elements of the British establishment, including the arms industry, whose lucrative business in death was challenged by her calls for an international ban on land mines. Diana had already been targeted with surveillance and wiretaps by Britain's domestic intelligence agency, MI5, and through the leaking of her private conversations to the press.
>
> At least two persons close to Diana and Dodi Fayed have told the press that the couple was planning on marrying. They had been dating for nine months, and Dodi's purchase of a quarter million dollar diamond ring for her provided additional confirmation.
>
> The British establishment would have seen a marriage to Dodi Fayed as an alliance with the Muslim world, and there was the real possibility that Diana would convert to the Islamic faith. Equally important, Dodi's father was billionaire Muhammad Fayed, related to the Saudi Royal Family. He is alleged to have compromised many British politicians through the use of his bribes and other incentives.
>
> Of central importance to the belief that Diana may have been murdered are unconfirmed reports that she was pregnant by Dodi Fayed at the time of her death. Certainly, the birth of a child with Egyptian blood, half-brother to Diana's sons, would have been seen as a devastating event to the rulers of Britain. So far, however, no conclusive proof has been offered that she was > pregnant. I have now obtained the closest thing to proof that will probably ever be revealed.

>
> Confirmation of Diana's pregnancy comes from a unique source: through the network of the Middle Eastern religious group called the Sufis. The Sufis are a meditative, mystical offshoot of the Islamic faith, and several members of this group are friends of the author.
>
> One of my Sufi contacts, who chooses to remain anonymous traveled to London to participate in Dhikr, a remembrance of Allah. Both Sufis and orthodox Muslims attended this ritual. My contact reports that while participating in this ceremony, he met Dodi Fayed's personal physician, a man who is a Muslim, but is not a Sufi. In private conversation, the physician told him that Diana and Dodi Fayed had planned on getting married, and that he had personally examined her and determined that she was pregnant.
>
> If this is the case, why has this physician not come forward and told the press? One can only speculate. Perhaps this information is being kept secret as part of a larger indictment when Muhammad Fayed finally weighs in with proof of a conspiracy.

Keith sent the new column to his editors at Nitro News, planning to use the physician's name in the next one next. He planned to do this after a visit to the Burning Man festival in Black Rock, just north of Reno.[5]

The lore of the Burning Man attracted Keith. Larry Harvey, Jerry James and twenty sympaticos started the event by burning an eight-foot stick figure of a man on Baker Beach in San Francisco in June of 1986. Harvey did it to purge himself of feelings from a romance gone wrong; the others had their own reasons to create a symbolic break from the past. The stick burning had long been moved to Black Rock and had become a massive 50-foot effigy for over 15,000 heavily dosed revelers. Keith did not have a past to purge, but he did have a reputation to protect and promote as Reno's top party animal. As a top bar fly on the Reno scene, especially for his UFO conspiracy talk group at the Planet 9 bar on East Fourth Street, how could he not go? Burning Man consisted of intense mass hedonistic revelry, fireworks and pyrotechnics, thousands of free spirits practicing amateur performance art and drug-abundant celebration.

He eventually found himself on one of the many stages at Burning Man. He was seen by many in the party atmosphere shaking hands, laughing with the rest of the crowd, bumping into people. At some point, however, he lost his balance and fell off the Burning Man stage.

Keith's long-time friend, Wayne Henderson, later imagined Keith's situation the following morning:

> He is disheveled; still wearing most of what he was wearing last night (good performance; GREAT party) and the first thing he notices is that he's got a monumental case of dragonmouth, and a headache. Oh, and his leg hurts.
>
> He rises, goes to the bathroom with a cup of strong coffee in his hand and some Led Zeppelin on the stereo. The aspirin starts to kick in, the headache begins to fade. His leg hurts. He gargles, showers. Gets another cup of 40-weight coffee.
>
> He rummages through a pile of papers on his work desk. Book manuscript (GOT to finish that intro) e-mails, articles, letters (got to answer that one from IllumiNet), back issue of Steamshovel Press (his leg hurts), more letters, more e-mails (should get online today, Conspiracy Journal is due), dog-eared invitation to a party at the Burning Man festival, what was I looking for anyway?
>
> God-all-MIGHTY, what the HELL did I do to my LEG? On the phone, make arrangements to go to the hospital and have a doctor look at this, put a splint on the darned thing, I've got work to do, for Chrissakes..."[6]

The pain was such that Keith called paramedics, who delivered him to the Washoe Medical Center in Reno. He balked at the idea of anesthesia and surgery, but the Washoe doctors explained to him that the tibia fracture he suffered at Burning Man required both. Keith's nephew Chris Davis came out to be with him at Washoe. Keith told him, "I have a feeling that if they put me under I'm not coming back. I know if I get put under, I am going to die." [7] The doctors insisted that the surgical procedure was routine.

Keith called his old friend from Planet 9, George Pickard, and told him that one of the hospital attendants had the same name as someone he debated months ago on MSNBC. The topic had been black helicopters and this person represented the Pentagon in arguing that the choppers just do not exist. [8] Ordinarily Keith liked these kinds of coincidences. They were fodder for his writing. This time, he told Piccard, it was getting a bit too weird. His came out to Washoe to be with Keith. "I was told that Jim was in room 106, on the first floor," Pickard later reported, "When I checked that room, 106, I found an elderly lady with a completely different name. A nurse refused to tell me what happened and directed me to an unidentified family spokesperson for information." [9]

Somewhere between nephew Davis' visit and George Pickard's attempt, Keith assented, very reluctantly, to the anesthetic and the surgery. He died on the operating table.

On September 7, 1999, a blood clot traveled from Jim Keith's leg to his lung during or shortly after surgery that Washoe Medical Center doctors assured him was routine, and killed him. "There's no conspiracy here," Washoe County deputy coroner Steve Finnell later assured a Reno Gazette-Journal reporter, "This could happen to any one. We see it all of the time. This is considered an accidental death."[10]

A great outpouring of grief at the passing of this celebrity of the conspiracy circuit appeared in the form of several memorial web pages, but none of the comments stated the overriding sentiment at news of Jim Keith's death more succinctly than that of writer Jim Hougan:

"A fucking knee operation?"[11]

A debate followed for many months about whether or not to regard Keith's death with suspicion. The strange coincidence that Nitro News, which posted Keith's column about Princess Diana to the web the day before Keith left for Burning Man, went mysteriously offline for two weeks just before the news of Keith's death, fanned the flames of suspicion. Had Keith's demise been orchestrated by the Octopus? Had someone whacked Keith's knee at Burning Man? Did the Pentagon send an assassin to Washoe Medical? As with Danny Casolaro, a proper investigation never happened and most accepted deputy coroner Finnell's explanation, as disquieting as it seemed to other potential patients in Washoe County.

Keith himself would have noted the coincidences: that he died shortly after writing about Diana's pregnancy, but before he named the physician; that even that column mysteriously disappeared from the web; that he died prematurely, at age 49, under unusual circumstances; the strange coincidence of the name of that hospital attendant. Death by blood clot in this way is rare, despite the assertions of the deputy coroner. It should not have happened. That it happened to Keith was one more of those bizarre coincidences that leave people scratching their heads, like all of the deaths surrounding Danny Casolaro's research.

Among Keith's professional associates, news of his death hit Ron Bonds the hardest. Bonds ran IllumiNet Press in Lilburn, Georgia. IllumiNet published the majority of Keith's books. Bonds wrote to one memorial site, "He was more like a partner here. He did all of our proofreading, he typed up stuff for me and we talked on the phone every day! He was like a consultant. It'll be a real drag to keep on without his help and input."[12] Keith's death took a large toll on Bonds and IllumiNet. Although he continued to publish—he had at least three of the prolific Keith's manuscripts on hand[13]—he and his wife began making plans to move into the real estate business.

Bonds began IllumiNet after a brief career as a record producer and promoter for a Label called Elvis On Drugs, and at one point he started a church called the Church of Beaver Cleaver. A perverse sense of humor and a Southern charm characterized everything that Bonds did. One of his early discoveries as a publisher was Kerry Thornley, the Marine corps chum of Lee Harvey Oswald. Bonds had published The Idle Warrior, a novel Thornley wrote about Oswald long before the assassination, and The Principia Discordia, a Monty Pythonesque lampoon of religion. Bonds also reprinted The Mothman Prophecies, a classic work of UFO literature by the writer John Keel, was sold as a Hollywood movie, but even in death, Jim Keith was his top-seller as well as his close friend.[14]

Bonds carried on half-heartedly for months. Then, on April 7, 2001, he and his wife Nancy went to lunch at an El Azteca restaurant near their home in Lilburn, Georgia. Later that night, at about 9 PM, Bonds headed to the bathroom following an attack of nausea. For the next six hours, his condition worsened, with diarrhea and vomiting, and he asked Nancy to call an ambulance before he collapsed on the floor of the bathroom. He was unconscious when the ambulance arrived. It took him to Grady Memorial Hospital in Atlanta because it had a better trauma unit than nearby DeKalb General. Medical personnel inserted tubes through his mouth and nose and into his lungs and intestines, but nothing stopped the swelling and massive bleeding in his stomach and colon. On April 8, at 5:30 AM Ron Bonds died from the bleeding at age 48.[15]

After an autopsy the following day, the Fulton county coroner, Dr. Henninger, determined that the bacteria clostridium perfringens caused the swelling, and that it came from contaminated food Bonds ate at the El Azteca. Health inspectors were called out and they discovered that the beef served at El Azteca contained bacteria in excess of what could be considered harmful to health, although an acceptable level for many people. Reactions to clostridium perfingens vary greatly among individuals and Bonds had suffered from chronic gastritis. Through credit card receipts, the health inspectors tracked down 118 El Azteca customers from that day. Only seven had diarrhea in the period following their consumption of food at the restaurant, five had cramps and three vomited. A 1999 study by the Centers for Disease Control indicated that a fatal reaction to clostridium perfringens food poisoning occurs in .0005 percent of cases.[16]

The last book Bonds published by Jim Keith was Biowarfare in America, which discussed targeted biotoxins. In it, Keith quoted Larry Wayne Harris, a man who had been arrested by the FBI in February 1988 for possession of the anthrax bacterium, as claiming that an attempt was made against his life by a needle wielding a cobra venom that induces massive clots to the lungs.[17]

Then in November 2001, a half-dozen additional cases of suspicious circumstances surrounding knee surgery operations were reported across the country. The first of these was a 23-year-old student in Minnesota named Brian Lykins, who died from a clostridium infection. The other cases also involved variants of the clostridium bacteria, eventually traced to a tissue bank in Atlanta, near Ron Bonds' home.[18]

Another strange coincidence: Keith had written specifically about clostridium bacteria previously for FATE, the newsstand digest of paranormal stories. In typical Jim Keith fashion, he had tied it to another offbeat conspiracy topic, cattle mutilations. "Many mutilated cattle have been found marked with fluorescent paint," wrote Keith, "probably to help identify them in the dark. But most telling is that a large percentage of mutilated cattle have also been injected with strains of clostridium bacteria (a genus that includes bacteria that cause blackleg and malignant edema). In a 1970 investigation of bacteriological warfare, Senator Frank Church's Senate Select Committee on Intelligence determined that the CIA had stockpiled canisters of this same bacteria."[19]

How odd that Keith's friend and publisher died of poisoning from the same bacteria, that many knee injuries ended in death due to clostridium and that the clostridium caused "blackleg" in cattle, a term that resonated eerily with the knee injury that claimed Keith's life.

---

1. Jameson, Seth. E-mail correspondence with author, August 15, 2001.

2. Bowker, John, ed., The Oxford Dictionary of World Religions, Oxford University Press, 1997, p. 925.

3. Jim Keith's work as a writer for small circulation zines included Dharma Combat, published by Keith himself. Typically, one issue of Dharma Combat ("a magazine about spirituality, metaphysics and reality" according to its indicia) consisted of 8.5x11 sheets of brightly colored paper, folded in half and side-stapled. The following issue would be printed on several sheets of 11x17 paper, stapled in an upper corner, with a "Permanent Universal Rent Strike" poster as a back cover. Article titles included "Around Again To Armageddon," "Sympathy for the Revel," "The Dulce Base," "Operation Majority," "Demolish Serious Culture," and "Hallucinogenic Hypno-Vision and the Plasmatic Cells of Gaia." Although Keith's zine world of the late 1980s and early 1990s foreshadowed the conspiracy theorist internet free-for-fall, it had the imprimatur of his unique personality. It also included many well-known personalities of the ongoing info underground, such as G. J. Krupey, X. Sharks Despot, Wayne Henderson and Len Bracken.

4. Keith graduated from zines to books, eventually producing many well-known titles highly regarded by readers of conspiracy and parapolitical literature. They include The Gemstone File (IllumiNet, 1992); Black Helicopters: Strikeforce for the New World Order (IllumiNet, 1994); its sequel, Black Helicopters II: The Men In Black (IllumiNet, 1997); OK Bomb: Conspiracy and Cover-Up (IllumiNet, 1996); Mind Control—World Control (Adventures Unlimited Press, 1997); Secret and Suppressed (Feral House, August 1993); Casebook on Alternative Three (IllumiNet, 1997); Saucers of the Illuminati; Mass Control: Engineering Human Consciousness (IllumiNet, 2000); and Biowarfare In America (IllumiNet, 2001). Keith also co-authored the first edition of The Octopus: Secret Government and the Death of Danny Casolaro, published by Feral House in 1996.

5. Bad Day At Black Rock is a famous Spencer Tracy movie released in 1955. Wilhelm Reich called it one of his favorites, in fact, and Keith was great admirer of Reich. Movie reviewers have identified the location of the town of Black Rock in that movie as Arizona, California, and "remotely western." The movie includes a character named Reno Smith, however, and it seems likely that it took place in the same town as the Burning Man festival.

6. Henderson, Wayne, "Dimly Visible Through a Fog of Evasions," Steamshovel Press #17, 2000, p. 53.

7. Vankin, Jonathan, "Jim Keith: Gone But Not Forgotten," Conspiracy Currents Number 54, Conspire.Com, October 22, 1999.

8. Pickard, George, Erskine Overnight radio program, September 30, 1999.

9. Pickard, George, from a no longer extant memorial web page for Jim Keith.

10. Damon, Anjeanette, "Rumors Abound in Death of Conspiracy Theorist," Reno Gazette-Journal, September 28, 1999.

11. Hougan's books include Spooks: The Haunting of America—The Private Use of Secret Agents (William Morrow, 1978); Secret Agenda, Watergate, Deep Throat and the CIA (Random House, 1984); and Kingdom Come, A Novel of Conspiracy (Ballantine, 2000).

12. Ron Bonds on the Steamshovel Press memorial website for Jim Keith, 2000.

13. Powell, Kay, "Ronald Bonds, 48, published conspiracies," Georgia newspaper, April 11, 2001.

14. Ibid.

15. Comments by Ron Bonds' widow, Nancy Kratzer, to author, August 2001.

16. Shalhoup, Mara, "Widow sues restaurant: Rarely fatal bacteria contributed to diner's death," Creative Loafing, Atlanta, Georgia, August 2001.

17. By the end of 2001, mysterious deaths among microbiologists specializing in infectious disease began to accumulate. They included: Dr. Benito Que (11/12/01, attacked by four men, at least one wielding a baseball bat, in Miami); Don C. Wiley (11/16/01, found dead after jumping, falling or being pushed from a bridge in Memphis, Tennessee); Vladimir Pasechnik (11/23/01); Robert M. Schwartz (12/10/02, stabbed); and Set Van Nguyen (12/14/01), suffocated in a laboratory airlock.

This list moved from the conspiracy rumor circuit to front page news with the Casolaro-like "suicide" of David Kelly on July 18, 2003. Kelly, a microbiologist, had served as the head of the biological inspections team in Iraq before the US invasion. He was outspoken about "sexed up" intelligence reports concerning Iraq's biological weapons used by the US and Britain as a justification for the war. Like Casolaro, Kelly warned of "dark actors playing games" because of what he had researched and discovered before being found dead with a slit wrist not far from his Oxfordshire home.

Kelly also had a direct connection with a previous name on the microbiologist death list. In 1989 he had helped debrief the Soviet defector Vladimir Pasechnik. (Fountain, Nigel and Smith, Sarah A., "Obituary: David Kelly, Biological weapons expert with a reputation for thoroughness," Guardian, July 19, 2003.)

18. Lykins' bacterial infection was traced to cartilage taken from a cadaver and supplied by Cryolife, a tissue bank outside of Atlanta. Marcus, Adam, "Knee Surgery Suspended in Minnesota After 3 Die," Yahoo News, November 20, 2001. Majeski, Tom, "Knee Surgery Probe Turns To Cadavers," Pioneer Press, December 7, 2001.

19. Although the exact issue of Fate in which this appears is unknown, it appears with a Fate copyright on the web at http://www.geocities.com/Area51/Shadowlands/6583/cattle003.html.

CHAPTER 23:

September 11 Epilogue

Ever expanding and morphing into new, more sinister applications, the PROMIS software remains a thing of legend and fact. Legend has it that the ECHELON satellite system, which can photograph automobile license plates from outer space, utilizes some mutation of PROMIS' extrapolation capabilities to fill in the visual contents of those long distance photos.[1] Fact has it that the coming "smart card," a credit-card-sized surveillance tool that can hold over five gigabytes of information on its holder, has been pioneered in the Hong Kong transit system under the name, "the Octopus card."[2]

Fact and legend about PROMIS came together after the world-changing disasters that occurred on September 11, 2001. An Irish nationalist known as "McGuffin" gave an unsourced report that Osama Bin Laden avoided capture by the US military in the months after the World Trade Tower and Pentagon crashes by using PROMIS. He asserted that the FBI turncoat Robert Hanssen passed the version of PROMIS used by British and German intelligence onto Russia, where it proceeded to find itself in the hands of the notorious chief Arab terrorist.[3]

The Justice Department reporter for the Washington Times picked up the story and concluded, "The sophisticated software gives Bin Laden access to databases on specific targets of his choosing and the ability to monitor electronic banking transactions, easing money-laundering operations for himself or others."

The Justice department's complaint against Hanssen charged that he made extensive use of FOIMS (Field Office Information Management Systems) and COIN (Community On-Line Intelligence Systems), two of the FBI's known case management software systems. The Times quotes sources as saying "FOIMS and COINS are believed to be upgraded versions of the PROMIS software program."[4]

"McGuffin" claimed that Inslaw's Bill Hamilton told him that Osama Bin Laden paid the Russians $2 million dollars for an upgraded version of the software, called "Enhanced PROMIS." The Times quotes Hamilton as having no specific information about Hanssen, but suggested that a technical manual given by Hanssen to the Russians according to the FBI, was "related to the use of PROMIS as the standard software of the US intelligence community." "McGuffin" argued that "Hanssen, before his arrest, had played an important role in installing [PROMIS] in MI5, MI6 and [Germany's] BND."[5]

Michael Riconosociuto himself claimed to have met Bin Laden in the Spring of 1986 while networking with representatives of the anti-Soviet mujahadeen. Danger Man proposed to sell shoulder-held missile launchers—called MANPADS, or Man Portable Air Defense Systems—for use against Soviet helicopters. According to the story, Bin Laden at the time traveled under the name "Tim Osman," a pseudonym supplied "by the CIA for his tour of the U.S. and U.S. military bases, in search of political support and armaments." Apparently the meeting ended when Riconosciuto explained that his faction of intelligence world connections did not think Bin Laden represented the true mujahadeen. The story ended with another plea to release Riconosciuto from his current prison residence in Springfield, Missouri: "If the war against Osama Bin Laden (Tim Osman) is not a total fraud, then what is Michael Riconsociuto doing in prison? Why doesn't he have an office next to Colin Powell so he can give realistic advice on Bin Laden's thinking?"[6]

Another writer/editor team, Tom Flocco and Michael Ruppert, made the case for the use of PROMIS in the insider trading deals that preceded the September 11 tragedies. They received a non-denial from CIA spokesperson Tom Crispell that "the CIA had been using PROMIS beyond American borders to scrutinize world financial markets for national security purposes," and one from the FBI claiming that "the FBI has discontinued use of the PROMIS software." Flocco notes that the latter denial "followed almost seventeen years of denial by the FBI and the Department of Justice—in court and under oath—that they used the software at all." Nevertheless, Ruppert and Flocco maintain that stock screening and short selling that came in the days before the plane crashes[7] were accomplished with PROMIS, as was the financial tracking of Bin Laden's assets that happened in the aftermath.[8]

Research tributaries leading to PROMIS keep alive Casolaro's sense of history and parapolitics, and his foreboding about the developing world of perpetual surveillance and war. Despite the push to transform the tragedies of September 11 into simple-minded, war-hungry patriotism—and whether or not PROMIS is ever proven to be a part of the manipulations—many Americans more readily accept the notion that Osama Bin Laden came to power under Octopus-like funding. Plans to strengthen US military power in Afghanistan, where US "retaliation" for 9/11 was felt first, began as early as 1990, when oil was struck in the eastern portion of the Caspian Sea, in Kazakhstan. The democracy-warping results of the American presidential election in 2000 returned to power the same crew of secret government cronies that Casolaro had tracked through Iran-contra and on back to drug traffic in the Golden Triangle of Southeast Asia. The "anti-terror" war seems more about building a pipeline to the Caspian, exploiting the opium crop in Afghanistan and expanding the weapons trade than about protecting America from terrorists.[9]

---

1. Internet posting, 12/15/01.

2. Mailloux, Jacqueline, "Octopus Cards Back In Business," June 17, 1998. About four million Octopus cards had been issued for Hong Kong's Mass Transit Railway Corporation by the transport consortium Creative Star. The supplied was exhausted and the consortium at the time planned to order three million more. It planned another increase of seven million increase for the following year. This is a relatively small growth pattern due to the fact that "the Octopus card uses proprietary technology."

Chow, Tinnie, CNN EbizAsia Correspondent, "Smart Cards Offer Shorter Queues and More Risks," February 16, 2001. Chow quotes Mac McGolpin, the CEO of AsiaWebCo, as saying that the new card uses biometrics to encode "some part of your physical presence or being on the card," and notes "new ways of using Octopus cards are being initiated…."

3. "McGuffin" Dispatch 265, received from Lobster publisher Robin Ramsay September 21, 2001.

4. Seper, Jerry, "Software likely in the hands of terrorist; FBI's Hanssen seen as provider," The Washington Times, June 14, 2001, p. A1.

5. John Judge expressed a cautionary note about all of this: "Well, it seems bin Laden has lots of talents and lots of time on his hands. What the hell would it take to monitor all that information from all those agencies? On the other hand, if bin Laden is their creature, perhaps one agency lets him know what another is doing against him. Sounds more like an elaborate cover to explain why we have not caught him or will not. Hanssen is a double agent case I think planted to feed disinformation into the Soviet hands. His links to Opus Dei and COINTELPRO make me think he was really a very clever plant. So, I'd be cautious with these conclusions. Perhaps he did install something that would allow US intelligence to track Bin Laden, etc. That would make sense." Correspondence with author, September 21, 2001.

The issue returned again with the June 2003 resignation of Paul Redmond, the Assistant Secretary for Information Analysis for the Homeland Security department. Described by some as a "legendary spy catcher"—he had a role in the capture of Aldrich Ames—Redmond resigned for "health reasons." Most took that as polite cover for Redmond's frustration with underfunding of the department, but others connected it to a rumored secret investigation Redmond was conducting into Hanssen's role in delivering PROMIS to Osama. According to this rumor, Redmond had discovered shockingly long-standing common interests between the Bush and bin Laden families and was forced to resign. PROMIS, in fact, also had been given to Saddam Hussein by the senior Bush in the early 1990s. (Casolaro reported that Iraq was one of the countries that purchased the software illegally.) Although the story provided an opportunity for Inslaw's story to be discussed anew in various opinion and editorial pieces, it seemed to trace to a single source. Thomas, Gordon, "Riddle As US Spy Chief Quits," Sunday Express (UK), July 6, 2003.

6. Grabbe, J. Orlin, "When Osama Bin Laden Was Tim Osman," Laissez Faire City Times, Vol. 5, No. 46, November 12, 2001. Grabbe's web site is at orlingrabbe.com. He gives Michael Riconosciuto's current address as 21309-086 Box 4000, US Medical Center, Springfield, MO 65801-4000. Another web site with information on Riconosciuto's possible connections to current world events appears on the web at mindgallery.com/hiddenroom/wizard/index.html.

7. A short selling spree also preceded the Kennedy assassination, as documented in the book Mind Control, Oswald and JFK (Adventures Unlimited Press, edited by Kenn Thomas).

8. Flocco and Ruppert's three part story linking this information to a banking entity called Deutschebank/A.B. Brown as well as CIA executive A. B. "Buzzy" Krongard, can be found at Ruppert's "From The Wilderness" web site, www.copvcia.com.

9. Even as the war moved into the Philippines, echoes were heard of Casolaro's cross-connections between the domestic and the foreign in the global strategy of tension. Adam Parfrey gave the most detailed and succinct report:

The ACLU worked tirelessly on behalf of Abraham Ahmed, who the legal organization claimed was a victim of racist profiling. On the same day as bombing, Ahmed attempted to fly from Oklahoma City to Amman, Jordan, but was stopped at Heathrow Airport after American Airlines flight security notified the FBI of the Middle Easterner's suspicious behavior. Ahmed was cuffed and returned to the US after his luggage was found to contain such things as two car radios (the sort used to bomb Pan Am 103), silicon, solder, shielded and unshielded wire, a timing device, a photo album with pictures of weapons and missile, and a blue jogging suit similar to that seen worn by an Arab suspect in front of the Murrah building on the morning of the blast. Perhaps prompted by ACLU's media tirade, the FBI promptly released suspect Abraham Ahmed, and President Clinton apologized to the Arab-American community.

Timothy McVeigh and Terry Nichols had continual contacts with known terrorist entities up to the day of the Murrah Building blast. Nichols was married to a Filipina woman, and took trips to Cebu City, Philippines (without his wife) in late '92 and early '93 to meet with such friendly folk from the Abu Sayyaf terrorist org as Ramzi Yousef, Abdul Hakim Murad, Wali Khan Amin Shah and several others to discuss the bombing of the OKC building.

Murad was arrested in 1995 for the initial World Trade Center bombing, and after viewing the Oklahoma City Bombing on a New York jail television set, he remarked to a guard that the "Liberation Army of the Philippines"—a group connected to Abu Sayyef, was responsible for the blast. Later, Abu Sayyaf leader Edwin Angeles corrected Murad for the record: "It was the Palestine Liberation Army and the Islamic Jihad which Murad was referring to. This army is associated with Hamas and is based in Lebanon."

After the Oklahoma City Bombing, Saudi intelligence told the FBI that Iraq had hired Pakistanis to do the Murrah Building job. Edwin Angeles is a Pakistani."

Parfrey, Adam, "The Oklahoma City Bombing Jihad," Konformist newswire, October 10, 2001 (www.konformist.com/911/ok-jihad.htm).

Bill and Nancy Hamilton.

APPENDIX 1:

An Interview with William and Nancy Hamilton

The following interview with Bill and Nancy Hamilton was conducted by Kenn Thomas at the Inslaw office in Washington, DC on June 8, 1995.

Q: How did you first get in contact with Danny?

Bill Hamilton: You should contact Terry Miller, president of Government Sales Consultants, which provides advice to companies that sell computer-related products to the United States government.

Q: He worked with Danny Casolaro at Computer Age Publications.

Bill: That's right. He was an old friend of Danny's. In August of 1990, he talked to Danny and suggested that he look into investigating this thing. Again, that's the month that Danny contacted us. He contacted us when we were on vacation at the beach in Delaware. He wanted to come down and see us at the beach, which was not convenient for us, so it didn't happen. But that began our conversations with him. That lasted for a year until he died in August 1991.

Q: Do you know anything at all about his relationship with Computer Age at the time?

Bill: He owned it.

Q: Was he in the process of selling it?

Bill: He had already sold it. I don't know how many months before this.

Q: Did he talk about it at all?

Bill: He talked about it.

Q: Was he disappointed in the terms of the sales?

Bill: I don't know. That's his private business. I worked with him mostly on the investigation of the Justice Department. He was not a person who exhibited much interest in financial matters. I don't ever recall much of a conversation about terms of the sale of his newsletter.

Q: It goes to the question of whether or not he was suicidal. Some people have suggested the poor terms might have contributed to that.

Bill: That's ludicrous. That's the most ludicrous thing I have ever heard.

Nancy Hamilton: In the year of talking to this man, there was never any evidence that he was depressed about anything, much less that. He never mentioned that he was disappointed in that to my knowledge. He was excited about his investigation.

Bill: It was much too serious a matter. He spent a year full-time looking into malfeasance by the government and the government has been unwilling to allow an independent investigation of his death. The malfeasance was in the Justice Department and the Justice department insists that only it will be the judge of whatever happened down there and the local Martinsburg authorities who are not the kind of places you'd think about going if you were looking for sophisticated investigative capabilities.

Nancy: If anything bothered him, it was what he was finding out about the way his government worked. He was a person who found it difficult to believe that the government was capable of such skullduggery. He didn't want to believe it, just as we don't want to believe it. But when presented with fact, you have to accept it. And that is depressing.

Q: When you first met, at what stage was the case?

Bill: We had already had three weeks of trial in 1987, and this was 1990. We had already the three hundred ninety-nine findings of fact that had already been upheld by a separate opinion in the United States district court.

Nancy: It was already under investigation by the House Judiciary committee. It had already been investigated in part by the permanent subcommittee on investigations, which found stone walling, blocking and intimidation at the Justice department.

Bill: There had been an extensive public record at that time.

Q: So you were kind of like the story behind the story he was pursuing.

Nancy: No, we were the story. Terry Miller told him that he should get on this story, that is was a very interesting story. He then called us to find out more about the story. He was into the Inslaw story. His investigation into Inslaw took him into other areas and at one point he expressed frustration that he was getting all this information on these other things connecting, he thought, to Inslaw and was frustrated at getting the hard stuff he needed on Inslaw. Just a week before he died he expressed to different people that he finally got the final evidence on Inslaw, pieces that directly affect Inslaw.

Q: Was he sharing his research on the other topics with you as he went along?

Bill: He was willing to. We didn't really have time to entertain it. We're trying to operate a business here and so we had limited interest in BCCI and the rest of it. Our meetings primarily consisted of telephone conversations with him every day.

Nancy: And asking questions as he went about his investigation, because as he picked up information it would raise questions that he needed to ask us. We would answer his questions and he would proceed with his investigation. If something puzzled him about what he was told, how could this be, you know. That was the main thing.

Q: At any point did he say he had a contract to get published?

Bill: No. He was working on one and he was optimistic. He expressed optimism about getting one. In fact, he was planning a party in the final few weeks of his life. He was planning the guest list of a party to celebrate the book contract.

Q: As time went along, you put him in contact with Michael Riconosciuto.

Bill: Yes. But you have to understand how that works. We gave him lots of contacts. He'd take those contacts and get other contacts of his own.

Q: How did you know Riconosciuto?

Bill: Riconosciuto called us a few months before Danny came on this case, in May in 1990, and spoke to us for two and a half hours, talking to us about the Wackenhut/Cabazon joint venture, Earl Brian, Peter Videnieks and people like that.

Q: How soon was it after that talk with Riconosciuto that you had him talk to Casolaro?

Bill: August/September, 1990. We had one conversation with Michael Riconosciuto in May, 1990, and we didn't hear from him again until almost the end of that calendar year.

Q: Did you find Riconosciuto believable at that time?

Bill: A lot of what Riconosciuto said we found hard to believe but we attempted to find out whether or not it was true. I would say that 75% of it turned out we found corroborating evidence about it. So, most of what he told us about during that first telephone conversation seems to have been true. And we talked to people he worked with at the Wackenhut/Cabazon joint venture who expressed hostility toward him, disliked and disparaged him but who corroborated most of what he said in his affidavit to us. What they did not corroborate was the part of the affidavit that is most important to Inslaw's case. And that is that the joint venture, in addition to producing fuel-air explosives and biological and chemical warfare weapons, night vision goggles and machine guns, was modifying the PROMIS software for Earl Brian. They didn't deny it. They said they didn't know about it. Over time they have admitted, these former colleagues who don't like Riconosciuto, that there was an NSA project on the Wackenhut/Cabazon joint venture and that it's extremely highly classified, more highly classified than any other projects. And no one has ever explained what that project was.

Q: So these people were hostile to Riconosciuto but they were actually saying the same thing.

Bill: They're not admitting PROMIS, but they are admitting that a colonel from NSA flew out to the Cabazon reservation one day and chewed out some FBI agents who were investigating the homicides of the vice-chairman of the tribe and a couple of other guys, Alvarez and a few other guys, and told them to keep their noses out of the NSA project and that Riconosciuto was involved in the NSA project. So it seems likely to me that what they're doing is expressing some healthy fear about violating espionage laws by affirming some of the stuff that Riconosciuto was saying about the NSA project. I think the NSA project is very likely the PROMIS project.

Q: Over time, Casolaro became more and more skeptical of Riconosciuto because, in addition to everything that could be verified about what he said, he said some pretty wild stuff after a while.

Bill: I wouldn't characterize it that way. He was disappointed when he went out to see him in jail after he was arrested. He was not able to get a copy of what Riconosciuto claimed to have, which was a tape recording of Peter Videnieks threatening him. Whether that existed or not, I have no way of knowing. But a lot of the things that Riconosciuto talks about that are extreme sounding are things involving the United States intelligence agencies. And most of that stuff is probably true. US intelligence agencies use people like Riconosciuto.

Nancy: That is very clear from what we have learned over all these years. They hire people like Riconosciuto. And they are the first to say that if you bring Riconosciuto in, look at him, you can't trust anything he says. But in the Noriega trial, the government brought in just such witnesses. But we think what happens, from what we've learned, the government hires these people, they do things for the government that normally American citizens wouldn't do, and then they do some things for themselves that normal American citizens don't do and the government can't say anything about it because they're their boys.

Q: Let me bring up Robert Booth Nichols' name. Would he fall into that category?

Nancy: Of having worked for the government? Yeah.

Bill: Oh, yeah.

Q: Now you introduced Nichols to Casolaro as well, right?

Bill: Yes.

Q: Could you go over exactly how that happened?

Bill: We contacted some reporters to see if they ever heard of Riconosciuto. West Coast reporters. And Nichols had been interviewed by people who contacted him on the savings-and-loan matter. He talked to us a little bit about the savings-and-loan matter first time. That's why we contacted Mary Fricker and Steve Pizzo, who did this book called Inside Job.

Nancy: ... The Looting of America's Savings and Loans.

Bill: We got a phone call from Michael Riconosciuto and a small part of what he told us had to do savings-and-loan. It sounded like he knew a lot about the bilking of the savings-and-loans, too. Did they ever encounter him? They had interviewed him and they also had interviewed at least one or two other people that had worked on that Wackenhut/Cabazon joint venture. They introduced us to Peter Zokosky, and we interviewed him and he introduced us to Bob Nichols. We talked to Nichols. Nichols and Zokosky both have a low opinion of Riconosciuto but both verified everything he said in his affidavit except the PROMIS stuff.

We talked a number of times with Nichols and met with him on a couple of occasions, once here in Washington, once in California when we were out there for some other reason. And he met with Danny here and Danny talked to him quite a bit. He's more presentable than Riconosciuto in the sense of looking more middle-class, and bright, as is Riconosciuto. What he really is, I'm not sure. He obviously has had extensive dealings with intelligence agencies, both in our country and probably in other countries.

Q: So what was his relationship with Casolaro like?

Bill: He talked a lot to Casolaro.

Q: Did it grow along the same lines as the one with Riconosciuto? Did he accept everything he said?

Nancy: He did not accept...

Bill: That predicate is wrong. Casolaro did not accept everything that...

Nancy: ... anyone...

Bill: ... Riconosciuto said, that I said, or that Nichols said. What Casolaro believed about Nichols and Riconosciuto at the end, I don't know. I talked to Danny everyday, sometimes several times a day. I was intensely involved with him, but I couldn't tell you about at the end of his life what he thought about those two guys. At various times he thought Nichols had been part of his Octopus and had broken away from it. But I'm not at all sure that he still thought he had broken away from it at the end. I'm just not clear. He had a lot of misgivings about both of them, he found them both useful. They told him things that you won't get from the Justice Department, about the Justice Department. he never took anything at face value.

Q: Is it too far afield not to talk a little about PROMIS and when it first developed.

Bill: That's already documented. We can give you some documents on the history.

Q: Let me ask about the current status of the case. Is there an appeal left?

Nancy: No. We're back in court

Q: Back in court?

Nancy: The US Congress, the Senate, passed a unanimous Congressional reference sending the Inslaw case over to the government courts.

Q: Are you familiar with the fact that Webster Hubbell reopened the investigation?

Bill: He was appointed by Janet Reno to look into the responses to the Bua report, which was commissioned by her predecessor but released by Reno. So we dealt with Hubbell.

Q: Didn't Bua essentially close the investigation?

Bill: Bua was appointed by William Barr. In December of 1992, Barr recused himself of Inslaw because he was going back to his old law firm, which in the meantime had been representing Earl W. Brian in the Inslaw case. Even that was a little too much for a person like Barr, I guess. It didn't look too nice. So Bua supposedly didn't submit the report to Barr and then there was an interregnum between Barr's departure and the beginning of the Democrat confirmed as Attorney General. During that interregnum there was a Republican holdover of the Attorney General.

Q: Stuart Gerson.

Bill: Why Bua didn't submit it to Gerson is hard to explain. He supposedly submitted—I don't necessarily believe any of this stuff—submitted it to Reno when Reno was confirmed. Gerson was the Attorney General under Clinton for the first few months because Clinton couldn't find an Attorney General that could be confirmed. Gerson was the acting Attorney General but Hubbell was really running the department.

Q: What happened to Hubbell's investigation?

Bill: He didn't do an investigation. Hubbell did a whitewash.

Q: He just dropped it?

Bill: No, he pretended to do an investigation, focusing on the Danny Casolaro aspects.

We did a very detailed rebuttal of the Bua report a month after Reno released it and submitted it for rebuttal a month after Reno and Hubbell went to the House and Senate Judiciary committees. Then we met with Hubbell a few months later, in the fall of 1993, October of '93. That was the first and only time.

The rebuttal is striking in its disrobing of the Bua report. The Bua report is flimsy, on its own terms unconvincing, it contradicts the fully litigated findings of fact of two sitting federal judges and it contradicts the investigative findings of a major committee of congress. Just flatly contradicts all of that. So if you accept the Bua report, you have to accept simultaneously that the legal system is a joke. That not only can you have one set of litigated findings that are meaningless, but that you can have two sets of litigating findings that are meaningless, and a congressional investigation. While that's possible in theory, it's unlikely in practice. It's also alarming, and if the press had any brains they should have said, "Wait just a minute!" Because if that's true, we've got real problems.

Nancy: The judges, of course, had sworn testimony from both sides, in a court of law, whereas Bua talked only a few minutes to me and Bill. That was the end of discussion. And no key Justice people were put under oath.

Q: Was there not an offer made before the Bua report was issued to make a settlement?

Bill: Bua will lie about it. You ought to ask him. Bua has denied that he made an offer, and he's a distinguished former judge who probably wouldn't lie. But Bua called Elliot Richardson and said to him, "Have you given any thought to a global settlement figure?" He did this in November or December of 1992 when Barr was still Attorney General. And Elliot Richardson explained to him that it's hard to come up with a global settlement when your own Justice Department won't candidly discuss the scope of what they have done. What is the scope of the damages? What is the relative magnitude of the damages? How many copies have you made of this software and what else have you done with it?

Q: What was the dollar figure at that point?

Bill: He thought that Attorney General Barr would approve a settlement of $25 million quickly if he would make such a proposal. He also told three different reporters that he was considering recommending this in his report. The reporters were being used as trial balloons for us. In the same time frame, the fall of 1992, he was considering recommending that the Department of Justice pay Inslaw twenty five to fifty million dollars. And when he mentioned $25 million to Elliot Richardson, one of the reporters, an investigative producer at CNN, said he means fifty.

Q: So the whole impetus had to come from you. These were just suggestions that Bua was dropping.

Bill: Elliot said that he was a little surprised that the criminal investigator is the civil negotiator.

Nancy: We had given the evidence of broad malfeasance in the department and to have the response be, "How much do you want?" we felt was inappropriate for someone who was supposedly an investigator.

Bill: It's a farce.

Q: Now Bua denies it all.

Bill: He denied it to the press and then Elliot offered to make available these detailed contemporaneous notes of the various conversations and then he shut up. He didn't talk about it anymore.

Q: All that happened before the report was issued.

Bill: That's right.

Q: So the report comes out and that supposedly settles it or was there an appeal after that?

Bill: But it can't settle it. It's the Justice Department exonerating itself.

Q: What I'm trying to determine is where Hubbell tried to focus the investigation, the appeal.

Nancy: Appeal is the wrong word. This isn't a court. Bua is not a judge. He's a former judge hired by Barr using Justice department lawyers.

Bill: Paid by Barr and reporting to Barr. That's not a judge.

Nancy: But it gives the coloration of a judicial finding.

Bill: But he is a lawyer for Attorney General Barr. He cannot put something down on paper, he can't do anything without his client Bill Barr. So what happens is that that report is released by Reno in March and she appoints another person with the honorific title of judge. Judge Hubbell will now review any problems that people have with the Bua report. So we submitted our rebuttal and we met with them in October. And we acknowledged that there were two areas of problems with the Bua report. Not problems, but two pieces of unfinished business...

Nancy: Two that required further investigation, because our rebuttal made it pretty clear that this report was ludicrous on its face.

Bill: And the two that he had acknowledged Bua hadn't done a good enough job on were Danny Casolaro and whether the FBI was using our software. So that's what he initially acknowledged that he would look into.

Q: Did he make a public statement of some sort?

Bill: Well, he told us.

Nancy: We really don't want to go into what Hubbell said to us. We don't think that we should.

Q: The only reason I ask is that when they originally announced that they were going to reopen the original investigation, very few newspapers reported on it all.

Nancy: Actually, reopening the investigation they didn't. They said Bua had done a good job. And so the only two areas that they would look further at were the ones we mentioned. On those they ended up siding with the Bua report also.

Q: That Danny Casolaro committed suicide and that there was no malfeasance on the part of the FBI.

Nancy: That the FBI software was not our software.

Bill: You have to understand that this is like ... the former Justice department lawyer who is in the front page of the New York Times and Washington Post today, Michael Abell, who has just been indicted for obstruction of justice with regard to the Bolivian Cali cartel. It is no different than for that person to say "I was in the Justice Department for seventeen years and I am issuing a report that finds me innocent." Thank you, Mr. Abell. the Justice Department is the defendant. The institution is the defendant. It is the same institution that is sitting in judgement on itself and contradicting the results of every single independent review of its conduct. In other words, the bankruptcy court, the US District court, the House Judiciary committee, the Senate permanent investigations subcommittee, all of those independent tribunals are wrong and we're right about ourselves. We're blameless. So when you look at it that way...

Q: But when you're talking about Hubbell's investigation...

Bill: Hubbell is the Justice Department.

Q: But it's a whole different set of personnel than these other investigations.

Nancy: Not really. Same career people.

Q: One of the most alarming things about the whole business is Hubbell's connection to Park-On-Meter and how Riconosciuto makes claims to be connected to Park-on-Meter. It's all such an inbred thing. The people that were involved in all this in the first place do seem to be Republicans—Earl Brian, Ed Meese and Reagan—and here, a new administration, Democrats, different people and they're all connected to it too.

Bill: Well, if you follow Mena, which I'm sure you have, they seem to have been a kind of partner to Reagan/Bush administration on some of these covert things.

Q: Did you see a lot of evidence for that connected to your problems? Did you know about Park-On-Meter?

Nancy: We read about it. But you look at the Hubbell-Reno investigation, or handling of Inslaw, I should say, because it was no real investigation, when the Congress said let's get it to an independent tribunal. Last fall, Charlie Rose introduced, last summer, actually, that they would send the case to another independent tribunal and while it was in committee, Reno rushed a letter to committee members to vote against it and summarizing their report which they hadn't even copied and made available. So intense was their effort to keep us out of court again. You have to ask, why are they so intent, if there is nothing to it? What do they to lose by having people looking at this case again?

Bill: There were two people we knew in the lobbying effort in the House of Representatives last fall to try to keep us from getting back to court, Edwin Meese and Janet Reno, personally.

Nancy: And so when it was re-introduced this spring by Senator Hatch it passed by the unanimous consent of the Senate.

Q: Is it their point that the software that is being used now by Interpol, the Mossad, the FBI and so on, is not PROMIS?

Bill: They do not acknowledge any of this.

Q: I know one of the failures of the Bua report is that it didn't do a code comparison. I take it that Hubbell investigation didn't do one either.

Bill: No.

Nancy: We haven't been anywhere near the FBI's software.

Bill: The US Attorney's stuff, that's what the court case was about. That's all we knew about at the time. The US Attorney's office have never paid us for the software. So we used the subpoena power and got the software and compared it with our privately financed enhancements, the records of the department, who paid for it and all that, and we proved at the time of the trial we did not know that the software had been disseminated outside the US Attorney's office. We didn't find that out until subsequent years. First of all, Bua hired a professor at Georgetown University, the computer science department, the head of the department. She's the one who declined to compare the code and made a fatuous statement that PROMIS tracks judicial proceedings and the FBI system tracks investigations, so they couldn't possible be the same software. Just a fatuous comment.

Our software tracks investigations at the state and local level, all over the United States. That's a stupid thing to say.

Then Hubbell hired a new professor from MIT, and they offered to have us attend his examination of the code. But they made it clear to us that we would not be permitted to look at the code he would look at, the FBI code. We told them that we were not interested in pretending to support another phony examination. If there was going to be any credibility, the people who developed the PROMIS code have to be able to see that code. What are you afraid of in letting us look at it? We don't mind that you have your own experts there, but we want to see it. We don't, frankly, trust the government and we wouldn't believe anything the Justice Department said under any administration.

Q: Did they respond to that at all?

Bill: They said no, you can't look at it. So then they had their MIT professor say it's not the same code and who knows what he looked at?

Q: Are you familiar with this company in Little Rock, Arkansas called Systematics, Inc.?

Bill: Yes.

Q: The story there is that somehow PROMIS has been applied to the banking industry. Do you know anything about it?

Bill: We are fairly confidant that it was installed in the World Bank in 1983 and the International Monetary Fund. Danny Casolaro introduced us to two former computer employees at the World Bank who told us all of this. There have been published articles in the international banking regulator newsletter that independently verified that. So if you put it in the World Bank and the International Monetary fund, it's not likely that you've just put it there. Any effort to take software as flexible as it is, you have to really think through how you're going to use it in a different application area and think about how you're going to use it in banking and then just put it in one bank, that doesn't make sense. So the hardest evidence we have has to do with the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, but logic supports the idea that it is much more widely used.

Q: You hear a lot of different things about the way PROMIS has been applied. There has even been a report that one of its earliest uses was to extrapolate Soviet sub launches out of the Arctic ice.

Bill: I haven't heard that one.

Q: You haven't?

Bill: There was supposedly an application by the military, that it was out on loan from the Justice Department.

Nancy: The software wouldn't launch things.

Q: No, the story is that it had the ability to track...

Nancy: It does have that ability. It can track anything.

Q: They apparently had a very difficult time prior to using it, using whatever it was they used, tracking submarines through the Arctic ice. The Soviets would just go in there and they would lose track of them.

Bill: We are fairly confidant that they use PROMIS on the nuclear submarines to track other submarines. They call it PROMIS.

Nancy: It doesn't do the tracking. You give it the information to make it keep track of your information. It has no capacity to do the tracking itself.

Bill: It's just keeping track of the tracking transactions, where you last saw it, when, the last sighting.

Q: It doesn't extrapolate from there? That's the rumor, why PROMIS is so attractive to people, is that it has great predictive capabilities.

Bill: Not really.

Nancy: It depends on how you use the information you have. It organizes it for you and it's valuable that way, but it's up to the human being using it to go from there.

Q: Now you have two brothers in St. Louis, right? And one of them was the secretary to the police board in the early 1970s?

Bill: I don't know what years anymore. He was secretary of the police board once.

Q: He was there at a time when they implemented something called REGIS. Is that connected to PROMIS?

Bill: No. He created REGIS.

Q: A different kind of software altogether?

Nancy: REGIS isn't software. It's an organization.

Bill: Regional Justice Information System.

Q: So you say you have never seen what the FBI uses. Have you seen a demonstration of the software of any of the groups that supposedly have PROMIS, like the Mossad or the Mounties, or whatever?

Bill: Oh no, no, they won't let us.

Nancy: We'd love to see a demonstration. Although the demonstration isn't...

Bill: You have to look at the source code.

Nancy: That's what was wrong with the professor at Georgetown, saying, "I just looked at the screen and I don't need to see any more." That's ludicrous.

Q: So do you still own PROMIS? Or does the Justice Department?

Bill: Why would the Justice Department own it? Because they stole it? You think that's how it works? If I steal your glasses, they're mine?

Q: Of course, you're right.

Nancy: If you make a copy of the Lotus software, you don't own the software. You just have a copy.

Q: So you still make PROMIS available to your clients?

Bill: We sell it.

Nancy: We don't give it away. And the software is always changing. That's what we're about here, is developing new software, adding to it, creating new enhancements to it, keeping up with the times.

Q: Does it have a version, like PROMIS 1.7?

Nancy: You can call it that, but it doesn't matter.

Q: Who are your clients? If the Justice Department supplying everyone with it...

Bill: We don't sell it to intelligence agencies. And we don't sell to the World Bank and International Monetary Fund. We sell to state and local courts, prosecutors. We sell to big corporations. But we don't sell to US and foreign intelligence agencies.

Nancy: You may be thinking of a smaller program. It's five hundred thousand lines of code approximately. So it's not something you easily copy and disseminate. It's a complicated, sophisticated system.

Q: Are you familiar at all with Casolaro's investigation of Hughes Aircraft? That's one of the theories, that in investigating Inslaw and the Octopus, he just kind of brushed up against manufacturing fraud involving Hughes Aircraft and that led to his death.

Nancy: What he brushed up against was someone who was interested in Hughes Aircraft, who used to work for it, Bill Turner. As you may know, when a reporter works on a story, or even for Inslaw having a story, everybody and his brother who has some kind of problem think maybe they can handle my problem. So Bill Turner went to Danny hoping to get Danny interested in Bill Turner's problem at Hughes Aircraft. And that's how he got into that.

Q: You have no reason to believe there was more to it than that?

Nancy: What do you mean by more than that? That's how he came into Hughes Aircraft. He met with Turner the night before he died and Turner had given him, according to Turner, a stack of documents.

Bill: I don't think there is anything particular to Hughes Aircraft. That may all be true or not true, I don't know. But in setting out to investigate the Justice Department's theft of PROMIS, this is the point Nancy made, he ended up picking up stones and finding stuff about BCCI, about the October Surprise, sales of high technology to Iraq, to Saddam Hussein, before the war, and about Iran-contra, and I think that reason he did is that some of the same people are involved with all of these things, making money. They don't say, "Let's do something bad. Let's make some money." That's what Danny told me this whole thing was about, people set out to make money by selling drugs, weapons, stolen software.

Nancy: I think that when he died, a lot of the headlines and news shows said, "Reporter Investigating BCCI" because BCCI had just broken on to the scene. That meant something to someone. But what we've told you is actually what happened.

Q: So you are convinced that he was murdered.

Bill: We think that there has never been an honest investigation of what happened to him and that there are all of the indications that we are aware of strongly suggesting that he was murdered. But we're not saying that OK, there—accept that he was murdered. We're saying, get out of the way and let an independent investigation, by an independent counsel...

Nancy: Who doesn't have any interest...

Bill: ... who doesn't have anything to hide, do an investigation. Let it take place.

Nancy: There's too many questions about his death for any reasonable person to say, yes, this was suicide. And there's a lot of misinformation out there that worry about his finances. We didn't see it. He was not a guy who gave a damn about his finances. We know other things, that his family had money, offered him money.

Bill: Friends offered him money. He didn't kill himself for that.

Q: So do you believe it was because of his investigation of the Inslaw case, or do you think that with all these things, it could have been anything, therefore, let's find out.

Nancy: We can't know. If we knew, we wouldn't be wondering any longer. But he certainly was into a lot of things during his investigation. BCCI is a major, major scandal.

Bill: And it looks increasingly convincing to us that the PROMIS software was installed throughout the BCCI empire to keep track of wire transfers of money and letters of credit so that NSA could monitor. I believe that the PROMIS software was used in all kinds of things. There are two things knitting all this together. One is that the same people are making money in all these different kinds of businesses. And the other thing that is in many instances PROMIS was the useful way of keeping track of everything that was happening.

APPENDIX 2:

Casolaro's Newsclippings File

The clipping references below are from a database of Danny Casolaro's known clippings as compiled by an intern working at Investigative Reporters and Editors (IRE).

SUBJECT: ARMS INDUSTRY: RESEARCH AND PROCUREMENT
FILE: BULL, GERALD
NO.: PR/AI/BG-02
YEAR: 90
SUMMARY: FAME MAGAZINE ARTICLE ABOUT MURDERED BALLISTICS GENIUS GERALD BULL WHO ATTEMPTED TO BUILD A SUPER GUN FOR IRAQ.
KEYWORDS: GOLDNER, PROJECT BABYLON, PROJECT HARP, SADDAM HUSSEIN, CHARLES MURPHY

SUBJECT: ARMS INDUSTRY
FILE: BULL, GERALD
NO.: PR\AI\BG-01
YEAR: 81
SUMMARY: MONTREAL GAZETTE PROFILE OF WEAPONS SCIENTIST BULL AFTER HIS RELEASE FROM JAIL FOR SHIPPING WEAPONS TO SOUTH AFRICA
KEYWORDS: SPACE RESEARCH CORP, JOSHUA NKOMO, LES POUDIERES REUNIES BELGIQUE, HARP

SUBJECT: ARMS INDUSTRY
FILE: BULL, GERALD
NO.: PR\AI\BG-03
YEAR: 90
SUMMARY: SAN FRANCISCO CHRONICLE ARTICLE ON HOW MURDERED BALLISTICS GENIUS SUPPLIED SADDAM HUSSEIN
KEYWORDS: MCGILL UNIVERSITY, HARP, GHN-45, PROJECT BABYLON, ADVANCED TECHNOLOGY

SUBJECT: ARMS INDUSTRY
FILE: BULL, GERALD
NO.: PR\AI\BG-04
YEAR: 91
SUMMARY: WASHINGTON POST EDITORIAL ON AMERICAN NON-INTERVENTION ON BALLISTIC GENIUS' DESIGN AND SALE OF SUPERGUN TO IRAQ
KEYWORDS: MALONE, SPACE RESEARCH CORP, GHN-45, ERFB, VOEST ALPINE STEEL

SUBJECT: ARMS INDUSTRY
FILE: BULL, GERALD
NO.: PR\AI\BG-05
YEAR: 9?
SUMMARY: NEW YORK TIMES MAGAZINE PROFILE OF MURDERED BALLISTICS GENIUS
KEYWORDS: KEYWORDS:PROJECT BABYLON, MOSSAD, HARP, POUDRERIES REUNIES DE BELGIQUE

SUBJECT: ARMS INDUSTRY
FILE: BULL, GERALD
NO.: PR\AI\BG-06
YEAR: 93
SUMMARY: MACLEANS MAGAZINE PROFILE ABOUT "ROCKET SCIENTIST" GERALD BULL
KEYWORDS: CANADIAN ARMAMENT RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT ESTABLISHMENT

SUBJECT: ARMS INDUSTRY
FILE: BULL, GERALD
NO.: PR\AI\BG-07
YEAR: ?
SUMMARY: UNIDENTIFIED NEWSPAPER ARTICLE ON HOW SUPERGUN DESIGNER WAS FUNDED BY THE ATLANTA GEORGIA BRANCH OF BANCA NAZIONALE DEL LAVORO
KEYWORDS: FRIEDMAN, BNL, SPACE RESEARCH CORP, HENRY GONZALEZ, TDG, TEG

SUBJECT: ARMS INDUSTRY
FILE: IRAN/IRAQ PROCUREMENT
NO.: PR\AI\IP-01
YEAR: 88
SUMMARY: L.A. TIMES ARTICLE ON ORIGIN OF BOMBER AND WEAPON USED IN KILLING OF MARINE BATTALION IN 1983
KEYWORDS: CIA, FBI, HAFEZ ASSAD, SMILING DEATH, HEZBOLLAH, ISLAMIC JIHAD, ALVIN P. ADAMS

SUBJECT: ARMS INDUSTRY
FILE: IRAN/IRAQ PROCUREMENT
NO.: PR\AI\IP-02
YEAR: 90
SUMMARY: JACK ANDERSON COLUMN ON CHILEAN ARMS MERCHANT CARLOS CARDOEN'S DEALINGS WITH SADDAM HUSSEIN
KEYWORDS: IRAQ, CHILE, CLUSTER BOMBS, CARDOEN INDUSTRIES, GLOBAL HELICOPTER TECHNOLOGY INC.

SUBJECT: ARMS INDUSTRY
FILE: IRAN/IRAQ PROCUREMENT
NO.: PR\AI\IP-03
YEAR: 90
SUMMARY: JACK ANDERSON COLUMN ON CARDOEN INDUSTRIES AND MYSTERIOUS DEATH OF A BRITISH JOURNALIST.
KEYWORDS: JONATHAN MOYLE, ANTHONY MOYLE, JORGE OCHOA, IRAQ

SUBJECT: ARMS INDUSTRY
FILE: IRAN/IRAQ PROCUREMENT
NO.: PR\AI\IP-04
YEAR: 90
SUMMARY: VILLAGE VOICE ARTICLE—"GULFGATE: HOW THE US SECRETLY ARMED IRAQ
KEYWORDS: MURRAY WAAS, SARKIS SOGHANALIAN, WILLIAM EAGLETON, HAWK, CIA

SUBJECT: ARMS INDUSTRY
FILE: IRAN/IRAQ PROCUREMENT
NO.: PR\AI\IP-05
YEAR: 91
SUMMARY: WALL STREET JOURNAL—US CUSTOMS EXAMINE MIAMI DEVELOPMENT COMPANY FOR ILLEGAL ARMS SALES TO IRAQ.
KEYWORDS: CARLOS CARDOEN, INDUSTRIAS CARDOEN S.A., SWISSCO DEVELOPMENT CO.

SUBJECT: ARMS INDUSTRY
FILE: IRAN/IRAQ PROCUREMENT
NO.: PR\AI\IP-06
YEAR: 90
SUMMARY: UNKNOWN NEWSPAPER—IRAQ BRAGS OF NEW MISSILE AND ARMS INDUSTRY EVALUATES HUSSEIN'S CLAIM.
KEYWORDS: DON KERR, TAMMUZ MISSILE, FLIGHT INTERNATIONAL, FUEL-AIR EXPLOSIVE, ARGENTINA, EGYPT

SUBJECT: ARMS INDUSTRY
FILE: IRAN/IRAQ PROCUREMENT
NO.: PR\AI\IP-07
YEAR: 90
SUMMARY: MIAMI HERALD—PENTAGON DISPUTES REPORT OF NEW IRAQI MISSILES
KEYWORDS: FUEL AIR EXPLOSIVE

SUBJECT: ARMS INDUSTRY
FILE: IRAN/IRAQ PROCUREMENT
NO.: PR\AI\IP-08
YEAR: 90
SUMMARY: ATIN AMERICAN REGIONAL REPORTS—CHILE'S CARDOEN CLAIMS TO NO LONGER EXPORT WEAPONS TO IRAQ
KEYWORDS: ADVANCED FUSE TECHNOLOGY, JONATHAN MOYLE, BELL HELICOPTERS, GEC-MARCONI

SUBJECT: ARMS INDUSTRY
FILE: IRAN/IRAQ PROCUREMENT
NO.: PR\AI\IP-09
YEAR: ?
SUMMARY: TIMES STAFF PROFILE ON CARLOS CARDOEN, CHILEAN ARMS EXPORTER
KEYWORDS: IRAQ, CLUSTER BOMB,

SUBJECT: ARMS INDUSTRY
FILE: IRAN/IRAQ PROCUREMENT
NO.: PR\AI\IP-10
YEAR: ?
SUMMARY: LOS ANGELES TIMES—US CONFIRMS THAT IRAQ HAS POWERFUL NEW GAS BOMB
KEYWORDS: FUEL AIR EXPLOSIVE, HENRY SOKOLSKI (CASOLARO NOTES JOHN BRODER-293-4650 MELISSA HEALY 213-237-5000)

SUBJECT: ARMS INDUSTRY
FILE: IRAN/IRAQ PROCUREMENT
NO.: PR\AI\IP-11
YEAR: 90
SUMMARY: ASSOCIATED PRESS—ARI BEN MENASHE ACQUITTED OF ILLEGAL ARMS SALE CHARGE
KEYWORDS: ARMS EXPORT CONTROL ACT, RICHARD ST. FRANCIS, C-130E, YITZHAK SHAMIR

SUBJECT: ARMS INDUSTRY
FILE: KHASHOGGI, ADNAN
NO.: PR\AI\KA-01
YEAR: 90
SUMMARY: THE HOUSTON POST—NEW YORK JURY CLEARS IMELDA MARCOS AND KHASHOGGI OF LOOTING AND CONCEALING FILIPINO ASSETS.
KEYWORDS: GERRY SPENCE, OTTO OBERMAIER, PHILIPPINES

SUBJECT: ARMS INDUSTRY
FILE: KHASHOGGI, ADNAN
NO.: PR\AI\KA-02
YEAR: 90
SUMMARY: POST ENERGY—KHASSHOGI ANNOUNCES JOINT VENTURE WITH NRG RESOURCES INC.
KEYWORDS: OIL, NATURAL GAS, PHOENIX OIL & GAS CO., BILL TURNEY, JERRY ALLEN

SUBJECT: ARMS INDUSTRY
FILE: KHASHOGGI, ADNAN
NO.: PR\AI\KA-03
YEAR: ?
SUMMARY: UNKNOWN MAGAZINE—PROFILE ON KHASSHOGI'S ROAD FROM RICHES TO RUIN
KEYWORDS: TRIAD AMERICA CORPORATION, SALT LAKE CITY, EMMANUEL FLOOR, TRIAD INTERNATIONAL

SUBJECT: ARMS INDUSTRY
FILE: RESEARCH & MISC.
NO.: PR\AI\RM-01
YEAR: 71
SUMMARY: THE PRESS DEMOCRAT—SONOMA ENGINEERING AND RESEARCH INC. ANNOUNCES THEIR FIRM WILL EXPAND
KEYWORDS: RADAR, ARTHUR B. VANE, VERNON E. DUNN, MICROWAVE

SUBJECT: ARMS INDUSTRY
FILE: RESEARCH & MISC.
NO.: PR\AI\RM-02
YEAR: 83
SUMMARY: THE INTERNATIONAL ADVISOR—"TITANIUM: A STRATEGIC METAL" DESCRIBES MILITARY USES OF THE METAL AND THE THREAT FROM THE USSR
KEYWORDS: PRATT AND WHITNEY, SOVIET UNION, AUSTRALIA, SOUTH AFRICA, CONSOLIDATED RUTILE LTD.

SUBJECT: ARMS INDUSTRY
FILE: RESEARCH & MISC.
NO.: PR\AI\RM-03
YEAR: 83
SUMMARY: BRISBANE COURIER—THE QUEENSLAND GOVERNMENT GAVE FINANCIAL BACKING TO A MUNITIONS FACTORY LINKED WITH CORRUPT "PAINTERS AND DOCKERS"
KEYWORDS: AUSTRALIA, COSTIGAN COMMISSION

SUBJECT: ARMS INDUSTRY
FILE: RESEARCH & MISC.
NO.: PR\AI\RM-04
YEAR: 89
SUMMARY: TIME MAGAZINE—A REVIEW OF INDIA'S ARMS BUILDUP AND ITS CHANGING ROLE IN WORLD POLITICS.
KEYWORDS: MALDIVES STRIKE, NUCLEAR WEAPONS, BALLISTIC-MISSILES, FIJI, RESEARCH AND ANALYSIS WING

SUBJECT: ARMS INDUSTRY
FILE: RESEARCH & MISC.
NO.: PR\AI\RM-05
YEAR: 91
SUMMARY: WASHINGTON POST—NAVY ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOUND GUILTY OF SELLING GOVERNMENT SECRETS TO DEFENSE FIRMS
KEYWORDS: OPERATION ILL WIND, DICK THORNBURGH, FBI, MAZLAT LTD., ISRAEL, SPERRY CORP., MARTIN MARIETTA

SUBJECT: CABAZON ARMS AND WACKENHUT
FILE: CABAZON RESERVATION
NO.: PR\CW\CR-01
YEAR: 81
SUMMARY: SACRAMENTO BEE—OVERVIEW OF CONFLICTS ON THE CABAZON RESERVATION DUE TO GAMBLING CASINOS AND THE LEADERSHIP OF JOHN PHILLIPS NICHOLS, A NON-INDIAN
KEYWORDS: PRO-PLAN INTERNATIONAL, MAFIA, HOOPA RESERVATION

SUBJECT: CABAZON ARMS AND WACKENHUT
FILE: CABAZON RESERVATION
NO.: PR\CW\CR-02
YEAR: 81
SUMMARY: SACRAMENTO BEE—PROFILE OF SLAIN INDIAN WHO PROTESTED THE MANAGEMENT OF THE CABAZON RESERVATION BY JOHN PHILLIPS NICHOLS
KEYWORDS: BUREAU OF INDIAN AFFAIRS, CASINO, GAMBLING, INDIO

SUBJECT: CABAZON ARMS AND WACKENHUT
FILE: CABAZON RESERVATION
NO.: PR\CW\CR-03
YEAR: 82
SUMMARY: LOS ANGELES TIMES—PHILIP ARTHUR THOMPSON IS HELD IN CONTEMPT FOR REFUSING TO TESTIFY IN A MURDER TRIAL. (CASOLARO NOTE: THOMPSON WORKED FOR CIA, ASSOCIATED WITH JOHN PHILIP NICHOLS.

SUBJECT: CABAZON ARMS AND WACKENHUT
FILE: CABAZON RESERVATION
NO.: PR\CW\CR-04
YEAR: 82
SUMMARY: LOS ANGELES TIMES—PHILIP ARTHUR THOMPSON RECANTS PREVIOUS TESTIMONY IMPLYING GUILT OF MURDER DEFENDANT.
KEYWORDS: WILLY WISELY

SUBJECT: CABAZON ARMS AND WACKENHUT
FILE: CABAZON RESERVATION
NO.: PR\CW\CR-05
YEAR: 82
SUMMARY: LOS ANGELES TIMES—ROBBERY VICTIM OF PHILIP ARTHUR THOMPSON AND WILLY WISELY HAS HAD LIFE DISRUPTED WITH PROTECTIVE CUSTODY WHILE THE ALLEGED ROBBERS ARE FREE. FBI ALLEGEDLY INTERVENED ON BEHALF OF THOMPSON TO HELP HIM AVOID JAIL.
KEYWORDS: ARTHUR SUEL, JOHN ABBOTT, CANADA

SUBJECT: CABAZON ARMS AND WACKENHUT
FILE: CABAZON RESERVATION
NO.: PR\CW\CR-06
YEAR: 82
SUMMARY: LOS ANGELES TIMES—WISELY CONVICTED OF MURDER AND DECIDES TO FIGHT FOR LIFE SENTENCE. PHILIP ARTHUR THOMPSON IS FREE ON BAIL.
KEYWORDS: ARTHUR SUEL

SUBJECT: CABAZON ARMS AND WACKENHUT
FILE: CABAZON RESERVATION
NO.: PR\CW\CR-07
YEAR: 83
SUMMARY: LOS ANGELES MAGAZINE—A PROFILE OF JOHN PHILIP NICHOLS AND HIS EFFECT ON THE CABAZON RESERVATION.
KEYWORDS: BINGO, GAMBLING, ALVAREZ, INDIO

SUBJECT: CABAZON ARMS AND WACKENHUT
FILE: CABAZON RESERVATION
NO.: PR\CW\CR-08
YEAR: 84
SUMMARY: DAILY NEWS, INDIO—FORMER CABAZON SECURITY CHIEF SAYS HE HAS BEEN GIVEN IMMUNITY BY THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE IN EXCHANGE FOR TESTIMONY ABOUT THREE MURDERS
KEYWORDS: PETER ZOKOSKY, WAYNE REEDER, JOHN PHILIP NICHOLS, COVERT ACTION

SUBJECT: CABAZON ARMS AND WACKENHUT
FILE: CABAZON RESERVATION
NO.: PR\CW\CR-09
YEAR: 85
SUMMARY: DAILY NEWS, INDIO—JOHN PHILIP NICHOLS ARRESTED FOR SOLICITATION AND CONSPIRACY TO COMMIT MURDER. FORMER SECURITY HEAD ALLEGES THAT NICHOLS ALSO INVOLVED WITH COVERT ACTIVITIES IN CENTRAL AND SOUTH AMERICA.
KEYWORDS: HIT MEN, EL SALVADOR, GAMBLING,"THE SHOW AND TELL" EQUIPMENT SHOW

SUBJECT: CABAZON ARMS AND WACKENHUT
FILE: CABAZON RESERVATION
NO.: PR\CW\CR-10
YEAR: 85
SUMMARY: LOS ANGELES TIMES—JOHN PHILIP NICHOLS ARRESTED FOR SOLICITING MURDER.
KEYWORDS: JOHN PAUL NICHOLS, INDIO, JAMES HUGHES, PETER ZOKOSKY

SUBJECT: CABAZON ARMS AND WACKENHUT
FILE: CABAZON RESERVATION
NO.: PR\CW\CR-11
YEAR: 85
SUMMARY: THE PRESS-ENTERPRISE—AN OVERVIEW OF JOHN PHILIP NICHOLS DETRACTORS AND SUPPORTERS.
KEYWORDS: ARTHUR WELMAS, LINDA STREETER, JAMES HUGHES, PAUL MORASCA, NASA, WACKENHUT, A.R. FRYE, ARMS MANUFACTURE, PAUL MORASCA, CIA, FBI

SUBJECT: CABAZON ARMS AND WACKENHUT
FILE: CABAZON RESERVATION
NO.: PR\CW\CR-12
YEAR: 85
SUMMARY: UNKNOWN NEWSPAPER—ALLEGATIONS THAT JOHN PHILIP NICHOLS HELD WEAPONS DEMONSTRATIONS FOR EDEN PASTORA (THE CONTRAS).
KEYWORDS: COMMANDER ZERO, MICHAEL RICONOSCIUTO, PAUL MORASCA, PETER ZOKOSKY

SUBJECT: CABAZON ARMS AND WACKENHUT
FILE: CABAZON RESERVATION
NO.: PR\CW\CR-12
YEAR: 85
SUMMARY: 20/20 TRANSCRIPT—A GERALDO RIVERA INVESTIGATION INTO GAMBLING AND MURDER ON THE CABAZON RESERVATION.
KEYWORDS: JOHN PHILIP NICHOLS, LINDA STREETER, FRED ALVAREZ, ROCCO ZANGARI

SUBJECT: CABAZON ARMS AND WACKENHUT
FILE: CABAZON RESERVATION
NO.: PR\CW\CR-13
YEAR: 88
SUMMARY: SACRAMENTO BEE—VARIOUS INDIAN RESERVATIONS INCLUDING THE CABAZON RESERVATION, PLAN TO USE A SATELLITE-LINK TO CREATE A GIANT BINGO GAME.
KEYWORDS: GAMBLING, JOHN PAUL NICHOLS

SUBJECT: CABAZON ARMS AND WACKENHUT
FILE: CABAZON RESERVATION
NO.: PR\CW\CR-14
YEAR: 85
SUMMARY: SACRAMENTO BEE—RESERVATION BINGO PROFITS ARE GOING TO OTHER THAN NATIVE AMERICANS. MENTIONS CABAZON RESERVATION AND MAFIA INVOLVEMENT.
KEYWORDS: JOHN PHILIP NICHOLS, JOHN PAUL NICHOLS, ROCCO ZANGARI

SUBJECT: CABAZON ARMS AND WACKENHUT
FILE: CABAZON RESERVATION
NO.: PR\CW\CR-15
YEAR: ?
SUMMARY: UNKNOWN NEWSPAPER, ON ZOKOSKY CORP. STATIONARY—PHILIP ARTHUR THOMPSON SENTENCED TO LIFE IMPRISONMENT FOR TWO TRUCK HIJACKINGS.

SUBJECT: CABAZON ARMS AND WACKENHUT
FILE: CABAZON RESERVATION
NO.: PR\CW\CR-16
YEAR: 91
SUMMARY: YORKSHIRE POST (ENGLAND)—INSLAW COURT DATE WILL REVEAL CABAZON RESERVATION ALLEGEDLY USED TO DEVELOP FUEL AIR EXPLOSIVES AND OTHER MILITARY HARDWARE, SOME USED BY THE CONTRAS. USES MICHAEL RICONOSCIUTO AS SOURCE.
KEYWORDS: PROMIS, EARL BRIAN, EDWIN MEESE, PETER VIDENIEKS, WILLIAM HAMILTON

SUBJECT: CABAZON ARMS AND WACKENHUT
FILE: WACKENHUT CORPORATION
NO.: PR\CW\WC-01
YEAR: 84
SUMMARY: WALL STREET JOURNAL—WACKENHUT CORP. INVESTORS APPROVE BUYOUT PLAN BY LEVERAGED INVESTORS.
KEYWORDS: GEORGE WACKENHUT, MERRILL LYNCH

SUBJECT: CABAZON ARMS AND WACKENHUT
FILE: WACKENHUT CORPORATION
NO.: PR\CW\WC-02
YEAR: 88
SUMMARY: MIAMI TODAY—AN INTERVIEW WITH GEORGE WACKENHUT, FOUNDER OF WACKENHUT CORP.

SUBJECT: CABAZON ARMS AND WACKENHUT
FILE: WACKENHUT CORPORATION
NO.: PR\CW\WC-03
YEAR: 89
SUMMARY: THE ASSOCIATION OF CITADEL MEN ALUMNI NEWS—A PROFILE OF WACKENHUT WORLDWIDE BY THE CO.'S DIRECTOR OF CORPORATE RELATIONS. MENTIONS BOARDMEMBERS CLARENCE KELLY, FRANK CARLUCCI, ADM. WILLIAM RABORN JR., ALL FROM VARIOUS GOVERNMENT INTELLIGENCE GROUPS.
KEYWORDS: FBI, CIA, DEFENSE INTELLIGENCE AGENCY

SUBJECT: CABAZON ARMS AND WACKENHUT
FILE: WACKENHUT CORPORATION
NO.: PR\CW\WC-04
YEAR: 90
SUMMARY: INVESTOR'S DAILY—WACKENHUT DIVERSIFIES INTO DOING BACKGROUND CHECKS, WEAPONS TESTING, AND AN INTERNATIONAL DETECTIVE AGENCY WHILE UPGRADING ITS BASIC SECURITY GUARD SERVICES.
KEYWORDS: PRISONS, STATE DEPARTMENT, GEORGE R. WACKENHUT

SUBJECT: CABAZON ARMS AND WACKENHUT
FILE: WACKENHUT CORPORATION
NO.: PR\CW\WC-05
YEAR: 90
SUMMARY: ANNE ARUNDEL COUNTY SUN—COUNTY HIRES WACKENHUT FOR PRISONER TRANSPORT.
KEYWORDS: WACKENHUT CUSTOM PROTECTION DIVISION

SUBJECT: CABAZON ARMS AND WACKENHUT
FILE: WACKENHUT CORPORATION
NO.: PR\CW\WC-06
YEAR: 90
SUMMARY: FORBES—WACKENHUT GROWTH IS UP DUE TO INCREASE IN CRIME. CO. HANDLES PRISON MANAGEMENT IN SEVERAL STATES AND SECURITY FOR NUCLEAR WEAPONS FACILITIES.
KEYWORDS: RICHARD WACKENHUT, CORAL GABLES

SUBJECT: CABAZON ARMS AND WACKENHUT
FILE: WACKENHUT CORPORATION
NO.: PR\CW\WC-07
YEAR: 89
SUMMARY: AUSTIN AMERICAN STATESMAN—ARTICLE EXAMINING WHETHER PRIVATE PRISONS ARE REALLY MORE EFFICIENTLY RUN. WACKENHUT IS ONE OF THE COMPANIES EXAMINED.

SUBJECT: GENETIC RESEARCH
FILE: GENETIC RESEARCH
NO.: PR\GR\GR-01
YEAR: 88
SUMMARY: SCIENCE NEWS—RESEARCH INDICATES THAT A SMALL PART OF THE Y CHROMOSOME MAY BE RESPONSIBLE FOR ACTUAL GENDER DETERMINATION. BUT ALL AGREE FURTHER STUDIES ARE NEEDED.
KEYWORDS: M.I.T.

SUBJECT: GENETIC RESEARCH
FILE: GENETIC RESEARCH
NO.: PR\GR\GR-02
YEAR: 89
SUMMARY: SCIENCE—THE COMMISSION OF EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COMMUNITY DECIDES TO DELAY THE START OF A HUMAN GENOME PROJECT IN EUROPE BECAUSE THE RESEARCH PLAN DOES NOT PAY ENOUGH ATTENTION TO ETHICAL AND SOCIAL IMPLICATIONS OF THE PROJECT.
KEYWORDS: FILIPINO PANDOLFI

SUBJECT: GENETIC RESEARCH
FILE: GENETIC RESEARCH
NO.: PR\GR\GR-03
YEAR: 89
SUMMARY: WASHINGTON POST HEALTH—AN OVERVIEW OF THE US HUMAN GENOME PROJECT, AN EFFORT TO IDENTIFY EVERY ONE OF THE ESTIMATED 100,000 GENES IN THE HUMAN BODY. THE EVENTUAL COMPLETION OF THE PROJECT SHOULD ALLOW SCIENTISTS TO ELIMINATE THE GENETIC ROOTS OF DISEASE.
KEYWORDS: COLD SPRING HARBOR LABORATORY, DNA, ROBERT MAYZIS, LOS ALAMOS

SUBJECT: GENETIC RESEARCH
FILE: GENETIC RESEARCH
NO.: PR\GR\GR-04
YEAR: 90
SUMMARY: THE WALL STREET JOURNAL—SCIENTISTS INSERT A HUMAN GENE LINKED WITH ARTHRITIS INTO A RAT. THE RAT SUBSEQUENTLY DEVELOPS ARTHRITIC SYMPTOMS.
KEYWORDS: HOWARD HUGHES MEDICAL INSTITUTE, HAROLD C. SIMMONS, LOCKHEED

SUBJECT: GENETIC RESEARCH
FILE: GENETIC RESEARCH
NO.: PR\GR\GR-05
YEAR: ?
SUMMARY: WALL STREET JOURNAL—RESEARCHERS HAVE ISOLATED A SPECIFIC GENE IN HUMANS AS MAKING THEM HIGHLY SUSCEPTIBLE TO CANCER. DESCRIBED AS A STARTLING RESULT OF THE NEWFOUND ABILITY TO MAP THE HUMAN GENOME.

SUBJECT: GENETIC RESEARCH
FILE: GENETIC RESEARCH
NO.: PR\GR\GR-06
YEAR: 89
SUMMARY: NEW YORK TIMES—MAJOR TECHNICAL ADVANCES ARE SPEEDING UP THE PROCESS OF MAPPING THE HUMAN GENOME.
KEYWORDS: DR. JAMES D. WATSON, DR. FRANCIS CRICK, DNA, COLD SPRING HARBOR LABORATORY

SUBJECT: GENETIC RESEARCH
FILE: GENETIC RESEARCH
NO.: PR\GR\GR-07
YEAR: ?
SUMMARY: UNKNOWN MAGAZINE—A PROFILE OF JAMES WATSON AND THE HUMAN GENOME PROJECT WHICH WILL ATTEMPT TO MAP ALL THE GENES ON EVERY HUMAN CHROMOSOME
KEYWORDS: CASOLARO NOTE: TO CASOLARO—ARTHUR PALLOTTA 703 524 1021 “DANNY—CANNOT THINK OF ONE PROJECT SO MASSIVE AND COMPARABLE TO “MAN IN THE MOON.”

SUBJECT: PERSIAN GULF WAR
FILE: GULF WAR
NO.: PR\GW\GW-03
YEAR: 3/15/91
SUMMARY: WASHINGTON POST—PROFILE OF DIPLOMAT APRIL GLASPIE WHO WAS ACCUSED OF GIVING THE "GREEN LIGHT" TO SADDAM HUSSEIN'S INVASION OF KUWAIT.

SUBJECT: PERSIAN GULF WAR
FILE: GULF WAR
NO.: PR\GW\GW-02
YEAR: 3/5/91
SUMMARY: VILLAGE VOICE—AN EXAMINATION OF US POLICY THAT ALLEGEDLY FORCED THE GULF WAR IN ORDER TO ULTIMATELY SECURE THE MIDDLE EAST FOR THE US AND OTHER GOVERNMENTS.
KEYWORDS: MARGARET THATCHER, KING HUSSEIN, CIA, JIDDA, KUWAIT

SUBJECT: PERSIAN GULF WAR
FILE: GULF WAR
NO.: PR\GW\GW-01
YEAR: 90
SUMMARY: BOOK EXCERPT "SADDAM HUSSEIN AND THE CRISIS IN THE GULF"—CHAPTER 9 'THE MANUFACTURE OF DEATH' DETAILS IRAQ'S ARMS PURCHASES AND THE GOVERNMENT POLICIES THAT MADE IT POSSIBLE. ALSO INCLUDES A LOOK AT HOW IRAQ MADE NON-MILITARY INVESTMENTS IN US CHEMICAL PLANTS THAT ACTUALLY SUPPLIED THE BUILDING BLOCKS TO ITS CHEMICAL WEAPONS EFFORT.
KEYWORDS: CHRISTOPHER CROWLEY, SAAD 16, WILLIAM H. WEBSTER, PFLAUNDLER CO., NUCLEAR WEAPONS

SUBJECT: PERSIAN GULF WAR
FILE: GULF WAR
NO.: PR\GW\GW-041
YEAR: 4/1991
SUMMARY: VANITY FAIR—A LOOK AT THE ASSASSINATION OF ABU AYAD, ARAFAT'S SECOND-IN-COMMAND IN THE P.L.O. ALSO AN EXAMINATION OF THE P.L.O.'S ROLE IN THE POST-GULF WAR MIDDLE EAST.
KEYWORDS: YASSIR ARAFAT, HAMZA ABU ZEID, IRAQ, CIA, SADDAM HUSSEIN

SUBJECT: GULF WAR
FILE: GULF WAR
NO.: PR\GW\GW-01
YEAR: 7/30/91
SUMMARY: VILLAGE VOICE—A REPORT THAT THE DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE FALSIFIED AND ALTERED 88 IRAQI EXPORT LICENSES SUBPOENAED BY A CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE. THE ACTS INCLUDED RELABELING AN INVENTORY OF US-MADE MILITARY TRUCKS AS "COMMERCIAL UTILITY CARGO TRUCKS."
KEYWORDS: SADDAM HUSSEIN, ROBERT GATES, RICHARD THORNBERG, CONSARC

SUBJECT: HAZARDOUS WASTE
FILE: CAROLINA
NO.: PR\HW\C-01
YEAR: 5/15/90
SUMMARY: CHARLOTTE OBSERVER—THE NUKEM AND THREMALKEN CO.'S STRESS THAT THEY HAVE RECEIVED ZERO VIOLATIONS FROM STATE REGULATORY AGENCIES FOR THEIR INCINERATOR PLANTS.

SUBJECT: HAZARDOUS WASTE
FILE: CAROLINA
NO.: PR\HW\C-02
YEAR: 8/5/90
SUMMARY: THE SALISBURY POST—AN COMPUTER ENGINEER CHALLENGES THE PLACEMENT OF A HAZARDOUS WASTE INCINERATOR IN HIS COUNTY
KEYWORDS: NUMEROUS NOTES WITH REGARD TO THE ARTICLE AND THE COMPANY AMERICAN NUKEM.

SUBJECT: HAZARDOUS WASTE
FILE: CAROLINA
NO.: PR\HW\C-03
YEAR: 8/9/90
SUMMARY: UNKNOWN PAPER—POSSIBLE ACTION MAY BE TAKEN BY THE DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND THE E.P.A. AGAINST VIOLATIONS AT A HAZARDOUS WASTE INCINERATOR. ALSO: "MARTIN IS ACCUSED OF PLAYING TWO SIDES"—NORTH CAROLINA'S GOVERNOR SUPPORTS ALABAMA'S BAN ON IMPORTING OF HAZARDOUS WASTE, BUT ALSO SAYS THAT THEREFORE N.C. MUST BUILD A WASTE INCINERATOR.

SUBJECT: HAZARDOUS WASTE
FILE: CAROLINA
NO.: PR\HW\C-04
YEAR: 9/12/90
SUMMARY: THE RALEIGH NEWS AND OBSERVER EDITORIAL—CONFLICTS OF INTEREST WITH CERTAIN STATE OFFICIALS SHOULD NOT DERAIL NORTH CAROLINA'S ATTEMPT TO FIND SAFE WASTE DISPOSAL.
KEYWORDS: SANDOZ CHEMICALS, CHEM-NUCLEAR INC.

SUBJECT: HAZARDOUS WASTE
FILE: CAROLINA
NO.: PR\HW\C-05
YEAR: 9/29/90
SUMMARY: THE CHARLOTTE OBSERVER—AN ENGINEER HIRED BY COUNTIES OPPOSED TO PLAYING HOST TO CHEMICAL WASTE COMPLEXES SAYS THE STATE MANIPULATED DATA IN SCREENING THE SOIL FOR THOSE COUNTIES, MAKING THE SITES ELIGIBLE FOR ACCEPTING THE PLANT.
KEYWORDS: WESTINGHOUSE ENVIRONMENTAL AND GEOTECHNICAL SERVICES, PEI ASSOCIATES

SUBJECT: HAZARDOUS WASTE
FILE: CAROLINA
NO.: PR\HW\C-06
YEAR: 10/14/90
SUMMARY: GREENSBORO NEWS GUEST COLUMN "EXPLORING ALTERNATIVES TO INCINERATION"
KEYWORDS: THERMALKEM, HAZARDOUS WASTE MANAGEMENT COMMISSION

SUBJECT: HAZARDOUS WASTE
FILE: CAROLINA
NO.: PR\HW\C-07
YEAR: ?
SUMMARY: UNKNOWN NEWSPAPER—AN INCINERATOR NORTH CAROLINA GOVERNOR JIM MARTIN PREVIOUSLY LISTED AS GOOD HAS PREVIOUSLY PAID MORE THAN $3 MILLION IN A SINGLE FINE FOR IMPROPER BURNING.
KEYWORDS: THERMALKEM, PCBS

SUBJECT: HAZARDOUS WASTE
FILE: CAROLINA
NO.: PR\HW\C-08
YEAR: ?
SUMMARY: UNKNOWN NEWSPAPER—AN ENVIRONMENTAL GROUP SAYS A PROPOSED N.C. INCINERATOR IS OVERSIZED FOR THE STATE'S NEEDS.
KEYWORDS: E.P.A.,NORTH CAROLINA WASTE AWARENESS AND REDUCTION NETWORK

SUBJECT: HAZARDOUS WASTE
FILE: CAROLINA
NO.: PR\HW\C-09
YEAR: ?
SUMMARY: UNKNOWN NEWSPAPER—WASTE COMPANY THERMALKEM CONTRIBUTED TEN THOUSAND DOLLARS OF FOOD AND ENTERTAINMENT FOR A SOUTHERN LEGISLATOR'S CONFERENCE.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: BRIAN, EARL
NO.: PR\IN\BE-01
YEAR: 1/20/70, 12/19/70,6/10/72
SUMMARY: SACRAMENTO BEE, ALL, "HEALTH CARE CHIEF RESIGNS; EX-ARMY DOCTOR IS NAMED" —EX-CHIEF TO BECOME A PRIVATE HEALTH CARE CONSULTANT. GOV. RON REAGAN NAMES EARL BRIAN TO THE POST."SOLON, SOCIAL WORKERS DEMAND OUSTER OF DR. BRIAN AS MEDICAL PROGRAM HEAD"—ASSEMBLYMEN ACCUSE BRIAN OF SABOTAGING HEALTH PROGRAM FOR THE POOR.
KEYWORDS: RONALD REAGAN

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: BRIAN, EARL
NO.: PR\IN\BE-02
YEAR: 1/22/70
SUMMARY: THE SACRAMENTO BEE—A PROMOTER OF CALIFORNIA'S STATE HEALTH PROGRAMS OPPOSES EARL BRIAN'S APPOINTMENT TO DIRECTOR OF THE DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH CARE SERVICES.
KEYWORDS: MEDI-CAL, GOV. RONALD REAGAN

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: BRIAN, EARL
NO.: PR\IN\BE-03
YEAR: 1/29/70
SUMMARY: UNKNOWN PAPER, EDITORIAL—EARL BRIAN IS DESCRIBED AS INEXPERIENCED TO RUN CALIFORNIA'S STATE HEALTH CARE.
KEYWORDS: MEDI-CAL

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: BRIAN, EARL
NO.: PR\IN\BE-04
YEAR: 3/29/70
SUMMARY: SACRAMENTO BEE—A PROFILE OF THEN 28 YEARS-OLD EARL BRIAN AS HE PREPARES TO BECOME MEDI-CAL DIRECTOR.
KEYWORDS: RONALD REAGAN

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: BRIAN, EARL
NO.: PR\IN\BE-05
YEAR: 2/6/72
SUMMARY: SACRAMENTO BEE—A PROFILE OF EARL BRIAN'S TENURE AS DIRECTOR OF THE STATE HEALTH CARE PROGRAM
KEYWORDS: RONALD REAGAN

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: BRIAN, EARL
NO.: PR\IN\BE-06
YEAR: 4/29/70
SUMMARY: SACRAMENTO BEE—EARL BRIAN IS APPROVED AS STATE DIRECTOR OF STATE HEALTH CARE SERVICES.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: BRIAN, EARL
NO.: PR\IN\BE-07
YEAR: 1/12/71
SUMMARY: SACRAMENTO BEE—THE STATE BOARD OF MEDICAL EXAMINERS REFUSES TO DISCIPLINE EARL BRIAN, DIRECTOR OF MEDI-CAL, FOR CUTBACKS IN THE MEDI-CAL PROGRAM.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: BRIAN, EARL
NO.: PR\IN\BE-08
YEAR: 2/22/71
SUMMARY: SACRAMENTO BEE—THE CALIFORNIA MEDICAL ASSOCIATION PRESIDENT SAID THAT MEDICAL DIRECTOR EARL BRIAN BECAME UPSET WHEN THE CMA BEGAN ADVISING MEMBERS THAT MEDI-CAL FACED A FISCAL CRISIS.
KEYWORDS: RALPH W. BURNETT

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: BRIAN, EARL
NO.: PR\IN\BE-01
YEAR: 4/29/71
SUMMARY: SACRAMENTO BEE—A JUDGE IN A HEARING ADMITS A MEMO CONTRADICTING MEDI-CAL DIRECTOR EARL BRIAN'S PREVIOUS TESTIMONY THAT HE HADN'T KNOWN OF PROGRAM DEFICIT.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: BRIAN, EARL
NO.: PR\IN\BE-10
YEAR: 6/10/72
SUMMARY: SACRAMENTO BEE—OUTGOING MEDI-CAL DIRECTOR EARL BRIAN IS SUED IN A CLASS ACTION SUIT TO RAISE STATE HEALTH CARE REIMBURSEMENTS.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: BRIAN, EARL
NO.: PR\IN\BE-11
YEAR: 06/30/72
SUMMARY: SACRAMENTO BEE—PHOTO OF EARL BRIAN NAMED AFTER BEING SWORN-IN AS CALIF. SECR. OF HUMAN RELATIONS

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: BRIAN, EARL
NO.: PR\IN\BE-12
YEAR: 11/19/72
SUMMARY: SACRAMENTO BEE—CALIFORNIAN EARL BRIAN NAMED AS POSSIBLE NIXON WHITE HOUSE STAFF MEMBER.
KEYWORDS: RICHARD NIXON, RONALD REAGAN

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: BRIAN, EARL
NO.: PR\IN\BE-13
YEAR: 2/12/73
SUMMARY: SACRAMENTO BEE—THE NIXON ADMINISTRATION ATTEMPTS TO LURE CALIFORNIA BUREAUCRAT EARL BRIAN TO A WASHINGTON POST. CURRENT HEW SECRETARY IS CASPAR WEINBERGER.
KEYWORDS: RONALD REAGAN, ROBERT CARLESON

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: BRIAN, EARL
NO.: PR\IN\BE-14
YEAR: 9/21/72
SUMMARY: SACRAMENTO BEE—NOW AN AIDE FOR GOVERNOR RONALD REAGAN, EARL BRIAN MAKES RADICAL CHANGES TO THE CALIFORNIA HEALTH AND WELFARE AGENCY.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: BRIAN, EARL
NO.: PR\IN\BE-15
YEAR: 9/9/73 AND 7/24/77
SUMMARY: SACRAMENTO BEE '73: GOVERNOR REAGAN URGES EARL BRIAN TO RUN FOR US SENATE. '77: A CALIF. STATE REPORT ON GOV. REAGAN'S LAX HANDLING OF THE NURSING HOME INDUSTRY ALSO MENTIONS AN ON-GOING INVESTIGATION INTO THE FINANCING OF EARL BRIAN'S ABORTIVE US SENATE CAMPAIGN IN '74.
KEYWORDS: BEVERLY ENTERPRISES, RONALD REAGAN

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: BRIAN, EARL
NO.: PR\IN\BE-16
YEAR: 1/2/74
SUMMARY: SACRAMENTO BEE—CALIF. HEALTH AND WELFARE HEAD EARL BRIAN CREATES A 'NEWSLETTER FILM' FOR STATE EMPLOYEES.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: BRIAN, EARL
NO.: PR\IN\BE-17
YEAR: 1/18/74
SUMMARY: SACRAMENTO BEE—CALIF. SECRETARY OF HEALTH AND WELFARE RESIGNS TO RUN FOR US SENATE AGAINST INCUMBENT ALAN CRANSTON.
KEYWORDS: RONALD REAGAN

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: BRIAN, EARL
NO.: PR\IN\BE-18
YEAR: 1/19/74
SUMMARY: SACRAMENTO BEE—GOVERNOR REAGAN ANNOUNCES EARL BRIANS'S REPLACEMENT FOR THE POSITION OF SECRETARY OF HEALTH AND WELFARE. BRIAN IS RUNNING FOR US SENATE.
KEYWORDS: RONALD REAGAN, JAMES E. JENKINS

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: BRIAN, EARL
NO.: PR\IN\BE-19
YEAR: 2/13/75
SUMMARY: SACRAMENTO BEE—FORMER CALIFORNIA HEALTH AND WELFARE AGENCY CHIEF EARL BRIAN IS ANGRY OVER THE CANCELLATION OF A BRIAN RESEARCH PROJECT BY THE NEW BROWN ADMINISTRATION.
KEYWORDS: RONALD REAGAN, ROBERT CARLESON

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: BRIAN, EARL
NO.: PR\IN\BE-20
YEAR: 6/22/78
SUMMARY: SACRAMENTO BEE—AFFIDAVITS BY TWO FORMER US SENATORS SAY FORMER SECRETARY OF CALIFORNIA HEALTH AND WELFARE TOOK CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS FROM THE NURSING HOME INDUSTRY IN EXCHANGE FOR INCREASING NURSING HOME PAYMENTS FROM THE STATE.
KEYWORDS: RONALD REAGAN

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: BRIAN, EARL
NO.: PR\IN\BE-21
YEAR: 2/28/88
SUMMARY: SACRAMENTO BEE—EARL BRIAN NOW THE CHAIRMAN OF INFO TECH CORP WHICH HAS AN INTEREST IN COMPANIES SUCH AS FINANCIAL NEWS NETWORK AND UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL.
KEYWORDS: RONALD REAGAN, DWIGHT GEDULDIG

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: BRIAN, EARL
NO.: PR\IN\BE-23
YEAR: 11/28/88
SUMMARY: WASHINGTON POST—PROFILE OF EARL BRIAN AS EMPIRE BUILDER AND OWNER OF INFOTECH.
KEYWORDS: HADRON, FINANCIAL NEWS NETWORK, COMTEX SCIENTIFIC

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: BRIAN, EARL
NO.: PR\IN\BE-24
YEAR: 11/28/88
SUMMARY: THE WASHINGTON POST—OVERVIEW OF EARL BRIAN'S PLANS TO SAVE UPI.
KEYWORDS: EDWIN MEESE

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: BRIAN, EARL
NO.: PR\IN\BE-13
YEAR: 2/12/73
SUMMARY: SACRAMENTO BEE—THE NIXON ADMINISTRATION ATTEMPTS TO LURE CALIFORNIA BUREAUCRAT EARL BRIAN TO A WASHINGTON POST. CURRENT HEW SECRETARY IS CASPAR WEINBERGER.
KEYWORDS: RONALD REAGAN, ROBERT CARLESON

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INFOTECH
NO.: PR\IN\IT-01
YEAR: 10/25/90
SUMMARY: THE WALL STREET JOURNAL—INFO TECH ASSET FINANCIAL NETWORK NEWS HAS INSUFFICIENT CASH FLOW TO MEET COSTS.
KEYWORDS: EARL BRIAN, ALAN HIRSCHFIELD, ALLAN TESSLER

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INFOTECH
NO.: PR\IN\IT-02
YEAR: 10/29/90
SUMMARY: BARRON'S—FINANCIAL NEWS NETWORK AND INFO TECHNOLOGY STOCK BOTH DROPPED IN THE MARKET AND OTHER TROUBLES.
KEYWORDS: EARL BRIAN, SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INFOTECH
NO.: PR\IN\IT-03
YEAR: 11/12/90
SUMMARY: THE WASHINGTON POST—AN ACCOUNT OF INFO TECH AND FNN'S ATTEMPT TO RESTORE THEIR IMAGE.
KEYWORDS: HADRON, INC.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INFOTECH
NO.: PR\IN\IT-04
YEAR: 11/12/90
SUMMARY: WASHINGTON BUSINESS JOURNAL—INFOTECH FIRMS REPORTEDLY TARGET OF CRIMINAL FRAUD PROBES RELATING TO INSLAW.
KEYWORDS: F.B.I., S.E.C., CHALLENGER LTD.,

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INFOTECH
NO.: PR\IN\IT-05
YEAR: 11/19/90
SUMMARY: BARRON'S—AN INDEPTH LOOK BEHIND THE PROBLEMS AT FNN AND INFOTECH.
KEYWORDS: HADRON

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-01
YEAR: 4/83
SUMMARY: LEGAL TECH—INSLAW, INC. SIGNS AN AGREEMENT WITH EASTERN INFORMATION SERVICES IN WHICH INSLAW ACQUIRES AN EIS ACCOUNTING SOFTWARE AND INTEGRATES IT WITH INSLAW'S MODULAW, A LAW PRACTICE SUPPORT SOFTWARE.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-02
YEAR: 9/3/83
SUMMARY: THE ECONOMIST—A SHORT SIDEBAR ABOUT INSLAW INC. AND THEIR SOFTWARE.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-03
YEAR: 10/12/86
SUMMARY: LOS ANGELES TIMES—D. LOWELL JENSEN, FORMER NO. 2 JUSTICE OFFICIAL IS ACCUSED BY THE INSLAW LAWSUIT OF HELPING FORCE THE SOFTWARE COMPANY INTO BANKRUPTCY.
KEYWORDS: PROMIS, WILLIAM HAMILTON, RONALD REAGAN, EDWIN MEESE

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-04
YEAR: 12/9/86
SUMMARY: LOS ANGELES TIMES—A FEDERAL BANKRUPTCY JUDGE REFUSES TO DISMISS INSLAW INC.'S LAWSUIT AGAINST THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT.
KEYWORDS: RONALD REAGAN, PROMIS, DALITE, LOWELL JENSEN

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-01
YEAR: 6/11/87
SUMMARY: WASHINGTON POST—FEDERAL BANKRUPTCY JUDGE DELAYS DECISION ON INSLAW SUIT FOR 2 DAYS.
KEYWORDS: JUDGE GEORGE F. BASON JR.,DEAN COOPER

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-06
YEAR: 6/13/87
SUMMARY: PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER—US BANKRUPTCY JUDGE GEORGE BASON RULES THAT THE US JUSTICE DEPARTMENT UNLAWFULLY TRIED TO PUT INSLAW OUT OF BUSINESS AND THAT TWO DEPARTMENT OFFICIALS GAVE "UNBELIEVABLE" TESTIMONY.
KEYWORDS: LOWELL JENSEN, PROMIS, EDWIN MEESE, THOMAS STANTON, C. MADISON BREWER

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-07
YEAR: 6/13/87
SUMMARY: WASHINGTON POST—A US JUDGE RULES THAT THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT MADE "UNDUE AND IMPROPER ATTEMPTS" TO DRIVE THE INSLAW SOFTWARE CO. OUT OF BUSINESS.
KEYWORDS: JUDGE GEORGE F. BASON JR.,WILLIAM HAMILTON, C. MADISON BREWER

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-08
YEAR: 6/22/87
SUMMARY: LEGAL TIMES—INSLAW ATTEMPTS TO REMOVE THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT'S TRUSTEES FROM THE SOFTWARE COMPANY'S BANKRUPTCY PROCEEDINGS.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-09
YEAR: 9/21/87
SUMMARY: LEGAL TIMES—THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT IGNORES US JUDGE GEORGE BASON'S RULING THAT THEY APPOINT AN INDEPENDENT OFFICIAL TO REVIEW INSLAW'S LIST OF ALLEGATIONS.
KEYWORDS: EDWIN MEESE, D. LOWELL JENSEN, JOHN BOLTON, DAVID MARTIN

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-10
YEAR: 9/29/87
SUMMARY: ST. LOUIS POST DISPATCH—A US JUDGE ORDERS THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT TO PAY INSLAW INC. FOR FIVE YEARS USE AND DUPLICATION OF THE COMPANY'S SOFTWARE.
KEYWORDS: WILLIAM HAMILTON, GEORGE F. BASON JR., ELLIOT L. RICHARDSON

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-11
YEAR: 9/29/87
SUMMARY: ARIZONA REPUBLIC—US BANKRUPTCY JUDGE GEORGE BASON JR. RULES THAT THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT ENGAGED IN "OUTRAGEOUS AND INDEFENSIBLE" CONDUCT AGAINST INSLAW INC.
KEYWORDS: ELLIOT RICHARDSON, WILLIAM HAMILTON, D. LOWELL JENSEN, JANIS A. SPOSATO, WILLIAM P. TYSON, LAURENCE MCWHORTER, JACK S. RUGH

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-12
YEAR: 9/29/87
SUMMARY: THE WASHINGTON POST—US JUDGE RULES THAT THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT STOLE INSLAW'S SOFTWARE.
KEYWORDS: C. MADISON BREWER, PROMIS

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-13
YEAR: 9/29/87
SUMMARY: THE WASHINGTON TIMES—JUDGE RULES AGAINST JUSTICE DEPARTMENT AND FOR INSLAW.
KEYWORDS: PROMIS, PATRICK KORTEN, ELLIOT RICHARDSON, JUDGE GEORGE F. BREWER

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-14
YEAR: 9/29/87
SUMMARY: NEW YORK TIMES—US JUDGE RULES THAT THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT USED "TRICKERY, FRAUD AND DECEIT" TO STEAL PROMIS SOFTWARE FROM INSLAW INC.
KEYWORDS: C. MADISON BREWER, PATRICK KORTEN

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-15
YEAR: 10/2/87
SUMMARY: WASHINGTON TIMES—A PROFILE OF INSLAW FOUNDER WILLIAM HAMILTON AND HIS BATTLE WITH THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT.
KEYWORDS: PROMIS, PATRICK KORTEN, NANCY HAMILTON

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-16
YEAR: 10/5/87
SUMMARY: CRIME CONTROL DIGEST—US JUDGE SAYS D.O.J. USED “FRAUD” TO DESTROY INSLAW INC. JUDGE ALSO SAYS A NUMBER OF GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS DISPLAYED “COLLECTIVE AMNESIA” WHEN QUESTIONED ABOUT THE CASE.
KEYWORDS: LAW ENFORCEMENT ASSISTANCE ADMINISTRATION, PROMIS

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-17
YEAR: 10/5/87
SUMMARY: WASHINGTON BUSINESS JOURNAL—PRO-INSLAW RULING RESTORES COMPANY’S CREDIBILITY.
KEYWORDS: WILLIAM HAMILTON, NANCY HAMILTON

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-18
YEAR: 10/5/87
SUMMARY: FEDERAL COMPUTER WEEK—JUDGE GEORGE BASON JR. RULES AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT IN THE INSLAW SUIT AND FINDS THAT THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT PROJECT MANAGER FOR THE COMPANY HAD A VENDETTA AGAINST THE OWNERS.
KEYWORDS: C. MADISON BREWER, WILLIAM A. HAMILTON

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-19
YEAR: 10/6/87
SUMMARY: WASHINGTON POST EDITORIAL CALLING FOR AN IMMEDIATE PUBLIC ACCOUNTING OF THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT’S BEHAVIOR IN THE INSLAW CASE.
KEYWORDS: C. MADISON BREWER, JUDGE GEORGE F. BASON

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-20
YEAR: 10/12/87
SUMMARY: FEDERAL COMPUTER WEEK—THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT AWARDS HADRON INC. A 40 MILLION DOLLAR CONTRACT FOR AUTOMATED LITIGATION SUPPORT. HADRON’S LARGEST STOCKHOLDER IS DR. EARL BRIAN, FORMER CALIFORNIA HEALTH OFFICIAL.
KEYWORDS: EDWIN MEESE, ACUMENICS, BIOTECH, FAIRFAX VA.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-21
YEAR: 10/12/87
SUMMARY: LEGAL TIMES—A PRESTIGIOUS WASHINGTON D.C. LAW FIRM THAT ORIGINALLY REPRESENTED INSLAW INC. AGAINST THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT IS ACCUSED OF CONFLICT-OF-INTEREST.
KEYWORDS: DICKSTEIN, SHAPIRO, AND MORIN, LEIGH RATINER, D. LOWELL JENSEN

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-22
YEAR: 10/12/87
SUMMARY: WASHINGTON BUSINESS JOURNAL EDITORIAL RECOMMENDING LAWFIRMS TO DO PRO BONO WORK IN CASES LIKE THE INSLAW SUIT.
KEYWORDS: WILLIAM HAMILTON

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-23
YEAR: 10/12/87
SUMMARY: TIME—A SUMMARY OF THE INSLAW CASE TO DATE.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-24
YEAR: 10/12/87
SUMMARY: THE NATIONAL LAW JOURNAL—A DETAILED SUMMARY OF THE INSLAW CASE AND THE RULING OF JUDGE GEORGE F. BASON.
KEYWORDS: EXECUTIVE OFFICE FOR UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS, PROMIS

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-25
YEAR: 12/21/87
SUMMARY: LEGAL TIMES—THE SENATE GOVERNMENTAL AFFAIRS PERMANENT SUBCOMMITTEE ON INVESTIGATIONS BEGINS INVESTIGATING THE INSLAW AFFAIR.
KEYWORDS: SAM NUNN, ALAN EDELMAN, D. LOWELL JENSEN, AMELIA BROWN

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-26
YEAR: 1/18/88
SUMMARY: THE WASHINGTON POST—FEDERAL BANKRUPTCY JUDGE GEORGE BASON SAYS HE IS NOT REAPPOINTED DUE TO HIS RULING IN THE INSLAW CASE.
KEYWORDS: S. MARTIN TEEL JR., WESLEY WILLIAMS JR., PATRICIA M. WALD

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-27
YEAR: 1/20/88
SUMMARY: WASHINGTON POST—JUSTICE DEPARTMENT CLAIMS JUDGE GEORGE BASON IS BIASED AND DEMANDS HIS OUSTER FROM THE INSLAW CASE.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-28
YEAR: 1/23/88
SUMMARY: THE WASHINGTON POST—THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT DENIES JUDGE'S CLAIMS OF RETRIBUTION AGAINST HIM FOR UNFAVORABLE INSLAW RULING.
KEYWORDS: JUDGE GEORGE F. BASON, S. MARTIN TEEL JR.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-29
YEAR: 2/1/88
SUMMARY: THE WASHINGTON POST—BANKRUPTCY JUDGE GEORGE F. BASON JR. SET TO DETERMINE DAMAGES OWED TO INSLAW BY JUSTICE DEPARTMENT
KEYWORDS: PATRICIA WALD, DEAN COOPER

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-30
YEAR: 2/1/88
SUMMARY: LEGAL TIMES—INSLAW CREDITOR DROPS PETITION TO CLAIM MONEY OWED FOR LEGAL FEES
KEYWORDS: DICKSTEIN, SHAPIRO, & MORIN, EDWIN MEESE, NORMAN OLIVER

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-31
YEAR: 2/1/88
SUMMARY: THE WASHINGTON BUSINESS JOURNAL—INSLAW ATTORNEYS SEEK EVIDENCE THAT AT&T AND THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE COLLUDED TO DESTROY THE SOFTWARE COMPANY.
KEYWORDS: KENNETH A. ROSEN

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-32
YEAR: 2/2/88
SUMMARY: THE WASHINGTON POST—JUDGE GEORGE F. BASON ORDERS THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT TO PAY INSLAW $6.8 MILLION IN DAMAGES.
KEYWORDS: MCDERMOTT, WILL, & EMORY

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-33
YEAR: 2/15/88
SUMMARY: WASHINGTON BUSINESS JOURNAL—JUDGE GEORGE F. BASON STRUGGLES TO REMAIN ON THE BENCH AFTER RULING AGAINST THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT.
KEYWORDS: S. MARTIN TEEL JR., NORMA HOLLOWAY JOHNSON, JEROME BARRON

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-34
YEAR: 2/15/88
SUMMARY: CHICAGO TRIBUNE—SUMMARY/OVERVIEW OF THE INSLAW AFFAIR
KEYWORDS: LEONARD GARMENT, EDWIN MEESE, GEORGE BASON, PROMIS, D. LOWELL JENSEN

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-35
YEAR: 2/15/88
SUMMARY: FEDERAL COMPUTER WEEK—INSLAW ACCUSES AT&T ATTORNEY OF CONFLICT OF INTEREST.
KEYWORDS: ROGER WHELAN

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-36
YEAR: 2/22/88
SUMMARY: LEGAL TIMES—REMOVED JUDGE GEORGE F. BASON URGES PROSECUTOR TO PROBE EDWIN MEESE'S CONNECTION TO THE INSLAW AFFAIR.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-37
YEAR: 2/29/88
SUMMARY: WASHINGTON BUSINESS JOURNAL—THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT PLANS TO FIRE AN EMPLOYEE WHOSE STATEMENTS HELPED INSLAW WIN A RULING AGAINST THE DEPARTMENT.
KEYWORDS: ANTHONY PASCIUTO

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-38
YEAR: 2/29/88
SUMMARY: FEDERAL COMPUTER WEEK—IBM AND INSLAW NEGOTIATE A DEAL TO HELP PULL INSLAW OUT OF BANKRUPTCY.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-39
YEAR: 3/7/88
SUMMARY: WASHINGTON BUSINESS JOURNAL EDITORIAL RECOMMENDS A SPECIAL PROSECUTOR TO LOOK INTO THE INSLAW CASE.
KEYWORDS: ANTHONY PASCIUTO

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-40
YEAR: 3/7/88
SUMMARY: FEDERAL COMPUTER WEEK—SENATE EXAMINES JUSTICE DEPARTMENT PROPOSALS FOR AUTOMATION TO SEE IF STOLEN PROMIS SOFTWARE WILL BE USED.
KEYWORDS: PROJECT EAGLE

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-01
YEAR: 9/88
SUMMARY: HE WASHINGTON POST—A PROFILE OF US ATTORNEY JAY B. STEPHENS AND HIS ROLE IN THE INSLAW AFFAIR.
KEYWORDS: IRAN-CONTRA, OLIVER NORTH, PROMIS, C. MADISON BREWER III

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-42
YEAR: 3/18/88
SUMMARY: GOVERNMENT COMPUTER NEWS—PROBLEMS WITH JUSTICE DEPARTMENT OFFICE MECHANIZATION "PROJECT EAGLE"

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-43
YEAR: 3/21/88
SUMMARY: WASHINGTON BUSINESS JOURNAL—FOLLOWING THE REMOVAL OF PREVIOUS JUDGE GEORGE BASON, INSLAW BANKRUPTCY PROCEEDINGS REMAIN DORMANT.
KEYWORDS: AT&T, KENNETH ROSEN, S. MARTIN TEEL

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-44
YEAR: 3/21/88
SUMMARY: WASHINGTON BUSINESS JOURNAL LETTER TO THE EDITOR—BASON SAYS HE NEVER PERSONALLY BELIEVED HE WAS REMOVED FROM BENCH FOR HIS INSLAW RULING, BUT THAT OTHER BARRISTERS HAVE TOLD HIM THEY THINK HE WAS.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-01
YEAR: 3/22/88
SUMMARY: L.A. DAILY JOURNAL—OVERVIEW OF THE INSLAW CASE
KEYWORDS: PAUL SIMON, CORNELIUS BLACKSHEAR, PROMIS, LEAA, LEONARD GARMENT

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-46
YEAR: 4/4/88
SUMMARY: BARRON'S—AN OVERVIEW THAT EXAMINES MAJOR CHARACTERS IN THE INSLAW SCANDAL
KEYWORDS: ANTHONY PASCIUTO, S. MARTIN TEEL, C. MADISON BREWER, EARL BRIAN, HADRON

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-47
YEAR: 4/4/88
SUMMARY: FEDERAL COMPUTER WEEK—A SENATE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE PREPARES TO QUESTION JUSTICE OFFICIALS ON THE INSLAW CASE.
KEYWORDS: EDWIN MEESE, KENNETH ROSEN, LEONARD GARMENT, ARNOLD BURNS

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-48
YEAR: 4/4/88
SUMMARY: WASHINGTON BUSINESS JOURNAL—JUSTICE DEPARTMENT ASKS COURT TO DROP BARRING OF THREE KEY SOURCES, EMPLOYEES PETER VIDENIEKS, JACK RUGH, AND C. MADISON BREWER
KEYWORDS: PROMIS, PROJECT EAGLE, JUDGE WILLIAM BRYANT

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-50
YEAR: 4/16/88
SUMMARY: WASHINGTON POST—EX-WHITE HOUSE COUNSEL JAY B. STEPHENS WAS NOMINATED FOR US ATTORNEY GENERAL BY PRESIDENT RONALD REAGAN. IN 1983, STEPHENS OPTED NOT TO INVESTIGATE BIAS IN THE INSLAW AFFAIR.
KEYWORDS: OLIVER NORTH

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-51
YEAR: 4/15/88
SUMMARY: DATAMATION—AN OVERVIEW OF INSLAW OWNER AND FOUNDER BILL HAMILTON AND HIS WIFE AND THEIR STRUGGLE AGAINST THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT.
KEYWORDS: AT&T, SOFTWARE AND SERVICES INDUSTRY ASSOCIATION

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-52
YEAR: 4/15/88
SUMMARY: WASHINGTON POST EDITORIAL—JUDICIARY PANELS SHOULD GET TO THE BOTTOM OF THE INSLAW AFFAIR.
KEYWORDS: SENATE PERMANENT SUBCOMMITTEE ON PERMANENT INVESTIGATIONS

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-53
YEAR: 4/18/88
SUMMARY: FEDERAL COMPUTER WEEK—PROJECT EAGLE BECOMES CAUGHT UP IN JUSTICE DEPARTMENT-INSLAW DISPUTE.
KEYWORDS: C. MADISON BREWER III, PETER VIDENIEKS, JACK RUGH

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-54
YEAR: 4/25/88
SUMMARY: BARRON'S—LETTER FROM PRESIDENT OF HADRON INC., A COMPANY INVOLVED IN THE INSLAW AFFAIR THROUGH DR. EARL BRIAN, DENIES CERTAIN PUBLISHED STATEMENTS.
KEYWORDS: DOMINIC A. LAITI

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-55
YEAR: 5/4/88
SUMMARY: RICHMOND TIMES-DISPATCH—A FOLLOW-UP ON THE CONGRESSIONAL PROBE'S LOOK INTO EDWIN MEESE'S ROLE IN THE INSLAW AFFAIR.
KEYWORDS: CORNELIUS BLACKSHEAR, ANTHONY PASCIUTO, LEIGH RATINER, DOMINIC LAITI

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-56
YEAR: 5/6/88
SUMMARY: WASHINGTON POST—THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT ANNOUNCES THAT IT IS INVESTIGATING DEPARTMENT OFFICIALS FOR POSSIBLE PERJURY DURING THE INSLAW HEARINGS.
KEYWORDS: JOHN RUSSELL, EDWIN MEESE, SAM NUNN, LEONARD GARMENT

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-57
YEAR: 5/6/88
SUMMARY: LOS ANGELES TIMES—JUSTICE DEPARTMENT PROBING POSSIBLE EMPLOYEE PERJURY IN THE INSLAW CASE.
KEYWORDS: JAMES C. MCKAY

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-58
YEAR: 5/6/88
SUMMARY: US REP. JACK BUECHNER PRESS RELEASE—CALLS FOR RESIGNATION OF EDWIN MEESE AND QUOTES JUDGE GEORGE F. BASON'S RULING ON INSLAW AND THE ABA CODE OF PROFESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-59
YEAR: 5/7/88
SUMMARY: SUMMARY: WASHINGTON POST—JUSTICE DEPARTMENT LAWYERS CONCLUDE THAT THERE IS NO NEED FOR AN INVESTIGATION INTO EDWIN MEESE'S ROLE IN THE INSLAW AFFAIR.
KEYWORDS: DICKSTEIN, SHAPIRO, & MORIN, JOHN C. KEENEY, CHARLES R. WORK

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW A
NO.: PR\IN\IA-60
YEAR: 5/11/88
SUMMARY: THE NEW YORK TIMES EDITORIAL—CALLS FOR A PUBLIC REPORT OF THE EFFORTS OF INDEPENDENT COUNSEL JAMES MCKAY IN HIS INVESTIGATION OF EDWIN MEESE AND INSLAW.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-01
YEAR: 5/16/88
SUMMARY: LEGAL TIMES—FORMER INSLAW LAWYER PRESSURES CBS TO A KILL A NEWS REPORT THAT IT DROPPED INSLAW AS A CLIENT BECAUSE OF JUSTICE DEPARTMENT PRESSURE.
KEYWORDS: DICKSTEIN, SHAPIRO, & MORIN; LEONARD GARMENT; LEIGH RATINER; MARTY KOUGHAN

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-02
YEAR: 5/16/88
SUMMARY: DIGITAL REVIEW—OVERVIEW OF INSLAW CASE. INCLUDES TIMELINE OF EVENTS.
KEYWORDS: EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF US ATTORNEYS, PROMIS, EARL BRIAN

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-03
YEAR: 5/23/88
SUMMARY: BARRON'S—LETTER FROM JUSTICE OFFICIAL CORRECTING ALLEGED ERRORS IN A PREVIOUS ARTICLE.
KEYWORDS: WILLIAM P. TYSON

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-04
YEAR: 5/23/88
SUMMARY: LEGAL TIMES—LETTER FROM FORMER INSLAW LAWYER DENYING THAT HIS FIRM TRIED TO STIFLE A CBS NEWS REPORT ON INSLAW.
KEYWORDS: LEONARD GARMENT; DICKSTEIN, SHAPIRO, & MORIN

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-05
YEAR: 8/25/88
SUMMARY: THE NEW YORK TIMES—A GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE REPORT FAULTS THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT FOR NOT MAKING EMPLOYEES SIGN A FINANCIAL DISCLOSURE ACT.
KEYWORDS: EDWIN MEESE, URSULA MEESE, DICK THORNBURGH

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-06
YEAR: 6/13/88
SUMMARY: FEDERAL COMPUTER WEEK—INSLAW ATTORNEY'S TRY TO REMOVE AT&T FROM THE SOFTWARE COMPANY'S BANKRUPTCY PROCEEDINGS, CLAIMING CONFLICT OF INTEREST.
KEYWORDS: MICHAEL FRIEDLANDER; JUDGE GEORGE F. BASON

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-07
YEAR: 6/13/88
SUMMARY: THE NEW YORK TIMES—AN INDEPENDENT PROSECUTOR'S REPORT WILL DRAW "UNFLATTERING" CONCLUSIONS ABOUT EDWIN MEESE.
KEYWORDS: IRAQ; E. ROBERT WALLACH; WEDTECH CORP.; ELLIOT L. RICHARDSON

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-08
YEAR: 6/6/88
SUMMARY: WASHINGTON BUSINESS JOURNAL—THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE DECIDES TO INVESTIGATE EDWIN MEESE'S ROLE IN THE INSLAW AFFAIR.
KEYWORDS: JOHN KEENEY; LEONARD GARMENT; OFFICE OF PROFESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-09
YEAR: 6/13/88
SUMMARY: BUSINESS WEEK—OVERVIEW OF THE INSLAW AFFAIR.
KEYWORDS: EARL BRIAN; LAW ENFORCEMENT ASSISTANCE ADMINISTRATION; D. LOWELL JENSEN

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-10
YEAR: 6/27/88
SUMMARY: WASHINGTON BUSINESS JOURNAL—JUSTICE DEPARTMENT BLASTS INSLAW CASE VERDICT IN A FILED APPEALS BRIEF.
KEYWORDS: WILLIAMS B. BRYANT; CORNELIUS BLACKSHEAR; ANTHONY PASCUITO

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-11
YEAR: 7/18/88
SUMMARY: FEDERAL COMPUTER WEEK—INSLAW SAYS THREE WHISTLE BLOWERS HAVE CORROBORATED THE COMPANY'S CHARGES ABOUT THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE TRYING TO DRIVE IT OUT OF BUSINESS.
KEYWORDS: MARK M. RICHARD; RONALD L. GAINER; JOHN C. KEENEY

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-12
YEAR: 8/12/88
SUMMARY: THE WASHINGTON POST—EDWIN MEESE ATTEMPTS TO BLOCK TESTIMONY TO A SENATE SUBCOMMITTEE BY TWO JUSTICE DEPARTMENT EMPLOYEES, BUT IS REVERSED.
KEYWORDS: SAM NUNN; GEORGE F. BASON; THOMAS STANTON

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-13
YEAR: 8/25/88
SUMMARY: SAN FRANCISCO CHRONICLE—THE GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE CRITICIZES THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT'S FAILURE TO REQUIRE EMPLOYEES TO FILE FINANCIAL DISCLOSURE REPORTS.
KEYWORDS: WILLIAM FORD, GERRY SIKORSKI, EDWIN MEESE

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-14
YEAR: 9/12/88
SUMMARY: WASHINGTON BUSINESS JOURNAL—INSLAW FILES ANSWER TO JUSTICE DEPARTMENT'S APPEAL ON INSLAW CASE.
KEYWORDS: EARL BRIAN, WILLIAMS B. BRYANT

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-15
YEAR: 10/3/88
SUMMARY: FEDERAL COMPUTER WEEK—INSLAW FILES A RESPONSE TO D.O.J. APPEAL ON THE INSLAW CASE.
KEYWORDS: AT&T, C. MADISON BREWER, WILLIAM BRYANT

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-16
YEAR: 10/24/88
SUMMARY: FEDERAL COMPUTER WEEK—AFTER TWO JUDGES RECUSE THEMSELVES FOR CONFLICT OF INTEREST, BANKRUPTCY JUDGE JAMES SCHNEIDER TAKES OVER THE INSLAW CASE.
KEYWORDS: AT&T, HADRON INC., EDWIN MEESE

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-17
YEAR: 10/31/88
SUMMARY: NEW TECHNOLOGY WEEK—A SECRET MEMO FROM A JUSTICE DEPARTMENT OFFICIAL TO A SENATE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE COMPARES THE INSLAW CASE TO WATERGATE.
KEYWORDS: D. LOWELL JENSEN, EDWIN MEESE, SAM NUNN, JAMES SCHNEIDER, UNIX, DALITE

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-18
YEAR: 11/28/88
SUMMARY: THE NATIONAL LAW JOURNAL—A MAJOR WASHINGTON LAW FIRM WILL SPEAK BEFORE A BANKRUPTCY JUDGE ON ALLEGED CONFLICT OF INTEREST WHILE HANDLING INSLAW'S SUIT AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT.
KEYWORDS: SAM NUNN, LEONARD GARMENT, JAMES F. SCHNEIDER, LEIGH RATINER

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-19
YEAR: 12/28/88
SUMMARY: THE WASHINGTON POST—INSLAW EMERGES FROM BANKRUPTCY REORGANIZATION WITH HELP FROM IBM, BUT MUST PAY OLD LEGAL FEES TO A LAW FIRM THE COMPANY CLAIMS MISHANDLED THEIR CASE.
KEYWORDS: WILLIAM HAMILTON, DICKSTEIN SHAPIRO

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-20
YEAR: 2/20/89
SUMMARY: GOVERNMENT COMPUTER NEWS—JUSTICE DEPARTMENT OFFICIALS ARE CONSIDERING OFFERS FOR ITS "PROJECT EAGLE" OFFICE COMPUTERIZATION PLAN.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-21
YEAR: 7/3/89
SUMMARY: FEDERAL COMPUTER WEEK—TWO COMPANIES PROTEST THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT'S AWARD OF THE PROJECT EAGLE CONTRACT TO TISOFT INC.
KEYWORDS: PRIME COMPUTER INC., FALCON SYSTEMS INC.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-01
YEAR: 10/89
SUMMARY: FEDERAL COMPUTER WEEK—WHILE AWAITING THE BEGINNING OF IT'S PROJECT EAGLE UPGRADE PROJECT, THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT LOOKS FOR UPGRADES OF OTHER COMPUTER EQUIPMENT.
KEYWORDS: KRIME COMPUTER INC.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-23
YEAR: 7/10/89
SUMMARY: GOVERNMENT COMPUTER NEWS—A SHORT PROFILE ON TISOFT INC. AND THE BOOST THE PROJECT EAGLE CONTRACT WILL MEAN FOR THE COMPANY.
KEYWORDS: JOHN A. OAKES, AMICUS

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-24
YEAR: 9/30/89
SUMMARY: THE WASHINGTON POST—A SENATE SUBCOMMITTEE CONCLUDES THAT JUSTICE DEPARTMENT OFFICIALS SHOWED "POOR JUDGEMENT," BUT THAT THEY COULD FIND NO EVIDENCE OF A CONSPIRACY TO BANKRUPT INSLAW INC.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-25
YEAR: 10/2/89
SUMMARY: FEDERAL COMPUTER WEEK—A SENATE COMMITTEE FINDS NO CONSPIRACY ON THE PART OF THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT TO DRIVE INSLAW INTO BANKRUPTCY BUT SAYS PERSONAL BIASES DID UNDERCUT THE DEPARTMENT'S INTEGRITY.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-26
YEAR: 11/23/89
SUMMARY: THE WASHINGTON POST—A FEDERAL DISTRICT JUDGE UPHOLDS A BANKRUPTCY COURT'S RULING THAT THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE HARASSED INSLAW AND TRIED TO DRIVE IT OUT OF BUSINESS.
KEYWORDS: WILLIAM B. BRYANT, AMY BROWN

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-27
YEAR: 11/23/89
SUMMARY: ST. LOUIS POST-DISPATCH—A US DISTRICT JUDGE AFFIRMED THAT THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE "WILLFULLY AND FRAUDULENTLY" SOUGHT TO DRIVE INSLAW INC. OUT OF BUSINESS.
KEYWORDS: MICHAEL ROBINSON

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-28
YEAR: 8/7/89
SUMMARY: GOVERNMENT COMPUTER NEWS—PRIME COMPUTER INC. GIVES UP PROTEST OF JUSTICE DEPARTMENT AWARDING PROJECT EAGLE CONTRACT TO TISOFT INC.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-29
YEAR: 12/4/89
SUMMARY: BARRON'S—FEDERAL JUDGE WILLIAM BRYANT UPHOLDS PREVIOUS INSLAW AWARD AGAINST THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT.
KEYWORDS: GEORGE F. BASON

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-30
YEAR: 12/18/89
SUMMARY: FEDERAL COMPUTER WEEK—AN OVERVIEW TO DATE OF THE INSLAW CASE AND THE BEHAVIOR OF THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT. ARTICLE COMPARES THE INSLAW SITUATION TO OTHER FORCED-BANKRUPTCIES INVOLVING THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT.
KEYWORDS: CAMPAIGNER PUBLICATIONS, CAUCUS DISTRIBUTORS, THE FUSION ENERGY FOUNDATION, LYNDON LAROUCHE

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-31
YEAR: 12/24/89
SUMMARY: WASHINGTON POST EDITORIAL—SUPPORTS THE RECENT UPHOLDING OF AN AWARD TO INSLAW FROM THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT.
KEYWORDS: C. MADISON BREWER

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-32
YEAR: 12/27/89
SUMMARY: THE WASHINGTON POST—INSLAW SEEKS COURT-ORDERED PROBE OF ITS CASE, CLAIMING THE GOVERNMENT STOLE ITS SOFTWARE.
KEYWORDS: DICK THORNBURGH, WILLIAM HAMILTON, ELLIOT RICHARDSON

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-33
YEAR: 12/28/89
SUMMARY: ST. LOUIS POST-DISPATCH—INSLAW ASKS A COURT TO FORCE ANOTHER JUSTICE DEPARTMENT INVESTIGATION OF IT'S OWN BEHAVIOR WITH REGARD TO INSLAW INC.
KEYWORDS: WILLIAM HAMILTON, WILLIAM B. BRYANT, EDWIN MEESE

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-34
YEAR: 12/31/89
SUMMARY: THE ATLANTA JOURNAL—INSLAW ALLEGES THAT ATTORNEY GENERAL EDWIN MEESE CONSPIRED AGAINST THE COMPANY AND ASK A COURT TO FORCE MEESE'S SUCCESSOR TO INVESTIGATE THE MATTER.
KEYWORDS: RICHARD THORNBURGH, URSULA MEESE, EARL BRIAN, HADRON INC.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-35
YEAR: 1/4/90
SUMMARY: THE WASHINGTON TIMES COMMENTARY—EDITORIAL RECOMMENDS THAT ATTORNEY GENERAL DICK THORNBURGH RECONSIDER HIS REFUSAL TO INVESTIGATE THE HANDLING OF INSLAW CONTRACTS BY THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-36
YEAR: 1/6/90
SUMMARY: CHICAGO SUN TIMES, JAMES J. KILPATRICK COLUMN—REVIEW OF INSLAW CASE UP TO SECOND RULING IN FAVOR OF INSLAW BY JUDGE WILLIAM BRYANT.
KEYWORDS: PROMIS, JOHN R. BOLTON

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-37
YEAR: 1/8/90
SUMMARY: FEDERAL COMPUTER WEEK—INSLAW ASKS A FEDERAL JUDGE TO SEEK A PROBE INTO ALLEGED DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE CONSPIRACY AGAINST THE SOFTWARE COMPANY.
KEYWORDS: RICHARD THORNBURGH, EDWIN MEESE, PROMIS

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-38
YEAR: 1/15/90
SUMMARY: FEDERAL COMPUTER MARKET REPORT—INSLAW ACTS TO FORCE ATTORNEY GENERAL RICHARD THORNBURGH TO APPOINT IMPARTIAL SPECIAL PROSECUTOR TO LOOK INTO ITS CLAIMS OF CONSPIRACY.
KEYWORDS: ELLIOT RICHARDSON, EDWIN MEESE, LOWELL JENSEN

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-39
YEAR: 1/15/90
SUMMARY: WASHINGTON BUSINESS JOURNAL—AFTER WINNING A $76 MILLION JUSTICE DEPARTMENT COMPUTER CONTRACT, TISOFT INC. PUTS ITSELF UP FOR SALE.
KEYWORDS: PROJECT EAGLE, PATRICK GALLAGHER

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-40
YEAR: 1/15/90
SUMMARY: WASHINGTON BUSINESS JOURNAL—INSLAW CLAIMS THAT SEVERAL UNFRIENDLY TAKEOVER BIDS BETWEEN 1983 AND 1986 WERE ORCHESTRATED BY EARL BRIAN.
KEYWORDS: HADRON INC., URSULA MEESE, PROMIS, SAM NUNN

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-41
YEAR: 1/29/90
SUMMARY: WASHINGTON BUSINESS JOURNAL—INSLAW FILES A GOVERNMENT CONTRACT APPEALS BOARD SEEKING $2 MILLION IN PAYMENTS WITHHELD BY THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT.
KEYWORDS: EDWIN MEESE, RICHARD THORNBURGH

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-42
YEAR: 2/5/90
SUMMARY: GOVERNMENT COMPUTER NEWS—THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT ANNOUNCES THAT IT WILL APPEAL THE FEDERAL COURT RULING THAT IT STOLE SOFTWARE FROM INSLAW INC.
KEYWORDS: DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORTATION, PROMIS

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-43
YEAR: 2/2/90
SUMMARY: THE COMPUTER LAWYER—DETAILED LEGAL OVERVIEW OF THE INSLAW CASE.
KEYWORDS: EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS, PROMIS

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-01
YEAR: 24/90
SUMMARY: NATIONAL JOURNAL—OVERVIEW OF INSLAW AFFAIR TO DATE.
KEYWORDS: URSULA MEESE, EARL BRIAN, PROJECT EAGLE

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-45
YEAR: 3/5/90
SUMMARY: FEDERAL COMPUTER WEEK—INSLAW FOUNDER WILLIAM HAMILTON REBUTS A PREVIOUS LETTER FROM A JUSTICE DEPARTMENT OFFICIAL WHO CLAIMED THAT INSLAW HAD MALIGNED THE DEPARTMENT.
KEYWORDS: THOMAS G. DOOLEY

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-46
YEAR: 4/30/90
SUMMARY: GOVERNMENT COMPUTER NEWS—INSLAW ALLEGES THAT THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT IS TRYING TO SECRETLY CONVERT INSLAW SOFTWARE AND THEREBY STEAL IT.
KEYWORDS: MICHAEL ROBINSON, LAND AND NATURAL RESOURCES DIVISION

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-47
YEAR: 4/3/90
SUMMARY: ST. LOUIS POST-DISPATCH—OVERVIEW OF THE INSLAW AFFAIR TO DATE. INSLAW FOUNDER SAYS THAT 42 US ATTORNEYS OFFICES CONTINUE TO USE TEST VERSIONS OF SOFTWARE STILL UNDER DISPUTE.
KEYWORDS: D. LOWELL JENSEN, PROMIS, WILLIAM HAMILTON

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-48
YEAR: 3/5/90
SUMMARY: WASHINGTON BUSINESS JOURNAL—THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT ASKS A FEDERAL JUDGE TO DISMISS AN INSLAW PETITION COMPELLING A PROBE OF THE DEPARTMENT.
KEYWORDS: EARL BRIAN, SAM NUNN, EDWIN MEESE

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-49
YEAR: 3/17/90
SUMMARY: WASHINGTON POST EDITORIAL—QUESTIONS THE RESISTANCE OF ATTORNEY GENERAL RICHARD THORNBURGH AND THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT TO A FULL ACCOUNTING OF THE INSLAW MATTER.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW B
NO.: PR\IN\IB-50
YEAR: 4/2/90
SUMMARY: THE WASHINGTON TIMES—THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT SEEKS A COURT-APPOINTED MEDIATOR TO QUIETLY SETTLE THE INSLAW CASE.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW C
NO.: PR\IN\IC-01
YEAR: 4/2/90
SUMMARY: FEDERAL COMPUTER WEEK—NETWORK SYSTEMS CORP. SAYS IT HELPED TISOFT INC. WIN THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE “PROJECT EAGLE” CONTRACT AND WAS JILTED WHEN TISOFT PUT ITSELF UP FOR SALE.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW C
NO.: PR\IN\IC-02
YEAR: 4/16/90
SUMMARY: WASHINGTON BUSINESS JOURNAL—AFTER MONTHS OF RESISTANCE, ATTORNEY GENERAL RICHARD THORNBURGH AGREES TO ASSIST CONGRESSIONAL INVESTIGATORS IN THEIR LOOK INTO THE INSLAW AFFAIR.
KEYWORDS: REP. JACK BROOKS, PROJECT EAGLE, GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW C
NO.: PR\IN\IC-03
YEAR: 4/28/90
SUMMARY: WASHINGTON POST EDITORIAL—COMMENDS ATTORNEY GENERAL RICHARD THORNBURGH FOR FINALLY COOPERATING WITH A CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE LOOKING INTO THE INSLAW CONTRACT DISPUTE.
KEYWORDS: JACK BROOKS

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW C
NO.: PR\IN\IC-04
YEAR: 4/30/90
SUMMARY: WASHINGTON BUSINESS JOURNAL—INSLAW CLAIMS THAT A JUSTICE DEPARTMENT SOFTWARE BUY IS REALLY A SURREPTITIOUS EFFORT TO CONVERT INSLAW'S PROMIS SOFTWARE.
KEYWORDS: CAROL ROTHGEB, MICHAEL ROBINSON

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW C
NO.: PR\IN\IC-05
YEAR: 5/7/90
SUMMARY: NEWS-PRESS, JAMES J. KILPATRICK EDITORIAL—AN OVERVIEW OF THE INSLAW DISPUTE TO DATE.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW C
NO.: PR\IN\IC-06
YEAR: 5/7/90
SUMMARY: WASHINGTON BUSINESS JOURNAL—INSLAW SUGGESTS THAT THE WINNER OF THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT'S PROJECT EAGLE CONTRACT IS INVOLVED IN A CONSPIRACY AGAINST THE SOFTWARE COMPANY.
KEYWORDS: TISOFT INC., PAT GALLAGHER, WILLIAM HAMILTON

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW C
NO.: PR\IN\IC-07
YEAR: 5/18/90
SUMMARY: THE WALL STREET JOURNAL—AN OVERVIEW OF THE INSLAW AFFAIR TO DATE WITH AN ANALYSIS OF PROBLEMS WITH THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT'S "PROJECT EAGLE," AN OFFICE AUTOMATION PLAN.
KEYWORDS: PATRICK GALLAGHER, WILLIAM HAMILTON, JACK BROOKS, TERRY MILLER

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW C
NO.: PR\IN\IC-01
YEAR: 5/28/90
SUMMARY: BUSINESS WEEK—A PROFILE OF US ATTORNEY GENERAL DICK THORNBURGH.
KEYWORDS: WILLIAM H. GRAY III, DAVID R. RUNKEL, KENNETH W. STARR

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW C
NO.: PR\IN\IC-09
YEAR: 9/10/90
SUMMARY: THE NEW REPUBLIC—ARTICLE REVIEWS MAJOR EVENTS TO DATE IN THE INSLAW AFFAIR AND QUESTIONS WHY ATTORNEY GENERAL RICHARD THORNBURGH DOESN'T LEAD AN INVESTIGATION OF THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT'S BEHAVIOR.
KEYWORDS: PROMIS, ANTHONY PASCIUTO, CORNELIUS BLACKSHEAR, SAM NUNN

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW C
NO.: PR\IN\IC-10
YEAR: 7/2/90
SUMMARY: WASHINGTON BUSINESS JOURNAL—A HOUSE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE PROBE FINDS IRREGULARITIES IN THE AWARD OF THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT'S "PROJECT EAGLE" CONTRACT TO TISOFT INC.
KEYWORDS: JACK BROOKS, ATTORNEY GENERAL RICHARD THORNBURGH

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW C
NO.: PR\IN\IC-11
YEAR: 8/6/90
SUMMARY: GOVERNMENT COMPUTER NEWS—INSLAW'S ACCUSATION THAT THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT STOLE ITS SOFTWARE UNDER THE "PROJECT EAGLE" PROGRAM LEAD THE HOUSE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE TO CUT THE PROJECT'S BUDGET IN HALF PENDING AN INVESTIGATION.
KEYWORDS: JACK BROOKS, WILLIAM HAMILTON, EDWIN MEESE

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW C
NO.: PR\IN\IC-12
YEAR: 12/7/90
SUMMARY: THE PRESS DEMOCRAT—HOUSE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE CHAIRMAN JACK BROOKS ACCUSES THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT OF ENGAGING IN A COVER-UP OF THE INSLAW AFFAIR BY WITHHOLDING DOCUMENTS FROM THE COMMITTEE.
KEYWORDS: STEVEN R. ROSS

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW C
NO.: PR\IN\IC-13
YEAR: 12/5/90
SUMMARY: SAN FRANCISCO DAILY JOURNAL—THE HEAD OF THE HOUSE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE LOOKING INTO THE INSLAW AFFAIR SAYS HE WILL LOOK INTO WHETHER THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT IS WRONG IN CLAIMING "PRIVILEGE" IN WITHHOLDING 200 DOCUMENTS FROM THE COMMITTEE.
KEYWORDS: JACK BROOKS, D. LOWELL JENSEN, ATTORNEY GENERAL RICHARD THORNBURGH

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW C
NO.: PR\IN\IC-14
YEAR: 12/6/90
SUMMARY: THE WASHINGTON POST, MARY MCGRORY COLUMN—QUESTIONS WHY ATTORNEY GENERAL RICHARD THORNBURGH WOULD USE "EXECUTIVE PRIVILEGE" TO WITHHOLD DOCUMENTS FROM A HOUSE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE LOOKING INTO THE INSLAW DISPUTE.
KEYWORDS: ELLIOT RICHARDSON, WILLIAM HAMILTON

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW C
NO.: PR\IN\IC-15
YEAR: 12/6/90
SUMMARY: THE WASHINGTON POST—REP. JACK BROOKS ACCUSES THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT OF WITHHOLDING DOCUMENTS TO FRUSTRATE HIS PANEL'S PROBE OF ALLEGED IMPROPRIETIES IN THE DEPARTMENT'S DEALINGS WITH INSLAW, INC.
KEYWORDS: JACK BROOKS, STEVEN R. ROSS, GEORGE FRANCIS BASON JR.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW C
NO.: PR\IN\IC-16
YEAR: 12/8/90
SUMMARY: THE WASHINGTON POST, EDITORIAL—SUMS UP INSLAW DISPUTE TO DATE AND QUESTIONS WHY ATTORNEY GENERAL RICHARD THORNBURGH WOULD REFUSE TO COOPERATE WITH A HOUSE COMMITTEE PROBING THE MATTER.
KEYWORDS: JACK BROOKS

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW C
NO.: PR\IN\IC-17
YEAR: 12/10/90
SUMMARY: THE WASHINGTON TIMES—THE HOUSE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE MAY ISSUE SUBPOENAS FOR HUNDREDS OF JUSTICE DEPARTMENT DOCUMENTS REGARDING DEALINGS WITH INSLAW INC. THAT THE DEPARTMENT HAS TO DATE WITHHELD.
KEYWORDS: WILLIAM HAMILTON, WILLIAM BRYANT, JACK BROOKS

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW C
NO.: PR\IN\IC-18
YEAR: 12/17/90
SUMMARY: BOSTON GLOBE—INSLAW LAWYER ELLIOT RICHARDSON ASKS THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT'S OFFICE OF PUBLIC INTEGRITY TO CONTACT 30 WITNESSES TO TESTIFY ON BEHALF OF INSLAW.
KEYWORDS: ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL WILLIAM WELD

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW C
NO.: PR\IN\IC-19
YEAR: 1/28/91
SUMMARY: FEDERAL COMPUTER MARKET REPORT—A THREE-JUDGE PANEL HAS HEARD THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT APPEAL OF THE INSLAW INC. SUIT. A RULING IS EXPECTED IN THE NEXT THREE MONTHS.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW C
NO.: PR\IN\IC-20
YEAR: 2/21/91
SUMMARY: THE WASHINGTON TIMES—THE HOUSE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE LOOKS INTO ALLEGATIONS THAT INSLAW'S SOFTWARE WAS SOLD ILLEGALLY TO IRAQI AND ISRAELI INTELLIGENCE AGENCIES.
KEYWORDS: CIA, DEFENSE INTELLIGENCE AGENCY, BIOTECH CAPITAL CORP., EARL BRIAN, ARI BEN-MENASHE, ATTORNEY GENERAL RICHARD THORNBURGH

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW C
NO.: PR\IN\IC-21
YEAR: 2/18/91
SUMMARY: GOVERNMENT COMPUTER NEWS—A SUMMARY OF THE INSLAW DISPUTE TO DATE.
KEYWORDS: MARK B. STERN, MICHAEL FRIEDLANDER

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW C
NO.: PR\IN\IC-22
YEAR: 2/19/91
SUMMARY: THE ST. LOUIS POST-DISPATCH—AFFIDAVITS IN THE INSLAW DISPUTE CLAIM THAT INSLAW'S SOFTWARE WAS ILLEGALLY SOLD TO THE ISRAELI, IRAQI, AND CANADIAN GOVERNMENTS.
KEYWORDS: WILLIAM HAMILTON, ARI BEN-MENASHE, EARL BRIAN, CIA, CARLOS CARDOEN

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW C
NO.: PR\IN\IC-23
YEAR: 2/21/91
SUMMARY: THE WASHINGTON TIMES—A HOUSE COMMITTEE INVESTIGATES ALLEGATIONS THAT INSLAW'S SOFTWARE IS BEING USED ILLEGALLY BY VARIOUS FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE AGENCIES.
KEYWORDS: KISRAEL, CANADA, CIA, BIOTECH CAPITAL INC., PROMIS

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW C
NO.: PR\IN\IC-24
YEAR: 2/25/91
SUMMARY: WASHINGTON BUSINESS JOURNAL—EARL BRIAN CALLS AFFIDAVITS STATING HE ILLEGALLY SOLD INSLAW SOFTWARE TO FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS "A TISSUE OF LIES."
KEYWORDS: INFOTECHNOLOGY INC., DENIS LACHANCE, ARI BEN-MENASHE

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW C
NO.: PR\IN\IC-25
YEAR: 2/27/91
SUMMARY: THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE DENIES CHARGES THAT IT DELIVERED STOLEN INSLAW SOFTWARE TO THE ISRAELI, CANADIAN, AND IRAQI GOVERNMENTS.
KEYWORDS: CARLOS CARDOEN, INFOTECHNOLOGY INC., EDWIN MEESE

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW C
NO.: PR\IN\IC-26
YEAR: 2/15/91
SUMMARY: THE MIAMI HERALD, JAMES J. KILPATRICK COLUMN—SUMS UP THE INSLAW DISPUTE TO DATE INCLUDING THE ACCUSATIONS THAT THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT SOLD THE SOFTWARE TO FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE AGENTS.
KEYWORDS: AUBREY ROBINSON, PAUL H. MANNES, MARTIN TEEL, CIA, EDWIN MEESE

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW C
NO.: PR\IN\IC-27
YEAR: 3/18/91
SUMMARY: LEGAL TIMES—A DETAILED REVIEW OF THE INSLAW DISPUTE WITH AN EMPHASIS ON MANY OF THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT INVOLVED.
KEYWORDS: JAY STEPHENS, MICHAEL SHAHEEN JR., CHARLES WORK, ELLIOT RICHARDSON

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW C
NO.: PR\IN\IC-01
YEAR: 3/24/91
SUMMARY: ST. LOUIS POST-DISPATCH—AFFIDAVITS CHARGE THAT WHITE HOUSE AIDE ROBERT C. MCFARLANE ILLEGALLY TRANSFERRED INSLAW SOFTWARE TO ISRAELI OFFICIALS.
KEYWORDS: ARI BEN-MENASHE, RICHARD H. BABAYAN, RICHARD SECORD, EARL BRIAN, MICHAEL RICONOSCIUTO, WACKENHUT CORP., CABAZON INDIANS

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW C
NO.: PR\IN\IC-29
YEAR: 3/25/91
SUMMARY: THE WASHINGTON TIMES—THE GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE REPORTS THAT THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT SOLD SURPLUS COMPUTERS WITHOUT FIRST ERASING SENSITIVE INFORMATION FROM THEIR MEMORY BANKS.
KEYWORDS: ROBERT WISE JR., CHARLES HAYES, HOWARD G. RHILE

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW C
NO.: PR\IN\IC-30
YEAR: 3/28/91
SUMMARY: THE WASHINGTON POST, MARY MCGRORY COLUMN—SUMMARIZES THE INSLAW DISPUTE TO DATE INCLUDING AFFIDAVITS BY A ENTREPRENEUR THAT EARL BRIAN SUPPLIED HIM WITH STOLEN INSLAW SOFTWARE.
KEYWORDS: MICHAEL RICONOSCIUTO

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW C
NO.: PR\IN\IC-31
YEAR: 3/31/91
SUMMARY: THE WASHINGTON POST—A KEY WITNESS FOR INSLAW INC. IS ARRESTED IN WASHINGTON STATE. MICHAEL RICONOSCIUTO HAD CLAIMED THAT PRIVATE INTERESTS HIRED HIM TO MODIFY ALLEGEDLY STOLEN SOFTWARE DEVELOPED BY INSLAW.
KEYWORDS: PETER VIDENIEKS, PROMIS

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW C
NO.: PR\IN\IC-32
YEAR: 4/4/91
SUMMARY: THE VANCOUVER SUN—INSLAW SAYS THAT THE CANADIAN GOVERNMENT WAS "DUPED" INTO ILLEGALLY ACQUIRING INSLAW SOFTWARE. US COURT DOCUMENTS ALSO SHOW A CANADIAN COMMUNICATIONS DEPARTMENT ADMITTING TO USING THE SOFTWARE WITHOUT AN AUTHORIZED SALE.
KEYWORDS: ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE, EARL BRIAN, RICHARD BABAYAN

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW C
NO.: PR\IN\IC-33
YEAR: 4/5/91
SUMMARY: VANCOUVER SUN—VICTORIA MPs WANT THE CANADIAN SOLICITOR GENERAL GRILLED OVER THE RCMP AND CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE USING ALLEGEDLY STOLEN INSLAW SOFTWARE.
KEYWORDS: PIERRE CADIEUX, JOHN BREWIN, WILLIAM BRYANT

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW C
NO.: PR\IN\IC-34
YEAR: 4/5/91
SUMMARY: FINANCIAL TIMES—ARI BEN-MENASHE ACCUSES REAGAN ADVISER ROBERT MCFARLANE OF ILLEGALLY DISTRIBUTING INSLAW SOFTWARE TO THE ISRAELI GOVERNMENT.
KEYWORDS: ELLIOT RICHARDSON

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW C
NO.: PR\IN\IC-35
YEAR: 4/9/91
SUMMARY: THE WASHINGTON POST, MARY MCGRORY COLUMN—A PROFILE OF INSLAW LAWYER ELLIOT RICHARDSON AND HIS EFFORTS ON BEHALF OF THE COMPANY.
KEYWORDS: RICHARD THORNBURGH, AUBREY E. ROBINSON

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW C
NO.: PR\IN\IC-36
YEAR: 4/9/91
SUMMARY: FINANCIAL TIMES—A COURT GIVES INSLAW THIRTY DAYS TO SUBPOENA WITNESSES AS PART OF AN EFFORT TO SPEED UP AN INVESTIGATION INTO JUSTICE DEPARTMENT BEHAVIOR.
KEYWORDS: ELLIOT RICHARDSON

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW C
NO.: PR\IN\IC-37
YEAR: 4/27/91
SUMMARY: THE WASHINGTON POST, EDITORIAL—A RECAP OF THE INSLAW DISPUTE AND HOW THE ATTORNEY GENERAL HAS RECENTLY AGREED TO LET THE HOUSE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE SEE EVERY DOCUMENT PERTINENT TO THE INSLAW DISPUTE.
KEYWORDS: JACK BROOKS, WILLIAM BRYANT

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW C
NO.: PR\IN\IC-38
YEAR: 4/30/91
SUMMARY: THE WASHINGTON POST, MARY MCGRORY COLUMN—ATTORNEY GENERAL DICK THORNBURGH WILL LET THE HOUSE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE VIEW EVERY JUSTICE DEPARTMENT DOCUMENT PERTINENT TO THE INSLAW CASE.
KEYWORDS: ELLIOT RICHARDSON, BOB FISKE, ELLIOT RICHARDSON

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW C
NO.: PR\IN\IC-39
YEAR: 5/8/91
SUMMARY: THE WASHINGTON TIMES—A FEDERAL APPEALS COURT THROWS OUT A 1988 RULING AGAINST THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT THAT IT STOLE SOFTWARE FROM INSLAW INC. INSLAW CAN STILL PURSUE ITS CLAIMS IN OTHER COURTS.
KEYWORDS: EDWIN MEESE, JUDGE STEPHEN F. WILLIAMS

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW C
NO.: PR\IN\IC-40
YEAR: 5/8/91
SUMMARY: THE WASHINGTON POST—THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT WINS AN APPEAL OF A PREVIOUS COURT DECISION THAT IT HAD "STOLEN" SOFTWARE FROM INSLAW INC. HOWEVER THE THREE-JUDGE APPEALS PANEL SUGGESTS THAT INSLAW FILE ITS SUIT IN ANOTHER, MORE PROPER FEDERAL COURT.
KEYWORDS: STEPHEN F. WILLIAMS

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW C
NO.: PR\IN\IC-41
YEAR: 5/11/91
SUMMARY: THE WASHINGTON POST, EDITORIAL—STATES THAT A RECENT OVERTURNING OF A PRO-INSLAW RULING WAS BASED NOT ON THE MERITS OF THE CASE BUT THAT THE ORIGINAL BANKRUPTCY COURT RULING WAS OUTSIDE THE JURISDICTION OF THE BANKRUPTCY COURT.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW MISCELLANEOUS
NO.: PR\IN\IM-01
YEAR: 3/8/88
SUMMARY: WASHINGTON POST—HADRON INC., AN EARL BRIAN COMPANY, REPORTS ITS QUARTERLY EARNINGS DOWN FROM THE SAME PERIOD LAST YEAR.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW MISCELLANEOUS
NO.: PR\IN\IM-02
YEAR: 6/16/88
YEAR: LOS ANGELES TIMES—MEMOS FROM A WEDTECH INC. CONSULTANT TO ATTORNEY
SUMMARY: GENERAL EDWIN MEESE INDICATE THAT THEY HELPED LAUNCH A PROBE OF A WEDTECH COMPETITOR.
KEYWORDS: E, ROBERT WALLACH, GARCIA ORDINANCE CORP.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW MISCELLANEOUS
NO.: PR\IN\IM-03
YEAR: 6/19/89
SUMMARY: SUMMARY:THE WASHINGTON BUSINESS JOURNAL—A PROFILE OF GLOBALINK, A COMPUTER THAT TRANSLATES WRITTEN FOREIGN LANGUAGES INTO ENGLISH.
KEYWORDS: DOMINIC LAITI, HADRON INC.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW MISCELLANEOUS
NO.: PR\IN\IM-04
YEAR: 10/28/88
SUMMARY: THE WASHINGTON POST, EDITORIAL—ENCOURAGES LEGISLATIVE “WHISTLE BLOWER” PROTECTION.
KEYWORDS: K. WILLIAM O’ CONNOR, JOSEPH WRIGHT, PAT SCHROEDER

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW MISCELLANEOUS
NO.: PR\IN\IM-05
YEAR: 9/12/90
SUMMARY: OPINION, EDITORIAL—AUTHOR BELIEVES THAT A KENTUCKY MAN’S CLAIM OF HAVING FOUND SECRET INFORMATION ON A USED JUSTICE DEPARTMENT COMPUTER IS A FRAUD.
KEYWORDS: CHUCK HAYES

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW MISCELLANEOUS
NO.: PR\IN\IM-06
YEAR: 9/18/90
SUMMARY: THE LEXINGTON HERALD READER—CONGRESS PLANS TO INVESTIGATE THE ACCIDENTAL SALE OF GOVERNMENT SECRETS IN SURPLUS COMPUTER EQUIPMENT BY THE US ATTORNEY’S OFFICE IN LEXINGTON, KY.
KEYWORDS: GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE, CHARLES HAYES, BOB WISE

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW MISCELLANEOUS
NO.: PR\IN\IM-07
YEAR: 3/25/91
SUMMARY: THE WASHINGTON POST—THE GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE SAYS IT UNCOVERED A FAILURE BY THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT TO SECURE SECRET COMPUTER FILES BEFORE SELLING COMPUTER HARDWARE AS SURPLUS.
KEYWORDS: HOWARD G. RHILE, ATTORNEY GENERAL RICHARD THORNBURGH, HARRY H. FLICKINGER, ROBERT WISE

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW MISCELLANEOUS
NO.: PR\IN\IM-08
YEAR: 3/27/91
SUMMARY: THE WASHINGTON TIMES—THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT DOESN’T KNOW IF SURPLUS COMPUTER HARDWARE CONTAINED SECRET INFO AND/OR WHO BOUGHT IT.
KEYWORDS: GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE, ROBERT E. WISE, HARRY H. FLICKINGER

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: INSLAW MISCELLANEOUS
NO.: PR\IN\IM-09
YEAR: ?
SUMMARY: THE WALL STREET JOURNAL—AN ARTICLE ON HOW DIFFICULT IT IS FOR SMALL COMPANIES TO EMERGE FROM A CHAPTER 11.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: JUSTICE DEPARTMENT
NO.: PR\IN\JD-01
YEAR: 2/5/90
SUMMARY: LEGAL TIMES—A SENATE STAFF REPORT CALLS INTO QUESTION A JUSTICE DEPARTMENT ETHICS OFFICER'S POLITICAL INDEPENDENCE IN HIS PROBE OF ALLEGATIONS AGAINST THE DEPARTMENT OVER THE INSLAW AFFAIR.
KEYWORDS: MICHAEL SHAHEEN JR., ROGER PILON, MATTHEW MYERS

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: JUSTICE DEPARTMENT
NO.: PR\IN\JD-02
YEAR: 3/25/90
SUMMARY: NEW YORK TIMES MAGAZINE—A CLIPPING FROM A PROFILE OF THEN-PRESIDENT BUSH'S CABINET. THE CLIPPING FOCUSES ON ATTORNEY GENERAL RICHARD THORNBURGH.
KEYWORDS: WILLIAM SAXBE, ED MEESE, JOHN SUNUNU

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: PROMIS SOFTWARE: BACKGROUND
NO.: PR\IN\PS-02
YEAR: 4/25/77
SUMMARY: LOS ANGELES TIMES—DATA COLLECTED USING PROMIS SOFTWARE SHOWS THAT MORE THAN HALF OF THE FELONY ARRESTS IN FIVE JURISDICTIONS ACROSS THE COUNTRY WERE REJECTED BY PROSECUTORS OR DISMISSED AFTER CHARGES WERE FILED.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: PROMIS SOFTWARE: BACKGROUND
NO.: PR\IN\PS-03
YEAR: 5/16/77
SUMMARY: LOS ANGELES TIMES—A STUDY CONDUCTED BY THE LAW ENFORCEMENT ASSISTANCE ADMINISTRATION (WHICH DESIGNED THE ORIGINAL PROMIS SOFTWARE) SHOWS THAT ONLY 8% OF WASHINGTON D.C.'S POLICE OFFICERS MADE MORE THAN HALF OF ALL ARRESTS THAT LED TO CONVICTIONS IN 1974.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: PROMIS SOFTWARE: BACKGROUND
NO.: PR\IN\PS-04
YEAR: 6/10/78
SUMMARY: SATURDAY REVIEW—AN ARTICLE BASED UPON INSLAW DATA AND CRITICIZING THE US COURT SYSTEM.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: PROMIS SOFTWARE: BACKGROUND
NO.: PR\IN\PS-05
YEAR: 12/25/78
SUMMARY: WASHINGTON POST—A CASE STUDY OF WASHINGTON D.C.'S CRIMINAL JUSTICE SYSTEM FINDS WIDELY DIFFERING SENTENCING PRACTICES AMONG DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA JUDGES.
KEYWORDS: WILLIAM HAMILTON, INSLAW

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: PROMIS SOFTWARE: BACKGROUND
NO.: PR\IN\PS-06
YEAR: 2/16/79
SUMMARY: THE WALL STREET JOURNAL—AN EDITORIAL BY INSLAW DIRECTOR OF RESEARCH BRIAN E. FORST STATES THAT MOST ARRESTS FOR SERIOUS CRIMES DO NOT END IN SUBJECT: CONVICTION.
FILE:
NO.: INSLAW
YEAR: PROMIS SOFTWARE: BACKGROUND
PR\IN\PS-07
4/23/79
SUMMARY: THE WASHINGTON POST—AN INSLAW STUDY REVEALS THAT PERSONS WHO HAVE BEEN ARRESTED FOR BURGLARY, ROBBERY, AND LARCENIES HAVE A 60 PERCENT CHANCE OF AGAIN BEING ARRESTED FOR CRIMES.
KEYWORDS: WILLIAM HAMILTON

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: PROMIS SOFTWARE: BACKGROUND
NO.: PR\IN\PS-08
YEAR: 8/79
SUMMARY: DISTRICT LAWYER—AN ARTICLE BY INSLAW PRESIDENT WILLIAM HAMILTON SAYS ONE OF THE TWO MOST COMMON REASONS FOR FELONY CASES BEING DROPPED IS POLICE FAILURE TO COLLECT SUFFICIENT EVIDENCE.
KEYWORDS: LAW ENFORCEMENT ASSISTANCE ADMINISTRATION

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: PROMIS SOFTWARE: BACKGROUND
NO.: PR\IN\PS-09
YEAR: 10/14/79
SUMMARY: THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE, EDITORIAL—RECOMMENDS PROMIS SOFTWARE AS A WAY OF MANAGING PROSECUTOR CASELOADS AND STOPPING UP THE CRIMINAL JUSTICE SIEVE.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: PROMIS SOFTWARE: BACKGROUND
NO.: PR\IN\PS-10
YEAR: 1980
SUMMARY: 'IMPROVING PROSECUTION?: THE INDUCEMENT AND IMPLEMENTATION OF INNOVATIONS FOR PROSECUTION MANAGEMENT' BY DAVID LEO WEIMER—A BOOK EXCERPT THAT QUESTIONS WHETHER USE OF INSLAW SOFTWARE BY PROSECUTORS' OFFICES INSTEAD OF A RIVAL SOFTWARE WAS THE BEST CHOICE.
KEYWORDS: PROMIS, DALITE, D. LOWELL JENSEN, WILLIAM HAMILTON

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: PROMIS SOFTWARE: BACKGROUND
NO.: PR\IN\PS-11
YEAR: 3/16/82
SUMMARY: LOS ANGELES TIMES—AN INSLAW SURVEY OF 264 FEDERAL JUDGES SHOWS A WIDER-THAN-PREVIOUSLY-BELIEVED DISPARITY IN SENTENCING.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: PROMIS SOFTWARE: BACKGROUND
NO.: PR\IN\PS-12
YEAR: 4/16/82
SUMMARY: LOS ANGELES TIMES—AN INSLAW STUDY SUGGESTS THAT THOUSANDS OF LAWBREAKERS ARE ESCAPING PROSECUTION BECAUSE OF JURISDICTIONAL RIVALRIES BETWEEN STATE AND FEDERAL LAW ENFORCEMENT AUTHORITIES.
KEYWORDS: ATTORNEY GENERAL WILLIAM FRENCH SMITH

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: PROMIS SOFTWARE: BACKGROUND
NO.: PR\IN\PS-13
YEAR: 5/11/82
SUMMARY: WALL STREET JOURNAL—A LOOK AT THE LOS ANGELES CAREER CRIMINAL PROSECUTION UNIT, A LEGAL SPECIAL TEAM THAT WORKS TO WIN STIFFER SENTENCES FOR CAREER-CRIMINALS.
KEYWORDS: BARBARA BOLAND, INSLAW

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: PROMIS SOFTWARE: BACKGROUND
NO.: PR\IN\PS-14
YEAR: 9/13/82
SUMMARY: THE NATIONAL LAW JOURNAL—INSLAW STUDIES SHOW THAT CAREER-CRIMINALS ARE NOT BEING PROSECUTED BECAUSE LAW ENFORCEMENT OFFICIALS ARE IGNORING WAYS TO IDENTIFY THEM. OTHER CRIMINALS GO FREE BECAUSE LACK OF COORDINATION AMONG THOSE OFFICIALS.
KEYWORDS: JUSTICE DEPARTMENT'S OFFICE OF LEGAL POLICY

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: PROMIS SOFTWARE: BACKGROUND
NO.: PR\IN\PS-15
YEAR: 12/29/82
SUMMARY: THE DAILY RECORD (BALTIMORE)—VARIOUS FORMS OF ELECTRONIC TECHNOLOGY ARE BEING BROUGHT TO BEAR IN THE FIGHT AGAINST CRIME.
KEYWORDS: PROMIS, INSLAW

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: PROMIS SOFTWARE: BACKGROUND
NO.: PR\IN\PS-16
YEAR: 1/3/83
SUMMARY: NATIONAL CONFERENCE ON THE IMPACT OF CRIMINAL JUSTICE PROGRAM INITIATIVES ON DATA REQUIREMENTS AND INFORMATION POLICY—A SPEECH BY JAMES Q. WILSON QUOTING AN INSLAW STUDY ABOUT WHAT CRITERIA TO USE IN DECIDING PRIORITY OF PROSECUTING CRIMINALS.

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: PROMIS SOFTWARE: BACKGROUND
NO.: PR\IN\PS-17
YEAR: 8/8/83
SUMMARY: LEGAL TIMES—US ATTORNEY'S OFFICES NATIONWIDE GO ONLINE WITH INSLAW'S PROMIS SOFTWARE.
KEYWORDS: WILLIAM HAMILTON

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: PROMIS SOFTWARE: BACKGROUND
NO.: PR\IN\PS-18
YEAR: 8/10/83
SUMMARY: THE WALL STREET JOURNAL—A PROFILE OF NEW YORK'S CAREER CRIMINAL PROGRAM WHICH STRESSES JAILING CRIMINALS WHO COMMIT LARGE NUMBERS OF CRIMES, EVEN LESS SERIOUS CRIMES.
KEYWORDS: INSLAW

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: PROMIS SOFTWARE: BACKGROUND
NO.: PR\IN\PS-19
YEAR: JUNE-JULY 1984
SUMMARY: JUDICATURE—ARTICLE RECOMMENDS THAT COURTS MAKE BETTER USE OF INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY AND CASE MANAGEMENT SOFTWARE.
KEYWORDS: PROMIS, DOCKETRAC

SUBJECT: INSLAW
FILE: PROMIS SOFTWARE: BACKGROUND
NO.: PR\IN\PS-20
SUMMARY: THE JOURNAL OF LEGAL STUDIES—AN ANALYSIS OF THE ROLE OF THE PROSECUTOR BASED ON AN INSLAW RESEARCH PROJECT.
KEYWORDS: BILL HAMILTON, BRIAN FORST, WILLIAM LANDES

SUBJECT: INTELLIGENCE ORGANIZATIONS
FILE: CIA: BACKGROUND
NO.: PR\IO\CB-01
YEAR: 3/24/72
SUMMARY: NBC NEWS 'CHRONOLOG'—A TRANSCRIPT OF A TELEVISION REPORT ABOUT A CLANDESTINE ARMY TRAINED, EQUIPPED, ADVISED, AND PAID BY THE CIA AND FIGHTING IN LAOS.
KEYWORDS: AGENCY FOR INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT, VIET NAM, MUNG

SUBJECT: INTELLIGENCE ORGANIZATIONS
FILE: CIA: BACKGROUND
NO.: PR\IO\CB-02
YEAR: 5/17/84
SUMMARY: 20/20—A TRANSCRIPT OF A TELEVISION REPORT ON THE LIFE AND DEATH OF GEORGE WEISZ, A MASTER SPY FOR THE CIA
KEYWORDS: BILL HARVEY, DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

SUBJECT: INTELLIGENCE ORGANIZATIONS
FILE: CIA: BACKGROUND
NO.: PR\IO\CB-03
YEAR: 9/27/84
SUMMARY: THE PRESS-ENTERPRISE—THE CIA DENIES AN ALLEGATION CARRIED BY ABC NEWS THAT THE AGENCY ENGAGED IN A PLOT TO KILL HONOLULU INVESTMENT COUNSELOR RONALD REWALD WHO CLAIMS HIS FAILED COMPANY WAS A CIA FRONT.
KEYWORDS: SCOTT BARNES

SUBJECT: INTELLIGENCE ORGANIZATIONS
FILE: CIA: RENEGADES
NO.: PR\IO\CR-01
YEAR: 8/26/91
SUMMARY: NEW YORK TIMES—A TEAM OF EX-GREEN BERETS MAY HAVE BEEN RECRUITED BY A FORMER CIA AGENT TO TRAIN LIBYAN TERRORISTS.
KEYWORDS: EDWARD P. WILSON, COLONEL QADDAFI

SUBJECT: INTELLIGENCE ORGANIZATIONS
FILE: CIA: RENEGADES
NO.: PR\IO\CR-02
YEAR: 8/30/81
SUMMARY: THE NEW YORK TIMES—A FORMER CIA AGENT SHIPPED TWENTY TONS OF PLASTIC EXPLOSIVES FROM THE US TO LIBYA TO BE USED IN TERRORIST BOMBS.
KEYWORDS: EDWIN P. WILSON, FRANK TERPIL

SUBJECT: INTELLIGENCE ORGANIZATIONS
FILE: CIA: RENEGADES
NO.: PR\IO\CR-03
YEAR: 9/6/81
SUMMARY: THE NEW YORK TIMES—A GROUP OF INTERLOCKING BUSINESSES ASSOCIATED WITH A FORMER CIA AGENT TRANSFER TECHNOLOGY AND MILITARY EQUIPMENT TO THE MIDDLE EAST.
KEYWORDS: EDWIN P. WILSON, THOMAS G. CLINES, FRANK TERPIL, THEODORE G. SHACKLEY

SUBJECT: INTELLIGENCE ORGANIZATIONS
FILE: CIA: RENEGADES
NO.: PR\IO\CR-04
YEAR: 9/14/81
SUMMARY: THE NEW YORK TIMES—AN ANALYSIS OF THE ISSUES BROUGHT FORTH BY THE ACTIVITIES OF EX-CIA AGENTS EXPORTING WEAPONS TECHNOLOGY TO TERRORIST COUNTRIES.
KEYWORDS: LIBYA, EDWIN P. WILSON, QADDAFI

SUBJECT: INTELLIGENCE ORGANIZATIONS
FILE: CIA: RENEGADES
NO.: PR\IO\CR-05
YEAR: 9/19/81
SUMMARY: THE NEW YORK TIMES—THE HOUSE SELECT COMMITTEE ON INTELLIGENCE MOUNTS A FULL SCALE INVESTIGATION OF THE ACTIVITIES OF EX-CIA AGENT EDWIN P. WILSON.
KEYWORDS: MUAMMAR EL-QADDAFI, FRANK E. TERPIL

SUBJECT: INTELLIGENCE ORGANIZATIONS
FILE: CIA: RENEGADES
NO.: PR\IO\CR-06
YEAR: 9/23/81
SUMMARY: THE NEW YORK TIMES—EX-CIA AIDE SEES "NO WAY" TO BAR RETIRED INTELLIGENCE OFFICERS FROM DOING BUSINESS ABROAD.
KEYWORDS: VERNON A. WALTERS, EDWIN P. WILSON, FRANK E. TERPIL

SUBJECT: INTELLIGENCE ORGANIZATIONS
FILE: CIA: RENEGADES
NO.: PR\IO\CR-07
YEAR: 9/30/91
SUMMARY: THE NEW YORK TIMES—THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT DECIDES TO BOLSTER ITS INQUIRY INTO AN INVESTIGATION OF EDWIN WILSON AND FRANK TERPIL, TWO EX-CIA OFFICERS CHARGED WITH SELLING EXPLOSIVES TO LIBYAN TERRORISTS.
KEYWORDS: WILLIAM H. WEBSTER

SUBJECT: INTELLIGENCE ORGANIZATIONS
FILE: CIA: RENEGADES
NO.: PR\IO\CR-08
YEAR: 9/13/81
SUMMARY: THE NEW YORK TIMES—THE F.B.I. IS INVESTIGATING AN ALLEGATION THAT A COMPANY OWNED BY EX-CIA OFFICER EDWIN P. WILSON BRIBED A KEY-FEDERAL OFFICIAL.
KEYWORDS: CONTROL DATA CORPORATION, KEVIN P. MULCAHY

SUBJECT: INTELLIGENCE ORGANIZATIONS
FILE: CIA: RENEGADES
NO.: PR\IO\CR-10
YEAR: 10/11/81
SUMMARY: THE NEW YORK TIMES—TWO FORMER ASSOCIATES ACCUSE EX-CIA AGENT EDWIN P. WILSON OF TRYING TO DIVERT AMERICAN ELECTRONIC INTELLIGENCE GATHERING TECHNOLOGY TO THE SOVIET UNION.

SUBJECT: INTELLIGENCE ORGANIZATIONS
FILE: CIA: RENEGADES
NO.: PR\IO\CR-10
YEAR: 10/13/81
SUMMARY: THE NEW YORK TIMES—CURRENT AND FORMER EXECUTIVES OF A SMALL CALIFORNIA ELECTRONICS COMPANY SAY TWO FORMER CIA AGENTS TRIED TO MARKET SENSITIVE AMERICAN TECHNOLOGY ABROAD.
KEYWORDS: FRANK E. TERPIL, EDWIN P. WILSON, STANFORD TECHNOLOGY CORPORATION

SUBJECT: INTELLIGENCE ORGANIZATIONS
FILE: CIA: RENEGADES
NO.: PR\IO\CR-11
YEAR: 10/24/81
SUMMARY: THE NEW YORK TIMES—A 10 COUNT INDICTMENT WAS HANDED DOWN AGAINST EX-CIA AGENTS FRANK TERPIL AND EDWIN P. WILSON FOR SHIPPING EXPLOSIVES TO LIBYA AND TRAINING LIBYAN TERRORISTS. THE INDICTMENT ALSO INCLUDED A VIRGINIA MAN WITH SUPERVISING THE LIBYAN END OF THE DEAL.
KEYWORDS: DONALD SCHLACHTER

SUBJECT: INTELLIGENCE ORGANIZATIONS
FILE: CIA: RENEGADES
NO.: PR\IO\CR-12
YEAR: 10/25/81
SUMMARY: THE NEW YORK TIMES—AN ASSASSIN TARGETING A LIBYAN STUDENT IN COLORADO IN 1980 FOUND SANCTUARY AT AN ENGLISH FARM OWNED BY EX-CIA AGENT EDWIN P. WILSON.
KEYWORDS: EUGENE A. TAFOYA, FAISAL ZAGALLAI

SUBJECT: INTELLIGENCE ORGANIZATIONS
FILE: CIA: RENEGADES
NO.: PR\IO\CR-13 & 14
YEAR: ?
SUMMARY: THE NEW YORK TIMES MAGAZINE—A TWO-PART ARTICLE ABOUT HOW FORMER CIA ANALYST KEVIN P. MULCAHY WAS DUPED INTO COORDINATING ILLEGAL EXPORTATION OF TECHNOLOGY AND TRAINING TO LIBYA TERRORISTS AT THE BEHEST OF EX-CIA AGENTS FRANK TERPIL AND EDWIN P. WILSON.
KEYWORDS: MUAMMAR EL-QADDAFI

SUBJECT: INTELLIGENCE ORGANIZATIONS
FILE: CIA: IRAN-CONTRA/DRUG SMUGGLING
NO.: PR\IO\CI-05
3/1/90
SUMMARY: THE NEW YORK TIMES—A COSTA RICAN JUDGE SIGNS AN EXTRADITION ORDER FOR AN ALLEGED CIA OPERATIVE, NOW IN THE US, FOR THE BOMBING OF A NEWS CONFERENCE GIVEN BY CONTRA EDEN PASTORA IN 1984.ALSO: THE WASHINGTON POST—A JACK ANDERSON COLUMN MAINTAINS THAT CONGRESS IS PROTECTING THE OPERATIVE.
KEYWORDS: JOHN HULL, MAXIMO ESQUIVEL, PHILIP HOLTZ, TONY AVIRGAN, THE OVERSEAS PRIVATE INVESTMENT CORPORATION, JEFFREY FELDMAN

SUBJECT: INTELLIGENCE ORGANIZATIONS
FILE: CIA: IRAN-CONTRA/DRUG SMUGGLING
NO.: PR\IO\CI-04
YEAR: JUNE 1990
SUMMARY: CHRISTIAN SOCIAL ACTION—AN ARTICLE BY A MEMBER OF THE CHRISTIC INSTITUTE CLAIMS THAT THE CIA HAS HISTORICALLY USED DRUG DEALERS AND DRUG SMUGGLING TO SUPPORT THEIR COVERT WAR EFFORTS.
KEYWORDS: JOHN F. KERRY

SUBJECT: INTELLIGENCE ORGANIZATIONS
FILE: CIA: IRAN-CONTRA/DRUG SMUGGLING
NO.: PR\IO\CI-03
YEAR: 3/26/90
SUMMARY: THE NATIONAL LAW JOURNAL—SEVERAL CASES WITH RECENT DEVELOPMENTS STEM FROM THE IRAN-CONTRA AFFAIR INCLUDING A COSTA RICAN ATTEMPT TO EXTRADITE FROM THE US AN ALLEGED CIA OPERATIVE, THE HARASSMENT OF AN ANTI-CONTRA ACTIVIST, AND THE APPEAL OF A SANCTION IMPOSED AGAINST THE CHRISTIC INSTITUTE.
KEYWORDS: JOHN HULL, EDEN PASTORA, JACK TERRELL, F.B.I., JUDGE JAMES L. KING

SUBJECT: INTELLIGENCE ORGANIZATIONS
FILE: CIA: IRAN-CONTRA/DRUG SMUGGLING
NO.: PR\IO\CI-02
YEAR: 10/11/87
SUMMARY: THE SACRAMENTO BEE—A LEFT-AND A RIGHT-WING ACTIVIST BOTH CLAIM THE CIA USES A "SECRET TEAM" THAT RUNS GUNS, SMUGGLES DRUGS, AND CONDUCTS ASSASSINATIONS IN THE NAME OF ANTI-COMMUNISM.
KEYWORDS: THE CHRISTIC INSTITUTE, MIAS, FULGENCIO BATISTA, THEODORE SHACKLEY, THOMAS CLINES, RICHARD SECORD, JOHN K. SINGLAUB, OLIVER NORTH, TONY AVIRGAN, MARTHA HONEY

SUBJECT: INTELLIGENCE ORGANIZATIONS
FILE: CIA: IRAN-CONTRA/DRUG SMUGGLING
NO.: PR\IO\CI-01
YEAR: 2/17/87
SUMMARY: IN THESE TIMES—THIS ARTICLE CONTRADICTS THE WIDELY REPORTED ACCOUNT THAT IRANIANS LEAKED THE ARMS-FOR-HOSTAGE DEAL. INSTEAD, THE REPORTERS MAINTAIN THAT ISRAELI INTELLIGENCE LEAKED THE PLOT TO PROTECT SOME OF THEIR OWN AGENTS.
KEYWORDS: AL SHIRROA, KHOMEINI, EDWIN MEESE, NATIONAL SECURITY COUNCIL, ARIEL SHARON, SAM EVANS NORTHRUP, CYRUS HASHEMI

SUBJECT: INTELLIGENCE ORGANIZATIONS
FILE: CIA: IRAN-CONTRA/DRUG SMUGGLING
NO.: PR\IO\CI-06
YEAR: 11/5/90
SUMMARY: SOUTH FLORIDA BUSINESS JOURNAL—A YEAR AFTER THE CONNECTION BETWEEN A TERRORIST/DRUG SMUGGLER AND THE PAN AN 103 BOMBING WAS REVEALED, THE DRUG ENFORCEMENT AGENCY DECIDES TO INVESTIGATE.
KEYWORDS: MONZER AL-KASSAR, JUVAL AVIV, CIA, THE CONTRAS, ABU NIDAL

SUBJECT: INTELLIGENCE ORGANIZATIONS
FILE: CIA: IRAN-CONTRA/DRUG SMUGGLING
NO.: PR\IO\CI-07
YEAR: 11/23-30/90
SUMMARY: THE BOSTON PHOENIX—ARTICLE DETAILS THE COVER-UP OF DRUG TRAFFICKER BARRY SEAL'S ROLE IN IRAN-CONTRA AND HIS EVENTUAL ASSASSINATION BY MEDELLIN CARTEL GUNMEN.
KEYWORDS: TERRY REED, ARKANSAS, JOHN CATHEY, OLIVER NORTH, FELIX RODRIGUEZ, "BLACK EAGLE"

SUBJECT: INTELLIGENCE ORGANIZATIONS
FILE: CIA: IRAN-CONTRA/DRUG SMUGGLING
NO.: PR\IO\CI-08
YEAR: 12/17/90
SUMMARY: BARRON'S—A PRIVATE PROBE BY PAN AM ALLEGES A TERRORIST-DRUG LINK IN THE PAN AM 103 BOMBING AND THAT THE CIA AND DEA. WERE VIRTUAL SPECTATORS TO THE TRAGEDY.
KEYWORDS: MONZER AL-KASSAR, RICHARD SECORD, MOSSAD

SUBJECT: INTELLIGENCE ORGANIZATIONS
FILE: CIA: IRAN-CONTRA/DRUG SMUGGLING
NO.: PR\IO\CI-09
YEAR: 2/11/91
SUMMARY: THE BOSTON HERALD—A NEW YORK FEDERAL PROSECUTOR WHO WORKED ON THE IRAN-CONTRA CASE CLAIMS HIS BOOK "OPENING ARGUMENTS" THAT THE CIA UNDERMINED THE IRAN-CONTRA PROBE BY BRIBING SENIOR OFFICIALS IN COSTA RICA AND INTERFERING WITH WITNESS TESTIMONY.
KEYWORDS: JEFFREY R. TOOBIN

SUBJECT: INTELLIGENCE ORGANIZATIONS
FILE: CIA: IRAN-CONTRA/DRUG SMUGGLING
NO.: PR\IO\CI-10
YEAR: 12/2/90
SUMMARY: THE WASHINGTON POST—SENTENCING OF IRAN-CONTRA CONSPIRATOR THOMAS G. CLINES WAS POSTPONED AFTER DEFENSE ATTORNEYS ASK TO RESPOND TO PROSECUTION CLAIMS THAT CLINES FINANCIALLY MISREPRESENTED HIMSELF.
KEYWORDS: PAULA M. JUNGHANS, LAWRENCE E. WALSH, OLIVER NORTH

SUBJECT: INTELLIGENCE ORGANIZATIONS
FILE: CIA: IRAN-CONTRA/DRUG SMUGGLING
NO.: PR\IO\CI-11
YEAR: 5/4/91
SUMMARY: THE WASHINGTON POST—A FORMER OPERATIVE IN OLIVER NORTH'S IRAN-CONTRA NETWORK SAYS GEORGE BUSH WAS NOT WARE OF THEIR OPERATION.
KEYWORDS: FELIX RODRIGUEZ, DONALD GREGG, LAWRENCE E. WALSH, RONALD REAGAN

SUBJECT: INTELLIGENCE ORGANIZATIONS
FILE: CIA: IRAN-CONTRA/DRUG SMUGGLING
NO.: PR\IO\CI-13
YEAR: 6/5/87
SUMMARY: THE SACRAMENTO BEE—A BURMESE DRUG WARLORD ACCUSED THE ASSISTANT US SECRETARY OF DEFENSE AND OTHERS OF DRUG TRAFFICKING TO FUND ANTI-COMMUNIST OPERATIONS.
KEYWORDS: KHUN SA, RICHARD L. ARMITAGE, THEODORE SHACKLEY, JAMES G. "BO" GRITZ

SUBJECT: INTELLIGENCE ORGANIZATIONS
FILE: DRUG ENFORCEMENT ADMINISTRATION
NO.: PR\IO\DE-01
YEAR: 2/28/92
SUMMARY: A HEARING BEGAN ON THE TRIAL OF A GROUP OF FORMER MILITARY AND POLICE OFFICERS FOR THE ILLEGAL SALE OF WEAPONS AND TECHNOLOGY TO DRUG RUNNERS.
KEYWORDS: THE COMPANY, LARRY EARL BRYANT, ALVIN SNAPER, ANDREW CARTER THORNTON II

SUBJECT: INTELLIGENCE ORGANIZATIONS
FILE: DRUG ENFORCEMENT ADMINISTRATION
NO.: PR\IO\DE-02
YEAR: 9/13/85
SUMMARY: THE LOS ANGELES TIMES—A FORMER NARCOTICS OFFICER ONCE LINKED TO A SOUTH AMERICAN DRUG RING PARACHUTED TO HIS DEATH WITH 77 POUNDS OF COCAINE. (HIS MAIN CHUTE FAILED TO OPEN.)
KEYWORDS: ANDREW CARTER THORNTON II, THE COMPANY

SUBJECT: INTELLIGENCE ORGANIZATIONS
FILE: DRUG ENFORCEMENT ADMINISTRATION
NO.: PR\IO\DE-03
YEAR: JANUARY 1990
SUMMARY: THE AMERICAN SPECTATOR—A PROFILE OF THEN-RULER GENERAL MANUEL NORIEGA AND HIS PROSPECTS FOR THE NINETIES.
KEYWORDS:

SUBJECT: INTELLIGENCE ORGANIZATIONS
FILE: DRUG ENFORCEMENT ADMINISTRATION
NO.: PR\IO\DE-04
YEAR: 12/15/90
SUMMARY: THE BOSTON GLOBE—IN LOS ANGELES, TWO INDICTMENTS WERE UNSEALED AGAINST A BOLIVIAN IMMIGRANT REPUTED TO RIVAL LEADERS OF THE COLOMBIAN COCAINE CARTELS.
KEYWORDS: JORGE ROCA SUAREZ

SUBJECT: INTELLIGENCE ORGANIZATIONS
FILE: DRUG ENFORCEMENT ADMINISTRATION
NO.: PR\IO\DE-05
YEAR: 12/19/90
SUMMARY: THE WASHINGTON POST—THE DRUG ENFORCEMENT AGENCY SUSPENDS RAIDS IN PERU AS THE RESULT OF INTERFERENCE FROM THE PERUVIAN ARMED FORCES.
KEYWORDS: ROBERT C. BONNER, THE INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND

SUBJECT: INTELLIGENCE ORGANIZATIONS
FILE: DRUG ENFORCEMENT ADMINISTRATION
NO.: PR\IO\DE-06
YEAR: 12/19/90
SUMMARY: THE WASHINGTON POST—A TOP COCAINE TRAFFICKER WANTED IN THE UNITED STATES, SURRENDERS TO COLOMBIAN AUTHORITIES WITH THE AGREEMENT HE WILL NOT BE EXTRADICTED TO THE UNITED STATES.
KEYWORDS: FABIO OCHOA VASQUEZ

SUBJECT: INTELLIGENCE ORGANIZATIONS
FILE: DRUG ENFORCEMENT ADMINISTRATION
NO.: PR\IO\DE-07
YEAR: 1/22/91
SUMMARY: THE WASHINGTON POST—A DRUG TRAFFICKER WHO SURRENDERED UNDER THE COLOMBIAN PRESIDENT'S AGREEMENT NOT TO EXTRADITE HIM TO THE UNITED STATES, IS RELEASED FROM COLOMBIAN PRISON AFTER LESS THAN TWO MONTHS.
KEYWORDS: GONZALO MEJIA, CESAR GAVIRIA, CARLOS GUSTAVO ARRIETA

SUBJECT: INTELLIGENCE ORGANIZATIONS
FILE: DRUG ENFORCEMENT ADMINISTRATION
NO.: PR\IO\DE-08
YEAR: 2/28/91
SUMMARY: THE NEW YORK TIMES—A SENATE STAFF STUDY AND TESTIMONY AT A SENATE PANEL REVEALS THAT BRITISH AND ISRAELI MERCENARIES PROVIDED PARAMILITARY ASSISTANCE TO DRUG TRAFFICKERS IN COLOMBIA IN 1988 AND 1989.
KEYWORDS: SENATOR WILLIAM V. ROTH, DAVID TOMKINS, YAIR G. KLEIN

SUBJECT: INTELLIGENCE ORGANIZATIONS
FILE: DRUG ENFORCEMENT ADMINISTRATION
NO.: PR\IO\DE-09
YEAR: 5/3/91
SUMMARY: THE WASHINGTON POST, JACK ANDERSON AND DALE VAN ATTA—INVESTIGATIONS BY A HOUSE SUBCOMMITTEE AND THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT'S INSPECTOR GENERAL ALLEGE THAT CUSTOMS AGENTS FRATERNIZE WITH DRUG DEALERS IN THE MIDWEST.
KEYWORDS: REPRESENTATIVE DOUG BARNARD JR., CUSTOMS COMMISSIONER CAROL HALLETT

SUBJECT: INTELLIGENCE ORGANIZATIONS
FILE: INTELLIGENCE MISCELLANEOUS
NO.: PR\IO\IM-01
YEAR: 1/26/90
SUMMARY: THE BOSTON GLOBE—AN OVERVIEW OF VICTOR OSTROVSKY, A FORMER MOSSAD SPY,WHOSE MEMOIR OF LIFE IN THE SPY SERVICE ALLEGES ASSASSINATIONS, BLACKMAIL, AND INTERNAL INTERFERENCE IN OTHER COUNTRIES.

SUBJECT: INTELLIGENCE ORGANIZATIONS
FILE: INTELLIGENCE MISCELLANEOUS
NO.: PR\IO\IM-02
YEAR: 12/5/90
SUMMARY: BOSTON GLOBE—TWO SENIOR RETIRED ISRAELI MILITARY OFFICERS CONSPIRED TO TRAIN AND ARM ASSASSINS FROM THE MEDELLIN COCAINE CARTEL.
KEYWORDS: YAIR KLEIN, JOSE GONZALO RODRIGUEZ GACHA, PINCHAS SHACHAR

SUBJECT: CABAZON/WACKENHUT
FILE: MICHAEL RICONOSCIUTO
NO.: PR\CW\MR-02
YEAR: 1/20/73
SUMMARY: RICONOSCIUTO IS CONVICTED OF STEALING $3,000 WORTH OF ELECTRONIC EQUIPMENT.
KEYWORDS: DAVID F. LADELY

SUBJECT: CABAZON/WACKENHUT
FILE: MICHAEL RICONOSCIUTO
NO.: PR\CW\MR-03
YEAR: 5/23/73
SUMMARY: SEATTLE POST-INTELLIGENCER—MARSHALL RICONOSCIUTO, FATHER OF MICHAEL RICONOSCIUTO, TESTIFIES AT HIS SON MICHAEL'S TRIAL FOR DRUG TRAFFICKING THAT HE RAISED $80,000 FOR HIS SON'S RESEARCH INTO CHEMICAL AND ELECTRONIC PRODUCTS.
KEYWORDS: LESTER WOOTEN, JOHN HUTT

SUBJECT: CABAZON/WACKENHUT
FILE: MICHAEL RICONOSCIUTO
NO.: PR\CW\MR-01
YEAR: 9/15/72
SUMMARY: RICONOSCIUTO AND TWO OTHER MEN ARE ARRESTED AND CHARGED WITH CONSPIRING TO MANUFACTURE LSD, PCP, AND MDA FOLLOWING A SIX-WEEK SURVEILLANCE BY NARCOTIC AGENTS.
KEYWORDS: LESTER WOOTEN, STEVEN MICHAEL BERRY

SUBJECT: CABAZON/WACKENHUT
FILE: MICHAEL RICONOSCIUTO
NO.: PR\CW\MR-04
YEAR: 5/24/73
SUMMARY: RICONOSCIUTO CLAIMS THAT HIS LIFE HAS BEENTHREATENED BY BOTH DRUG DEALERS WHO WANTED HIM TO MANUFACTURE ILLEGAL DRUGS AND BY NARCOTICS AGENTS WHO WANTED HIM TO CONFESS TO DOING SO.

SUBJECT: CABAZON/WACKENHUT
FILE: MICHAEL RICONOSCIUTO
NO.: PR\CW\MR-05
YEAR: 5/25/73
SUMMARY: RICONOSCIUTO IS FOUND GUILTY OF MANUFACTURING AND POSSESSING ILLEGAL DRUGS BY A SEATTLE FEDERAL JUDGE. THE JUDGE ORDERS A MENTAL EXAMINATION BEFORE SENTENCING.
KEYWORDS: JUDGE WALTER MCGOVERN

SUBJECT: CABAZON/WACKENHUT
FILE: MICHAEL RICONOSCIUTO
NO.: PR\CW\MR-06
YEAR: 10/7/73
SUMMARY: RICONOSCIUTO IS SENTENCED TO TWO YEARS IN PRISON FOR THE ILLEGAL MANUFACTURE OF DRUGS AND IS RECOMMENDED TO A FEDERAL PRISON WHERE MENTAL TREATMENT IS AVAILABLE.

SUBJECT: CABAZON/WACKENHUT
FILE: MICHAEL RICONOSCIUTO
NO.: PR\CW\MR-07
YEAR: 2/13/74
SUMMARY: SEATTLE POST INTELLIGENCER—PART 1 OF AN OVERVIEW OF THE INFORMERS INVOLVED WITH THE RICONOSCIUTO DRUG BUST AND ANOTHER RELATED CASE.
KEYWORDS: PAUL DESCHAMPS, RICHARD L. TEEFY, IRWIN SCHWARTZ

SUBJECT: CABAZON/WACKENHUT
FILE: MICHAEL RICONOSCIUTO
NO.: PR\CW\MR-08
YEAR: ?/?/73
SUMMARY: SEATTLE INTELLIGENCER—PART TWO OF THE EVENTS LEADING UP TO MICHAEL RICONOSCIUTO'S 1972 DRUG ARREST.

SUBJECT: CABAZON/WACKENHUT
FILE: MICHAEL RICONOSCIUTO
NO.: PR\CW\MR-09
YEAR: 4/16/81
SUMMARY: MARSHALL RICONOSCIUTO, FATHER OF MICHAEL AND PRESIDENT OF HERCULES RESEARCH CORP., ANNOUNCES A POWERFUL ELECTRONIC POWER SUPPLY THAT WILL POWER A PATENTED HEATING AND COOLING DEVICE.
KEYWORDS: HENRY RANKIN, INTERPROBE, MODULAR ENERGY TRANSFER CATALYZER

SUBJECT: CABAZON/WACKENHUT
FILE: MICHAEL RICONOSCIUTO
NO.: PR\CW\MR-01
YEAR: 3/31/91
SUMMARY: THE WASHINGTON POST—MICHAEL RICONSCIUTO IS ARRESTED AND HELD WITHOUT BAIL IN A RURAL WASHINGTON JAIL FOR UNKNOWN CHARGES. THE PREVIOUS MONTH RICONOSCIUTO HAD FILED AN AFFIDAVIT IN THE INSLAW CASE SAYING THAT HE HAD ILLEGALLY MODIFIED INSLAW SOFTWARE AT THE BEHEST OF PRIVATE INTERESTS.
KEYWORDS: PETER VIDENIEKS, WILLIAM HAMILTON

APPENDIX 3:

An Interview with Michael Riconosciuto: the Maury Island Connection

Michael Riconosciuto's link to Kennedy assassination figure Fred Crisman remains one of his most interesting. Its details are examined in the book Maury Island UFO (IllumiNet Press), a prequel to The Octopus, for which the following interview was conducted.

Q: Do you remember Fred Crisman, or Jon Gold? What can you tell me about him? Are you familiar with his memoir, Murder In The City?

A: Murder In the City really wasn't a memoir for Fred Crisman. Murder In The City was about a political episode in Tacoma that Fred Crisman played a role in.

Q: But it is written by him, right?

A: He's the author of it, yes. He had a talk show there and there was a big, heated political battle in Tacoma. My father was on one side and Dave Rollins was on the other side. These are two guys that grew up together and were rivals.

Q: Who is the other one?

A: Dave Rollins.

Q: This is what's mapped out in Jon Gold's, AKA Fred Crisman's, book.

A: Yes. I had known Fred ever since I was a small boy, probably about eight years old. And I traveled all over the world with him. I probably made twenty trips abroad with him.

Q: One of the grey areas with Crisman for me is what role he played in the Maury Island UFO thing.

A: The Maury Island UFO was an event that he created.

Q: He created it out of whole cloth?

A: I have about almost 1600 pages of handwritten notes by Fred Crisman.

Q: Oh yeah?

A: Uh huh.

Q: An unpublished manuscript?

A: Yes.

Q: That's a new one.

A: Fred was working with Mary C. Johnson at Boeing.

Q: What is the name again?

A: Mary C. Johnson. Mary Catrina Johnson. In security at Boeing. And they had done some tests or something and...

Q: This is late 1940s?

A: Yes. And there was a public outcry over it. Too much public scrutiny into what was going on. So Fred came up with this cover story.

Q: The cover story was intended to cover up what was happening at Boeing?

A: Yes.

Q: Which was what?

A: Some sort of test.

Q: Test?

A: Some sort of aircraft.

Q: Aircraft tests at Boeing?

A: Yes. And what happened was that something had gone wrong and some debris had fallen over Maury Island and they had to get the stuff back. Fred did, in fact, get the stuff back.

Q: That is my understanding just from reading the books on the thing, that he held on to it. There is no indication that he turned over everything he had to those two investigators that died.

A: Now the two investigators that died were basically in on it. They were out to investigate the security screw ups at Boeing and the procedures for running their test program.

Q: I see. So you're saying this was a test on an advanced but conventional aircraft that went awry? This is what fell on Harold Dahl and Crisman wasn't actually part of the actual incident, right? He comes in later?

A: He comes in later, yes. But the problem is that a dog that belonged to Harold Dahl died of radiation sickness.

Q: Oh, really?

A: Yes. And there was something...

Q: Dahl's son was also injured.

A: Yes. There was something radioactive on board. It was a big scandal, a big problem. When these Air Force guys died, Fred was absolutely bent out of shape, and he related that to me.

Q: All of this is in this manuscript that you talked about, right?

A: Yes, and personally, he told me what went on behind it.

Q: Do you know anything more about that slag that fell on them? Do you know what it was?

A: No. Other than there was a reactor of some sort on board this aircraft. It was an advanced radar platform of some sort. And Mary C. Johnson has corroborated the story many years later, like in 1982 and 1983 and '84. I spent a lot of time with Mary C. Johnson.

Q: Does she still work for Boeing?

A: Oh, no. She's deceased. She was up there in years.

Q: When you say she corroborated it, you mean corroborated it to you. She didn't talk to the press or anything like that?

A: Oh no. She wouldn't have any reason to. She was a career type person and she was a kind of mentor to our little group up in Seattle. She and Arlen Bell's widow were on the board of directors of one of our companies. I had bought her home out in Lake Bay, Washington. She used to come out and visit us all of the time. I spent a lot of time with her .

Q: OK. So, at the time, Crisman was working for what, military intelligence or something of that sort?

A: He was a point man on cleaning up a mess. And it was just a fluke that those Air Force guys died in that plane crash.

Q: So as far you understand Kenneth Arnold's role, for instance, and Ray Palmer's role in this, is that Crisman helps to inject into the media that this was some kind of UFO event and Palmer kind of glommed onto that. He has no direct role in the cover-up, right?

A: Crisman was a master at emotional contagion. An absolute master at it. In the OSS, over occupied territories in Europe where they were doing nuclear research, Crisman had a deal with some guys out in the Army Air Corps, and they were dropping these do-nothing, sophisticated gizwidgets that were in bombs. The Germans couldn't ignore them. They looked like high-tech surveillance devices, you know?

Q: How large were they?

A: Oh, probably twelve to fifteen pounds each. And there e were would be several of them in a good-size aerial bomb. The German High Command's attitude was that they were sophisticated somethings and they were being dropped in their most sensitive areas. The German scientists kept telling them, "No, no, no, nothing." And it was one of the... the story's been documented in a book but I can't think of the name of it. It was a great brain drain on their nuclear program. Fred gave me some astronomical figure on how many man years took away from the scientific effort of their nuclear program at a critical time. And Fred got these scientists from Princeton and the University of Chicago and he got some real eggheads to come up with this scam that he ran on them. Fred was a master of this kind of thing.

Q: We're still talking about late '40s here, right?

A: Right. In Indochina, Fred had a history of doing that stuff.

Q: These widgets that you're talking about were just totally fake little things that they attached to bomb drops?

A: Well, they actually did have some substance. Enough so that they couldn't be ignored.

Q: I have a news article from July 11, 1947 talking about Guy Banister, then working as a SAC (Special Agent in Charge) for the FBI in Butte recovering what is reported as a flying disc that's thirty and a half inches in diameter. I wonder if there's a connection there.

A: In post World War II they had a development phase with these radioactive discs to cloud the film of aerial surveillance platforms. They used different schemes and they had a lot of trouble recovering them. They had a lot of screw ups.

Q: So these things had a function then?

A: Yes. And extreme raditaion will destroy most films, especially in sensitive aerial photography. Now Fred was very, very close to George Wackenhut.

Q: I don't know if that's been established before.

A: Oh, yeah. Absolutely. I've known of it since 1963, maybe the first time I ever saw them together. Do you know who Chuck Emmert is?

Q: I haven't heard the name yet, no.

A: OK. His mother was a wealthy Florida socialite who financed George Wackenhut when he originally stared Wackenhut.

Q: Is that a name that I could do a Lexis Nexus search on?

A: I doubt it, He managed to stay pretty buried, although his mother—I can't remember her first name—but she was big in southern Florida, with anybody in social circles down there would be able to steer you to her.

Q: Did Crisman ever talk about the Kennedy assassination with you?

A: Yeah, he did.

Q: What about this idea that some people have that he was one of the three hoboes in the railroad yard behind Dealy plaza?

A: Well, I don't know about that. He gave me his version of what happened.

Q: He did give it to you.

A: Oh, yeah. A mutual friend of ours was a former Treasury Department agent who, during the Warren Commission, was one of the investigators for the committee

Q: Do you want to name him?

A: His name is Bob. I don't know where he is now. I lost track of him about ten years ago.

Q: Do you not want to give a last name?

A: I really don't. I think he just wants ... he was very, very ill at the time I last saw him. He was working for us. I was with both he and Fred when Fred found out that he had turned over information to Garrison.

Q: Fred had turned over information?

A: No, this guy Bob.

Q: Bob turned information over to Garrison?

A: Right. What I found astounding was that when Bob was working on the Warren Commission, what the hell was that? Why didn't he turn that over the Warren Commission? And one day I asked him and he said he did. They knew everything.

Q: Now when you say that stuff, what exactly are you referring to here? Crisman's story of his role in the assassination?

A: Right. What had gone on.

Q: Is it possible for you to summarize that briefly, or is that in the 1600 page manuscript you were talking about?

A: Here's something that happens: everybody says, "Hey, how come you know about everything?" Every conspiracy that's ever gone down the pike. It kinda seems that. If something happens, hey, Riconoscuito's got something to say about it. Well, I can't help it that I was raised around Fred Crisman. I mean, I can't help that cosmic act of fate in my life.

Q: I understand what you're saying, and things really are connected. People have trouble accepting that fact at all, that there connections to be made.

A: I get treated like I'm delusional. So I find that around certain things, the less I say, the better off I am because most people are not going to take the time to go check it out. Very few people even know who Fred Crisman is or what kind of a player he was. I tried to tell some reporters from the Village Voice, "I knew Fred Crisman." They refused to believe me. "There was a thing written about it." "Yeah, yeah, sure, show us the book..." How can show a book when I'm in a jail cell... I have a friend who was a SAC the day that happened.

Q: The day of the Kennedy assassination?

A: Yeah. I'll tell you what, I got it more than just from Fred.

Q: I'm still curious about exactly what Fred Crisman told you. Is it possible to summarize it?

A: I really don't want to go into that. Calls are taped here. Fred left a momentous…

Q: What about that manuscript?

A: He had it squirreled away and as far as I know, it's safe. The party that has it is very reliable. At this point in time, it is irrelevant to me getting out of prison. The things that concern me are the things connected to this case. I was just fascinated by the fact that Crisman came up. It seems that Contact magazine found out that Crisman knew my father and then they found out that he actually knew me and they just went wild. They made a big deal out of it.

Q: Which magazine?

A: Contact. And UFO Magazine... This Colin Brown was hanging around Ted Gunderson...

Q: Brown was the guy that worked for Technical Consultant magazine.

A: I think so.

Q: And you did an interview with him.

A: Not really. I talked to him on the phone a couple of times and I wanted some help on my case. I didn't want to talk about weirdness. I was research director at Wackenhut and at the time I was there we took over Area 51 in Nevada and we also had the Nevada test site and he was pumping me for all kinds of stuff out of there and I just told him, "Hey, I don't want to get into that. I've got enough problems right now. I'm facing life in prison on drug charges and it all stems from the Cabazon/Wackenhut joint venture and I just don't need to get into this stuff."

Q: Did Danny Casolaro pump you for information about that?

A: Yeah. Danny found out a lot of stuff. In fact, Danny had a lot of information on that and I'm surprised you didn't get it.

Q: The papers that were collected after he died originally went to ABC's Nightline. By the time they got to me, they had been picked over pretty cleanly. But there are notes in there about Area 51. Some, not a lot.

A: That whole subject matter with Wackenhut is one that I would want to steer clear of. Again, there's an aura of being delusional and I'm concerned about credibility here and the fact of the matter is that Wackenhut is is the only company that has ever had the security contract for any of these places, even though they are supposed to go up for open bid. And this is the way it's been since the early '50s, when these various agencies in these various places were set up. Wackenhut was steered right in and I happened to have been born into a situation by virtue of my father's contacts, my maternal grandfather's contacts. I was just around.

Q: You appear in that book, Murder of a City, as wiring your father's office.

A: Well, no. We ran a cable TV company.

Q: I'm currently trying to track this article that has a photograph of you and it talks about a child prodigy, a child genius working with various kinds of sound equipment. It's really this glowing piece about what a genius you are working with sound.

A: I was doing commercial sound as a teenager. I made a lot of money as a teenager doing commercial sound. I was involved with various rock'n'roll groups during what is known as the instrumental sound era. Most of these groups hit the charts. The Viceroys. The Ventures. The Wailers. Paul Revere and the Raiders. I don't know if you're familiar with any of those groups.

Q: Sure. Who wouldn't be familiar with the Ventures? The guitar groups are what you're talking about.

A: Yeah, the instrumental sound.

Q: And you worked with them?

A: You bet.

Q: Like producing albums and so forth?

A: Kearney Barton and myself.

Q: You did the sound at the gigs or you produced albums?

A: The whole bit. Back then we had Ampex three track recorders. That was the state of the art at that time. I was doing special effects and things like that. I was pretty involved and I made a lot of money.

Q: So as a teenager you were working as an entrepeneur?

A: Right. I was building sound systems, building these new huge 300 watt tube amplifiers, transmitting tubes, sound reinforcement systems, you know, PA systems.

Q: And this was at the time that your father was involved with Crisman?

A: He knew Crisman ever since he was in high school.

Q: He has his own business going on.

A: Advertising, public relations. My father worked on Kennedy's campaign staff when he got elected and he got Governor [Al Rosalini] elected up in the state of Washington. He was the point man for former Senator Warren Magnuson, Scoop Jackson. He was one of Scoop's top advisers. So this thing with Fred Crisman is kind of an aside here.

Index

Acumedics, 19
Al Yamamah contract umbrella, 142
Albania, 64, 66, 70, 73, 97
Ali & Fahd, 61
Alvarez, Alfred, 29, 34, 35, 36, 39, 55, 70, 89, 166
American Patriot Fax Network, 56, 58, 100
Amin, Idi, 31
Anderson, Jack, 55, 58
Angleton, James Jesus, 65
Anti-Communist League of the Caribbean, 74
Arbenz, Jacobo, 73, 74
Area 51, 2, 43–46, 105, 133, 137, 227
Arkansas Development Finance Authority, 134, 137
Arnold, Kenneth, 45, 223
Aurora, 43
Babayan, Richard, 21, 22
Baghdad, Iraq, 21
Banca Della Svizzera Italiana, 136
Bani-Sadr, Abolhassan, 88
Banister, Willam Guy, 74, 224
Barr, William, 125, 169–172
Bason, George F., 7, 8, 122, 126, 127
Bay of Pigs, 64, 66, 68, 69, 75–81, 83
BCCI, 2, 69, 71, 80, 93, 95–97, 100, 103, 104, 108, 117, 118, 141, 165, 178, 179
Begin, Menachem, 123
Behold, A Pale Horse, 2, 41, 87
Beirut, Lebanon, 2, 42, 70, 92, 93, 117, 119
Belton, John, 144, 145
Benitez, Joe, 35
Ben-Menasche, Ari, 12, 19, 21, 23, 145
Bickel, Bob, 104, 106, 116–118
Bin Laden, Osama, 158–161
Bingo Palace, Inc., 34
Bining, Sandra, 114
Bittinger, Barbara, xiii, 1
Black Rose Organization, 77
Blum, Jack, 46, 85
Bonds, Ron, viii, 154, 155, 157
Brainstorm, 57
Brandt, Daniel, 24, 27
Brenneke, Richard, 49, 104, 117
Brewer, C. Madison, 121
Brian, Earl, 10, 11, 18, 19, 21, 22, 24, 25, 26, 30, 55, 80, 92, 104, 106, 121, 125, 126, 129, 166, 173
Brooks, Jack, 9, 124, 125
Brown, Charles, 115
Bua, Nicholas, 126, 127, 132, 169–172, 174
Buck, Brantley, 135
Bull, Gerald, 11, 42, 51
Burning Man festival, 152, 153, 156
Bush, George, 73, 76, 77, 79, 80, 87, 88, 94, 95, 97, 129, 132, 139
Bush, Jeb, 94
Bush, Neil, 94
Byrd, Robert, 56, 106, 133
Cabazon Arms, 32, 34, 37, 42, 137
Cabazon Indians, 2, 15, 31
Cabell, C. P., 78

Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS), 16
Cardoen Industries, 22
Cardoen, Carlos, 22, 51, 55
Cardozo, Michael, 135
Carlucci, Frank, 33
Carter, Jimmy, 2, 67, 83, 87, 88, 96
Casey, William, 11, 87
Casolaro, Anthony, ix, 111
Casolaro, Trey, 2, 115
Castro, Fidel, 31, 68, 70, 74–76, 80, 99
Central Intelligence Agency (CIA), 2, 11, 13, 26, 31, 33, 36, 38, 39, 44, 46, 60, 64, 65, 72–86, 88–95, 97–99, 113, 117, 128, 129, 136, 137, 139, 142, 144–147, 156, 157, 159, 161
Chasen, Robert, 69
Chiang Kai-shek, 74
Chicago's Citizen's Committee to Clean Up the Courts, 57
CHIPS, 64
Chisum, Jack, 139
Cicippio, Joseph, 61
Cline, Ray, 69, 72, 74, 90, 94
Clines, Thomas, 82, 83, 84, 85, 92, 94
Clinton, Bill, 96, 132, 133–137, 161, 169
Clinton, Roger, 134
Clostridium, 155, 156
Clyde's, 60
COIN (Community Online Intelligence Systems), 158
Coleman, Lester Knox III, 22, 23, 118, 125
Colson, Chuck, 81
Com-12, 13, 39, 46, 58, 77, 89, 91, 92, 98, 100, 119
Communications Canada, 122
Computer Age Publications, 5, 163
Contra War, 70
Cooper, William, 45, 46
Coral Gables, Florida, 15
Country Party, 44
Cox, Archibald, 124
Cranston, Alan, 55
Crawford, John, 56
Credit Suisse, 84
Creutzfeldt-Jakob (Mad Cow) Disease, 107, 108
Crimes of Patriots, The, 44, 46
Crisman, Fred, 45, 220–222, 225–227, 229
Cypriot Police Force Narcotics Squad, 22
D6, 43
Dahl, Harold, 45, 222
DALITE, 120, 121
"Danger Man," see Michael Riconosciuto
Death of the Poet, 38
DEC VAX minicomputer, 6
Defense Intelligence Agency, 21, 22, 118
Degem, 25, 26
Delahanty, Vali, 56
Dellinger, David, 57
DeMorenshildt, George, 77
Dhikr, 150, 152
Diana, Princess of Wales, 140–152, 154
Dick, Fred, 44
Diem brothers, 80
Dominica, 59, 60, 67, 68, 76
Donoghue, Larry, 120
Dulce, New Mexico, 43
Dulles, John Foster, 73
East Timor, 44
ECHELON, 158
Edgar Allen Poe Society, 109
Eisman, Dennis, 54, 56
Eitan, Rafael, 19, 20, 23
Eitel, Gary, 139
Emory, Dave, 123, 129
Entezamat, 21
Fair Play for Cuba Committee, 45
Fairfax, Virginia, 1, 2, 103
Fayed, Dodi, 140, 141, 144–146, 148, 150–152
Fayed, Muhammad, 141, 142, 144–147
Fifth Column, 136
Financial News Network, 18, 26
FOIMS (Field Office Information Management Systems), 158
Foster, Vincent, 134, 135, 136, 138
Frei, Eduardo, 31
Frost, Dr. James, 114, 115
Frye, A. Robert, 34, 35
Fuel Air Explosives, 51, 59
Gable, Clark, see Robert Booth Nichols
Galloway, George, 28, 148

Gambino crime family, 59
Garrison, Jim, 45, 78, 225, 226
Gates, Robert, 22, 117
Gates, Thomas, 61–63, 125
Gerson, Stuart, 139, 169–170
Ghorbanifar, Manucher, 83, 103, 117, 141
Giaquinto, Eugene, 61, 62
Gig Harbor, 49
Gold, Jon, 45, 46, 220
Goldman, Gary, 62
Gorbachev, Mikhail, 26
Gotti, John, 61, 62
Gualteri, Jim, 105, 106
Guatemala, 25, 36, 55, 73, 74
Guerrin, Larry, 56
Guthrie, James, 54
Hadron, Inc., 18, 19, 25, 121, 122
Haig, Alexander, 85, 86
Haight-Ashbury, 2, 12
Hakim, Albert, 75, 84, 85, 92, 93, 113, 162
Haldeman, H. R., 79, 99
Hamilton, Alan, 27
Hamilton, William, 5–7, 9–12, 15, 19, 23, 25, 27, 40, 48, 59, 63, 64, 102, 106, 107, 112, 116, 118, 120, 121, 123, 158, 163, 179
Hand, Michael Jon, 90, 91, 92
Hanssen, Robert, 158, 159, 160, 161
Harris, Larry Wayne, 155
Hashemi, Cyrus, 36
Hashemi, Manucher, 83
Hayes, Charles, 24, 25, 125
Helms, Richard, 69, 72, 78, 79, 81, 82, 83
Henderson, Wayne, 152, 156
Hitchcock, William, 105
Hoffman, Abbie, 53, 57
Home and Auto, 2
Honeger, Barbara, 77, 88, 98
Hoover, J. Edgar, 32, 79
Houghton, Bernie, 90, 91, 92
Hubbell, Webster "Webb," 132–136, 169, 170, 172–175
Hughes Aircraft, 2, 71, 116, 178
Hughes, Howard, 61, 63, 107, 117
Hughes, Jimmy, 35, 36, 55
Hull, John, 85
Human Genome Project, 2, 105, 107
Hunneycutt, Robert, 8
Hunt, E. Howard, 64, 69, 72, 73, 75, 76, 78, 79, 81
Hussein, Saddam, 67, 80, 95, 96, 161, 178
Illuminati, 2
Indio Daily News, 34
Indio, California, 2, 10, 15, 16, 30, 34, 35, 41, 42, 84
Infotechnology, 18, 26
Inman, Bobby, 33
INSLAW (Institute for Law and Social Research), 5–10, 13, 15, 19, 21, 25, 26, 38, 46, 48, 54, 56–58, 64, 87, 88, 103, 106, 108, 112, 120–129, 132, 133, 135, 141, 144, 158, 161, 163, 165, 166, 169, 171, 174, 178, 179
Iran-contra, 21, 56, 71, 85, 108, 117, 120, 129, 132, 137, 141, 144, 160, 178
Israel Defense Forces (IDF), 19
Jameson, Seth, 150, 156
Jason, Robert, 33
Jensen, D. Lowell, 120, 121
JM/WAVE, 75, 76
Joint Defense Space Research Facility, 44
Joshua Tree, 41
Judge, John, 74, 160
Keith, Jim, 72, 150–157
Kelly, Clarence, 33
Kennedy, John F., 69, 73, 78, 79
Kerouac, Jack, 2
Kesey, Ken, 105
Khashoggi, Adnan, 103, 117, 141, 142, 144, 147, 148
Khomeini, Ayatollah, 83, 87, 88, 129
Killian, Martin, 64
Kirk, Claude, 32, 33
Kissinger, Henry, 66, 82, 85, 86, 148
Klenk, Ann, 112, 113
Korean Central Intelligence Agency (KCIA), 22
Koresh, David, 56
Kusnick, Barry, 57
Kuwait, 23, 59, 67
Kwitny, Jonathan, 44
La France Specialties, 36

Laiti, Dominic, 19, 122
LAKAM, 123
Lane, Mark, 78
Larouche, Lyndon, 10, 64
Larsen, Jonathan, 113
Lasater, Dan, 134
Law Enforcement Assistance Administration, 5
Lazar, Bob, 43, 45
Lear, John, 44
Learning Channel, 18
Leary, Timothy, viii, 105
Ledeen, Michael, 83, 86, 92
LeGrand, Ronald, 124
LeWinter, Oswald, 142
Lexington, Kentucky, 20, 24, 118
Libya, 22, 48, 73, 82, 83
Link Systems, Ltd., 23
Looney, Michael, 109, 110, 141
Lorenz, Marita, 78
Maheu, Robert, 63, 117
Major, John, 28, 148
Makes Me Think of Tall Green Grass, 3
Mallgrave, Frank, 120, 121
Manassas, Virginia, 13
MANPADS (Man Portable Air Defense Systems), 159
Marchetti, Victor, 78, 91
Martin, Harry, 11, 36, 116, 119, 123, 129
Martinsburg, West Virginia, xiii, 1, 3, 71, 89, 106, 109, 112, 115, 116, 118, 119, 125, 164
Mason, Ben, 103, 105, 106, 141
Maury Island incident, 45
Maxwell, Robert, 25, 127
May, Alan Michael, 55
McLean, Virginia, 2, 127
McClendon, Sarah, 106, 133
McCloskey, John, 118
McCoy, Bill, 103, 104, 106, 117
McCullough, Virginia, 34, 39, 46, 54, 71, 106, 123, 129, 141
McDonald, Jeffrey, 54
McDougal, James, 135
McFarlane, Robert, 19, 85
McWhorter, Lawrence, 121
Meese, Edwin, 7, 8, 10, 18, 30, 120, 126, 173, 174
Mena, Arkansas, 96, 133
Meridian Arms, 61
Microsoft, 27
Miller, Terry, 5, 163, 165
Mitchell, John, 66, 82
MJ12, 46
Mohammed, Abu, 21, 22
Moldin, Yuri, 73
Morasca, Paul, 29, 36, 37, 70
Mossadegh, Mohammad, 82
Mothman Prophecies, 155
Mount San Jacinto, 41
Moyle, Jonathan, 55
Murchison, Clint, 63, 117
Murder of a City, 45, 46, 228
Nam, Y. H., 22
National Enquirer, 2
National Police Criminal Information System (NPCIS), 27
National Security Agency, 5, 21
Ng, Anson, 55, 56
Nicaragua, 16, 34, 67, 78, 83, 84, 95, ,137
Nichols, John Phillip, 30–42, 69, 75, 82, 89, 94, 123, 125
Nichols, Mark, 38
Nichols, Robert Booth, 59–64, 102, 104, 112, 116, 117, 123, 125, 167, 168
Nidal, Abu, 95
Night Vision Goggles, 15, 34, 166
Nir, Amiran, 36
Nixon, Richard, 26, 69, 75, 79, 81, 97, 124, 142
Noriega, Manuel, 94, 95, 96, 167
North, Oliver, 71, 83–85, 94, 120, 133, 134
Novel, Gordon, 45
Nugan Hand Bank, 11, 42, 46, 51, 89–92
Nugan, Frank, 90
Nunn, Sam, 124
Nussbaum, Bernard, 135
October Surprise, 2, 11, 12, 21, 30, 34, 36, 49, 55, 56, 57, 69, 82, 87, 88, 95, 104, 113, 118, 121, 129. 178
On the Trail of an Alliance Gone Awry, 38
On the Trail of An Unlikely Alliance, 38

On the Trail of the Moneycatchers, 38
Operation Zapata, 76
Orejuela, Gilberto Rodriguez, 102
Orr, Ben, 123
Osman, Tim, see Osama Bin-Laden
OSS, 72–74, 79, 80, 97, 223
Oswald, Lee Harvey, 45, 74, 77, 78, 79, 154, 155, 161
P2 Lodge, 77, 78, 83, 86, 97
Palme, Olaf, 36
Palmer, Ray, 45, 223
Pan Am 103, 92, 119, 161
Parfrey, Adam, 161–162
Park-On-Meter, 133, 173
Pasciuto, Anthony, 7, 8
Pender, George, 69, 72, 117
Philby, Kim, 65, 70, 73
Phoenix Program, 27
Pianzio, Dino John, 33
Pickard, George, 153, 157
Pierce, Judge Lawrence, 7
Pine Gap, 43, 44, 46, 67, 89, 90
Pont D'Alma tunnel, 140, 141, 150
Profits of War, 23, 27, 129
Project Paperclip, 73
PROMIS (Prosecutor's Management Information System), 5, 7, 9–13, 16, 18, 27, 30, 48, 55, 57, 69, 71, 105, 112, 118, 120–123, 125–129, 135, 136, 138, 141, 144, 145, 158, 159, 161, 166–169, 174–179
Protocols of the Learned Elders of Zion, 45
Providence Journal, 2
Provident College, 2
Puget Sound, 45, 48, 49, 51
Pulaski County, Kentucky, 24
Quick, Mary, 29, 37
Quintero, Rafael "Chi Chi," 75, 83, 84, 92
Rabor, William, 33
Rancho Mirage, 29, 35
Ratiner, Leigh, 26, 122
Reagan, Ronald, 18, 34, 67, 87, 173
Reagan, Roy, 139
Reeder, G. Wayne, 31, 94
REJIS system, 27
Reno, Janet, 56, 88, 126, 169, 174
Reservation Operations, 43
Richardson, Elliot, 6, 7, 9, 26, 124, 126, 129, 170, 171
Riconosciuto, Marshall, 46
Riconosciuto, Michael, 9–13, 15, 17–22, 30, 33, 34, 36–38, 44–49, 54–59, 64, 70, 71, 74, 89, 102, 103, 105, 109, 115, 118-119, 121, 125-126, 133, 134, 144, 145, 159, 161, 165–168, 173, 220-229
Rodriguez, Felix, 75, 84
Rogue Spies, Big Oil, Organized Crime and Secret Empires, 38
Rose Law Firm, 135
Rowland, Tony, 141, 147
Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP), 16, 144
Russbacher, Gunther, 56, 58
Russell, George, 76
Sandinistas, 84, 136
Santiago, Chile, 22, 55
SAVAK, 83, 84
Schalow, Arthur, 12, 50
Seagal, Steven, 62
Seals, Barry, 137
Secord, Richard, 21, 75, 84, 85, 92–94, 113, 144
Sessions, William, 135
Seymour, Chris, 117–119
Shackley, Ted, 69, 72, 75, 77, 79–85, 88, 90, 92, 94
Silverado Savings and Loan, 31
Simcon, 19
Singlaub, John, 72, 74, 80, 84
Skolnick, Sherman, 57, 95
Skull and Bones, 76, 85
Smathers, George, 32
Southern California Edison, 38
Spiro, Ian, 56
SR17 Blackbird, 43
Stalling, Danielle, 103
Standorf, Alan, 13, 56, 115, 116
Stavin, Richard, 61, 63, 117, 125
Stealth, 43
Steinberg, Jeff, 10, 64
Stephens, Inc., 96, 134

Stich, Rodney, 13, 115
Stone Crab Inn, 109, 111
Stormont Laboratories, 36, 107
Streeter-Duvic, Linda, 39
Strickland, Robert, 62
Sturgis, Frank, 75, 78, 79, 81
Sufism, 150
Summa Corporation, 61
Systematics Information Systems
    Task Force 157
Teel, S. Martin, Jr., 8
The Ice King, 3
The Palomino, 62
Thomas, Edwin, 18
Thomasson, Patsy, 134, 135
Thornburgh, Richard, 9, 125, 126
Thyssen, Fritz, 76
To Fly Without Wings, 3
Tonoma, Nevada, 44
Trail of the Octopus, 22, 26, 119
Turner, Bill, 56, 71, 106, 110, 111, 114–116,
    133, 178
Tyson's Corner, 60
U2 Spy Plane, 43
UFOs, 2, 43–46, 74, 145, 150, 152,
    220–221, 223
Under Siege, 62
Union Banking Corporation, 76
United Fruit Company, 73
United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse
    Control, 23
United Press International (UPI), 26
UNIX, 25
US Justice Department, 5, 15, 95
Valleyfield Chemical Products
    Corporation, 34
VCI Neutralization and Identification
    System, 27
Videnieks, Peter, 10, 15–19, 34, 55, 56,
    103, 104, 106, 133, 166, 167
Viet Cong, 18
Vietnam, 2, 18, 23, 72, 75, 80, 81, 90, 105,
    106, 108
Wackenhut, George, 32, 224, 225
Wald, Judge Patricia, 8
Ward, Seth "Skeeter" III, 134
Warren Commission, 73, 77–79, 225, 226
Washington Crime News Service, 2
Washington National Airport, 13
Washington Star, 2
Watson, James, 107
Weaver, Wendy, 50, 60, 109, 130, 131, 132
Weiss, Brian, 37
Welles, Orson, 3
Welmus, Art, 30, 39
WerBell, Mitchell III, 72, 75
Whattley, Richard, 75
White Rose, 77
White, William, 7
Whitewater Development Corporation, 135
Whitlam, Gough, 44, 69, 90
Wilcher, Paul, 56, 58, 88, 100
Wilson, Edwin, 69, 75, 81, 92, 103, 113
Windows 95, 27
Wisner, Frank, 73
Women's Auxiliary of American Legion
    Post 509, 29, 37
Woodland, California, 43, 133
Xonics, 18
Yakuza, 60, 61, 63, 66, 70, 117
Yellow Lodge, 43
Zokosky, Peter, 34, 35, 168

WWW.FERALHOUSE.COM

THE ASSASSINATIONS

Probe Magazine on JFK, MLK, RFK, and Malcolm X

Edited by James DiEugenio and Lisa Pease •
Introduction by Judge Joe Brown

"Throughout the '90s, Lisa Pease and Jim DiEugenio covered the issues and reported on new developments in the JFK, MLK and RFK assassination cases in remarkable depth. Their book is a must-read to understand how these leaders were systematically eliminated. It is a unique volume in the literature on this subject."
—William Turner, former FBI agent and co-author of Deadly Secrets

6 x 9 • 684 pages • paperback • ISBN: 0-922915-82-2 • $24 • Now Available

INSIDE THE SHADOW GOVERNMENT

National Emergencies and the Cult of Secrecy

By Harry Helms

This first in-depth exploration of what the Washington Post called the "Shadow Government" reveals standby plans for martial law and the use of federal troops for civilian law enforcement; the underground facilities where the political and corporate elite would be taken in case of a major national emergency; plans for arrest without probable cause or a warrant, of American citizens by presidential order; and details of plans to suspend basic constitutional rights, governmental control of all radio and TV stations, and seizure of private property and bank deposits during a "national emergency."

5 x 8 • 160 pages • paperback • ISBN: 0-922915-89-X • $9.95 • Now Available

WAR IS A RACKET

The Antiwar Classic by America's Most Decorated General

By General Smedley D. Butler • Introduction by Adam Parfrey

General Butler's notorious 1933 speech, "War is a Racket," excoriates "the small inside group" that "knows what the racket is all about." The Feral House edition provides more rare anti-imperialist screeds and an exposé of a Congressional inquiry into Butler's whistleblowing of a coup d'etat attempt by big business against Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

5 x 8 • 160 pages • paperback original • ISBN: 0-922915-86-5 • $9.95 •
Now Available

TO ORDER FROM FERAL HOUSE:
Individuals: Send check or money order to Feral House, P.O. Box 39910, Los Angeles CA 90039, USA. For credit card orders: call (800) 967-7885 or fax your info to (323) 666-3330. CA residents please add 8.25% sales tax.

U.S. shipping: add $4.50 for first item, $2 each additional item. Shipping to Canada and Mexico: add $9 for first item, $6 each additional item. Other countries: add $11 for first item, $9 each additional item. Non-U.S. originated orders must include international money order or check for U.S. funds drawn on a U.S. bank. We are sorry, but we cannot process non-U.S. credit cards.

THE NEW UNDERWORLD ORDER

Triumph of Criminalism

DARK ACTORS PLAYING GAMES

THE GLOBAL FANTASIES OF THE GEOMASONIC ILLUMINATI

Christopher Story

Author of 'The European Union Collective'

THE NEW UNDERWORLD ORDER is a world in which official criminality, driven by bribery and corruption, is the norm among all layers of governance. At the vast intergovernmental level, the Rule of Law does not apply - a state of affairs which is exploited to the full under cover of a facade of hypocritical official rectitude. But at the country level, it is ruthlessly relied upon by corrupt intelligence cadres when it suits their interests - and equally ruthlessly flouted by operatives and officials most of the time, on the cynical basis that 'everyone is doing it'. In particular, 'everyone' is engaged in perpetrating crimes against humanity - in the form of drug-trafficking operations, which are controlled by the competing and simultaneously collaborating intelligence services of the Great Powers in order to finance their corrupt operations, and to sustain the corrosive and subversive global hegemony activities of the Illuminati, of which intelligence communities form, wittingly or unwittingly, the backbone, as they consist essentially of esoteric secret societies. This study, then, is about the rampant global corruption in high places arising from the free-wheeling, unrestrained abominations of the system of synarchy - rule by secret societies.

Although focused mainly on the United States and Britain, the Author addresses the consequences of official criminalism worldwide - showing that it flourishes in surprising places, such as the Vatican. He begins by exposing the lie that greets all who enter the Langley headquarters of the CIA; shows how the perverse influence of the occultic secret societies at Yale University has successfully institutionalised poisonously reprobate attitudes and mentalities-originating in Germany-from generation to generation, infecting cadres at the highest levels and influencing the whole of society for the worse; and identifies the links between the Yale synarchy system and the drug trade, which is the primary financing source for the Illuminati.

In Chapter 4, The Hex of Himmler, the Author shows how the same perverse German influence has corrupted the CIA - and follows this with a documented expose of German Freemasonry (The House of Lucifer). Chapter 6, which is entitled The Angels of Light, shows how the Evil One resides within, and controls, prominent 'religious' organisations, alienating billions from the Way, the Truth and the Life.

Chapter 7 - The Synagogue of Satan - exposes the Illuminati from historical documents, and paves the way for the Author's detailed analysis of The Thousand-Year Reich, which German secret 'Black' intelligence, based at Dachau, near Munich, is building on what it considers to represent 'the ruins of the United States'.

Accordingly, the identity of our continuing common enemy is clearly revealed. ■

Memorandum for the non-Christian reader

This book is written from the perspective of True Christianity (meaning that the Author accepts, and proclaims, that Jesus Christ is indeed the Son of God, and 'is come in the flesh'). There are two reasons for this. First, it represents the undeniable, but extensively denied, Truth. Secondly, this work, by definition, examines and exposes the Works of Darkness. This cannot and must never be done without the protection afforded, both to Author and Reader, of the Word, Name and presence of Jesus Christ. For those who do not believe, and who deny the truth expressed in verse 1 of Psalms 14 and 53 - 'The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God' - the Author has this request. Please read this detailed expose of contemporary and relevant historical Works of Darkness, both because the study contains intelligence that has hitherto been concealed or misinterpreted, and because the Scriptural references, which are generally spelled out here in full, provide the absolute standard of perfection against which the reprobate evils described herein can only be judged and properly understood. The Author does not seek to convert anyone: conversion occurs when a person takes the simple step of Faith, which results in the Free Gift of Grace from the Holy Spirit, and is always a matter for the individual, not for anyone else. At the same time, the corollary to this fact needs to be understood - namely, that True Christianity is exclusive, not inclusive, as wayward 'Christian' churches, ever fearful for their worldly survival, have chosen to assert. This becomes crystal clear to anyone reading Scripture: and, who knows, some readers of this work may be encouraged by it to do so. Should this be decided, start with Chapter 9 of John, and the final Chapters of Luke. Use the King James Bible, which has not been adulterated and modified by modern reprobate 'editors', and try to find a One Year Bible employing the King James Version, divided into 365 Scripture readings which take no more than fifteen minutes daily. The Author has done this for eight years, and the experience has changed his life.

If, however, the reader cannot 'handle' this for the moment, he or she is urged not to be discouraged. For the Author believes that this work may well assist many to understand the underlying causes of the mess we're in - not least by identifying the hidden perpetrators of serial crimes, including crimes against humanity such as drug-trafficking, a source of the Illuminati's funding. It also addresses certain issues, such as the extensive Jewish Nazi participation in the Holocaust ('Shoah'), which have been carefully obfuscated and 'written out of history'. Since The Order of the Illuminati is Luciferian and is engaged in criminal operations worldwide, it seeks by every means available to procure absolute control over the world, on the false assumption that its criminality can thereby be hidden from scrutiny for ever.

Finally, it will become clear as this book unfolds that German secret 'Black' intelligence exploits The Order of the Illuminati as its densest, most effective cover.

The Abwehr (Nazi) Intelligence Continuum is located, of all places, at Dachau, a name synonymous with death. The secret 'Black' intelligence organisation directing the New Underworld Order offensive is known as DVD - Deutsche Verteidigungs Dienst. The head of DVD until he fell ill in 1976 was Admiral Canaris. British intelligence sources inform the Author that the present actual head of DVD is George Bush (Busche) Sr. (2006). Dr Henry Kissinger may have served briefly as de facto DVD Chief while George Bush Sr. doubled as Director of Central Intelligence. ■

THE NEW UNDERWORLD ORDER

Curse of Criminalism

DARK ACTORS PLAYING GAMES

The Luciferian German Fascist-
Illuminati Criminal Revolution
Conspiracy to Control the World
By means of
A global coup d'etat by instalments

Christopher Story

This work is dedicated to the memory of:

The late Andrew ('Andy') Stephenson who was murdered by agents of the Illuminati in 2005, in retaliation for his tireless work in exposing the manipulation of electronic voting equipment and software, ahead of the 2004 Election.

Andrew travelled the length and breadth of the United States, at his own expense, giving lectures on how the recently mandated electronic voting machines were intended to be a platform for the wholesale falsification of election results, thereby making a mockery of the American Government's widely publicised vaunting of 'democracy' elsewhere in the world, especially in the Middle East. It was because his brilliantly accurate presentations -which showed precisely how voting results could be, and had been, rigged -threatened to expose the cynicism and hollowness of the officially asserted 'democracy mission', that Andy was considered to have become a serious threat to the US authorities' domestic and international credibility.

He was poisoned using a Himmlerian formula, in the shape of a substance capable of mimicking pancreatic cancer. That he was indeed murdered has been confirmed to the Author by several knowledgeable US sources. Andy gave up everything, including ultimately his own life, to warn the American people that criminalised forces are engaged in hijacking the Republic's democracy and freedoms. Poisoning is the traditional Illuminati method.

All who know of Andrew's sacrifice are united in recognising his heroism in standing up to the Illuminati and exposing their endless criminality.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Christopher Edward Harle Story was born in England in 1938 and was educated at Eton College and at Christ Church, Oxford. From 1959 to 1961 he worked as a public relations officer for a large corporation in Montreal and Toronto, returning to Britain in 1961. After several years of free-lance writing he founded his own publishing company in 1963, and has been engaged in writing and publishing ever since. His main serials and journals corporation, World Reports Limited, publishes intelligence journals and newsletters for the international financial community and for certain specialist readerships. Global Analysis Limited publishes the newsletter Global Analyst and provides specialist strategic consultancy services. His book publishing company, Edward Harle Limited, specialises in 'politically incorrect' - i.e., 'correct' - books such as the present work [see book website: www.edwardharle.com]. He testified before the Subcommittee on Domestic and International Scientific Planning, Analysis and Cooperation of the US House of Representatives' Committee on Science and Technology in September 1978, on 'Saudi-American Finances'; and in September 1981, he testified again, before a Subcommittee of the House Committee on Government Operations, on 'Petroliquidity and the US Treasury's International Financial Policy'. In 1967, he married Janet Rooney, who is from Adelaide, Australia, and they have four grown-up daughters and one (new) granddaughter. ■

ABOUT EDWARD HARLE LIMITED

Edward Harle Limited, using Christopher Story's two middle names, specialises in publishing classic intelligence books which serve the purpose of exposing the lies and deceptions of corrupt governments, intelligence services and institutions in today's oppressive environment of criminalism (the hegemony of organised criminal operations to realise the potential of strategy and to enrich the perpetrators and their corrupt institutions). The company's titles reflect the ugly reality that all the main governments are controlled by Dark Forces - resident within revolutionary intelligence communities which are in control, out of control, and need urgently to be brought under control. The best intelligence officers are well aware of the scale of this crisis and, in both the United States and Britain, are confronted with the serial evils perpetrated as permissively by domestic intelligence sectors, as by their foreign competitors, with which they may routinely collaborate. The dark, oppressive world that these people inhabit, which is riddled with Freemasonry and riven with internal hatreds, tensions, rivalries and threats (in both Britain and America), spills over into the 'visible' world of ordinary, defenceless people, and pollutes governance at every level. Our intelligence books seek to shed light into the dark corners of this 'hidden world' - which now affects every facet of our fives. Truly, the intelligence communities of the world are to blame for the mess we're in, and for the chaos that they seem to specialise in generating. This is not to say that there are not 'white hats' who try, against massive odds, to inculcate sense into the maddened skulls of these people: and Christopher Story is privileged to know a few of them. It may be found mat these works are uncompromising in their logic - which is the whole point. If you require 'sanitised' and often confused disinformation, why not rely upon the 300+ known US Information Warfare websites which distort facts, libel good people and 'play games' with our minds for evil purposes? But if you prefer the truth - or our honest attempts to promote it - please give us your support! You can do this by buying our books - or, if you really agree that what we are doing is indispensable, you may care to assist us financially, or with a bequest in your Will. ■

CONTENTS

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS VIII

FOREWORD IX

Chapter 1 The Langley Lie 1

Chapter 2 The Curse of Yale 33

Chapter 3 The Lure of Drugs 79

Chapter 4 The Hex of Himmler 183
Addendum to Chapter 4: The Frankfurt School 254

Chapter 5 The House of Lucifer 259

Chapter 6 The Angels of Light 345

Chapter 7 The Synagogue of Satan 419
Appendix 1 to Chapter 7: A Directory of alleged Illuminati programmers A 517
Appendix 2 to Chapter 7: Directory of Illuminati traps for the unwary The 519
Appendix 3 to Chapter 7: JASON Society of The Order of the Quest 522

Chapter 8 The Thousand-Year Reich 529
Appendix 1 to Chapter 8: The Molotov-Ribbentrop Pact Mark II 610
Appendix 2 to Chapter 8: The North American Illuminati GULAG system 612
Appendix 3 to Chapter 8: The continuing Soviet Illuminati GULAG system 614

Conclusion The Scissors Strategy 617

Index To Chapters 1-8 633

Notes and References: The expanded notes and references annotated in the main text are given at the end of each Chapter, not at the end of the book. This Index captures key names in the main text of Chapters 1-8 only.

Addenda New Underworld Order Insights 661

THE STANDARD OF ABSOLUTE PERFECTION

True Christianity is not inclusive, it is exclusive. Thus Jesus Christ specifically contradicts all today who, through ignorance and perversity, preach the false gospel of multi-faith inclusive-ness. As Peter, 'filled with the Holy Spirit', said boldly to the rulers and elders of the people in Jerusalem (Acts, Chapter 4, verse 12): 'Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under Heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved'. It is by the name of Jesus ONLY that the devils are cast out. Therefore, the Author boldly asserts throughout this study the certainty and reliable eternity of the Word of God through Jesus Christ. Since this investigation concerns the Works of Darkness, it contrasts those works with the light and simplicity that is in Jesus Christ It is, after all, 'that old serpent, the Devil and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world'. This stance is not intended to be provocative - although that may seem to be the case, to those who believe in neither God nor the Devil - but rather to delineate the standard of absolute prefection against which the exposed evils can only be judged. ■

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The Author is constrained by the infernally compartmentalised environment of the vast and oppressive US intelligence community from openly acknowledging the assistance and inspiration given to him by distinguished 'white hats' among their number - brave professional people who prefer the Rule of Law to open-ended gang warfare and whose bitter experiences have led them, in most of the cases that I have in mind, to acknowledge that there is but one source of Truth - namely, Jesus Christ, 'who is the Son of God and is come in the flesh'.

Inevitably, this understanding sets up tensions between the evil deception standards of the corrupt intelligence communities, and the standards required of those who believe in the Lord Jesus Christ and recognise that it is only by His name that we are saved - and by no other means. The Author came to understand this truth definitively after his late friend Malachi Martin taught him the simple truth that evil spirits are cast out exclusively in the Name of Jesus Christ If Malachi had not sadly died suddenly on 27th July 1999, we would certainly have 'cracked this' together.

That Jesus is the only Name that Evil Spirit obeys was first made manifest when the man possessed of many devils who roamed naked among the tombs in the country of the Gadarenes 'saw Jesus afar off, and... ran and worshipped Him. And cried with a loud voice, and said: 'What have I to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of the Most High God? I adjure thee by God, that thou torment me not'. For he [Jesus had] said unto him, Come out of Him, thou unclean spirit'. Jesus then asked Evil Spirit's name - since in exorcism, the demons must be identified by their names. 'And he asked him, What is thy name? And he answered, saying, My name is Legion: for we are many'. In response to the devils' request that Jesus cast them out into a herd of 2,000 swine who were feeding on the slopes, Jesus consented; and 'forthwith ... the unclean spirits went out, and entered [appropriately] into the swine; and the herd ran violently down a steep place into the sea... and were choked in the sea' [Mark, Chapter 5, verses 6-13]. Note that the previously possessed madman 'ran and worshipped' Jesus having 'seen him afar off' - which teaches us loud and clear that the devils know Him (as is further revealed elsewhere in the New Testament, for instance in James (the brother of Jesus) Chapter 2, verse 19: The devils also believe, and tremble'). For, as this book elaborates, the 'principalities and powers' herewith exposed are not atheists. On the contrary, they believe in Satan (or Lucifer), whose speciality is turning truth inside out and upside down. Hence they know that the name of Jesus is the only Name by which men and women can be saved; and, being bound by Satan, they correctly identify Jesus as their main enemy: Jesus Belthemitus Maledictus. Jesus Christ is the ONLY enemy of all those exposed in this book.

Due to threats specifically directed at those who 'speak out' nowadays in the United States, the Author has had to remove acknowledgment references to special American friends who have helped him with the development of this work. Such threats are typically perpetrated by telephone, by posting threats on websites known to be visited by the targets in question, by unsolicited emails seeking to entangle the target in polemical discussions for entrapment purposes, by unsolicited third party interventions during telephone conversations, and by other means conjured up by the sick intelligence minds who waste their empty lives 'doing this stuff'.

Those who have helped me include several women of special depth, talent and understanding, the like and quality of whom I have rarely encountered outside the United States. Their special attributes include a determination to resist by all means at their limited disposal the depredations of those exposed in this book; and they are among those who have demonstrated by their true friendships that the endless duplicity I have encountered among intelligence-related parties is not yet the norm (although it has often felt like it). Others include one generous friend from the British Isles who has made his home in America; several senior officers and appalled intelligence officials who have done their best to serve their country rather than the Illuminati; and a number of researchers and generous helpers who have, I know, assisted me behind the scenes. The fact that I cannot acknowledge their kindness by naming them is itself indicative of the steepening angle of the slide towards perdition that we face. ■

FOREWORD

THE SUBTERRANEAN MOVEMENT, A.K.A. THE RIVER STYX

In March 2003, the Author introduced a special issue of his long-standing financial journal International Currency Review, which is devoted in part to exposing hidden official and intergovernmental financial scamming, with the following passage:

'The great majority of mankind' wrote Machiavelli in 'The Prince', 'are satisfied with appearances as though they were realities... and are often more influenced by things that seem than by those that are'. How things have not changed! Early in the 20th century, the English thriller writer, John Buchan, revealed how well he understood this sinister reality: 'Away behind all the Governments and the armies there was a big subterranean movement going on, engineered by very dangerous people', observed his character Richard Hannay'[1].

'The ancient Greeks recognised this phenomenon: their image for it was the River Styx - the black underground river that rushes in the depths of darkness to Hades. When we consider what is happening behind the level of perceived reality today, we can appreciate, with awe and respect, just how inspired and intelligent these ancient people were. This agonised report is all about the River Styx, which is overflowing its subterranean confines, has erupted to the surface and is flooding all over the West's financial and political institutions. In the United States, the political system is literally drowning in this black flood'.

'Another way of focusing upon what follows is perhaps to think of the following simple model. Let us say that, for the purposes of clarification, the 'perceived world' of Presidents, Parliaments, Congresses, Monarchies, judges, courts, businesses, tax collectors, political collectives, trade unions, banks and the stock market, is the 'vertical world'. Within this 'vertical world', relationships are clearly defined. Cabinets are presided over by Prime Ministers, the United States has a Constitution (until it is suspended, anyway) to which American citizens defer, trade unions are led by well-known political agitators, military personnel report to their superiors, businessmen must adhere to a well-understood chain of responsibility, and so on. Relationships are generally overt, well understood, and respected. What this special analysis will address is a parallel, hidden 'horizontal world'. Within this secretive, murky environment, relationships exist which ruthlessly cut across those prevailing in the overt, 'vertical' world. The relationships and linkages prevailing in the horizontal world are largely unknown to the inhabitants of the 'vertical world''.

'Because the two often clash, inexplicable developments may occur in the 'vertical world' which defy rational explanation. An obvious contemporary example was the Bush Administration's fixation first with Afghanistan, following 9/11, and its 'subsequent' fixation with 'dealing with' Iraq. In fact, detailed plans to 'address' Afghanistan were discussed between Russian officials and their American counterparts at meetings held in Washington on 1-2 August 2000, while President Clinton remained in office. As for Iraq, President George W. Bush campaigned in part on a promise to 'take 'em out', and within hours of his inauguration, reports from Washington indicated that the new Administration would 'look for a radical approach in dealing with Iraq'. A declassified paper showing that planning for a 'post-Saddam Iraq' was the subject of a National Security Council meeting held on 31st January 2001, just days after President George W. Bush Jr's inauguration. Therefore, the offensive against Iraq never had anything to do with 9/11, either'.

'... The power of the 'River Styx' dimension is now such a dangerous incubus worldwide - that is to say, its flooding of our institutions has reached such disturbing proportions - that it is the duty of the analyst who seeks the truth at all times, to penetrate behind the veil in order to try to make sense of what is happening[2]. Normal reportage is inadequate and semi-redundant, because it takes no account of what is going on behind the curtain of the Wizard of Oz. If some of what follows is uncomfortable reading, this does not reflect a desire for prurience. The Author recognises that we are certainly enjoined and sternly warned (Biblically) not to consort with the darkness - i.e., not to attend a Black Mass out of inquisitiveness, for instance. But a dispensation exists in respect of those who would seek to place a candle in the darkness - the miracle of which is that by this single small act, the dark recesses are illuminated (in the genuine, rather than the esoteric, sense).

THE 'ORDER' TO BE IMPOSED BY THE NEW WORLD - BY 'THE ORDER'

Sophisticates may rightly assert that there is nothing new about any of this. The history we were taught in school (before national history was completely abolished by the manipulators) was already so sanitised as to leave us not just ignorant about how power is exploited and controlled, but brainwashed as well. Some who may prefer the relative comfort of leaving their heads in the sand even insist that because 'this is the way things are and have always been', it is a waste of time exposing the evils reviewed, for instance, in this work. By extension, it can reasonably be argued that the title of this book is perhaps misleading, because the 'New World Order' global scam is nothing new. And in one sense, this is true.

But any such criticism fails to take account of the real meaning of the slogan 'New World Order'. The World Revolution is not actually about establishing a 'new form' (to cite Lenin) of 'world order', but rather about the 'Order' which is to be imposed by the New World - by which is meant the United States, which is the military enforcement arm of The Order. The word 'Order' is a tell-tale clue as to what is really happening. All secret societies using 'The Order' belong to the Illuminati, which in turn is the primary manifestation of a shadowy 'Order of the Quest', dedicated philosophically to maximising 'human happiness' without God.

The Jesuits call themselves The Order. Opus Dei refers to itself as The Order. The Yale-based Skull and Bones is The Order. The even more reprobate Ordo Templi Ori-entis styles itself The Order. Scratch around for secret societies labelled 'The Order', and you will immediately see the significance of the word 'Order'. Jorg Lanz von Liebenfels, a former Cistercian monk who was excommunicated because of his homosexual activities and who flew an occult swastika above his castle in Austria in 1907, founded the Ordo Novi Templi ('Order of the New Temple') which specialised in merging Luciferian occultism with violent anti-Semitism. According to the Austrian Psychologist Wilhelm Daim, Lanz was the 'father' of National Socialism'[3]- an assessment which falls short of the reality that Fascism was developed many years earlier on behalf of the Illuminati by one of the 'two Karls' - Professor Karl Ritter, of Frankfurt University (the other Karl, of course, being Karl Marx, who was briefed to elaborate the dialectical 'antithesis' to Fascism - Communism, first tried out in Paris). According to Scott Lively and Kevin Abrams, 'the "SS" symbol was originally used by Guido von List, a close associate of Lanz, who formed the Guido von List Society in Vienna in 1904. The Guido von List Society was accused of practicing a form of Hindu Tantrism which featured sexual perversion in its rituals. This form of sexual perversion was popularised in occult circles by a reprobate British intelligence officer named Aleister Crowley who, according to the Hitler biographer J. Sydney Jones, enjoyed "playing with black magic and little boys". List was accused of being the Aleister Crowley of Vienna. Like Lanz, List was an occultist; he wrote several books on the magick principles of rune letters (from which he chose the "SS" symbol). In 1908, von List "was unmasked as the leader of a blood brotherhood which went in for sexual perversion and substituted the swastika for the cross". The Nazis borrowed heavily from List's occult theories and research. List also formed an elitist occult priesthood called the Armanen Order, to which Hitler himself may have belonged'[4].

THE ILLUMINATI ALMOST ALWAYS OPERATE UNDER FALSE FLAGS

This further Order, like all the myriad other secret societies using the term 'Order', either overtly or covertly, to denote their status, belonged therefore to the system of synarchy (rule, or intended rule, by secret societies) developed by the revamped (Order of the) Illuminati - which was first exposed by the former Illuminist, Professor John Robison, of Edinburgh University, in his classic work 'Proofs of a Conspiracy' (1798). These innumerable secret societies represented, and represent today, cells and cadres of the Illuminati who, their Jesuit-trained Jewish 18th century re-founder, Professor Adam Weishaupt, decreed, must always operate under false flags, so that official opposition to and penetration of the Illuminati is permanently frustrated. Working to instructions from the Rothschild Family, Weishaupt 'devised', Professor Robison explained, 'an ingenious vehicle for world conquest - a secret Order - which would prove immensely attractive to other mentally superior beings of a similar frame of mind. He called it the Illuminati Order, and grafted it, at selected points, onto Freemasonry - like a fungus'. Freemasonry was to be the primary host for this parasitical secret globalist organisation. 'The Order of the Illuminati' - promoting 'free-thinking' and every abomination from self-murder (suicide) to abortion and paedophilia on the basis of the motto of 'Do as Thou Wilt' later promulgated by Crowley, one of its blackest offspring - 'appears as an accessory to Freemasonry'[5].

Freemasonry was selected for this task by Weishaupt because of its established system of Lodges, its initiations by secret ritual, and its structure designed to entice and indoctrinate successive generations of dupes into and through its ranks. Once enticed into this nexus, those rising up the initiation ladder in and beyond the three basic 'Blue Degrees', where the exploited Masonic masses congregate, are exposed to occultic and demoniac activities and accordingly open themselves up to infestation or even to possession by evil spirits. As taught by the Jesuits - among whom Weishaupt, though of Jewish extraction, was educated - all members of The Order, and of its sub-Orders, would spy on each other in perpetuity.

Certain 18th century German Masonic Lodges, Robison reiterated, 'were the nursery or preparation-school for another Order of Masons, who called themselves the Illuminated, and... the express aim of this Order was to abolish Christianity, and overturn all civil Government.... The Order was said to abjure Christianity.... Sensual pleasures were restored to the rank they held in the Epicurean philosophy. Self-murder (suicide) was justified on Stoical principles'. Abortion was to be encouraged, given the sexual licence secretly advocated by The Order.

And all manner of subtle, gross deception devices, 'inventions of evil things' [Romans, Chapter 1, verse 30], abominations and scamming and entrapment techniques, with which students of the oppressive intelligence communities are only too familiar these days, were to be developed. One of Weishaupt's closest associates, criminal court Judge Zwack (Weishaupt's Illuminati correspondent 'Cato'), laid these plans out in a document dated 1778, cited by Professor Robison. They included a proposal for the establishment of wife-swapping, woman-sharing and prostitution arrangements, controlled secretly by Illuminati Brothers:

'It will be of great service, and procure us both much information and money, and will suit charmingly the taste of many of our truest members, who are lovers of the [female] sex'. And given that the essence of Illuminism is dialectical double-mindedness, not least to maximise confusion among the 'profane', 'it should consist of two classes, the virtuous, and the freer hearted (i.e. those who fly out of the common tract of prudish manners); they must not know of each other, and must be under the direction of men, but without knowing it. Proper books must be put into their hands, and such (but secretly) as are flattering to their passions'.

'INVENTORS OF EVIL THINGS' [ROMANS, CHAPTER 1, VERSE 30]

Professor Robison's account of Zwack's revealing report continued: 'There are, in the same handwriting, descriptions of a strong box, which, if forced open, shall blow up and destroy its contents; several receipts for procuring abortion; a composition which blinds or kills when [it is] squirted in the face; a sheet, containing a receipt for a sympathetic ink; tea for procuring abortion (Herbae quoe habent qual-itatem deleteriam); a method for filling a bed-chamber with pestilential vapours; how to take off impressions of seals, so as to use them afterwards as seals (forgery); a collection of some hundreds of such impressions, with a list of their owners, princes, noblemen, clergymen, merchants, etc; a receipt ad excitandum furorem uterinum; a manuscript entitled 'Better than Horus'. It was afterwards printed and distributed at Leipzig Fair, and is an attack and bitter satire on all religion... also a dissertation on suicide. N.B. His sister-in-law threw herself from the top of a tower. There was also a set of portraits, or characters, of eighty-five (loose) ladies in Munich; with recommendations of some of them for members of a Lodge of Sister Illuminatae; also injunctions to all the Superiors to learn to write with both hands; and that they should use more than one cipher'[6]. In this description we can see the ancestors of familiar contemporary intelligence sector abominations.

'In the Illuminised German Lodges, death was declared [to be] an eternal sleep; patriotism and loyalty were called narrow-minded prejudices, and incompatible with universal [fake, cold] benevolence; while continual declamations were made on liberty and equality as the inalienable rights of men. The baneful influence of accumulated property was declared an insurmountable obstacle to the happiness of any nation'... and... 'Nothing was so frequently discoursed of as the propriety of employing, for a good purpose, the means which the wicked employed for evil purposes; and it was taught, that the preponderance of good in the ultimate result consecrated every mean employed [the end justifies the means]; and that wisdom and virtue consisted in properly determining this balance. This appeared big with danger; because it appeared that nothing would be scrupled at, if we could make it appear that The Order could derive advantage from it, because the great object of The Order was held as superior to every consideration. They concluded by saying that the method of education' [in accordance with Luciferian Jesuit principles] 'made them all spies on each other, and on all around them'[7].

The crucial modus operandi of The Order of the Illuminati - a 'superior' secret society in its own right which has over 1.1 million members, bound by Satan, in the United States alone* - has been, ever since its re-founding and 'upgrading' by Weishaupt in Germany, which remains the delegated seat of the Illuminati today -to surround rulers and power-brokers with members of The Order so that 'the profane' - that is to say, those of us of independent mind who, by the Grace of God, have been bypassed by these evil manipulators, to the detriment no doubt of our own careers and prosperity - can never access high places or occupy positions of real authority and power. If, by some accident, any such individual should reach high office and his or her true orientation is unmasked, he or she is targeted for destruction. As Robison explained this methodology (in his late 18th century context):

'The authority of the ruling powers is represented as of inferior moral weight to that of The Order. [Weishaupt taught that] "These powers are despots when they do not conduct themselves by [The Order's] principles; and it is therefore our duty to surround them [rulers] with its [The Order's] members, so that the profane may have no access to them'. This means that those who seek power or possess political ambition but whose souls have not yet been sold to Satan (The Illuminati), have no chance of ever wielding it - making of course a complete nonsense of 'democracy' and 'freedom' which are words that the Illuminati use as slogans to bamboozle the hoi polloi, whom of course they fundamentally despise. Yes, they tend to despise ordinary people indeed - despite all their falsely self-righteous bravado about 'the Brotherhood of Man' (meaning the Brotherhood of Men, i.e., 'the chosen', namely the members of Illuminati secret societies and of Illuminati-penetrated and -controlled Freemasonry).

---

* According to Cisco Wheeler, a former Illuminati mind-control programmer, at least ten million people have been programmed as mind-controlled slaves using Himmlerian and Tavistock Institute-derived trauma-based mind-control programmes with codenames such as MONARCH and MK-ULTRA A more recently developed, non-trauma, electronic means of mind-control programming that emerged out of the Montauk Project (after its location on Long Island), may have entrapped millions more. Al Bielek, who was prominently instrumental in developing the Montauk Project, has stated that there may also be as many as ten million victims of Montauk-style mind-control programming worldwide, with the majority living in the United States. Bielek is also on record as having revealed that there are covert Montauk Programming 'Centers' in every important city in America. A list of alleged Illuminati programmers, including the late Pope, is given on pages 517-518 of the present work. What is usually referred to as 'public opinion' is really carefully crafted and scripted propaganda designed to elicit an intended behavioural response from the general public. Public opinion polls are taken specifically with the covert intention of gauging the public's acceptance of pre-planned Illuminati operations and projects. A strong showing in opinion polls tells the Illuminati manipulators that a given programming operation is 'taking', while a poor outcome tells the New Undlrworld Order manipulators that they need to recast or 'tweak', the programming until the desired response is achieved. While the general thrust and content of a given burst of controlled propaganda is decided by the London-based Tavistock Institute, according to sources, implementation of the propaganda in the United States is handled by more than 200 controlled 'think tanks' such as the CIA's RAND Corporation and the Brookings Institution, which are overseen and directed by the leading New World Order control organisation in the United States, the Stanford Research Institute (SRI), located at Menlo Park, CA The Author, who has visited the United States frequently every year since 1977, has never - repeat, NEVER - encountered a single 'think tank', lobbying organisation or specialised media outlet that is not controlled in some manner, with an instrumental axe to grind. This grim state of affairs has been exacerbated in recent years by the emergence of more than 300 controlled intelligence Information Warfare websites which exist to spread disinformation, propagate confusion and divert attention from questionable or downright evil official policies, so that no-one can fathom what is happening.

And as Professor Robison concluded, citing Weishaupt himself again: "'Thus we are able most powerfully to promote [The Order's] interests. If any person is more disposed to listen to Princes than to The Order, he is not fit for it, and must rise no higher. We must do our utmost to procure the advancement of Illu-minati into all important civil offices'"[8].

This objective has long since been attained - so that the 'democratic system' has become a plaything of The Order of the Illuminati, which has hidden behind the 'conspiracy theory' lie for so long that contemporary exposures such as this book have evidently come as a bleak surprise to its crazed leadership. As is well known, anyone who ventures into this undergrowth is immediately excoriated variously as a 'nutcase', a 'maverick' (the word routinely used by brainwashed British journalists to describe colleagues such as this Author who don't share their 'slides'[9] - that is, any prefabricated, sterile views they may hold), or a else 'conspiracy theorist'. According to this fatuous perception, there is no such thing as a conspiracy. In denigrating all conspiracies as fantasies by definition, so that further enquiry is thereby precluded, the Uluminati have successfully hidden their own mammoth conspiracy which is of proportions without historical precedent, from view: or so they foolishly imagine.

Yet Lenin, one of the Illuminati's most notoriously influential agents, explicitly wrote that the World Revolution is a conspiracy. Specifically in 'What is to be Done?'in 'Burning Questions of Our Movement'[10], V. I. Lenin expounded, with his usual nit-picking language pedantry: '...In form, such a strong revolutionary organisation... may also be described as a "conspiratorial" organisation, because the French word "conspiration" is the equivalent of the Russian word "zavogor" ("conspiracy"), and such an organisation must have the utmost secrecy'.

This definitively puts paid to the untutored, knee-jerk 'conspiracy theorist' response of the ignorant, the perverse and those with empty heads who prefer the life of the ostrich, to all who seek to expose these serially evil conspirators and their accursed secret societies, machinations and lies, which are responsible, thanks to the Uluminati's hegemony within intelligence communities, for the deteriorating mess we're in today. The 'conspiracy theory' jibe is the most effective lie of all.

INTELLIGENCE COMMUNITY HABOURS KEY ELEMENTS OF THE AGENTUR

Yes, intelligence officers hold all the key posts in the West, or control and encompass about those who occupy them - in conformity with the Jesuitical methodology extrapolated by Adam Weishaupt and his synarchy successors. The Uluminati have successfully done their utmost to procure the advancement of members of their vast agentur 'into all important civil offices'. In one letter to a co-conspirator, dated 6th February 1788, Weishaupt wrote that 'in particular, every person' (in, or a candidate for, The Order) 'shall be made a spy on another and on all around him. Nothing can escape our sight [so that] the trustworthy alone will be admitted to a participation of the whole maxims and political constitution of The Order. In a Council of such members we shall labour at the contrivance of means to drive by degrees the enemies of reason and of humanity out of the world, and to establish a peculiar morality and religion fitted for the great Society of mankind'[11] which of course the Illuminati 'elite' lust without ceasing to control.

Specific echoes of this form of idolatry of control, which requires the Illumi-nati conspirators and their agentur to reorder every facet of our existence in vain pursuit of their own security, appeared in the Communist literature. For instance, a Soviet tome dating from 1934 contained the following statement, the shorter-term context being the underlying fear that the Soviet system might be undermined from within: 'The socialist society will be forced to apply the most resolute measures for a long time (including the liquidation of people who are especially dangerous to the socialist system) against people who are harmful and deliberately destructive to socialist production, i.e. those who seek to undermine the socialist state and to re-establish the capitalist system'[12]. A generation later, the following warning that all must be brought to think alike, appeared in a compendium of Soviet political thought: 'Under Communism, public opinion will become a mighty force, capable of bringing to reason those individuals who might not want to follow Communist customs and rules of behaviour in the community'[13].

The Soviet literature also inadvertently revealed the Illuminati's global false culture (mind-mapping) offensive, as for instance in this passage dating from the mid-1960s: 'Boundless possibilities are opened up under Communism for the cultural advancement of mankind.... The cultures of different peoples, national in form, will be increasingly imbued with the same Communist content. Their drawing together on this basis will provide a mighty stimulus to the mutual enrichment and development of national cultures and in the long run will lead to the formation of a single, deeply international culture that will be truly the [Godless] culture of all mankind'[14].

'POLITICAL CORRECTNESS': SUBSTITUTING 'SLIDES' FOR ENQUIRY

Hence, it is not hard to trace the Illuminati origins of the contemporary scourge of 'political correctness', which is a mind-control mechanism to substitute 'slides' for original thought and enquiry, on the assumption that this will ensure over time that subservient populations become putty in the hands of the manipulators. As a 'beneficial add-on', the Illuminati anticipated that mind-controlled agentur operatives would in due course rise to the top of the pile - a notable example being the young leader of the British Conservative Party (as of 2006), David Cameron, whose mental-mapping and prior sensitivity training has been so extreme that almost his entire verbal output consists exclusively of vapid, prefabricated ideological 'slides'.

In crucial respects, the present work is spiritual, because what we will be examining here are the very 'principalities and powers' that wage war against the Way, the Truth and the Life - the Word of Jesus Christ, who is their sole enemy. Foolishly, these people imagine that they can and will destroy Christianity - which can never happen, given Christ's assurances to us that 'Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world' [Matthew, Chapter 28, verse 20] and 'Heaven and earth shall pass away; but my words shall not pass away' [Matthew, Chapter 24, verse 35] - knowing that much of the formal fabric represented by the manmade Christian denominations is putrid, soggy and rotten, especially the Vatican (and its corrupt daughter churches) which, with the ascendancy of the refounder of the modern mafia, Giuseppe Mazzini, and the establishment of the sovereign Vatican mini-state, became one of two primary political organising centres of the Illuminati's World Revolution from 1870 onwards. Mazzini's 'partner' was the occultist mass murderer and American Civil War criminal, Albert Pike, with whom Mazzini 'divided powers', leaving Pike to concentrate on his gobbldegook, magick, the elaboration of Scottish Rite rituals, fake mythology and initiation ceremonies, to invoke spirits, and to plan three great catastrophes. The first two of these materialised in the formats of the First and Second World Wars, and the third is unfolding 'as we speak', setting the Jews against Islam for the 'final' Luciferian conflagration. Pike developed these demonic plans, probably under Satanic influence, at a mansion that he built for himself located in Little Rock, the headquarters today of the Rose Law Firm with which which Mrs Hillary Clinton (codename 'Queen Melusina') is associated. And, as Weishaupt wrote to his correspondent: 'By this plan we shall direct all mankind. In this manner, and by the simplest means, we shall set all in motion and in flames. The occupations must be so allotted and contrived, that we may, in secret, influence all political transactions'[15].

'NONE OF THIS MUST EVER COME OUT' - SCARED U.S. INTEL OFFICER

The niuminati require that their black intentions, driven by the 'seething energies of Lucifer'[16], must remain hidden from all investigators, and from the curious, for all time. In the course of research for this book, the Author has been told by several US niuminati sources that 'none of this must ever come out'. Although this statement was made and repeated in the context of the Author's separate investigations into the Illuminati's hidden financial scamming operations, it was meant also to be relevant to the subject-matter of this book - which has, of course, necessarily relied heavily not only upon the Author's own research, but also upon the prior work of recognised authorities, including certain Masonic writers who have themselves revealed secrets of the Brotherhood. The warning that 'none of this must ever come ouf was first enunciated by Weishaupt himself, who wrote in a letter cited by Robison as follows:

'There must (a la Jesuite) not a single purpose ever come in sight that is ambiguous and that may betray our aims against religion and the state'.

'One must speak sometimes one way and sometimes another, but so as never to contradict ourselves, and so that, with respect to our true way of thinking, we may be impenetrable'[17].

This is the main underlying origin of the most nauseating characteristic of all dimensions of German-originated Illuminati operations and of all agentur members - their double-mindedness. With certain exceptions, such as Ordo Templi Orientis, which does not even bother to present a 'benevolent' facade, all Illuminati open and / or secret societies present an outward, beneficial and benevolent face for public consumption, while masking of course their hidden evil purposes. The open, friendly facade (the Vatican is known as the Open Friendly Society) is the cynical deception device to divert public attention from the real purposes of the organisation's existence. Often it is not hard to identify the underlying nefarious dimension - as is the case, for instance, with the massive networking and mind-mapping operation run out of what was the Office of the (former) UK Deputy Prime Minister, John Prescott, calling itself 'Common Purpose'. Neither word used in this title is defined, of course, because if the true objectives of this subversive mind-control nexus were known, it would fail. Its hidden objective, masked behind a facade of 'sensible'-sounding Aesopian jargon, is to develop a cadre of brainwashed apparatchiks in every key control-sector of British society, in order to minimise, over time, opposition from the lower government, banking, industrial and other structures to the subversive policies being implemented by the Fabian revolutionary British Government. Under the controlled Tony Blair, its entire focus was/is to fulfil the requirements of secret German strategy manipulated through penetrations of the intelligence services - controlled by the German 'Black' intelligence organisation based in Dachau known as DVD (Deutsche Verteidigungs Dienst).

Professor Robison wrote further that when a candidate for Illuminated status 'is drawn out of the general mass of Free Masons' to become Illuminatus Minor, he is required to sign a document which includes the following binding oath:

'I bind myself to perpetual silence and unshaken loyalty and submission to The Order, in the persons of my Superiors; here making a faithful and complete surrender of my private judgment, my own will, and every narrow-minded [as defined exclusively by the Illuminati, of course] employment of my power and influence... I will conduct myself as required by The Order.... I pledge myself to account the good of The Order as my own, and am ready to serve it with my fortune, my honour, and my blood. The friends and enemies of The Order shall be my friends and enemies...'[18].

GOVERNANCE IN THE TIGHT GRIP OF DARK ACTORS PLAYING GAMES

In other words, governance, not least via the tight control exercised on high office-holders by the deeply penetrated intelligence communities, is in the hands of a self-appointed sect of very dark operatives whose will has been forfeited and bound to a Luciferian force. By definition, therefore, none of these people can ever respond to the so-called Will of the People - hence the emptiness of their verbiage - since they are bound by an agenda set by the Brotherhood, which serves its own interests rather than those of the general population, and which seeks global hegemony and control.

And the dreadful reality is that the United States is the 'enforcement arm' of The Order, which is to be imposed by the New World. That this is the case is revealed by study of works by the 33rd Degree Mason and occultist Manly P. Hall, who identified Sir Francis Bacon as the most influential transmission mechanism of the Rosicrucian paganism from which Illuminism is descended, the origins of which have been traced to 14th century Germany. Having concluded that the 'Old World' - contemptuously referred to by present-day US Illuminists as 'Old Europe' - was not 'ready' to adopt the pagan 'Ancient Mysteries' for which 'Do as Thou Wilt' is an accurate proxy, Bacon set about promoting the idea that it was to be in the New World that his pagan 'Ancient Mysteries' prescriptions would triumph. Yet it was only in the 1920s that the United States adopted the insignia of The Order of the Illuminati on the most widely used US banknote, the $1.00 bill - reproducing the Luciferian, occultic image which appears on the reverse of the Great Seal of the United States.

That the reverse of the Great Seal displays the insignia of the Illuminati is a fact of which most Americans, to this day, are ignorant. The insignia was adopted by Weishaupt when he founded The Order of the Illuminati on the 1st May (= the Druid pagan feast of 'Beltane') in 1776. It is that event that is memorialised by the inscription in Roman numerals MDCCLXXVI at the base of the pyramid on the insignia - not the date of the signing of the Declaration of Independence, as is commonly but erroneously supposed.

The hideous all-seeing eye, which is to be found in all occult 'religions', is also the symbol of the spy system that Weishaupt established under the subtitle of 'Insinuating Brethren' to guard the 'secret' of The Order - namely the intention of destroying Christianity and of establishing a global dictatorship - and to terrorise the population into resigned acceptance of rule by the synarchy (precisely as is happening in the United States and Britain). The Illuminati criminals lust after global control so that they can be protected from exposure and punishment.

INSIGNIA OF THE ILLUMINATI USED EVERY DAY BY ALL AMERICANS

This Illuminati secret service 'enjoyed' its first sadistic workout during the Reign of Terror of the French Revolution. Subsequent elaborations of that abomination included of course the bloodbath and Reign of Terror that accompanied and followed the Russian Revolution, the Nazi Reign of Terror and industrialised murderous abominations inflicted against Jews and others in central Europe, Stalin's earlier and continuing bloodbaths, and subsequent abominations including US atrocities in Japan (Hiroshima and Nagasaki) and Vietnam, US and British abominations in the former Yugoslavia and Iraq, the genocides in Cambodia, Ruanda, Zimbabwe and elsewhere, and all wars of the 'enforcement arm' of the Illuminati.

Given that they use the insignia of the Illuminati displayed so provocatively on the $1.00 bill in their everyday transactions, Americans prove the conspirators' point that they can 'get away with anything' - or so they believe. Despite frequent travelling in the United States since 1977, the Author has never encountered any protest against the manifestly provocative display of this Illuminati symbol on the most widely used American banknote. Nor has the Author ever encountered an American who understood that the words ANNUIT COEPTIS on the insignia can mean 'Our Enterprise' (Our Conspiracy) - a phrase used by President G. W. Bush in 2005 when he referred to 'our vast intelligence enterprise', a slip of the tongue which clearly confirmed his knowledge (as a controlled operative himself, with many handlers) that the implementing structures of the conspiracy are integrated within, and control, the US intelligence community, which in turn controls the US Presidency and all other key institutions and structures. The phrase below, NOVUS ORDO SECLORUM, meaning the 'new secular' (not social) 'order', proclaims the focus of the conspiracy. The insignia acquired Masonic significance ONLY after the merger of Weishaupt's Order of the Illuminati with The Order of Freemasonry at the Congress of Wilhelmsbad in 1782.

The ardent Illuminist Thomas Jefferson, together with Benjamin Franklin and John Adams (an ancestor of the Roosevelts), proposed the use of the Illuminati insignia on the reverse of Great Seal, to Congress, which adopted it on 10th June 1782. On adoption of the Constitution, Congress decreed, by an Act of 15th September 1789, that the insignia should be retained on the reverse of the Great Seal of the United States. The obverse image was first applied to the left of the reverse of the $1.00 bill by Presidential decision, when Roosevelt launched his 'New Deal' in 1933[19], coinciding with Hitler's 'coup d'etat by instalments' operation.

It is contended by some analysts that Franklin, Adams and Jefferson were not aware of the evil purposes of the Illuminati. The Author does not agree. It is very evident that the American Revolution represented an Illuminati putsch - as is perfectly clear, not least, from the routine excoriation of George III that one hears in the United States to this day. After all, George III was a ruler who was refusing to 'cooperate' with the Illuminati. In any case, the perception that the American Founding Fathers were ignorant of the Illuminati's nefarious plans is based upon a misunderstanding of the base nature of the Illuminati agentur, which, as is reiterated elsewhere in this book, is driven by the Janus doctrine of wearing two faces, one of which is hidden. Thus, it would have been perfectly logical for Franklin, Adams, Jefferson et al to have carried out and sponsored an infinite number of good works, while simultaneously espousing nefarious Illuminati activities and strategies.

In addition to integrating internal and external espionage, obsessive secrecy, blood oaths and opportunities for blackmail into The Order's modus operandi, to ensuring the perpetual education of fresh Illuminati cadres drawn from the ranks of the Masonic Blue Degrees, constructively insinuating and installing members of their vast agentur into high places or into the entourage of those occupying positions of power, and more recently ensuring that illuminised, geomasonic, controlled intelligence officers occupy the most important state and international positions, the Illuminati further seek always to ensure that they have scope to select evil people - individuals with gross secret blemishes, and especially paedophiles - for preference within their dark conspiracy (although this practice is not universally applied).

WHY PAEDOPHILIA IS SO COMMONPLACE AT THE HIGHEST LEVELS

The reason that paedophilia is especially preferred as a weakness 'qualifying' such a candidate for high office, can only be explained in spiritual terms, as follows. Jesus used violent language against those who corrupt, degrade or harm little children, innocents in whom dwells the Holy Spirit: for, as He also taught us, the human person is the temple of the Holy Spirit. Specifically, Christ declared that 'whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea' [Matthew, Chapter 18, verse 6]. [And the reason that Masonry is the key vehicle for Luciferian abominations is the little-observed one that, prior to the invention of 'Speculative Masonry', Masons were engaged in building temples (cathedrals) made of stone - an 'unnecessary' activity spiritually, since the temple of the Holy Spirit is the human person]. Given that this is what all who corrupt children and young people deserve, and given that the human person is the temple of the Holy Spirit ('for behold, the kingdom of God is within you' [Luke, Chapter 17, verse 21]), it follows that there can be nothing worse than to subvert and corrupt ('offend' in Jesus' gentle speech) children. In Matthew, Chapter 12, verses 31-32, Jesus warns: 'Wherefore I say unto you, All manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men; but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven unto men. And whosoever speaketh a word against the Son of man, it shall be forgiven him; but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, nor in the world to come'.

Since children in general are innocents in whom dwells the Holy Spirit, it is plainly the case that corruption of children, in whatever form, represents blasphemy against the Holy Spirit. And since Satan seeks through his seething powers to maximise the potential for confusion, destruction and chaos, we need not be surprised at the prevalence and high incidence of paedophilia in high places - of which instances could be cited applicable to both the United States and Britain. Those who corrupt children cannot be forgiven; and, as they are not atheists ('for even the devils tremble, and believe'), they know that they are lost. They have no hope.

For most of the time, these people are in denial about this desperate state of affairs; but at night, or when they are alone, or when confronted with exposure, they are all terrified. It has been specifically revealed by a defector from the Illumin-ati that these people are 'all unhappy', and wish that they had never been sucked into the hellish world of the Illuminati. A few may manage against all the odds to develop the strength of character to burst out from what binds them, but they can only do this through repentance and faith in Jesus Christ: there is no other way.

Those who have blasphemed against the Holy Spirit, knowing that they are on their way to perdition, seek, therefore, to take as many members of humanity down to hell with them as they can, on the ludicrous working assumption that they will be less lonely in the state of permanent torment that awaits them. They are not atheists. And since they are in this state, they remain obedient instruments of Lucifer, and do his bidding, because they know they have no hope. It follows, finally, that it makes 'sense' for Satan to entice as many ambitious people into the hell of paedophilia as possible, since the ranks of the Illuminati are thereby swelled, and implementation of Satan's lust for global hegemony is promoted accordingly.

The single product of Luciferians is death - spiritual and physical death for themselves, and as many deaths of others as they may acquire opportunities to inflict. In April 2006, 'The Times' (London) published a brief review of 'Laura Bush, an Intimate Portrait of the First Lady', by Ronald Kessler, a former Capitol Hill staffer who allegedly served the interests, in the back rooms of the Legislative Branch, of those members of the Illuminati who successfully sought to ensure that the use of aspartame would be approved. This substance induces seizures, and is believed to be responsible for the rapid increase in Alzheimer's and autism (Alzheimer's in turn serving the interests of the insurance scamming dimension of the Illuminati, based primarily in Indianapolis - since the more patients who spend their final years afflicted by Alzheimer's', the more wills can he malevolently modified, the more estates can be plundered and the more life assurance policies can be stolen and scammed).

In hot temperatures, aspartame undergoes a chemical reaction, becoming formaldehyde - explaining the phenomenon of Gulf War Syndrome. The vast supplies of Coca Cola containing aspartame that were delivered for consumption by the troops in the Middle East lay for weeks on the tarmac in temperatures of up to 140 degrees Fahrenheit. The Chief Executive Officer of Merck, the manufacturers of aspartame, at the relevant time, was Donald Rumsfeld. Merck later acquired Monsanto, suppliers of the ingredients for aspartame[20].

THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES AND BLOODLUST

According to "The Times" review of Kessler's book, Mrs Laura Bush 'gives him the "greasy eyeball over a flippant or inconsiderate remark or when he failed to show the right kind of courtesy or attention to someone", in the words of their friend Donald Ensenat. 'She doesn't need to verbalise with him. It registers". When Mr Bush stated that he wanted Osama Bin Laden (a.k.a. the CIA operative and asset 'Tim Osman') "dead or alive", she responded by saying: 'Bushie, you gonna git 'im?" He took the point, telling friends: "She didn't want to see me become too bellicose, react with bloodlust"'[21].

Bloodlust? Where exactly did the 43rd President of the United States get that idea from? On 19th March 2003, as the first news of the attack on Iraq came through, the President was caught on the internal White House video camera punching his right fist into the air, exclaiming: 'Feels good, feels good'. Is this man possessed? Unfortunately, it has been reliably alleged that, at a certain pre-presidential stage of his existence, George W Bush Jr. was indeed present at an occult ceremony in the course of which an unknown number of persons lost their lives.

Death is nothing to the Illuminati. As alluded to elsewhere, the Author himself received no less than seven death threats in the course of researching this study. When people fall out of line with the Illuminati, they may be at risk. Certain pop singers, such as Jimmy Hendrix, were intelligent enough, and insufficiently drugged, to comprehend the Illuminati's permissive society strategy, and in particular its exploitation of the 'music' industry to propagate the sterile, Luciferian idolatries of mind-control, sex and death. When Hendrix started to insert lyrics in his 'songs' that revealed his understanding of what was going on, he was liquidated. The Illuminati are particularly focused on attacking the children of their targets, especially if they are twins (they have an occultic fixation on twins, and on twin boys aged 11).

